Instead, courts will look to factors including your familiarity with your faith's teachings,⁸⁹ your demonstrated observance of its rules,⁹⁰ and the length of time that you have practiced these religious beliefs.⁹¹ Thus, evidence that you are familiar with your religion, have practiced it for a long time, have participated in religious ceremonies when possible, or have otherwise acted on the basis of your religion can help to establish the sincerity of your religious beliefs.

(c) The Validity of Prison Rules and Regulations

If the court decides your belief is religious and sincerely held, it will then apply the Turner test to the prison regulation or practice that you are challenging by asking whether a prison regulation "is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests," and therefore does not violate your constitutional rights.⁹² Specifically, under Turner, a court will consider the following four factors:

- (1) Whether there is a valid, rational connection between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest used to justify it;
- (2) Whether there are other ways of exercising the right despite the regulation;
- (3) If, by allowing you to exercise your right, there will be a "ripple effect" on others such as prison personnel, other incarcerated people, and on the allocation of prison resources; and
- (4) Whether there is a different way for the prison to meet the regulation's goal without limiting your right in this way.⁹³

When evaluating the first factor, courts have deferred to the judgment of prison officials and found that prison security is a legitimate governmental interest.⁹⁴ This means courts are not likely to second-

Frazee v. Ill. Dept. of Employment Sec., 489 U.S. 829, 834, 109 S. Ct. 1514, 1517–1518, 103 L. Ed. 2d 914, 920 (1989) (holding that in the context of a denial of unemployment benefits, the plaintiff's refusal to work on Sundays based on his personal professed religious belief was entitled to protection even though "there are assorted Christian denominations that do not profess to be compelled by their religion to refuse Sunday work").

89. See, e.g., Robinson v. Foti, 527 F. Supp. 1111, 1113 (E.D. La. 1981) (ruling against an incarcerated person who sought an exemption from prison rules against dreadlocks in part because the incarcerated person failed to demonstrate familiarity with Rastafarian practice, history, or teachings, which suggested that the incarcerated person's Rastafarian beliefs were not sincere).

90. See, e.g., Reed v. Faulkner, 842 F.2d 960, 963 (7th Cir. 1988) ("Evidence of nonobservance is relevant on the question of sincerity, and is especially important in the prison setting, for an inmate may adopt a religion merely to harass the prison staff with demands to accommodate his new faith . . . But the fact that a person does not adhere steadfastly to every tenet of his faith does not mark him as insincere.").

91. See, e.g., Iron Eyes v. Henry, 907 F.2d 810, 813 (8th Cir. 1990) (upholding lower court's conclusion that an incarcerated person's belief was sincerely held when the lower court "noted that [the prisoner] had maintained Sioux religious beliefs throughout his life, and that he had participated in religious ceremonies whenever possible").

92. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) ("[W]hen a prison regulation impinges on inmates' constitutional rights, the regulation is valid if it is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."), superseded by statute, RFRA.

93. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) ("First, there must be a 'valid, rational connection' between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it . . . A second factor . . . is whether there are alternative means of exercising the right that remain open to prison inmates . . . A third consideration is the impact accommodation of the asserted constitutional right will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources generally . . . Finally, the absence of ready alternatives is evidence of the reasonableness of a prison regulation . . . By the same token, the existence of obvious, easy alternatives may be evidence that the regulation is not reasonable, but is an 'exaggerated response' to prison concerns."), superseded by statute, RFRA.

94. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 407–408, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1878–1879, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 469 (1989) ("Acknowledging the expertise of these officials and that the judiciary is 'ill equipped' to deal with the difficult and delicate problems of prison management, this Court has afforded considerable deference to the determinations of prison administrators who, in the interest of security, regulate the relations between prisoners and the outside world."); Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 578 (6th Cir. 2005) ("Courts generally afford great deference to prison policies, regulations, and practices relating to the preservation of these interests."). See also Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 823, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 502 (1974) ("[C]entral to all other corrections goals is the institutional consideration of internal security within the corrections facilities guess the reasons prison officials give for prison regulations. For example, one federal court of appeals used the Turner test to decide that prison officials could prohibit religious items like a bear tooth necklace and a medicine bag in cells to protect the safety of other incarcerated people, prison guards, and the incarcerated person himself.⁹⁵

For the fourth factor, you will want to show that a different policy could meet the prison's needs without affecting your religious exercise as severely, and therefore that the current regulation is unnecessary. However, the U.S. Constitution does not require that the prison prove that the current regulation is necessary.⁹⁶

2. RLUIPA and RFRA

In addition to the First Amendment protections described above, your right to religious freedom is also protected by federal laws. If you are in state prison, your right is protected by a law called the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA).⁹⁷ If you are in federal prison, your right is protected by a law called the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA).⁹⁸

These laws prohibit the government from placing a substantial burden on the religious practices of incarcerated people, unless the government can demonstrate that the burden both (1) furthers a compelling governmental interest; and (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling interest.⁹⁹

Both federal laws provide a higher level of protection for incarcerated people to exercise their religion than the protection provided by the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause.¹⁰⁰ Therefore, you themselves.”).

95. See Hall v. Bellmon, 935 F.2d 1106, 1113 (10th Cir. 1991) (upholding a prison policy that prohibited a Native American from wearing a bear tooth necklace and medicine bag on the grounds of prison security); see also Spies v. Voinovich, 173 F.3d 398, 405 (6th Cir. 1999) (upholding a prison's prohibition of certain Buddhist religious materials from an incarcerated person's cell and the chapel on the grounds of prison security).

96. See, e.g., O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 350, 107 S. Ct. 2400, 2405, 96 L. Ed. 2d 282, 291 (1987) (quoting Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987)) (“Though the availability of accommodations is relevant to the reasonableness inquiry, we have rejected the notion that ‘prison officials . . . have to set up and then shoot down every conceivable alternative method of accommodating the claimant's constitutional complaint.’”), superseded by statute, RFRA. This case was decided before Congress passed RLUIPA and RFRA. These statutes, discussed in Part 4 of this Chapter, provide additional statutory protections for incarcerated people.

97. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc.

98. Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-1. In 1997, the Supreme Court held that RFRA does not apply to claims against states. City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 534, 117 S. Ct. 2157, 2171, 138 L. Ed. 2d 624, 648 (1997) (holding that RFRA “is a considerable congressional intrusion into the States’ traditional prerogatives and general authority to regulate for the health and welfare of their citizens” and overturning it as unconstitutional in that regard). However, RFRA still applies to incarcerated peoples’ claims against federal prisons. See, e.g., Hankins v. Lyght, 441 F.3d 96, 105–106 (2d Cir. 2006) (noting that since Boerne, “every appellate court that has squarely addressed the question has held that the RFRA governs the activities of federal officers and agencies”) (citations omitted).

99. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (“No government shall impose a substantial burden upon the religious exercise of a person residing in or confined to an institution . . . unless the government demonstrates that the imposition of the burden (1) is in the furtherance of a compelling governmental interest; and (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest.”); see also Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (“[The] Government shall not substantially burden a person's exercise of religion...except...Government may substantially burden a person's exercise of religion only if it demonstrates that application of the burden to the person-- (1) is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest; and (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest.”).

100. See Shakur v. Schriro, 514 F.3d 878, 888 (9th Cir. 2008) (“RLUIPA . . . mandates a stricter standard of review for prison regulations that burden the free exercise of religion than the reasonableness standard [used to review regulations under the 1st Amendment]”; see also Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 714, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2117, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1029 (2005) (noting that RLUIPA provides a “heightened protection from government-imposed burdens” compared with 1st Amendment standards); Desimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist.

should begin your complaint with an argument that the restriction violates RLUIPA, or, if you are in federal prison, RFRA. You may then make an argument that the restriction also violates the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. In practice, if a court finds that a regulation does not violate RLUIPA or RFRA, it will also almost certainly find that it does not violate the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause.¹⁰¹

Although RLUIPA and RFRA are separate laws, a court deciding a case under one law may also look to how a court decided a case under the other law. In other words, RLUIPA cases will be looked at by courts deciding RFRA cases and vice versa.¹⁰² This is because both laws prohibit laws and policies that substantially burden the exercise of your religion, unless the restrictions further a compelling governmental interest using the least restrictive means available.¹⁰³ Additionally, both statutes protect the same type of “religious exercise.”¹⁰⁴ So, although this Chapter primarily refers to RLUIPA, if you are incarcerated in a federal prison, this discussion of RLUIPA should help you to determine if you have a viable claim under RFRA.

The sections below will explain what you need to show to establish a RLUIPA or RFRA violation. In general, you first need to show that you meet the jurisdictional requirements of the law. Second, you will need to show (1) you are seeking to engage in an exercise of religion, (2) the prison regulation or practice you are challenging “substantially burdens” that exercise of religion, and (3) prison officials cannot show that the regulation is the “least restrictive means” of achieving a “compelling government interest.”¹⁰⁵

(a) Jurisdictional Requirements

(i) RLUIPA

If you are incarcerated in a state facility and bringing a claim under RLUIPA, you must first show that the law applies to the prison regulation or practice you are challenging. RLUIPA provides that its protections apply only when “(1) the substantial burden is imposed in a program or activity that receives federal financial assistance; or (2) the substantial burden affects, or removal of that substantial burden would affect, commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, or with Indian tribes.”¹⁰⁶

LEXIS 64419, at *11 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished) (“RLUIPA provides more expansive protection [than the 1st Amendment], prohibiting institutions that receive federal funding from substantially burdening an inmate’s exercise of religion, even by a rule of general applicability, unless that burden is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest.”).

101. See, e.g., Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 906–908 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding a prison’s grooming policy did not violate either RLUIPA or the 1st Amendment); Borzych v. Frank, 439 F.3d 388, 390–391 (7th Cir. 2006) (finding a prison’s refusal to provide access to books did not violate either RLUIPA or the 1st Amendment since the books in question were not religious texts related to the incarcerated person’s religion (Odinism) but were, instead, secular works promoting racism); Nelis v. Kingston, No. 06-C-1220, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86036, at *17 (E.D. Wis. Nov. 19, 2007) (unpublished) (finding a prison’s eligibility rule for religious activities did not violate either RLUIPA or the 1st Amendment); Daker v. Wetherington, 469 F. Supp. 2d 1231, 1238 (N.D. Ga. 2007) (finding a prison’s shaving policy did not violate either RLUIPA or the 1st Amendment).

102. See Hoevenaar v. Lazaroff, 422 F.3d 366, 370 (6th Cir. 2005) (“RFRA cases according deference to prison decisions [are] applicable to cases brought pursuant to the RLUIPA.”); see also Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 987 (8th Cir. 2004) (noting that RLUIPA and RFRA apply the same standard); Congregation Kol Ami v. Abington Twp., No. 01-1919, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16397, at *45, n.11 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 12, 2004) (unpublished) (“Cases involving establishment clause challenges to the RFRA are as relevant as those involving the RLUIPA.”).

103. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1; Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb–bb-1.

104. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(7); Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-2(4).

105. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc-1(a)(1)–(2); Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-1(a)–(b).

106. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(b).

This means that you will need to show that the prison regulation you are challenging either (a) is imposed in a program or activity that receives federal funds (called “Spending Clause jurisdiction”) or (b) affects interstate commerce (called “Commerce Clause jurisdiction”).¹⁰⁷

In order to meet the Spending Clause jurisdictional requirement, the regulation that you are challenging must be imposed in the context of a program or activity that receives federal financial assistance.¹⁰⁸ “Program or activity” means “all of the operations of . . . a department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a State or local government.”¹⁰⁹ Basically, this means that whenever a state or local prison or department of corrections accepts federal funding, RLUIPA will apply to all of its programs.¹¹⁰ Virtually every prison and jail system accepts some federal money, so you can and should plead in good faith in your complaint that the court has Spending Clause jurisdiction. After you have filed your complaint, you can then request proof of that fact from the defendants during the discovery phase.

A court also has RLUIPA jurisdiction under the Commerce Clause if the substantial burden placed on your religious exercise “substantially affects interstate commerce.”¹¹¹ However, because, as explained above, nearly all prison and jail systems accept some federal funds, it is very unlikely that you will need to rely upon Commerce Clause jurisdiction.

(ii) RFRA

If you are a person incarcerated in a federal prison and bringing a lawsuit under RFRA, these jurisdictional requirements do not apply. Instead, you must say that your free exercise of religion rights were violated at a federal prison or by a federal agent.¹¹²

(b) Religious Exercise

Assuming you have met the jurisdictional requirements, a court will next assess whether the activity you want to do is a religious practice. To constitute a religious practice, the activity you want to do must be (1) rooted in a sincerely held belief that is (2) religious in nature.¹¹³

107. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (“[RLUIPA] applies in any case in which (1) the substantial burden is imposed in a program or activity that receives Federal financial assistance; or (2) the substantial burden affects, or removal of that substantial burden would affect, commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, or with Indian tribes.”). If you are a federal incarcerated person bringing a claim under RFRA, these jurisdictional requirements do not apply to you; instead, you must allege that your Free Exercise rights were violated at a Federal prison or by an agent of the Federal Government.

108. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(b)(1).

109. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(6) (“[T]he term ‘program or activity’ means all of the operations of any entity as described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 606 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.”); See Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000d-4a(1)(A) (“For the purposes of this title, the term ‘program or activity’ and the term ‘program’ mean all of the operations of...a department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a State or of a local government...any part of which is extended Federal financial assistance.”).

110. See Orafan v. Goord, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14277, at *24 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 11, 2003) (unpublished) (“[Nowhere] in this definition [of program and activity] does it state that a receiver of federal funds is at liberty to decide which programs are under the auspice of RLUIPA. Quite the contrary, as the statute clearly applies to [all of the operations.]”).

111. United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549, 558–559, 115 S. Ct. 1624, 1629–1630, 131 L. Ed. 2d 626, 637 (1995) (describing the types of commerce authority enjoyed by Congress, including “the power to regulate those activities having a substantial relation to interstate commerce, i.e., those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce.”). This means that if other people in the same situation as you experienced the same burden, the total effect of all of those situations combined would affect interstate commerce. See Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 128, 63 S. Ct. 82, 90, 87 L. Ed. 122, 136 (1942) (holding that interstate effect is measured by evaluating the activity in question “together with that of many others similarly situated”).

112. Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-1–3.

113. See Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 797 (7th Cir. 2008) (“RLUIPA is a guarantor of sincerely held religious beliefs”); see also Porter v. Burnett, No. 1:05-cv-562, 2008 WL 3050011, at *5 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 4, 2008)

Congress has defined “religious exercise” broadly, to mean “any exercise of religion, whether or not compelled by, or central to, a system of religious belief.”¹¹⁴ This broad definition, which applies to both RLUIPA and RFRA,¹¹⁵ greatly increases the likelihood your lawsuit will succeed, or at least make it through a summary judgment motion.¹¹⁶

Under this definition, RLUIPA also protects religious practices that are not necessarily central to your religion, such as practices that are a small part of your religion or not of great importance to your religion.¹¹⁷ This means that, as a general rule, courts will not try to determine whether your religious belief is accurate or supported by your religious teachings, but will simply decide if it is a sincerely held belief and religious in nature.¹¹⁸

The current definition of religious exercise prevents courts and government officials from deciding what types or levels of religious exercise are necessary or appropriate for membership in a certain religion. This definition also incorporates the idea that the judicial system is not able (or competent) to decide whether a particular act is central to a person’s faith.¹¹⁹

(c) Substantial Burden

If the court finds that you have engaged in religious exercise, it will then evaluate whether the prison regulation that you are challenging substantially burdens this religious exercise.¹²⁰

Although Congress did not define what “substantial burden” means, the Supreme Court has interpreted “substantial burden” to mean that the government action or regulation at issue either (1) puts great pressure on you to change your behavior and violate your beliefs, or (2) prevents you from (unpublished) (“While [RLUIPA’s] definition of religious exercise is broad, it does require that [p]laintiff’s religious beliefs be ‘sincerely held.’”) (citing Episcopal Student Foundation v. City of Ann Arbor, 341 F. Supp. 2d 691, 700 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (citation omitted); Lovelace v. Lee, 472 F.3d 174, 187 n.2 (4th Cir. 2006) (“In assessing this burden, courts must not judge the significance of the particular belief or practice in question . . . RLUIPA does not, however, preclude inquiry into ‘the sincerity of a prisoner’s professed religiosity.’”) (citations omitted)); Starr v. Cox, No. 05-cv-368-JD, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34708, at *21 (D.N.H. Apr. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (“[C]ourts have construed RLUIPA to require a plaintiff to show that the exercise of religion is part of a (1) system of religious belief and (2) that the plaintiff holds a sincerely held belief in the religious exercise.”) (citing Guzzi v. Thompson, 470 F. Supp. 2d 17, 26 (D. Mass. 2007))).

114. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(7)(A).

115. Congress amended RFRA through § 7 of RLUIPA. This amendment ensures that the type of “religious exercise” protected by RLUIPA is identical to that protected by RFRA. See Pub.L. 106-274, § 7(b), 114 Stat. 803, (2000);

42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-2(4). As a result, RFRA now defines “exercise of religion” as “religious exercise, as defined in § 2000cc-5 [RLUIPA].” Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-2(4).

116. Because the determination of whether your belief is sincere and religious in nature is a fact-specific inquiry, some courts have expressed reluctance to grant summary judgment motions. See, e.g., Porter v. Caruso, 479 F. Supp. 2d 687, 691–692 (W.D. Mich. 2007) (holding that even when there is evidence in the record to suggest that defendant’s practices are better characterized as cultural rather than religious, summary judgment is inappropriate because the religious nature of the practices is a factual dispute that must be resolved at trial).

117. See Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(7) (“[R]eligious exercise’ includes any exercise of religion, whether or not ... [it is] central to a system of religious belief.”).

118. See Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 716, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1431, 67 L. Ed. 2d 624, 632 (1981) (“[I]t is not within the judicial function and judicial competence to inquire whether the petitioner or his fellow worker more correctly perceived the commands of their common faith. Courts are not arbiters of scriptural interpretation.”); see also Hernandez v. Comm’r of Internal Revenue, 490 U.S. 680, 699, 109 S. Ct. 2136, 2148, 104 L. Ed. 2d 766, 786 (1989) (“It is not within the judicial ken to question the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith, or the validity of particular litigants’ interpretations of those creeds.”).

119. See Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 716, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1431, 67 L. Ed. 2d 624, 632 (1981) (“[I]t is not within the judicial function and judicial competence to inquire whether the petitioner or his fellow worker more correctly perceived the commands of their common faith. Courts are not arbiters of scriptural interpretation.”).

120. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1.

engaging in religious actions in a way that more than just inconveniences you.¹²¹ The legislative history of RLUIPA indicates that Congress wanted courts to follow this interpretation.¹²²

Although courts have emphasized that the question of whether a regulation imposes a substantial burden is a fact-specific inquiry requiring a case-by-case determination,¹²³ the examples discussed below in Part C(3) can help you assess whether a court would find a regulation to be a substantial burden.

(d) Compelling Government Interest and Least Restrictive Means

Once you have established that a prison rule or regulation places a substantial burden on your religious exercise, RLUIPA shifts the burden to produce evidence and the burden of persuasion to the government.¹²⁴ This means that in order to defeat your claim, the government needs to show that:

- (1) the substantial burden it has placed on your religious exercise is necessary because of a “compelling government interest,” and
- (2) the burden it placed on your religious exercise is the “least restrictive means” of achieving its goal.¹²⁵

In order to meet the first requirement, the government must show that it has a compelling interest in restricting your religious exercise. The Supreme Court has defined “compelling interest” as “only those interests of the highest order.”¹²⁶ The government’s interest in maintaining prison safety and security is a compelling interest.¹²⁷ However, other examples of state interests, such as reducing expenses, are less likely to be considered “compelling.”¹²⁸

121. See Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 718, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1432, 67 L. Ed. 2d 624, 634 (1981) (“Where the state conditions receipt of an important benefit upon conduct proscribed by a religious faith, or where it denies such a benefit because of conduct mandated by religious belief, thereby putting substantial pressure on an adherent to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs, a burden upon religion exists. While the compulsion may be indirect, the infringement upon free exercise is nonetheless substantial.”); see also Midrash Sephardi, Inc. v. Town of Surfside, 366 F.3d 1214, 1227 (11th Cir. 2004) (summarizing the Supreme Court’s interpretation of “substantial burden” and noting that “a ‘substantial burden’ must place more than an inconvenience on religious exercise; a ‘substantial burden’ is akin to significant pressure which directly coerces the religious adherent to conform his or her behavior accordingly. Thus, a substantial burden can result from pressure that tends to force adherents to forego religious precepts or from pressure that mandates religious conduct.”); Coronel v. Paul, 316 F. Supp. 2d 868, 880 (D. Ariz. 2004) (holding that “state action substantially burdens the exercise of religion within the meaning of the RLUIPA when it prevents a religious adherent from engaging in conduct both important to the adherent and motivated by sincere religious belief.”).

122. See 146 Cong. Rec. S7776 (daily ed. July 27, 2000) (Joint Statement of Sen. Hatch and Sen. Kennedy) (stating that the term “substantial burden” is to “be interpreted by reference to [existing] Supreme Court jurisprudence”).

123. See, e.g., Adkins v. Kaspar, 393 F.3d 559, 571 (5th Cir. 2004) (“We recognize that our test requires a case-by-case, fact-specific inquiry to determine whether the government action or regulation in question imposes a substantial burden on an adherent’s religious exercise; however, we perceive this kind of inquiry to be unavoidable under the RLUIPA and the circumstances that it addresses. This is why we make no effort to craft a bright-line rule.”). See Jova v. Smith, 582 F.3d 410, 415 (2d Cir. 2009) (“Where a plaintiff adduces evidence sufficient to show that the government practice substantially burdens her religious exercise, the onus shifts to the government to demonstrate that the practice furthers a compelling governmental interest, and that the burden imposed on religion is the least restrictive means of achieving that interest.”)

124. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a); see also Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 796 (7th Cir. 2008).

125. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

126. Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 25 (1972).

127. See, e.g., Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 725 n.13, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2124 n.13, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1036 n.13 (2005) (“[P]rison security is a compelling state interest, and . . . deference is due to institutional officials’ expertise in this area.”); Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 823, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 502 (1974) (“[C]entral to all other corrections goals is the institutional consideration of internal security within the corrections facilities themselves.”).

128. Some courts, however, have held that expense is a compelling governmental interest. See, e.g., Baranowski v. Hart, 486 F.3d 112, 125–126 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding “controlling costs” to be a compelling

In order to show that the challenged rule or restriction is the least restrictive means, the government must do more than just say that there is no less restrictive means available.¹²⁹ The government must also do more than simply speculate as to the possible negative effects that could occur if it were to accommodate your religious practice.¹³⁰ Moreover, in at least some courts, the government must demonstrate that “it has actually considered and rejected the efficacy of less restrictive measures before adopting the challenged practice.”¹³¹ Like the compelling interest test, the least restrictive means test is very strict and well established in constitutional law.¹³²

Although you do not have the burden of proof, you can, and should, challenge the government’s argument that the regulation is the least restrictive means. For example, if the government allows other types of practices in the prison that harm its stated compelling interest, or if other prisons allow the religious exercise you are seeking, you can use this evidence in an effort to overcome the government’s argument.¹³³ Several courts have recognized that evidence of what other prisons have done to accommodate incarcerated peoples’ religious practices is relevant to RLUIPA claims.¹³⁴ But governmental interest), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1062, 128 S. Ct. 707, 169 L. Ed 553 (2007).

129. See Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 1001 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding the government’s unsupported statements insufficient to meet its burden that it had adopted the least restrictive means to achieve its interest in maintaining prison security).

130. See O’Bryan v. Bureau of Prisons, 349 F.3d 399, 401 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding that a governmental body that imposes a “substantial” burden on a religious practice cannot simply assert that the rule is least restrictive means of achieving a compelling governmental interest, instead they must show the rule is the least restrictive means of achieving that interest); see also Ali v. Stephens, 822 F.3d 776, 793 (5th Cir. 2016) (noting that a trial court was not required to believe the predications made by a prison to create a rule that would prevent Muslim men from growing 4-inch beards, in accordance with their religion, because of “speculative nature of the testimony” of the prison’s witness.); Scott v. Pierce, No. H-09-3991, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 190126, at *15 n.11 (S.D. Tex. May 7, 2012) (unpublished) (“Under RLUIPA, prison officials must do more than speculate that the accommodation of a religious practice will lead to safety and security problems.”).

131. Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 999 (9th Cir. 2005) (rejecting government’s argument that prison had a compelling interest in keeping male incarcerated persons’ hair short when it could not demonstrate that it considered possible alternatives); see, e.g., Spratt v. R.I. Dept. of Corr., 482 F.3d 33, 41 n.11 (1st Cir. 2007) (“[T]o meet the least restrictive means test, prison administrators generally ought to explore at least some alternatives.”); see also City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson, 488 U.S. 469, 507, 109 S. Ct. 706, 729–730, 102 L. Ed. 2d 854, 890–891 (1989) (holding that city’s minority set-aside program was not narrowly tailored in part because the city had not considered whether race-neutral measures would have achieved the government’s interest); Hunter ex rel. Brandt v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1061, 1078 (9th Cir. 1999) (concluding that government “neglected to undertake any consideration—let alone serious, good faith consideration” of race-neutral alternatives) (citation omitted).

132. The “least restrictive means” test is a form of a common test used in constitutional cases known as the “narrowly tailored” test, which tells courts to evaluate whether a proposed regulation or law is carefully designed to achieve its goals. See Burk v. Augusta-Richmond County, 365 F.3d 1247, 1255 (11th Cir. 2004) (noting that law could be written to meet the least restrictive means test where the “government . . . tailor[s] its regulation more closely to fit . . . conduct likely to threaten the harms it fears.”).

133. For example, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit found that a grooming restriction that required all male incarcerated persons to maintain their hair no longer than three inches was not the least restrictive means of ensuring prison security when other prisons did not impose such restrictions. In Warsoldier v. Woodford, the court noted that “other prison systems, including the Federal Bureau of Prisons, do not have such hair length policies, or, if they do, provide religious exemptions.” Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 999 (9th Cir. 2005). The court also noted that the Department of Corrections had failed to explain why it did not impose the same grooming restriction on female incarcerated persons at its women’s prisons. Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 1000 (9th Cir. 2005).

134. See, e.g., Washington v. Klem, 497 F.3d 272, 285 (3d Cir. 2007) (finding that prison’s limitation on the number of books allowed in a cell was not the least restrictive means to ensure safety because, in part, other prisons permitted a greater number of books); see also Fowler v. Crawford, 534 F.3d 931, 942 (8th Cir. 2008) (noting that policies of other prisons are “relevant” but do not determine the outcome of the “least restrictive means” inquiry).

“[c]ourts have repeatedly recognized that ‘evidence of policies at one prison is not conclusive proof that the same policies would work at another institution.’”¹³⁵

3. Examples of Common Challenges to Prison Restrictions

This Section provides examples of common challenges to prison restrictions, including restrictions on attending religious services or worship areas, receiving visits from religious advisors, sending and receiving religious mail, changing one's name or diet for religious reasons, refusing to receive medical treatment for religious reasons, and wearing special religious attire. It describes how courts have applied the Turner test to examine First Amendment Free Exercise claims as well as how courts have applied, or might in the future apply, the RLUIPA standards outlined above.

Because RLUIPA generally provides more protection to your religious freedom than the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause,¹³⁶ you should think of the discussion of the Free Exercise Clause as protecting your basic rights to freely exercise your religion in prison. At times, RLUIPA will provide you with more rights than the First Amendment. Also, because the law in this area is constantly changing, be sure to check for new RLUIPA cases that support your particular claim.

(a) Restrictions on Attending Religious Services, Group Worship, and Receiving Visits from Religious Advisors

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the Free Exercise Clause, prisons must provide you with a reasonable opportunity to worship according to what you think is required by your religion.¹³⁷ This right to worship applies even if only a minority of incarcerated people practice the religion.¹³⁸ However, courts have long held that this right may be restricted in certain cases.

For example, courts have said that prison officials may limit or prohibit religious group services when these services would be a threat to prison security.¹³⁹ For example, in Thomas v. Gunter, a 135. Fowler v. Crawford, 534 F.3d 931, 940–942 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting Spratt v. R.I. Dept. of Corr., 482 F.3d 33, 41 n.11 (1st Cir. 2007) (emphasis added) (holding that officials met their burden under RLUIPA by showing adequately considered alternatives and did not have to install a sweat lodge because “prohibiting a sweat lodge at JCCC is the least restrictive means by which to further the institution’s compelling interest in safety and security.”).

136. See Shakur v. Schriro, 514 F.3d 878, 888 (9th Cir. 2008) (“RLUIPA . . . mandates a stricter standard of review for prison regulations that burden the free exercise of religion than the reasonableness test [used to review regulations under the 1st Amendment]”); see also Smith v. Allen, 502 F.3d 1255, 1266 (11th Cir. 2007) (noting that RLUIPA gives more “protection from government-imposed burdens” than the 1st Amendment standards) (citation omitted); DeSimone v. Bartow, 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *11 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished) (“RLUIPA provides more expansive protection [than the 1st Amendment], prohibiting institutions that receive federal funding from substantially burdening an inmate’s exercise of religion, even by a rule of general applicability, unless that burden is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest.”).

137. See Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322 n.2, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081 n.2, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 368 n.2 (1972) (finding that where an incarcerated person was denied the reasonable opportunity of pursuing his faith comparable to the opportunity of prisoners who adhered to conventional religions, then there was palpable discrimination); compare Johnson v. Moore, 948 F.2d 517, 520 (9th Cir. 1991) (holding that the failure to provide a Unitarian Universalist chaplain for an incarcerated person did not violate the 1st Amendment, reasoning that “the Constitution does not necessarily require prisons to provide each inmate with the spiritual counselor of his choice,” but that “[p]risons need only provide inmates with a reasonable opportunity to worship in accord with their conscience”) (citations omitted).

138. See Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 (1972) (noting that an incarcerated person must be given “a reasonable opportunity of pursuing his faith comparable to the opportunity afforded fellow prisoners who adhere to conventional religious precepts”).

139. See Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408, 412 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding that a blanket ban against group religious services by a church that ministered to homosexual persons did not violate the 1st Amendment because the ban was reasonably related to the prison’s interest in maintaining internal security and reducing prison violence); see also Johnson v. Collins, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47844, at *14–15 (N.D. Ohio May 2, 2009) federal court of appeals said prison officials could deny a Native American incarcerated person daily access to the prison sweat lodge for prayer.¹⁴⁰ Applying Turner, the court held the denial was reasonably related to a legitimate prison interest in security. The sweat lodge was near a truck delivery entrance in use during weekday afternoons, and the court accepted the prison's argument that frequent use of the sweat lodge created a security risk. The court noted that daily access to the sweat lodge would also have interfered with scheduled educational and vocational activities.¹⁴¹

Courts have also said that prison officials may attend the religious group services of incarcerated people, provided their presence is reasonable and consistent with prison security measures and does not unreasonably restrict the way in which the services are conducted.¹⁴² Prison officials may also regulate the time, place, and sometimes the manner in which religious services are conducted, as long as the restrictions are rationally related to legitimate prison goals.¹⁴³ Similarly, courts have said that prison officials may limit or prohibit visits by religious advisors and counselors when such visits would undermine prison security, prison administration, or both.¹⁴⁴ The time, length, and manner of these visits are also subject to reasonable regulation by prison officials.

For example, in Ha'min v. Montgomery County Sheriff's, an incarcerated person sued law enforcement officials alleging violations of his First Amendment right to freely exercise his religion.¹⁴⁵ Friday Muslim prayer services were not regularly conducted during the period of the person's incarceration, despite being authorized by prison regulations. Further, he was not allowed to conduct the Muslim service for himself as a result of a rule that only volunteer religious leaders from outside could perform such services, regardless of the religion. Since the incarcerated person could keep his Holy Quran in his cell and pray alone, he had alternative means to exercise his religion. In light of this, the court held that the incarcerated person's First Amendment rights were not violated.¹⁴⁶

Note that although your right to attend services or receive visits from ministers may be restricted, you do not have to be a presently affiliated or professed member of a religion to attend such services and receive visits from ministers of that faith. You may also receive visits from the clergy of your choice even if you were not a member of that faith before being incarcerated.¹⁴⁷ Instead, you may simply be thinking about joining the religion and want to attend services or talk to a minister in order to learn (unpublished) (granting summary judgment for prison officials where an incarcerated person claimed a violation of his right to freely exercise his religious beliefs when he was denied permission to maintain his dreadlocks in accordance with Rastafarianism principles, noting that "substantial deference is given to prison officials in terms of their discretion to impose regulations" and that "prison officials need only demonstrate potential danger, not actual danger.") (citations omitted).

140. Thomas v. Gunter, 103 F.3d 700 (8th Cir. 1997).

141. Thomas v. Gunter, 103 F.3d 700, 703 (8th Cir. 1997).

142. See Butler-Bey v. Frey, 811 F.2d 449, 452 (8th Cir. 1987) (holding, in part, that a prison regulation requiring a guard to be present at religious meetings did not violate the 1st Amendment where the regulation applied to all prison group meetings, both secular and non-secular).

143. See O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 358, 107 S. Ct. 2400, 2409, 96 L. Ed. 2d 282, 296 (1987) ("[I]f a regulation merely restricts the time, place, or manner in which prisoners may exercise a right, a prison regulation will be invalidated only if there is no reasonable justification for official action.").

144. See Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408, 412 (6th Cir. 1984) (affirming that prison authorities can restrict visits by officials of a church that ministers to the spiritual and religious needs of homosexuals because "a strong correlation existed between inmate homosexuality and prison violence").

145. Ha'min v. Montgomery Cty. Sheriff's, 440 F. Supp. 2d 715 (M.D. Tenn. 2006).

146. Ha'min v. Montgomery Cty. Sheriff's, 440 F. Supp. 2d 715, 718–720 (M.D. Tenn. 2006) (finding that the government showed a "valid, rational connection between the jail's action in not providing a regular Friday Muslim service and the legitimate governmental interest" and that plaintiff had an "alternative means of exercising his right to the free exercise of religion").

147. See Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 824–825, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2805, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 503 (1974) (allowing restricted visits from "members of their families, the clergy, their attorneys, and friends of prior acquaintance" as long as "such visits will aid in the rehabilitation of the inmate").

about the religion. However, a religious advisor may examine the sincerity of your belief and restrict your access to religious services of that particular faith.¹⁴⁸

Finally, although prisons must provide a reasonable opportunity to incarcerated people whose religious practices are observed by a minority of those incarcerated,¹⁴⁹ many courts have held that the accommodation a prison must make for a particular religion is proportional to the number of believers of that particular faith.¹⁵⁰ For example, in Cruz v. Beto,¹⁵¹ a Buddhist incarcerated person alleged that prison officials violated his constitutional rights when they prohibited him from conducting Buddhist services in the prison chapel, offering religious materials to other incarcerated people, and corresponding with his religious advisor. The U.S. Supreme Court reversed the decision of the federal court of appeals, which had dismissed the incarcerated person's claims. The Supreme Court held that the prison must give Cruz the same reasonable opportunity to pursue his faith as the prison gives to followers of other religions.¹⁵² However, the Court also stated that prisons were not required to provide every religion with identical facilities and accommodate each equally.¹⁵³

(ii) RLUIPA

A federal law known as RLUIPA prohibits prisons from imposing a “substantial burden” on your access to religious services and/or worship areas, except under certain circumstances.¹⁵⁴ The prison can substantially limit your access to religious services and/or worship areas if (1) the limitation furthers a “compelling” interest of the prison, and (2) the prison limits your access to religious services and/or worship areas in the least restrictive way possible.¹⁵⁵ However, if a court determines that a regulation does not impose a substantial burden or that the activity you are pursuing is not a religious exercise, it will dismiss your challenge.¹⁵⁶

Keep in mind, however, that a court's determination of whether a rule imposes a substantial burden on your right to religious worship will depend on the specific facts of your case. In at least two instances, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has found that a policy requiring volunteers to attend incarcerated peoples' religious group meetings did not impose a substantial burden, when the 148. See Montano v. Hedgepeth, 120 F.3d 844, 850–851 (8th Cir. 1997) (allowing a prison chaplain to deny participation in Protestant services to a Messianic Jew for spreading false doctrine).

149. See, e.g., Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 799 (7th Cir. 2008) (“We have long held that [t]he rights of inmates belonging to minority or non-traditional religions must be respected to the same degree as the rights of those belonging to larger and more traditional denominations.” (quoting Al-Alamin v. Gramley, 926 F.2d 680, 686 (7th Cir. 1991))).

150. See Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322 n.2, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081 n.2, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 n.2 (1972) (“[The Court does not suggest] that every religious sect or group within a prison—however few in number—must have identical facilities or personnel . . . [N]or must a chaplain, priest, or minister be provided without regard to the extent of the demand.”).

151. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1972).

152. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081–1082, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 (1972).

153. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322 n.2, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081 n.2, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 n.2 (1972) (“We do not suggest, of course, that every religious sect or group within a prison—however few in number—must have identical facilities or personnel. A special chapel or place of worship need not be provided for every faith regardless of size . . .”).

154. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA) § 2(a), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

155. 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

156. See Part C(2)(c) above. For example, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has dismissed at least two RLUIPA challenges because it determined that a prison policy that required an outside volunteer to attend group religious meetings of incarcerated people did not impose a substantial burden on the incarcerated peoples' religious exercise. See Adkins v. Kaspar, 393 F.3d 559, 571 (5th Cir. 2004) (“The requirement of an outside volunteer—which is a uniform requirement for all religious assemblies at Coffield with the exception of Muslims—does not place a substantial burden on Adkins's religious exercise.”); Baranowski v. Hart, 486 F.3d 112, 124–125 (5th Cir. 2007) (finding that there was not a substantial burden on the prisoner's free exercise of his faith within the meaning of RLUIPA because, on the days that services were not provided, no rabbi or approved religious volunteer was available to lead the services).

incarcerated people were able to engage in other means of worship.¹⁵⁷ For example, in Baranowski v. Hart,¹⁵⁸ the court found that a volunteer requirement did not impose a substantial burden on Jewish incarcerated people who wanted more meetings on Sabbaths and other Jewish holy days than their volunteer could attend. In a more recent case, however, the same court of appeals concluded that a volunteer requirement could impose a substantial burden. In that case, there was evidence that no new volunteers would be available to provide group religious worship, the prison applied the volunteer requirement differently for different religious groups, and the incarcerated person did not have access to other options for worship.¹⁵⁹

If you are able to show there is a substantial burden on your religious exercise, the government will need to demonstrate that the restriction on group worship or religious services is the least restrictive way to promote the compelling government interest.¹⁶⁰ Although the court will require the prison to provide some evidence showing that the policy meets this standard, the Supreme Court has told courts to give “due deference to the experience and expertise of prison and jail administrators” while interpreting RLUIPA.¹⁶¹ In other words, courts have to respect what prison administrators think is the least restrictive way to promote its interests.

For example, in Murphy v. Missouri Department of Corrections,¹⁶² the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals found that the prison had not met its burden when the only reason it gave for denying an incarcerated person the right to practice group worship was that the incarcerated person was a racist whose religion limited participation to Anglo-Saxons. In contrast, the same court found a prison had met its burden in a case involving a Native American incarcerated person who had been denied access to a sweat lodge.¹⁶³ There, the prison provided the court with evidence that it had suggested alternative religious means to the incarcerated person. In that case, officials had offered the incarcerated person an outdoor area where he could smoke a ceremonial pipe, suggested a medicine wheel, and sought to locate a volunteer to oversee a Native American group.¹⁶⁴ Based in part on this evidence, the court concluded that the ban on accessing the sweat lodge was the least restrictive means to furthering the prison’s interest in security.

These cases suggest that if you can show that the prison denied your request for group worship or attendance of religious services, and did not offer you any other options to your preferred method of worship, you may have a better chance of defeating the government’s arguments that the restriction is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling interest.

(b) Mail Censorship

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, a prison may censor the religious mail that you receive or send, depending on the purpose the censorship serves. For a summary of the Supreme Court’s decisions on incarcerated peoples’ use of the postal system, including receipt of religious 157. Adkins v. Kaspar, 393 F.3d 559, 564, 571 (5th Cir. 2004); Baranowski v. Hart, 486 F.3d 112, 121, 124 (5th Cir. 2007).

158. Baranowski v. Hart, 486 F.3d 112, 125 (5th Cir. 2007).

159. Mayfield v. Tex. Dept. of Corr., 529 F.3d 599, 614–615 (5th Cir. 2008) (finding that summary judgment was inappropriate when there was evidence that no new volunteers would be available, the incarcerated person did not have alternative means of worship, and prison officials were unevenly applying the requirement).

160. 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-2(b); see also Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 796 (7th Cir. 2008) (“Once the plaintiff establishes this prima facie case, the defendants ‘bear the burden of persuasion on any [other] element of the claim,’ namely whether their practice ‘is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest.’” (alteration in original) (citations omitted)).

161. Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 723, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2123, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1035 (2005).

162. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 989 (8th Cir. 2004).

163. Fowler v. Crawford, 534 F.3d 931, 942 (8th Cir. 2008).

164. Fowler v. Crawford, 534 F.3d 931, 939–940 (8th Cir. 2008).

materials and correspondence about religious materials, see Chapter 19 of the JLM, “Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World.”

In general, prison officials may censor incoming religious mail in any manner reasonably related to the legitimate needs of prison administration.¹⁶⁵ To determine whether the censorship is appropriate, courts apply the Turner test.¹⁶⁶ Under this test, courts have allowed prison officials to withhold mail that advocates racial violence and hatred, even if the mail contains religious content or is from a religious organization. For example, in Chriceol v. Phillips, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals allowed a Louisiana prison to withhold mail that the Aryan Nations and its affiliate church, the Church of Jesus Christ Christian, had sent to incarcerated people.¹⁶⁷ The court explained that the mail encouraged racial violence and hatred, and that the “purpose of the rule [was] to eliminate potential threats to the security or order of the facility,” which “[c]learly ... is a legitimate interest.”¹⁶⁸

Similarly, in Shabazz v. Parsons, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals applied the Turner test and held that Oklahoma prison officials had a rational basis for denying an incarcerated person access to an entire issue of a religious magazine, which officials determined would create a danger of violence based on racial, religious, and national hatred.¹⁶⁹ Furthermore, the court denied the incarcerated person’s claim that merely deleting the offending portions of the magazine was a good alternative. The court reached this decision because such deletions would be very expensive and would “prevent the prisoner from obtaining meaningful administrative review” of the decision to delete certain sections.¹⁷⁰

Prison officials may also regulate outgoing mail, provided that the regulation is “generally necessary” to protect one or more legitimate governmental interests.¹⁷¹ Note that it may be easier for you to successfully challenge a restriction on outgoing mail, as the Supreme Court has recognized that outgoing correspondence that includes “grievances or contains inflammatory racial views cannot reasonably be expected to present a danger to the community inside the prison.”¹⁷²

Note also that although prisons can censor mail if there are legitimate prison interests at stake, indiscriminate censorship or an absolute ban on correspondence with a religious advisor is unconstitutional. See Chapter 19 of the JLM, “Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World.”

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, a prison may censor the religious mail you receive or send, provided that, if the censorship substantially burdens your religious exercise, it (1) furthers a compelling government interest (2) by the least restrictive means available.¹⁷³ The Supreme Court has noted that “[l]awmakers supporting RLUIPA were mindful of the urgency of discipline, order, safety, and security in penal institutions” and “anticipated that courts would apply the Act’s standard with due deference to the experience and expertise of prison and jail administrators.”¹⁷⁴ Thus, it is unclear whether courts

165. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404–405, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1876–1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (applying the Turner standard to determine whether regulations censoring incoming mail violate incarcerated peoples’ 1st Amendment rights).

166. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987) (holding that the rule banning correspondence between incarcerated people was reasonably related to legitimate security concerns of prison officials and was not invalid).

167. Chriceol v. Phillips, 169 F.3d 313, 317 (5th Cir. 1999).

168. Chriceol v. Phillips, 169 F.3d 313, 316 (5th Cir. 1999).

169. Shabazz v. Parsons, 127 F.3d 1246, 1247, 1249 (10th Cir. 1997).

170. Shabazz v. Parsons, 127 F.3d 1246, 1249 (10th Cir. 1997).

171. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 411–412, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1880–1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 471–472 (1989) (noting that a regulation that restricts outgoing mail must “close[ly] fit” the interest it is supposed to serve (citing Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 414, 416, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1812–1813, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 240–241 (1974))).

172. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 411–412, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472 (1989) (emphasis in original).

173. 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

174. Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 723, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2123, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1035 (2005) (internal are likely to reach different outcomes under a RLUIPA standard than they would under a Free Exercise standard.

(c) Shaving, Haircuts, and Grooming Restrictions

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

The First Amendment does not generally prevent a prison from restricting how you choose to wear your hair or beard, even if this choice is part of your religious practice. To determine whether a prison grooming restriction is acceptable under the Free Exercise Clause, a court will look at various factors to ask whether the prison's restriction is "reasonably related" to a legitimate interest of the prison.¹⁷⁵ For example, one court upheld a rule that banned incarcerated people from having a beard longer than ¼-inch because the rule was "reasonably related" to promoted prison security. Specifically, the ban was allowed under the First Amendment because the rule made it harder for inmates to hide contraband, because incarcerated people could participate in their religion in other ways, because guards would need to conduct more searches if incarcerated people could have long beards, and other reasons.¹⁷⁶ If the prison grooming requirement does not reasonably relate to a legitimate penological (prison-related) interest, then the prison cannot keep the rule.¹⁷⁷

Although all courts apply the same test, the results of cases have differed. Some courts have recognized the rights of incarcerated people to grow beards or wear their hair in accordance with their religious beliefs.¹⁷⁸ For example, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit upheld a Rastafarian incarcerated person's right to avoid getting an initial haircut when first received as an incarcerated person in a New York prison.¹⁷⁹

In another case, however, the same court was less willing to recognize these types of religious practices. For example, in Fromer v. Scully,¹⁸⁰ the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit upheld a New York Department of Correctional Services (now the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision) directive forbidding incarcerated people from wearing beards longer than one inch. The Fromer court also noted that other courts had "recognized a 'valid, rational connection' between beard restrictions and a legitimate penological interest in inmate identification," emphasizing that the plaintiff had the burden of proving that the prison's concerns were irrational.¹⁸¹ Explaining its decision to defer to the judgment of the prison administrators, the court noted that "[i]t is certainly not irrational to believe that a full beard, which may well extend for significant lengths sideways from the cheeks as well as downwards from the chin, may impede identification more than a one-inch beard."¹⁸² quotation marks omitted).

175. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987).

176. Kuperman v. Wrenn, 645 F.3d 69, 75–77 (1st Cir. 2011); see also Hines v. S.C. Dep't of Corr. 148 F.3d 353, 358 (4th Cir. 1998) (upholding a grooming policy that all male incarcerated people keep their hair short and faces shaven in order to "suppress contraband, limit gang activity, maintain discipline and security, and prevent prisoners from quickly changing their appearance"); Zargary v. City of New York, 607 F. Supp. 2d 609, 613 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (holding that an orthodox Jewish woman could be required to briefly remove her headscarf to further the government's legitimate interest in accurate identification of incarcerated people).

177. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 90 (1987).

178. See, e.g., Teterud v. Burns, 522 F.2d 357, 359 (8th Cir. 1975) (regarding the braided hair of a Native American); Moskowitz v. Wilkinson, 432 F. Supp. 947, 950–952 (D. Conn. 1977) (regarding the beard of an Orthodox Jew).

179. Benjamin v. Coughlin, 905 F.2d 571, 576–577 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding the legitimate prison goal of obtaining an initial identification photograph could be accomplished by pulling back an incarcerated person's hair rather than cutting it off).

180. Fromer v. Scully, 874 F.2d 69, 73–74, 76 (2d Cir. 1989).

181. Fromer v. Scully, 874 F.2d 69, 74 (2d Cir. 1989).

182. Fromer v. Scully, 874 F.2d 69, 74 (2d Cir. 1989).

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, even if a grooming requirement substantially burdens your religious exercise, a prison may restrict how you choose to style your hair or beard if it (1) furthers a compelling governmental interest (2) by the least restrictive means.¹⁸³ These dual requirements may make it easier for you to challenge prison regulations regarding shaving, haircuts, and grooming under RLUIPA than under the First Amendment.

For example, in Fluellen v. Goord, an incarcerated person brought a successful RLUIPA challenge against a New York Department of Corrections (now the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision) policy prohibiting all non-Rastafarian incarcerated people from wearing dreadlocks.¹⁸⁴ The incarcerated person, a member of the Nation of Islam, argued his refusal to cut his dreadlocks was based upon a specific verse of the Quran. In response, DOCS asserted that the Nation of Islam does not mandate dreadlocks, that the incarcerated person's interpretation of the Quran was incorrect, and that allowing the incarcerated person to wear dreadlocks potentially threatened security.¹⁸⁵

In considering these arguments, the magistrate judge in Fluellen rejected DOCS's assertion, explaining that it is not for the courts to question the importance of particular religious beliefs or practices, nor is it necessary for judges to determine the accuracy of a plaintiff's interpretation of his religion's teachings.¹⁸⁶ While the magistrate judge acknowledged that prison safety and security constituted a compelling government interest under RLUIPA, it found that the fact that DOCS permitted Rastafarians to wear dreadlocks meant that dreadlocks do "not impose an insurmountable threat to DOCS' security, safety or sanitation."¹⁸⁷ The magistrate judge further noted that "DOCS does not appear to have any concerns that permitting this particular plaintiff to wear dreadlocks would threaten DOCS' security, safety or sanitation,"¹⁸⁸ and therefore held that the incarcerated person could not be forced to cut his dreadlocks, nor could he be punished if he refused to change his religious affiliation.¹⁸⁹

Similarly, in Smith v. Ozmint, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reviewed a RLUIPA claim brought by a Rastafarian incarcerated person challenging a prison policy that forced him to shave his head.¹⁹⁰ The court reversed a grant of summary judgment for the prison on the grounds that the prison had not met its burden of proving that its policy furthered a compelling interest by the least restrictive means.¹⁹¹

However, other courts have reached different conclusions, finding that prison grooming requirements do not violate RLUIPA. For example, in Fegans v. Norris, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals found that a prison policy prohibiting male incarcerated people from wearing hair below the collar and from wearing beards did not violate RLUIPA, even though the department of corrections

183. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

184. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *1 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished).

185. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *6, *9–10, *15 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished).

186. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *16 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished) (citing McEachin v. McGuinnis, 357 F.3d 197, 201 (2d Cir. 2004)).

187. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *19 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished).

188. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *19–20 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished).

189. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *24 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished); see also Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 991–992, 1002 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding that a Native American incarcerated person at a minimum-security prison, whose faith taught that hair should only be cut upon the death of a close relative, could not be punished for violating a rule prohibiting incarcerated people from having hair longer than three inches without the prison proving that the policy was the least restrictive way of promoting safety).

190. Smith v. Ozmint, 578 F.3d 246, 248–249 (4th Cir. 2009).

191. Smith v. Ozmint, 578 F.3d 246, 254 (4th Cir. 2009).

did not impose the same requirement on women.¹⁹² The court found that the grooming requirements were the least restrictive means to furthering prison safety and security. Specifically, the court noted that incarcerated people had used their hair to conceal contraband (banned items), and to change their appearance after escaping.¹⁹³ The court further concluded that there was no less restrictive means to prevent these risks, as “longer hair created a greater opportunity for inmates to conceal contraband, and because correctional officers are placed at risk of assault if required to search through the long hair of individual inmates.”¹⁹⁴ Applying a similar analysis to the beard restriction, the court also concluded that the prison had a compelling interest in restricting incarcerated people from wearing an uncut beard, as a beard could create a better guise for an escapee and allow for contraband.¹⁹⁵ Although the court recognized that the prison did not impose the same requirement in the women’s barracks, the court noted that the women were housed in a single unit and thus had less opportunity to conceal contraband.¹⁹⁶

(d) Name Restrictions

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, a prison may refuse to recognize your choice of a religious name, provided that the refusal is “reasonably and substantially justified by considerations of prison discipline and order.”¹⁹⁷ If you have legally changed your name, courts are more likely to recognize your right to be called by your new name.¹⁹⁸

For example, in Malik v. Brown, a federal court of appeals recognized that an incarcerated person has a clear constitutional interest in using his religious name, at least in addition to his committed name.¹⁹⁹ While the court did not require the prison to revise its filing system after the incarcerated person changed his name, the court at least recognized the incarcerated person’s right to include his religious name on outgoing mail.²⁰⁰

Note that although courts may be willing to recognize a religious name, courts are unlikely to question the way in which prison officials choose to organize their administrative prison records.²⁰¹

192. Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 900–901 (8th Cir. 2008).

193. Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 903 (8th Cir. 2008).

194. Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 903 (8th Cir. 2008).

195. Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 906 (8th Cir. 2008).

196. Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 904 (8th Cir. 2008).

197. Barrett v. Virginia, 689 F.2d 498, 503 (4th Cir. 1982) (finding that a Virginia statute that placed a flat ban on the recognition of religious name changes was unreasonable given that incarcerated people were already known by several names, and the addition of newly adopted religious names into existing records would not threaten the reliability and efficiency of correctional records).

198. See Salahuddin v. Coughlin, 591 F. Supp. 353, 359 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (upholding prison policy that recognizes statutory court-ordered name changes but not common law name changes, in light of speedy and easily proven statutory name changes and “legitimate [state] interest in avoiding confusion and simplifying record-keeping”) (citation omitted). But see Barrett v. Virginia, 689 F.2d 498, 503 (4th Cir. 1982) (finding that adding a newly adopted religious name to prison records would not be overly burdensome or disruptive to record-keeping procedures).

199. Malik v. Brown, 16 F.3d 330, 334 (9th Cir. 1994).

200. Malik v. Brown, 16 F.3d 330, 334 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding minimal burden on the prison and “no legitimate penological interest in preventing Malik from using both his religious and his committed names” on correspondence).

201. See, e.g., Barrett v. Virginia, 689 F.2d 498, 503 (4th Cir. 1982) (holding that while the prison must recognize a legally adopted religious name and add it to the incarcerated person’s file, it does not have to reorder the files according to the new name).

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, a prison may refuse to recognize your choice of a religious name, provided that if the refusal substantially burdens your religious exercise, it (1) furthers a compelling governmental interest and (2) uses the least restrictive means.²⁰²

Some courts are reluctant to find that the refusal to recognize a name is a substantial burden on your religious exercise.²⁰³ Therefore, it may be difficult for you to show that the refusal to recognize your name violates RLUIPA. Remember that under RLUIPA, the government can impose rules that burden your religious exercise; it is only not allowed to adopt rules that substantially burden your religious exercise.

In order to show that the refusal to recognize your name constitutes a substantial burden, you should try to provide the court with concrete examples of the obstacles you face because you cannot change your name. For example, if an unchanged name will exclude you from participating in religious ceremonies, subject you to harsh treatment or exclusion by your co-believers, or make it so that you cannot “rise through the ranks” of your religion, the court may be more willing to find that the restriction constitutes a substantial burden.²⁰⁴

If the court determines that not allowing your name change does significantly burden your religious exercise, the government would then be required to show that not allowing you to change your name served a “compelling governmental interest” and that it did so by the “least restrictive means.”²⁰⁵ As noted above, prison safety and security are compelling governmental interests.²⁰⁶ So, if the prison claims that not allowing your name change is the least restrictive way of maintaining safety and security, the court may uphold the prison’s refusal to grant your name-change request.²⁰⁷

If you can show that other incarcerated people in your prison or similar prisons were permitted to change their names, you may be able to demonstrate that not permitting you to change your name for religious reasons is not the least restrictive means by which the prison can maintain order.²⁰⁸

202. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a).

203. See Amun v. Culliver, No. 04-0131-BH-M, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75949, at *1 (S.D. Ala. Oct. 18, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that prison’s refusal to add incarcerated person’s religious name to visitor list, incarcerated persons’ location list, and prison correspondence was not a “substantial burden” on the incarcerated person’s exercise of religious beliefs).

204. Two federal district court cases suggest that these factors may have supported a conclusion that a refusal to recognize a changed name constitutes a substantial burden. Compare Scott v. Cal. Supreme Court, No. CIV S-04-2586 LKK GGH P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117662 at *26–27 (E.D. Cal. July 17, 2008) (unpublished); with Ashanti v. Cal. Dept of Corr., No. CIV S-03-0474 LKK GGH P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10612, at *53–54 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 15, 2007) (unpublished) (determining that prison’s refusal to change certain prison records to reflect incarcerated person’s religious name does not amount to a substantial burden, after noting that incarcerated person failed to “show that any use of his original unchanged name subjects him to ostracism from his co-believers, or that he is thereby hampered in any way in navigating the tenets of his religion”).

205. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc-1(a)(1)–(2).

206. Fawaad v. Jones, 81 F.3d 1084, 1087 (11th Cir. 1996) (“[M]aintaining security in a prison constitutes a compelling governmental interest. The control of contraband into and out of the prison is a fundamental part of maintaining prison security, and the requirement of dual names on incoming and outgoing mail is the least restrictive means of satisfying that compelling interest”). See also Fegans v. Norris, 537 F.3d 897, 902 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that institutional security and deterrence of crime are valid penological interests, and noting that the Supreme Court has noted that “context matters” in the application of this ‘compelling governmental interest’ standard, and that RLUIPA does not ‘elevate accommodation of religious observances over an institution’s need to maintain order and safety’) (citation omitted).

207. See, e.g., Thacker v. Dixon, 784 F. Supp. 286, 297 (E.D.N.C. 1991) (holding that prison official’s use of plaintiff’s religious name followed by “A/K/A” and the plaintiff’s former name did not violate plaintiff’s constitutional rights); see e.g., Fawaad v. Jones, 81 F.3d 1084, 1087 (11th Cir. 1996) (holding that a prison may require an incarcerated person to use both his chosen name and the name under which he was committed on incoming and outgoing mail). Although this case was decided under RFRA, the holding would similarly apply to cases brought under RLUIPA.

208. Cf. Fluellen v. Goord, No. 06-CV-602E(Sr), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95374, at *19–20 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (unpublished) (noting that the prison allowed some incarcerated people to wear dreadlocks, which

(e) Special Diet Restrictions

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the Free Exercise Clause, a prison can refuse to accommodate your request for a special diet if the restriction is rationally connected to legitimate penological goals. To determine whether a prison may refuse to accommodate your request for a special diet, a court will apply the Turner test.²⁰⁹ Under this test, the court will first determine whether your special diet request is based on sincerely held religious beliefs. The court may also examine whether or not your special diet is absolutely required by your religion.²¹⁰ It will then look to whether the prison's denial of that request is rationally connected to any legitimate prison concerns. If so, the court will balance the reasonableness of the refusal with the prison's legitimate interests, looking to effects on the prison community, use of resources, and alternative means of satisfying the meal request.²¹¹

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, a prison can refuse to accommodate your request for a special diet, provided that, if the refusal substantially burdens your religious exercise, the refusal (1) furthers a compelling interest and (2) uses the least restrictive means.²¹²

In order for your special diet to be protected, you will first need to show your special diet is a religious exercise, one that is based on sincerely held religious beliefs and practices and not simply a concern for your bodily health.²¹³ Remember that your beliefs do not need to be affiliated with any organized religion to constitute religious beliefs, and you do not need to show the religion absolutely requires you to follow a special diet.²¹⁴ suggests that refusing to allow others to wear dreadlocks was not the least restrictive means to achieving compelling government interests).

209. See generally DeHart v. Horn, 227 F.3d 47, 54–55 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that where a prison regulation limits an incarcerated person's ability to engage in a particular religious practice, the second prong of Turner requires an examination of whether there are other means available to the incarcerated person for expressing his religious beliefs. If the prison affords the incarcerated person alternative means of expressing his religious beliefs, that fact tends to support the conclusion that the regulation at issue is reasonable).

210. See Spies v. Voinovich, 173 F.3d 398, 407 (6th Cir. 1999) (holding that plaintiff was not entitled to a strict vegan diet because it was not required by Zen Buddhism and because a vegetarian diet, which the prison already provided, sufficed); see also Dawson v. Burnett, 631 F.Supp.2d 878, 895 (W.D. Mich. 2009) (noting that “there is a legitimate fact question as to whether Plaintiff's religious beliefs require that he participate in a strict vegetarian diet”).

211. See DeHart v. Horn, 227 F.3d 47, 49–54, 61 (3d Cir. 2000) (balancing the Turner factors and holding that although there is a legitimate penological interest in having an efficient food system and avoiding jealousy among incarcerated people, accommodating the Buddhist incarcerated person's request for a cup of soy milk with each meal was not administratively prohibitive and not unreasonable in light of these penological interests, but that on remand the district court was required to examine whether there were other means available to the incarcerated person for expressing his religious beliefs); see also Williams v. Morton, 343 F.3d 212, 217–218 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that the denial of a Muslim incarcerated person's request for Halal meals with meat, rather than prison-provided vegetarian meals, was valid in light of legitimate prison interests in “simplified food service, prison security, and budgetary constraints”). But see McEachern v. McGuinnis, 357 F.3d 197, 198–199, 203–204 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that incarcerated person who claimed that he was subjected to a disciplinary diet of “loaf”, which happened over during Ramadan, when Muslims are required to break their fast each day with Halal food, stated a claim for violation of his religious beliefs).

212. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc-1(a)(1)–(2).

213. See Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 797 (7th Cir. 2008) (hypothesizing that if an incarcerated person's desire for a non-meat diet “was rooted solely in concerns for his bodily health, it would not be protected by RLUIPA”); see also Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 25 (1972) (holding that where fundamental claims of religious freedom are at stake, the court must searchingly examine the interests that the State seeks to promote and the impediment to those objectives that would flow from recognizing the claim).

214. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(7)(A).

One way that you may try to prove that a diet is a religious exercise is to submit paperwork from your religious organization, stating that adherents to the religion often choose to follow special dietary restrictions. For example, in Koger v. Bryan, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals found that an incarcerated person who submitted paperwork from his religious organization, stating that individual members of the faith “may, from time to time, include dietary restrictions as part of his or her personal regimen of spiritual discipline,” had established that his dietary request was “squarely within the definition of religious exercise set forth by RLUIPA.”²¹⁵

When determining whether you are “being sincere about your religious beliefs,” courts have also looked to how long ago you asked to have your request for a special diet accommodated. For example, in Koger, the court pointed out that the incarcerated person had continued to request a non-meat diet accommodated for a long time; the incarcerated person had first filed a request nearly eight years before the case reached the court of appeals.²¹⁶ The court also noted that the fact that the incarcerated person had remained committed to his original religious affiliation throughout this time—rather than changing to another religion that required non-meat diets—indicated that his religious belief was sincerely held.²¹⁷

Once you show you are seeking accommodation of a religious exercise based on sincerely held beliefs, you must then show that the refusal to provide the diet substantially burdens this religious exercise.²¹⁸ At least one court has found that repeated refusal to accommodate a request for a special diet adhered to by some members of a religion counts as a substantial burden, even if the religion does not actually require the diet.²¹⁹

If you are able to prove that the prison substantially burdens your religious exercise by not providing your requested diet, the prison must then show that its reason for not fulfilling your request is based on a compelling government interest and that not permitting the diet is the “least restrictive means” of accomplishing these goals.

To date, courts have recognized orderly administration of a prison dietary system as a valid concern of prison officials.²²⁰ In Jova v. Smith, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals seemed to assume that such administrative interests could be compelling.²²¹ The plaintiffs had requested a vegan diet, specific foods on individual days of the week, and preparation of the food by Tulukshe adherents.²²² The ability of a prison to meet your dietary needs may affect whether a court will find that the government’s interest is compelling. This idea is also supported by Jova. In Jova, the appeals court reversed the district court’s grant of summary judgment because the prison had not demonstrated that providing a vegan diet was too burdensome.²²³ Generally, the orderly administration of a prison dietary system is not a compelling interest.²²⁴ Moreover, if the prison already serves meals that could satisfy your request for a special diet, the court may be more likely to find that the prison did not meet its burden of showing the refusal is based on a compelling government interest.²²⁵

215. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 797 (7th Cir. 2008).

216. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 793–797 (7th Cir. 2008).

217. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 797 (7th Cir. 2008).

218. See Muhammad v. Warithu-Deen Umar, 98 F. Supp. 2d 337, 345 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (finding that prison’s refusal to provide Muslim incarcerated person with a kosher cold alternative meal rather than the religious alternative meal was not a substantial burden on the incarcerated person’s religious exercise).

219. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 798 (7th Cir. 2008).

220. See, e.g., Resnick v. Adams, 348 F.3d 763, 769 (9th Cir. 2003) (“The legitimate governmental interest at stake here is the orderly administration of a program that allows federal prisons to accommodate the religious dietary needs of thousands of prisoners.”) (citations omitted); DeHart v. Horn, 227 F.3d 47, 52 (3d Cir. 2000) (agreeing with prison officials that “a simplified and efficient food service” is a legitimate penological interest).

221. Jova v. Smith, 582 F.3d 410, 416–417 (2d Cir. 2009).

222. Jova v. Smith, 582 F.3d 410, 416–417 (2d Cir. 2009).

223. Jova v. Smith, 582 F.3d 410, 417 (2d Cir. 2009).

224. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 800 (7th Cir. 2008) (“[N]o appellate court has ever found these [legitimate concerns for orderly administration of a prison dietary system] to be compelling interests.”).

225. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 800 (7th Cir. 2008).

(f) Special Attire

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the Free Exercise Clause, a prison may prevent you from wearing certain attire required by your religion, like prayer hats or head coverings, or keeping facial hair in a certain way as required by your religion. This can be done if there is a “reasonable” relationship between the regulation and a “legitimate” prison interest.²²⁶ Many courts have held the right to wear head coverings must be weighed against the state’s security concern that weapons and drugs can be concealed under a hat.²²⁷

For example, a New York court held that a prison could prohibit incarcerated people from wearing Rastafarian “crowns” (loose fitting headgear worn over dreadlocks) in some or all areas of the prison because of the legitimate security interests of the prison, even though Jewish and Muslim incarcerated people could wear their respective religious headgear (that are smaller and more closely fitted) throughout the prison.²²⁸ The court determined that the prison had a legitimate security interest in the different treatment because Rastafarian crowns are large and shapeless enough to conceal weapons and contraband, as compared to the smaller, closely fitting head coverings worn by members of other religions.²²⁹

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, you will first need to show that the prison has substantially burdened your religious exercise by not allowing you to wear your religious attire.²³⁰ If you make such a showing, the court will then decide whether the restriction furthers compelling governmental interests by the least restrictive means available. Because prison safety and security are considered compelling governmental interests, the court will need to determine whether the challenged regulations are the least restrictive means of accomplishing the safety and security goals. Ultimately, the outcome may be similar to raising a First Amendment challenge, where objects that threaten security are banned while those that do not are permitted.

In Haley v. R.J. Donovan Correctional Facility, a federal court held that while the facility’s grooming regulation for male incarcerated people did not violate incarcerated peoples’ First Amendments free expression rights, the regulation violated RLUIPA: “[A]lthough prison security constitutes a compelling government interest, the [California Department of Corrections] has failed to meet its burden of showing that this regulation is the least restrictive means of furthering that interest.”²³¹ In Warsoldier v. Woodford, the court held that the prison’s grooming policy requiring male 226. See Davis v. Clinton, 74 F. App’x 452, 455 (6th Cir. 2003) (upholding prison policy prohibiting Muslim incarcerated person from wearing religious garb every day due to the policy’s reasonable relationship to valid security concerns).

227. See, e.g., Boles v. Neet, 486 F.3d 1177, 1178–1179 (10th Cir. Colo. 2007) (holding that the incarcerated person established a violation of his First Amendment rights when the prison prohibited him from wearing a yarmulke while in transport between the prison and hospital). But see Young v. Lane, 922 F.2d 370, 375–377 (7th Cir. 1991) (holding that the policy of allowing Jewish incarcerated people to wear their yarmulkes only inside cells and during religious services did not violate incarcerated peoples’ First Amendment rights because this policy “reasonably relates to legitimate penological interests” and incarcerated people have other means for expression); Standing Deer v. Carlson, 831 F.2d 1525, 1526–1528 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding that the ban of Native American headgear, including religious headbands, in dining hall did not violate First Amendment rights because the headgear ban is “logically connected to legitimate penological interests” because of sanitation, security and safety concerns).

228. Benjamin v. Coughlin, 905 F.2d 571, 578–579 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that restricting wearing of Rastafarian crowns did not violate the 1st Amendment or Equal Protection); Bunny v. Coughlin, 187 A.D.2d 119, 122–123, 593 N.Y.S.2d 354, 356–357 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that wearing of Rastafarian crown was properly denied).

229. Benjamin v. Coughlin, 905 F.2d 571, 579 (2d Cir. 1990); Bunny v. Coughlin, 187 A.D.2d 119, 123, 593 N.Y.S.2d 354, 357 (3d Dept. 1993).

230. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc-1(a).

231. Haley v. R.J. Donovan Corr. Facility, 152 F. App’x 637, 638–639 (9th Cir. 2005) (applying Turner v.

incarcerated people to maintain hair no longer than three inches imposed substantial burden on Native American incarcerated peoples' religious practice within RLUIPA and that the California Department of Corrections had failed to explain "why prisons in other jurisdictions and its own women's prisons are able to meet the same compelling interests of prison safety and security without requiring short hair or permitting a religious exemption."²³²

As shown in the above cases, if you can show that prison officials allow other incarcerated people to wear the religious attire you wish to wear, you may be able to convince the court that the prison's regulation is not the least restrictive means of achieving its desired goals.

(g) Medical Tests

(i) First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Under the Free Exercise Clause, a prison may refuse to accommodate your request not to receive medical procedures, such as the tuberculosis skin test, based on religious objections. To determine whether an injunction is appropriate, a court will apply the Turner standard.²³³ In most cases, courts have upheld mandatory tuberculosis testing policies as reasonably related to legitimate objectives of prison administration.²³⁴

Because medical testing and vaccination requirements affect the well-being of the entire prison population and not just the rights of an individual incarcerated person, courts apply an analysis that is somewhat different from the one applied to other limitations of incarcerated peoples' rights. Some courts give significant weight to the fact that vaccination and medical testing requirements are general, do not burden or support one religion over any others, and are related to maintaining the health and safety of the prison population and officials.²³⁵

Many courts have also upheld a state statute that required an incarcerated person to provide a DNA sample against a religious challenge. For example, in Shaffer v. Saffle,²³⁶ an Oklahoma statute required individuals convicted of certain offenses (sex-related crimes, violent crimes, and other crimes where biological evidence was recovered) to provide a DNA sample for the state's DNA Offender Database. The purpose of this sample was so that the state could more easily identify and prosecute criminals. An incarcerated person challenged the statute, contending that it would force him "to submit to a practice that will require him to deny his faith and condemn him to eternal damnation."²³⁷ The court held that the incarcerated person's First Amendment Free Exercise right had not been violated because the statute was a neutral, generally-applicable law that did not discriminate against him based on his particular religious beliefs.

Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) ("[W]hen a prison regulation impinges on inmates' constitutional rights, the regulation is valid if it is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.")). For more information on the Turner standard, see Part C(1)(c) of this Chapter.

232. Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 998–1001 (9th Cir. 2005).

233. For more information on the Turner standard, see Part C(1)(c) of this Chapter. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) ("[W]hen a prison regulation impinges on inmates' constitutional rights, the regulation is valid if it is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.").

234. See, e.g., Ballard v. Woodard, 641 F. Supp. 432, 437 (W.D.N.C. 1986) (holding that the free religious exercise rights of a Muslim incarcerated person were not violated when he was subjected to tuberculosis testing during the holy month of Ramadan since the state had a "paramount interest in maintaining the health of its prison population.").

235. See generally Ballard v. Woodard, 641 F. Supp. 432, 437 (W.D.N.C. 1986); see also McCormick v. Stalder, 105 F.3d 1059, 1061–1062 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that prison officials could constitutionally quarantine an incarcerated person who tested positive for tuberculosis and force him to undergo treatment).

236. Shaffer v. Saffle, 148 F.3d 1180, 1181 (10th Cir. 1998).

237. Shaffer v. Saffle, 148 F.3d 1180, 1181 (10th Cir. 1998).

(ii) RLUIPA

Under RLUIPA, a prison may refuse to accommodate your request not to receive medical procedures even if refusing constitutes a substantial burden on your religious exercise, so long as the refusal (1) furthers a compelling government interest (2) by the least restrictive means.²³⁸

As in other RLUIPA cases, you must prove that the medical testing or vaccination requirement substantially burdens your religious exercise.²³⁹ The prison must then prove that the regulation furthers a compelling government interest by the least restrictive means.²⁴⁰ Because most medical procedures potentially affect the entire prison population's health, and not just the individual incarcerated person's rights, the court will likely conclude that many procedures protect the health of the prison population and thus further a compelling government interest. Your best chance of successfully challenging a medical testing or vaccination requirement may be that the specific medical procedure is not the least restrictive means of testing you. For example, in Jolly v. Coughlin, a Rastafarian incarcerated person was placed in medical keeplock for refusing to take a tuberculosis test.²⁴¹ The court held that, although the government's interest in preventing the spread of tuberculosis was compelling, keeping the incarcerated person in medical keeplock violated RFRA. This was because even if the incarcerated person had tested positive for latent tuberculosis and refused to take the medication, he would have been placed back in the general population.²⁴² Results like Jolly, however, are fact-specific, and your chance of successfully challenging a medical testing or inoculation requirement under RLUIPA, just like under the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, is probably minimal.²⁴³

D. Your Rights Under New York State Statutes

In addition to federal law, many states have laws protecting incarcerated peoples' rights to practice their religion. This Part specifically reviews relevant New York statutes that are different from what is explained in the rest of this Chapter. State statutes are not exclusive and provide some, but not all, of the remedies available. In other words, you may sue under a state statute, a federal statute, and/or

238. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a)(1)–(2).

239. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a). See also Thomas v. Review Bd. of Ind. Emp't Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 718, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1432 (1981) (stating that when the state "[put[s] substantial pressure on an adherent to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs, a burden upon religion exists."); Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 477 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that a substantial burden exists when the state puts substantial pressure on a incarcerated person to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs).

240. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a)(1)–(2).

241. See Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 477 (2d Cir. 1996) (granting an injunction, pending plaintiff's claim under RFRA, to release plaintiff from a "medical keeplock" where he had been held for three-and-a-half years after he refused a tuberculosis test on religious grounds. The court found that despite his confinement, he was breathing the same air as other incarcerated people, and incarcerated people who tested positive were not kept in a "medical keeplock"). But see Redd v. Wright, 597 F.3d 532, 537 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding that the plaintiff's TB hold in 2001 was not in violation of his First Amendment right or RLUIPA. The court distinguished its case from Jolly, saying that while "Jolly rejected the state's contention that the mandatory [purified protein derivative] test is a reasonable way of preventing the spread of TB in prisons, that court nevertheless recognized that administering an effective TB screening program might be a compelling state interest and that this interest might justify a TB hold policy.").

242. Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 477 (2d Cir. 1996).

243. Soder v. Williamson, No. 4:07-CV-1851, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68513, at *14–17 (M.D. Pa. Aug. 7, 2008) (unpublished) (finding no grounds for an RLUIPA violation where prison officials had tested an incarcerated person for tuberculosis using a chest X-ray—the method that the incarcerated person requested—and observing that the state has a particularly "clear and compelling interest in detecting" highly contagious and potentially dangerous diseases); See also Johnson v. Sherman, No. CIV S-04-2255 LKK EFB P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24098, at *12 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 30, 2007) (unpublished) (denying injunction to Rastafarian incarcerated person challenging prison's requirement that he undergo a tuberculin skin test to test for latent tuberculosis because "[t]he tuberculosis skin test is the only medically accepted test available to discover latent tuberculosis in California's prisons.").

the U.S. Constitution. Make sure that you check for the most recent version of the law in your state before you file a claim.

Section 610(1) of the New York Corrections Law declares that you are “entitled to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference.”²⁴⁴ Subdivision (3) of this law provides that the rules and regulations of correctional institutions must allow religious services, spiritual advice, and private support from recognized clergy members.”²⁴⁵ But, the law also authorizes correctional institutions to reasonably restrict this right if necessary for proper institutional management.²⁴⁶

A New York court applying this law has required the Commissioner of Correction to redraft rules and regulations to allow clergy members to be admitted into a prison to conduct religious services, and to entirely remove rules and regulations that prevented potential members of a faith group from attending services.²⁴⁷ However, these exercise rights are subject to reasonable limitations by the Commissioner of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) and by prison wardens to protect prison security, discipline, or other legitimate prison interests.²⁴⁸ Note that courts have also interpreted Section 610(1) to require the presence of a “non-inmate spiritual leader” at all religious congregations in prison, and the non-inmate spiritual leader must be registered and approved pursuant to prison directives.²⁴⁹ You should read Section 610 carefully, along with the cases cited in the corresponding Notes of Decisions. These Notes can be found in the same volume of McKinney’s Consolidated Laws as the law, just after the law’s text.

In addition to Section 610, you may also bring claims under the New York State Constitution. To determine if a restriction limiting your right to free exercise of religion is legal under the New York State Constitution, courts will balance the “importance of the right asserted and the extent of the infringement ... against the institutional needs and objectives being promoted.”²⁵⁰ In general, New York courts follow the same analysis as claims brought under the U.S. Constitution. Therefore, if you believe a New York law or DOCCS directive interferes with your right to free exercise of religion, you

244. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 610(1) (McKinney 2014).

245. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 610(3) (McKinney 2014).

246. See also Brown v. McGinnis, 10 N.Y.2d 531, 535–536, 180 N.E.2d 791, 793, 225 N.Y.S.2d 497, 500–501 (1962) (finding that the freedom to exercise religion is not absolute because the law allows for the reasonable curtailment of this freedom if necessary for the “proper discipline and management” of the prison). See also N.Y. Correct. Law § 610(3) (McKinney 2014).

247. See Samarion v. McGinnis, 55 Misc. 2d 59, 61–62, 284 N.Y.S.2d 504, 508 (Sup. Ct. Erie County 1967) (requiring the Commissioner to remove or revise certain rules and regulations, required under New York Correct. Law § 610, after Black Muslims alleged they were denied their right to practice their religion).

248. See Samarion v. McGinnis, 55 Misc. 2d 59, 61–62, 284 N.Y.S.2d 504, 508 (Sup. Ct. Erie County 1967) (allowing the Commissioner and Warden to limit the diet of inmates in some ways and to supervise religious practice if reasonable and consistent with prison security and not an undue restriction on the manner in which Muslim services could be conducted).

249. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4750, Volunteer Services Program § V-A-4 (2019) (dealing with “Volunteer Services Programs,” and including guidelines for “Religious Volunteer and Spiritual Advisor”); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive 4202, Religious Programs and Practices § VI-B-2-a, b (2015) (providing that, with specific authorization of the facility Superintendent, incarcerated people may “observe their congregational worship services when led by employee Chaplains or outside religious volunteers” and “attend religious classes facilitated by a Chaplain, an approved volunteer, or an approved facilitator”). See also Benjamin v. Coughlin, 905 F.2d 571, 577, (2d. Cir. 1990) (“DOCS has interpreted section 610 to mean that inmate religious groups are permitted to congregate for religious observance only under the supervision of a non-inmate spiritual leader known as a ‘free-world sponsor’”).

250. Lucas v. Scully, 71 N.Y.2d 399, 406, 521 N.E.2d 1070, 1073, 526 N.Y.S.2d 927, 930 (1988) (stating the balancing test mentioned above but noting that the judgment of prison officials receives “a measure of judicial deference”, and finding that even though a prison policy that allowed the inspection of incarcerated peoples’ mail sent to businesses implicated First Amendment rights, the policy did not violate the New York State Constitution).

should be prepared to make an argument using the constitutional analysis provided earlier in this Chapter.

Although New York state courts follow the same general constitutional analysis as federal courts, there are some differences that you should be aware of when evaluating whether you have a legitimate claim.

For example, New York courts and DOCCS have adopted a specific rule dealing with initial haircuts and shaves for purposes of obtaining identification photographs.²⁵¹ Under this rule, a prison may not require all incarcerated people to have their hair cut upon admission, as there are less intrusive alternatives available that do not increase any administrative burden (for example, tying one's hair back).²⁵² An initial haircut requirement is therefore an unconstitutional violation of religious rights under New York law. But, a prison can still require incarcerated people to undergo an initial facial hair shave, since there are "no less intrusive alternatives for photographing the underlying facial features."²⁵³ Note, however, that DOCCS seems to recognize computer imaging as a viable alternative to the initial shave requirement.²⁵⁴

DOCCS has also adopted specific rules for shaving your facial hair after being processed. Under this rule, although incarcerated people cannot grow facial hair longer than one inch from the face, there is a religious exemption for the one-inch requirement for those whose religious rules prohibit the cutting of facial hair.²⁵⁵

Likewise, DOCCS has adopted specific dietary rules. For example, in many instances, New York incarcerated people may avoid eating foods forbidden by their religious beliefs, and the prison must provide them with a nutritionally adequate substitute diet.²⁵⁶ DOCCS policy also provides Muslim, Buddhist, and Orthodox Jewish incarcerated people special meals during certain holidays.²⁵⁷ Despite these provisions, there are limitations to the religious meals and ceremonies an incarcerated person can get. For example, a court held a Jewish incarcerated person could not insist on preparing his meals himself, nor could he require that only a Jewish or Muslim cook prepare them.²⁵⁸ Because the prison

251. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive 4914, Inmate Grooming Standards (2019).

252. See People v. Lewis, 115 A.D.2d 597, 598, 496 N.Y.S.2d 258, 260 (2d Dept. 1985), aff'd, 68 N.Y.2d 923, 502 N.E.2d 988, 510 N.Y.S.2d 73 (1986) ("[T]he identification objective would be fully achieved by pulling respondent's locks back tightly behind the head for a photograph so they could not be seen . . . the asserted objectives of a haircut can be achieved through alternatives that impinge less drastically on respondent's First Amendment rights than directing him to cut his hair.").

253. See People v. Lewis, 115 A.D.2d 597, 598, 496 N.Y.S.2d 258, 260 (2d Dept. 1985), aff'd, 68 N.Y.2d 923, 502 N.E.2d 988, 510 N.Y.S.2d 73 (1986); see also Phillips v. Coughlin, 586 F. Supp. 1281, 1285 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (denying Rastafarian's claim for damages after an initial shave pursuant to Directive 4914, since a single shave is the "simplest, quickest and most comfortable method" of satisfying the security need for a clean-shaven identification photograph).

254. See Helbrans v. Coombe, 890 F. Supp. 227, 230 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (noting that DOCCS and incarcerated person reached an agreement in which DOCCS allowed a Jewish incarcerated person to pay for a computer-generated photograph that displayed his image without his beard as an alternative to the initial shave requirement).

255. See State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive 4914, Inmate Grooming Standards § III-D-1-b (2019), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4914.pdf> (last visited Feb. 11, 2020).

256. See State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive 4202, Religious Programs and Practices § XVI (2015), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4202.pdf> (last visited Feb. 11, 2020). But see Bunny v. Coughlin, 187 A.D.2d 119, 123, 593 N.Y.S.2d 354, 357 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that a Rastafarian incarcerated person was not entitled to dietary restrictions because the prison did not have the resources to accommodate him).

257. See Benjamin v. Coughlin, 905 F.2d 571, 574, 579–580 (2d Cir. 1990) (noting that under DOCCS policy, alternative portions are offered to all incarcerated people whenever pork is served, and special kosher meals are provided for incarcerated people at some facilities. Muslim and Buddhist incarcerated people are provided special meals during certain holidays.).

258. Malik v. Coughlin, 158 A.D.2d 833, 834–835, 551 N.Y.S.2d 418, 419 (3d Dept. 1990).

provided the incarcerated person with pork-free meals, it did not have to meet his other preparation demands given the prison's valid budgetary reasons.²⁵⁹

E. Faith-Based Rehabilitation Programs

In the past few years, there has been an increase in the number of faith-based rehabilitation programs within state prison facilities, many initiated by volunteer evangelical Christian organizations (the Prison Fellowship Ministries, in particular).²⁶⁰ What makes these faith-based programs different from other religious-based organizations within the prison is their implementation by the state and the "special treatment" participating incarcerated people seem to receive.

These faith-based programs raise serious constitutional questions. While the Supreme Court has not yet decided on the constitutionality of faith-based rehabilitation programs, several state and federal courts have.²⁶¹ In Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries,²⁶² an Iowa federal district court held that the challenged faith-based program violated the Establishment Clause, which is explained above in Part B of this Chapter.²⁶³

Much of the court's decision in that case, however, turned on the fact that the program was state-funded, conducted in a state prison by a private religious organization, and all instruction (with the exception of one subject) was presented from the viewpoint of Evangelical Christianity.²⁶⁴ It is unclear how a similar case would be decided if the program was privately funded, or if the program was less religiously focused.

Courts generally treat faith-based prison addiction treatment programs differently (primarily Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous, which "are rooted ... in a regard for a 'higher power'").²⁶⁵ Rather than holding that these programs violate the Establishment Clause, courts tend to simply say that incarcerated people cannot be required to participate in faith-based programs.²⁶⁶ However, some courts have required that secular alternatives to faith-based treatment programs be available to incarcerated people.²⁶⁷

259. Malik v. Coughlin, 158 A.D.2d 833, 834–835, 551 N.Y.S.2d 418, 419 (3d Dept. 1990).

260. See Daniel Brook, When God Goes to Prison, Legal Aff. (May–June, 2003) at 22; Samantha M. Shapiro, Jails for Jesus, Mother Jones (Nov.–Dec. 2003) at 54.

261. See, e.g., Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, 432 F. Supp. 2d 862, 934 (S.D. Iowa 2006) (holding that a faith-based prison program violated incarcerated peoples' Establishment Clause rights under the 1st Amendment and the Iowa Constitution), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 509 F.3d 406 (8th Cir. 2007); Williams v. Huff, 52 S.W.3d 171, 192, 44 Tex. Sup. J. 998 (Tex. 2001) (holding that a faith-based prison program violated incarcerated peoples' Establishment Clause rights under the 1st Amendment).

262. Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, 432 F. Supp. 2d 862 (S.D. Iowa 2006), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 509 F.3d 406 (8th Cir. 2007).

263. Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, 432 F. Supp. 2d 862, 933 (S.D. Iowa 2006), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 509 F.3d 406 (8th Cir. 2007).

264. Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, 432 F. Supp. 2d 862, 918–921 (S.D. Iowa 2006), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 509 F.3d 406 (8th Cir. 2007).

265. Inouye v. Kemna, 504 F.3d 705, 712–714 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that a parolee cannot be ordered into a treatment program that has pronounced religious overtones, including references to God, a higher power, and prayer).

266. See, e.g., Kerr v. Farrey, 95 F.3d 472, 478–480 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that incarcerated person could not be required to participate in Narcotics Anonymous, nor could he have his security classification raised for refusing to do so); Turner v. Hickman, 342 F. Supp. 2d 887, 895–98 (E.D. Cal. 2004) (holding that requiring incarcerated person to participate in Narcotics Anonymous in order to be eligible for parole violated the Establishment Clause).

267. See, e.g., Warner v. Orange Cty. Dep't of Prob., 115 F.3d 1068, 1081 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that forced attendance at Alcoholics Anonymous as a probation condition violated the Establishment Clause and requiring the county to make a non-religious treatment alternative available).

APPENDIX A

LIST OF RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Below is a list of organizations that might be able to assist you in exercising your freedom to practice your religion while in prison. Most of these organizations do not provide legal assistance, and unless otherwise stated, probably do not have an outreach program specifically for incarcerated people. The JLM makes no endorsement or recommendation of any of the following organizations or religions and does not guarantee that they will be able to help you.

Antiochian Orthodox ChristianOrthodox Christian Prison Ministry

P.O. Box 468
Fleetwood, PA 19522
(610) 777-1552

Armenian ApostolicArmenian Church of America, Eastern Diocese

630 Second Ave.
New York, NY 10016
(212) 686-0710; FAX: (212) 779-3558

Bahá'íNational Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States

536 Sheridan Road
Wilmette, IL 60091
(847) 733-3400

BuddhistTu An Zen Temple

4310 W. 5th St.
Santa Ana, CA 92703
(714) 265-2357
Vietnamese and Chinese speakers available.

Byzantine CatholicByzantine Catholic Church

Most Rev. Archbishop Basil Schott
66 Riverview Ave.
Pittsburgh, PA 15214-2253
(412) 231-4000; FAX: (412) 231-1697

Chinese CatholicAscension Chinese Catholic Church

4605 Jetty Lane
Houston, TX 77072
(281) 575-8855; FAX: (281) 575-6940

Croatian CatholicCroatian Church of St. Cyril & Methodius

502 W. 41st St.
New York, NY 10036
(212) 563-3395; FAX: (212) 868-1203

Roman Catholic (including Spanish and French-Speaking)Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights

450 Seventh Ave.
New York, NY 10123
(212) 371-3191; FAX: (212) 371-3394
*This group does not provide legal assistance.
However, it will advocate informally on your behalf by contacting your prison warden if you are Roman Catholic and prevented in some way from practicing your religion.*

Asociación Nacional de SacerdotesHispanos en USA

(The National Association of Hispanic Priests of the USA)
2472 Bolsover, Suite 442
Houston, TX 77005
(713) 528-6517; FAX: (713) 528-6379

Coptic ChristianSt. Mark's Coptic Orthodox Church

1600 S. Robertson Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90035
(310) 275-3050; FAX: (310) 276-6333

Greek OrthodoxGreek Orthodox Church

Archdiocese of America
8 E. 79th St.
New York, NY 10075
(212) 570-3500; FAX: (212) 570-3569

HinduHinduism Today

Kauai's Hindu Monastery

107 Kaholalele Rd.

Kapaa, HI 96746-9304

(808) 822-3012; FAX: (808) 822-4351

Subscriptions are available to Hinduism Today.

Hindu Temple Society of Southern California

1600 Las Virgenes Canyon Rd.

Calabasas, CA 91302

(818) 880-5552; FAX: (818) 880-5583

IslamicBelievers' Bail OutCouncil on American Islamic RelationsMuslim AdvocatesJustice for Muslims CollectiveIslamic Society of North America

P.O. Box 38

Plainfield, IN 46168

(317) 839-8157; FAX: (317) 839-1840

JainistFederation of Jain Associations in North America (JAINA)

JAINA Headquarters

43-11 Ithaca Street

Elmhurst, NY 11373

(718) 606-2885

JewishAleph Institute

Executive Director of Legal Affairs

9540 Collins Ave.

Surfside, FL 33154

(305) 864-5553; FAX (305) 864-5675

This organization serves the needs of Jews of all backgrounds who are in institutional environments, including the military, hospitals, and prisons. Volunteers conduct prison visits, particularly in conjunction with religious holidays. It provides religious education, legal advocacy on behalf of religious rights, and assistance to incarcerated peoples' families.

Serbian OrthodoxSaint Steven's Serbian Orthodox Cathedral

1621 W. Garvey Ave.

Alhambra, CA 91803

(626) 284-9100; FAX: (626) 281-5045

Shi'a MuslimShi'a Ithna Asheri Jamaat of New York

48-67 58th St.

Woodside, NY 11377

(718) 507-7680

Miscellaneous/InterdenominationalPrison Ashram Project

Human Kindness Foundation

P.O. Box 61619

Durham, NC 27715

(919) 383-5160

Native American/Indigenous See Appendix IV of the JLM for a list of several organizations that work with Native Americans and address some Native American religious concerns.

CHAPTER 28

RIGHTS OF INCARCERATED PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains the protections and legal rights available to incarcerated people with disabilities. As an incarcerated person with one or more disabilities—whether physical, cognitive, or both—you have legal rights based in the U.S. Constitution, federal civil rights laws, and some state laws. These laws forbid discrimination against you because of your disability.

Part A of this Chapter summarizes the laws protecting incarcerated people with disabilities. Part B of this Chapter explains the two major federal laws against disability discrimination: (1) Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (“Section 504”)¹ and (2) Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA,” “Title II,” or “ADA Title II”).² Part B of this Chapter also explains what you need to prove in a legal claim under the ADA.³ Your rights are mostly the same under Section 504 and Title II,⁴ so you should consult both statutes and consider seeking relief under both.⁵ Part C of this Chapter explains how to enforce your rights under both Section 504 and Title II. It explains what a court can and cannot order, taking into account some restrictions that have developed over the last decade.

If, because you have a disability, you either (1) are not receiving the services you need, or (2) are being discriminated against, you may have a constitutional claim (in addition to Section 504 and Title II claims). For example, the way prison officials treat incarcerated people with disabilities—particularly in denying them medical care—can violate the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition against “cruel and unusual punishment.”⁶ As an incarcerated person with disabilities, you also have important constitutional rights to medical care. This Chapter does not talk about your constitutional rights. To

* This Chapter was revised by Zahava Blumenthal with the help of Prof. Betsy Ginsburg at the New York University School of Law. It is based on previous versions by Amy E. Lowenstein and Robert Lougy. Special thanks to Lowenstein, now of Disability Advocates, Inc., and James Harrington of the Texas Civil Rights Project.

1. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 701, amended by 29 U.S.C. § 794.

2. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–12213.

3. The ADA contains many sections, called “titles.” Title II of the ADA is the most important ADA section for your claims. It protects you from disability discrimination by state and local government entities, including prisons and jails. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 12131–12134. It provides that “no qualified individual with a disability shall, by reason of such disability, be excluded from participation in or be denied the benefits of the services, programs, or activities of a public entity, or be subjected to discrimination by any such entity.” Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12132.

4. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12133 (stating that the “remedies, procedures, and rights set forth in section 794a of Title 29 shall be the remedies, procedures, and rights this subchapter provides to any person alleging discrimination on the basis of disability in violation of [Title II of the ADA].”).

5. Part B(1) of this Chapter, below, explains the details of when you would seek relief under only one of these laws. Generally, you cannot not sue the federal government under the ADA. If you are in a privately run prison, you most likely can sue under Title II of the ADA, but you may also want to sue under Title III of the ADA. See notes 14–26 of this Chapter and accompanying text.

6. See, e.g., Allah v. Goord, 405 F. Supp. 2d 265, 275–277 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (holding that a paraplegic incarcerated person stated an 8th Amendment claim in alleging that, while he was in his wheelchair, his wheelchair had been strapped into a vehicle too loosely, and thus he had been injured when the vehicle stopped suddenly); see also Lawson v. Dallas County, 286 F.3d 257, 263–264 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that a prison’s failure to provide a paraplegic incarcerated person with rehabilitation therapy, adequate toilet facilities, and a bed with an adequate mattress was medical neglect and inhumane treatment that violated the incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment rights); LaFaut v. Smith, 834 F.2d 389, 392–394 (4th Cir. 1987) (holding that not offering prescribed rehabilitation therapy and adequate toilet facilities violated the 8th Amendment); Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1261–1263 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that allegations by a wheelchair-using paraplegic that he was denied wheelchair repairs, physical therapy, medical consultations, leg braces and orthopedic shoes, wheelchair-accessible showers and toilets, opportunity to bathe, urinary catheters, and assistance in using the toilet raised a material factual issue under the 8th Amendment), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149, 1150 (11th Cir. 2006).

learn more about your constitutional rights, including your right to adequate medical care, you should read Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care,” Chapter 26 of the JLM, “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prison,” and Chapter 29 of the JLM, “Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness.” Other chapters especially useful for all incarcerated people include Chapter 4 of the JLM, “How to Find a Lawyer,” Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,”⁷ Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures,” and Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

Although your protections under Section 504 and the ADA have been weakened by the courts, they are still important civil rights and antidiscrimination laws. Using these laws, incarcerated people with disabilities have won important victories in many federal judicial circuits, through both individual and class action suits. This Chapter will explain how you, as an incarcerated person with a disability, can use these laws to protect your rights.

B. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act

1. Introduction

If you are an incarcerated person in a state or local facility and have one or more disabilities, Section 504⁸ and Title II⁹ are two different laws that protect you in similar ways. Section 504 was enacted by Congress in 1973. It applies both to the federal government and to state and local entities that receive federal funding. In 1990, Congress passed the ADA, which expanded and strengthened Section 504’s protections.¹⁰ The language of Section 504 is very similar to the language of Title II; courts read them as prohibiting the same basic forms of discrimination.¹¹ You should start researching your claim by reading the two laws carefully, because most cases focus on how to interpret the laws. Since these two laws offer you similar protections, much of the discussion of Title II of ADA in this Chapter will apply to Section 504, and vice versa.

If you are an incarcerated person in a federal prison, or a non-citizen detainee in a federal detention center, you can file suit only under Section 504. You cannot use the ADA because the ADA cannot be used to sue the federal government.¹² Also, if you sue a federal agency under Section 504,

7. Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” is particularly relevant as it discusses restrictions on incarcerated people’s lawsuits that could affect your § 504 or ADA claim.

8. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 701.

9. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12101.

10. In some areas of the law, the ADA provides much broader protections for the disabled than Section 504 does. For instance, the ADA specifically requires places like stores, restaurants, and banks to accommodate (make adaptations for) persons with disabilities. See 42 U.S.C. § 12181. The ADA also provides persons with disabilities protection against employment discrimination because of their disabilities. See 42 U.S.C. § 12112. But for prisons, jails, and state and local government entities, the ADA and § 504 give basically the same protections.

11. Congress passed the ADA Amendments Act of 2008 because it was displeased that the courts were interpreting the definition of disability differently under the ADA than under Section 504. The ADA Amendments Act states, “Congress expected that the definition of disability under the ADA would be interpreted consistently with how courts had applied the definition of a handicapped individual under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973” and that, in particular, courts have “interpreted the term ‘substantially limits’ to require a greater degree of limitation than was intended by Congress” (ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-325, § 2(a)(3), (7), 122 Stat. 3553, 3554) (2008). The result of this amendment is that it is now easier to meet the qualifications for having a disability than it was before 2008. Also, you may be more likely to win under the ADA if you win under Section 504, since the two laws are now more similar. As a result of the new law, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (which defines, in its regulations, many of the terms you will use in your ADA suit) changed its definition of “substantially limits” to be interpreted “broadly in favor of expansive coverage,” as it is “not meant to be a demanding standard.” 29 C.F.R. § 1630.2(j)(1)(i) (2020).

12. The ADA only protects against discrimination by a “public entity.” 42 U.S.C. § 12132. The ADA defines “public entity” as “(A) any State or local government; (B) any department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a State or States or local government.” 42 U.S.C. § 12131(1)(A)–(B). This definition does not include agencies of the federal government. See Cellular Phone Taskforce v. FCC, 217 F.3d 72, 73 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that the ADA does not apply to the federal government); Disability Rights Section, Americans with Disabilities Act: Title II Technical Assistance Manual, II-1.2000, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <http://www.ada.gov/taman2.html> (last visited Nov. 23, 2020).

you can ask only for an injunction, not money damages.¹³ An injunction is a court order requiring the prison or agency to correct the violation.

Even if you are an incarcerated person in a privately-operated prison you should probably bring suit under Title II. According to the Department of Justice regulations, Title II prohibits discrimination on the basis of one's disability when a service, program, or activity is provided directly by a public entity, as well as when it is provided indirectly by a public entity through a contract, license, or other arrangement.¹⁴ The ADA defines "Public Entity" as (1) any State or local government, (2) any department . . . or other instrumentality of a State or States or local government."¹⁵ Many courts have found that Title II does not apply to claims against private prisons on the grounds that such prisons do not meet the definition of public entity,¹⁶ however, such cases frequently also find that the public entity (i.e., state or local government contracting with the private entity) still may have some responsibility for the actions of the private entity, on the grounds that the public entity cannot contract away its responsibility to avoid discrimination.¹⁷

If you are being held in a privately-run prison, you may also want to sue under Title III¹⁸ of the ADA in case Title II arguments are rejected. Title II and Title III are very similar. While Title II prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability by public entities, Title III prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability by "any place of public accommodation."¹⁹ More specifically, the implementing regulations for Title III state that "[n]o individual shall be discriminated against on the basis of disability in the full and equal enjoyment of the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, or accommodations of any place of public accommodation by any private entity who owns, leases (or leases to), or operates a place of public accommodation."²⁰ The Title III regulations define "place of public accommodation" as "a facility operated by a private entity whose operations affect commerce and fall within at least one of" several noted categories.²¹ Such categories include "place[s] of lodging," and "social service center establishment[s]."²²

You can get Department of Justice (DOJ) printed materials on the ADA for free by contacting the DOJ by mail or phone. Publications are available in standard print and alternate format. Some publications are available in foreign languages. To order by mail, write to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
950 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.
Disability Rights Section -- NYAV
Washington, D.C. 20530.

In your letter, include the name of the publication you want. To order by phone, call the ADA Information Line at (800) 514-0301 (voice) or (800) 514-0383 (TTY). At these numbers, you can hear recorded information and order publications twenty-four hours a day. You can reach someone who can answer specific questions about the ADA, in English or Spanish, if you call on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Fridays between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. (Eastern Time) (and on Thursdays, when the hours are 12:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. (Eastern Time)).

13. Lane v. Pena, 518 U.S. 187, 200, 116 S. Ct. 2092, 2100, 135 L. Ed. 2d 486, 498 (1996) (holding that Congress did not waive the federal government's immunity against monetary damages for violations of the Rehabilitation Act).

14. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1) (2020).

15. 28 C.F.R. § 35.104 (2020).

16. See, e.g., Edison v. Doublerly, 604 F.3d 1307, 1310 (11th Cir. 2010) (holding that "a private corporation is not a public entity merely because it contracts with a public entity to provide some service."); see also Lee v. Corrections Corporation of America, 61 F.Supp.3d. 139, 142–144 (D.D.C. 2014) (holding that plaintiffs fail to state a claim against a "public entity" under Title II because defendant is a private prison company).

17. Wilkins-Jones v. Cty. of Alameda, 859 F. Supp. 2d 1039, 1048 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (finding that the plaintiff could bring suit against the government when a private contractor with the government violates the ADA).

18. 42 U.S.C. §§ 12181–12189.

19. 42 U.S.C. § 12181(7).

20. 28 C.F.R. § 36.201(a) (2020).

21. 28 C.F.R. § 36.104 (2020).

22. 28 C.F.R. § 36.104 (2020).

It is unclear whether the definition of public accommodation includes prisons, though many courts have found that prisons are not places of public accommodation for purposes of Title III.²³ While it appears unlikely that a Title III claim arising out of disability discrimination in a prison context will be successful, it may be nonetheless worth including a Title III claim, as such claims can be brought against private entities (avoiding the limitation of Title II).²⁴ One limitation on Title III claims is that individuals suing under Title III can seek only injunctive relief, not monetary damages.²⁵ Additionally, a prison sued under Title III can defend itself by arguing that accommodating your disability is not “readily achievable,” meaning that the accommodation cannot be easily accomplished and is not able to be carried out without much difficulty or expense. When considering whether or not such accommodation is readily achievable, courts will look to several factors.²⁶

(a) Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act

Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act states:

No otherwise qualified individual with a disability . . . shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance or under any program or activity conducted by any [Federal] Executive agency.²⁷

Section 504 guarantees that anyone qualified to participate in a program, service, or activity will have meaningful access to it when it is offered either by the federal government or by a state or local recipient of federal funds.²⁸ Under Section 504, a “program or activity” is defined broadly to include “all of the operations” of a state or local government.²⁹ So, Section 504 applies not only to federal facilities, but also to any state, county, or city prison or jail that receives federal financial assistance,

23. Livingston v. Beeman, 408 S.W.3d 566, 577–578, 581 (Ct. App. Tex. 2013) (finding that Texas Department of Criminal Justice prison facilities do not fall into the definition of public facilities just because they are owned by the government); see also Edison v. Douberley, No. 2:05-cv-307-FtM-2 9SPC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68152, at *13 (M.D. Fla., Sep. 9, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that public accommodation under Title III does not include state prisons).

24. Wilkins-Jones v. Cty. of Alameda, 859 F. Supp. 2d 1039, 1047 (N.D. Cal. 2012).

25. 42 U.S.C. § 12188(a).

26. (A) the nature and cost of the action needed under [the] chapter; (B) the overall financial resources of the facility or facilities involved in the action; the number of persons employed at such facility; the effect on expenses and resources, or the impact otherwise of such action upon the operation of the facility; (C) the overall financial resources of the covered entity; the overall size of the business of a covered entity with respect to the number of its employees; the number, type, and location of its facilities; and (D) the type of operation or operations of the covered entity, including the composition, structure, and functions of the workforce of such entity; the geographic separateness, administrative or fiscal relationship of the facility or facilities in question to the covered entity. 42 U.S.C. § 12181(9). See also 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(iv)–(v).

27. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794(a).

28. Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 301, 105 S. Ct. 712, 720, 83 L. Ed. 2d 661, 672 (1985) (noting that Section 504 requires state and local governments receiving federal aid to provide “meaningful access to the benefit” they offer), superseded by statute on other grounds, 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.160–35.164 (2020), 28 C.F.R. § 42.503(e)–(f) (2020).

29. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794(b)(1)(A)–(B) (2012) (defining program or activity as “all of the operations of a department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a State or of a local government; or the entity of such State or local government that distributes such assistance and each such department or agency (and each other State or local government entity) to which the assistance is extended, in the case of assistance to a State or local government”).

either directly or through a state or local government.³⁰ It includes almost every state prison and many jails.³¹

(b) Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act

A major ADA goal is to end disability discrimination by public and private actors.³² The ADA has three main sections (called “Titles”), only one of which applies to state and local entities. If you pursue an ADA claim against a state prison or county jail, you will file under Title II, which applies to all state and local governments. The antidiscrimination protections provided by Title II and Section 504 are very similar, but the ADA has stronger regulations. Title II provides:

[N]o qualified individual with a disability shall, by reason of such disability, be excluded from participation in or be denied the benefits of the services, programs, or activities of a public entity, or be subjected to discrimination by any such entity.³³

The ADA defines many of the terms in the above paragraph, including: “qualified individual with a disability,”³⁴ “disability,”³⁵ and “public entity.”³⁶ However, the statute does not define the key phrase “services, programs, or activities.” It is important that you understand how courts have interpreted and applied both the defined and the undefined terms to claims made by incarcerated people with disabilities. Parts B(3)–(5) of this Chapter will discuss these terms.

(c) Necessary Elements of Your Title II and Your Section 504 Claims

You must include several basic elements in your Title II or Section 504 complaint. If you do not, the court will dismiss your lawsuit. Fortunately, most of the elements are the same for both statutes, so a well-pleaded complaint under one statute will probably meet the requirements of the other, as

30. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794(b); Bellamy v. Roadway Exp., Inc., 668 F. Supp. 615, 618 (N.D. Ohio 1987) (noting that “the term ‘federal financial assistance’ has been very broadly construed to encompass assistance of any kind, direct or indirect”); Jim C. v. United States, 235 F.3d 1079, 1081 (8th Cir. 2000) (noting that acceptance of funds by one state agency does not constitute a waiver by the entire state, which would make the whole state subject to suit).

31. See ACLU Nat’l Prison Project, Know Your Rights: Legal Rights of Disabled Prisoners, 2 (Nov. 2012), available at https://www.aclu.org/files/assets/know_your_rights_-_disability_november_2012.pdf (last visited Nov. 22, 2020); see also Brief of the United States as Amicus Curiae at 2, Westcott v. Gardner, No. 1:96-CV-69-2 (M.D. Ga. Sep. 30, 1996), available at <https://www.ada.gov/briefs/westcotbr.pdf> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020) (arguing that the protections of “section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act do apply to inmates in state prisons because the statutes apply to all public entities and all recipients of federal financial assistance, respectively”).

32. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12101(b)(1) (stating that one of the goals of the ADA is to “provide a clear and comprehensive national mandate for the elimination of discrimination against individuals with disabilities”). The ADA’s implementing regulations also prohibits discrimination against you because of your association with a person with a disability. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(g) (2020); Niece v. Fitzner, 922 F. Supp. 1208, 1216 (E.D. Mich. 1995) (finding a possible ADA violation when prison officials refused to make accommodations for an incarcerated person to communicate with his deaf fiancée).

33. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12132.

34. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131(2) (defining “qualified individual with a disability” as anyone “with a disability who, with or without reasonable modifications to rules, policies, or practices, the removal of architectural, communication, or transportation barriers, or the provision of auxiliary aids and services, meets the essential eligibility requirements for the receipt of services or the participation in programs or activities provided by a public entity”).

35. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12102(1)(A)–(C) (defining “disability” as “a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of major life activities of [a person] . . . ; a record of such an impairment; or being regarded as having such an impairment”).

36. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131(1)(A)–(B) (defining “public entity” as “any State or local government” or “any department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a State or States or local government”).

well. For a court to accept your complaint, the complaint must set forth a claim for relief.³⁷ A court can throw out your complaint if it is not well-pleaded. A well-pleaded complaint must meet the requirements of Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (F.R.C.P.). According to F.R.C.P. 8(a):

A pleading that states a claim for relief must contain: (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds for the court's jurisdiction, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new jurisdictional support; (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and (3) a demand for the relief sought, which may include relief in the alternative or different types of relief.³⁸

More simply put, you should write a clear statement that explains why the issue you face would deserve the courts listening to and fixing the problem. You should try to include in your statement, what the prison did wrong, why you think you should get help under Section 504 or the ADA, and what you want the court to do about the problem.

To state a Title II claim, your complaint must say that:

- (1) You are an individual with a disability;
- (2) You are "qualified to participate in or receive the benefit of" the particular service, program, or activity at the prison or jail that discriminated against you;
- (3) You were excluded from participation in or denied the benefits of the service, program, or activity at your prison/jail, or you were discriminated against in some other way; and
- (4) This exclusion, denial of benefits, or discrimination was because of your disability.³⁹

A claim under Section 504 has one additional requirement. Section 504 covers all federal facilities, but only those state and local facilities that receive federal funding. So your complaint must state that the facility receives federal funding.⁴⁰

Your Section 504 complaint must say that:

- (1) You are an individual with a disability;
- (2) You are "otherwise qualified" for the program, activity, or service you were excluded from;
- (3) You were denied benefits or discriminated against solely because of your disability; and
- (4) The program, activity, prison, or jail receives federal financial assistance.⁴¹

Of course, you should make sure to list the four facts listed above. But your complaint should also include other information, both to make your situation clear and to get the judge to sympathize with the problems you face in prison. You should (1) discuss your disability in detail, (2) explain the accommodations you need, and (3) describe the discrimination you have experienced. You should also mention any other facts you think are relevant and will make your argument stronger.

37. FED. R. CIV. P. 8.

38. For a case in which the court addresses the meaning of "well-pleaded complaint," see, e.g., Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555–556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1965, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 940 (U.S. 2007).

39. See, e.g., Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 895 (9th Cir. 2002) (discussing the requirements for an ADA Title II claim).

40. See, e.g., Thomas v. Nakatani, 128 F Supp.2d 684, 694 (dismissing a Section 504 claim because it did not allege the state agency received federal funds); Hamilton v. Illinois Cent. R.R., 894 F. Supp. 1014, 1017 (S.D. Miss. 1995) (dismissing a Section 504 claim because the plaintiff failed to allege the private facility received federal funds). When you file your complaint, you may not know whether the jail or prison receives federal funding (this is something you should learn during discovery). When you are giving the court documents about something you believe, but do not know, to be true, you should begin your statement with the phrase, "Upon information and belief." For example, in your Section 504 complaint, you could say, "Upon information and belief, [the jail or prison you are suing] receives federal funding."

41. Doe v. Pfrommer, 148 F. 3d 73, 82 (2d Cir. 1998) (describing the essential elements of a Section 504 claim).

If your claim is about physical access within a prison or jail, your Section 504 claim should point out that the prison or jail is in violation of a statute that has been the law for more than forty years. By pointing this out, you will be showing that the prison or jail has little basis for arguing that it did not know it had to be accessible to individuals with disabilities.

Many of the terms above will be explained later in detail. For now, know that the ADA and Section 504 are antidiscrimination laws, so your complaint should be clear as to how prison staff have discriminated against you because of your disability. The rest of Part B of this Chapter shows how courts have interpreted the ADA and Section 504 in the prison context.

2. What Qualifies as Discrimination under the ADA?

The ADA regulations describe certain actions taken by public entities as “discrimination” under the ADA. The categories are broad, and they clarify what the ADA prohibits. Keeping in mind the main goals of the ADA—(1) preventing discrimination, (2) integrating people with disabilities into “mainstream” society, and (3) providing strong and consistent enforceable standards addressing disability discrimination⁴²—can help you understand why particular actions are considered discrimination. The following paragraphs discuss types of actions that the ADA describes as discriminatory.

According to the ADA, it is discrimination for public entities to deny an otherwise qualified person with a disability “the opportunity to participate in or benefit from” a program or service solely because of his disability.⁴³ For instance, if you meet the requirements for participating in a job-training program, the prison cannot exclude you from the program just because of your disability.⁴⁴

According to the ADA, it is discrimination for public entities, like prisons and jails, to offer individuals with disabilities any benefits or services that are worse than those offered to individuals without disabilities.⁴⁵ For instance, the ADA prohibits prisons from providing only one therapy session per week to a paraplegic prisoner, while providing two therapy sessions per week to incarcerated people without this disability (if the disability is the reason for providing fewer sessions). Similarly, if a prison offers GED classes for individuals with hearing disabilities, it cannot offer those individuals a lower-quality program than it offers to individuals without hearing disabilities. That said, the ADA does not prohibit the prison from canceling both programs.

According to the ADA, a prison can only provide “different or separate aids, benefits, or services” to individuals with disabilities if the programs must be separate to be effective.⁴⁶ In addition, the prison cannot exclude individuals with disabilities from other programs just because special programs are available for persons with disabilities.⁴⁷

According to the ADA, a public entity also discriminates if it provides “significant assistance to an agency, organization, or person that discriminates on the basis of disability in providing any aid, benefit, or service to beneficiaries of the public entity’s program.”⁴⁸ So if a state or local government provides “significant assistance” to a prison—including a private prison—that discriminates on the basis of disability, then the state or local government can be in violation of the ADA. If you are in a private prison, this type of claim will help you sue the state or local entity that contracts with the prison.

42. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12101(a)(1)–(8), (b)(1)–(2)).

43. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1)(i) (2020).

44. See, e.g., Montez v. Romer, 32 F. Supp. 2d 1235, 1237 (D. Colo. 1999) (noting incarcerated people’s claim that the incarcerated individual could not participate in vocational training because the prison did not accommodate his disabilities).

45. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1)(ii) (2020).

46. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1)(iv) (2020); see also 28 C.F.R. Pt. 35, App. A, at 527 (2020), which explains that the DOJ “recognizes that promoting integration of individuals with disabilities into the mainstream of society is an important objective of the ADA and agrees that, in most instances, separate programs for individuals with disabilities will not be permitted.”

47. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(2) (2020).

48. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1)(v) (2020).

According to the ADA, it is discrimination for public entities to use criteria or methods of administration that defeat or substantially impair the accomplishment of the objectives of the public entity's program with respect to people with disabilities.⁴⁹ In other words, a prison cannot run its programs in a way that keeps incarcerated people with disabilities from being able to participate, even if disabled incarcerated people are not explicitly excluded. For instance, if a visually impaired incarcerated person could not enroll in a business class because the print on the enrollment application was too small for him to read, this would be discrimination. The prison would have to provide the incarcerated person with a way to enroll in the business class.

Although the ADA regulations prohibit these forms of discrimination in prisons, not all of the above categories have come up in lawsuits by incarcerated people. So, you may have to argue by analogy to discrimination cases in other areas, like employment.

3. What is a Disability under the ADA and Section 504?

Under both the ADA and Section 504, you have a disability if: (1) a physical or mental impairment substantially limits one or more of your major life activities, (2) you have a record of such an impairment, or (3) you are regarded as having such an impairment.⁵⁰ If you satisfy any of these tests, you are considered an individual with a disability under the ADA and Section 504. If you currently have a disability, such as an uncorrectable hearing impairment, you would be disabled under the first test. Under the second test, you might be considered disabled if, for example, you once had cancer that substantially limited your ability to care for yourself, but the cancer is now in remission.⁵¹ Finally, you may have a claim under the third test if prison officials discriminate against you because they believe you have a mental impairment that substantially limits your ability to learn when, in fact, you do not have a mental impairment, or you have an impairment but it does not substantially limit your ability to learn.⁵²

The definition of "disability" has two parts. First, the disability at issue must be a physical or mental impairment. The meaning of "physical or mental impairment" is explored in Subsection (a) below. Second, the impairment must substantially limit one or more major life activities. The meanings of "substantially limits" and "major life activity" are discussed in Subsection (b).

(a) What is a "Physical or Mental Impairment"?

The ADA implementing regulations (rules spelling out the details of the law), from the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ"), define a "physical or mental impairment" to include a wide range of

49. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(3)(ii) (2020).

50. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 705(20)(B); Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12102(1). Most of the cases establishing the list of disabilities that qualify for ADA antidiscrimination protection have been employment discrimination suits. Those employment discrimination suits may be useful to your case even though you are not suing as an employee. Many people have brought ADA incarcerated person discrimination suits that rely on the outcomes of ADA employment discrimination suits. This is because the right of a disabled person to be free from discrimination is a right that he can enforce in many situations, including when he is an employee, or when he is incarcerated. See, e.g., Carter v. Taylor, 540 F. Supp. 2d 522, 528 (D. Del. 2008) (citing Toyota Motor Mfg. Inc. v. Williams, 534 U.S. 184, 198, 122 S. Ct. 681, 692, 151 L. Ed.2d 615, 632 (2002)) (applying the "case-by-case manner" standard from Williams, an ADA employment discrimination suit, to an incarcerated person's ADA disability claim); Smith v. Masterson, 538 F. Supp. 2d 653, 657 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (adopting the "major life activity" requirement from an employment suit for a suit by an incarcerated person, Colwell v. Suffolk County Police Dept., 158 F.3d 635, 641 (2d Cir. 1998)).

51. See, e.g., EEOC v. R.J. Gallagher Co., 181 F.3d 645, 655–656 (5th Cir. 1999) (noting that a man with a record of cancer may have a disability under the ADA if the cancer or treatment substantially limited him in one or more major life activities). But see Shaw v. Greenwich Anesthesiology Assocs., 137 F. Supp. 2d 48, 58 (D. Conn. 2001) (rejecting the analysis in R.J. Gallagher Co. and requiring that the plaintiff suffer from a disability currently).

52. Milholland v. Sumner County Bd. of Education, 569 F.3d 562, 566–567 (6th Cir. 2009) (reading the 2008 ADA Amendments as expanding the Act's reach to include cases where "[an] individual establishes that he or she has been subjected to an action prohibited under this chapter because of an actual or perceived physical or mental impairment whether or not the impairment limits or is perceived to limit a major life activity") (emphasis added).

physical and mental conditions. More specifically, the regulations define physical or mental impairment as “any physiological disorder or condition, cosmetic disfigurement, or anatomical loss affecting one or more of the following body systems: neurological, musculoskeletal, special sense organs, respiratory (including speech organs), cardiovascular, reproductive, digestive, genitourinary, hemic and lymphatic, skin, and endocrine . . . [or] [a]ny mental or psychological disorder such as mental retardation, organic brain syndrome, emotional or mental illness, and specific learning disabilities.”⁵³ The regulations also list specific things that qualify as physical or mental impairments. More specifically, the regulations state that the phrase “physical or mental impairment” includes, but is not limited to, contagious and non-contagious diseases and conditions such as: orthopedic, visual, speech, and hearing impairments; cerebral palsy, epilepsy, muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, cancer, heart disease, and diabetes; mental retardation, emotional illness, and specific learning disabilities; HIV (whether symptomatic or asymptomatic) and tuberculosis; drug addiction and alcoholism.⁵⁴

If you are HIV-positive, you should note that the definition of physical impairment includes asymptomatic HIV (testing positive for HIV, but not showing symptoms).⁵⁵ For example, if you are asymptomatic HIV-positive and the prison denies you trustee status because you have HIV, you may have Title II and Section 504 claims.⁵⁶

Drug addiction is also considered an impairment, but not if you are currently addicted. If you have stopped using drugs and have completed or are participating in a drug rehabilitation program, the prison cannot discriminate against you on the basis of your past drug addiction.⁵⁷ However, the laws and regulations do not prohibit discrimination based on current illegal use of drugs.⁵⁸

53. 28 C.F.R. §35.108(b)(1)–(2) (2020).

54. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(b)(2) (2020).

55. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(b)(2) (2020); see Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624, 637–641, 118 S. Ct. 2196, 2204–2207, 141 L. Ed.2d 540, 556–559 (1998) (holding that (1) under the ADA, HIV infection is a physical impairment “from the moment of infection,” and (2) in this case, an asymptomatic HIV-positive woman was disabled under the ADA).

56. Harris v. Thigpen, 941 F.2d 1495, 1524 (11th Cir. 1991) (holding that HIV-positive status is a disability under Section 504 because the correctional system treated HIV-positive people as if they were disabled); Dean v. Knowles, 912 F. Supp. 519, 522 (S.D. Fla. 1996) (allowing an asymptomatic HIV-positive incarcerated person to go forward with a discrimination suit against prison officials who denied him trustee status, a status granting incarcerated people who have proven themselves trustworthy the opportunity to assist in the operation of the jail or prison in exchange for certain privileges).

57. 28 C.F.R. § 35.131(a)(2)(i)–(iii) (2020) (“A public entity shall not discriminate on the basis of illegal use of drugs against an individual who is not engaging in current illegal use of drugs and who (i) Has successfully completed a supervised drug rehabilitation program or has otherwise been rehabilitated successfully; (ii) Is participating in a supervised rehabilitation program; or (iii) Is erroneously regarded as engaging in such use”).

58. 28 C.F.R. § 35.131(a)(1) (2020) (“this part does not prohibit discrimination against an individual based on that individual’s current illegal use of drugs”). Section 504 contains similar language. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. §705(20)(C)(i). “Current illegal use of drugs” is defined as the illegal use of drugs “recent[] enough to justify a reasonable belief that a person’s drug use is current or that continuing use is a real and ongoing problem.” 28 C.F.R. § 35.104(4) (2020). According to the regulation, “[t]he term ‘individual with a disability’ does not include an individual who is currently engaging in the illegal use of drugs, when the public entity acts on the basis of such use.” 28 C.F.R. § 35.104(4) (2020).

Other conditions and diseases that courts have found could be physical or mental impairments include: asthma,⁵⁹ deafness and other hearing impairments,⁶⁰ quadriplegia,⁶¹ paraplegia,⁶² amputations or artificial limbs,⁶³ certain stomach and digestive problems,⁶⁴ blindness or other vision impairments,⁶⁵ degenerative disk condition⁶⁶ and other disabilities. In many of the cases in the footnotes below (dealing with possible impairments), the court either did not decide whether the individual was disabled, or ruled that the plaintiff was not disabled at all. These cases simply give examples of the types of impairments courts have said could qualify as disabilities—as long as the claims were backed up with facts, and the impairment substantially limited the individual in a major life activity. (What it means to be substantially limited in a major life activity is discussed in Subsection (b) below.)

Being gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender is not a “physical or mental impairment” under the ADA.⁶⁷ (For information on special issues for incarcerated people who identify as gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, and transsexual, see Chapter 30 of the JLM, “Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and/or Queer Incarcerated People.”) Furthermore, the ADA regulations explicitly exclude certain “conditions”—including “transvestism, transsexualism,” “sexual behavior disorders,” and “gender identity disorders not resulting from physical impairments”⁶⁸—from the 59. See, e.g., King v. England, No. 3:05CV949 (MRK), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45345, at *17–21 (D. Conn. June 22, 2007) (unpublished) (listing different cases surrounding asthma in multiple jurisdictions and the different approaches regarding the ADA’s applicability to asthmatics); McIntyre v. Robinson, 126 F. Supp. 2d 394, 408 (D. Md. 2000) (noting that although asthma can be considered a disability in the prison context, it is especially subject to case-by-case analysis because it is an easily controlled ailment).

60. See, e.g., Duffy v. Riveland, 98 F.3d 447, 454–455 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that a deaf incarcerated person was disabled under the ADA and Section 504, and allowing him to go forward with claim against prison for failure to provide a qualified interpreter in prison disciplinary and classification hearings); Calloway v. Glassboro Dept. of Police, 89 F. Supp. 2d 543, 554 (D.N.J. 2000) (finding that a deaf arrestee could go forward with her ADA and Section 504 case for failure to provide a qualified interpreter during questioning at the police station); Niece v. Fitzner, 922 F. Supp. 1208, 1217 (E.D. Mich. 1995) (recommending that an incarcerated person be allowed to proceed with his case against the department of corrections for failure to provide a Telecommunications Device for the Deaf (“TDD”), which would allow him to communicate with his deaf girlfriend over the phone); Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1036–1038 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that a prison’s failure to accommodate hearing-impaired incarcerated people violated the ADA and Section 504).

61. See, e.g., Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 560 (7th Cir. 1996) (affirming judgment of damages for a quadriplegic who was denied access to prison programs based on his disability).

62. See, e.g., Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1214–1222 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding that an incarcerated person with paraplegia could go forward with his ADA claim).

63. See, e.g., Schmidt v. Odell, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1032 (D. Kan. 1999) (finding that a double amputee could proceed with his ADA and Section 504 claims that he was denied the benefit of some basic jail services because of his disability); Kaufman v. Carter, 952 F. Supp. 520, 533 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (refusing to issue summary judgment against a double amputee because of conditions alleged in his complaint); Outlaw v. City of Dothan, No. CV-92-A-1219-S, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21063, at *10 (M.D. Ala. Apr. 27, 1993) (unpublished) (noting that the defendant did not disagree that an incarcerated person with an artificial leg was a “qualified individual with a disability”).

64. See, e.g., Scott v. Garcia, 370 F. Supp. 2d 1056, 1074–1075 (S.D. Cal. 2005) (holding that eating is a major life activity, and a plaintiff with stomach and digestive problems raised a material factual issue under the ADA when he submitted evidence that he was denied access to the prison meal service by not being given enough time to eat or the option to eat smaller, more frequent meals).

65. See, e.g., Williams v. Ill. Dept. of Corr., No. 97 C 3475, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18190, at *15 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (holding that the defendant’s extreme myopia constituted a disability where the defendant agreed that the condition was disabling); Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 857–863 (9th Cir. 2001) (finding that a parole board provided inadequate accommodations for the visually impaired during the parole process, and that this constituted a valid part of an ADA claim).

66. See, e.g., Saunders v. Horn, 960 F. Supp. 893, 901 (E.D. Pa. 1997) (finding that an incarcerated person with degenerative disk disorder stated a claim under Section 504 and the ADA).

67. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(b)(3), (g) (2020).

68. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(g) (2020).

definition of “physical or mental impairment” or “disability.”⁶⁹ If you file a complaint in federal court alleging that one of these conditions or identities is a disability, the court will almost certainly dismiss your case.⁷⁰ However, one of these conditions or identities may be considered a disability under state law; you should consult statutes and case law for the state in which you live.

(b) When Is an Impairment a Disability?

To be considered disabled under the ADA and Section 504, it is not enough for you to have a physical or mental impairment. The impairment has to substantially limit you in at least one major life activity.⁷¹ The decision of whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity or not is made on a case-by-case basis. In other words, the court will look at how an impairment limits you, and not at how an impairment usually limits a person.⁷² If you have an impairment that affects different people in different ways, you must show that your particular limitation is substantial in your own case.⁷³

The impairment does not have to be current. If you are discriminated against because you have a record of an impairment, that is still considered discrimination under the ADA.⁷⁴ A record of an impairment is when you have a history of having an impairment that substantially limits a major life activity, or when you have been misclassified as having an impairment that substantially limits a major life activity.⁷⁵ In addition, even if you have no history of the impairment, you are disabled under the ADA if you are “regarded as having such an impairment.”⁷⁶ You will be “regarded as having such an impairment” if you are discriminated against because of an actual or perceived disability, whether or not that disability limits or is perceived to limit you in a major life activity.⁷⁷

Under the ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Congress has tried to make clear what “substantially limits” means. The Act says that an impairment can count as a disability even if it (1) only substantially limits you in one major life activity, or (2) is episodic or in remission, if it would substantially limit you in at least one major life activity if it were active.⁷⁸ Additionally, the ADA Amendments Act of 2008 rejects earlier Supreme Court decisions that said “substantially limits” must be interpreted strictly, as to mean the impairment must “prevent” or even “severely or significantly restrict” an individual. The ADA Amendments Act of 2008 suggested that the standard for 69. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(a)–(b), (g) (2020).

70. See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for a discussion of the “three strikes rule” and other negative consequences of filing a suit that is dismissed.

71. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 705(20)(B); Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12102(1)–(2); 28 C.F.R. § 35.108 (2020).

72. Albertson's, Inc. v. Kirkingburg, 527 U.S. 555, 566, 119 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 144 L. Ed.2d 518, 530 (1999) (noting that there is a “statutory obligation to determine the existence of disabilities on a case-by-case basis”), superseded by statute, ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. 110–325, 122 Stat. 3553. Although Albertson's, Inc. was superseded by the 2008 ADA amendments, courts are still obligated to examine disabilities claims on an individual basis. 42 U.S.C. § 12102.

73. Gillen v. Fallon Ambulance Servs., Inc., 283 F.3d 11, 24 (1st Cir. 2002) (noting that an individual bringing an Americans with Disabilities Act claim must give evidence that a major life activity has been impaired); Albertson's, Inc. v. Kirkingburg, 527 U.S. 555, 566, 119 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 144 L. Ed.2d 518, 530–531 (1999) (noting that some impairments may limit people's major life activities in different ways and to different degrees), superseded by statute, ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. 110–325, 122 Stat. 3553.

74. 28 C.F.R. § 35.108(a)(1)(i)–(ii) (2020) (“[D]isability means . . . a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the major life activities . . . [or] a record of such impairment.”) (emphasis added).

75. A Helping Hand, LLC v. Baltimore Cty., No. CCB-02-2568, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22196, at *46 (D. Md. Sept. 30, 2005) (unpublished) (“[T]he phrase has a ‘record of’ such an impairment means has a history of, or has been misclassified as having, a mental or physical impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities.”) (emphasis added) (citing 28 C.F.R. § 35.104).

76. Saunders v. Horn, 959 F. Supp. 689, 697 (E.D. Penn. 1996) (citing 42 U.S.C. § 12102(2)).

77. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 3, 122 Stat. 3553, 3555 (2008).

78. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 3, 122 Stat. 3553, 3556 (2008).

“substantially limits” should be broad, the ability to ease the hardships of the impairment shouldn’t be considered, and courts should not extensively analyze “substantially limits” in ADA cases.⁷⁹

When considering whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity, courts are not allowed to assume that having certain aids, including medication, medical supplies, low-vision devices (other than ordinary eyeglasses or contact lenses), prosthetics, hearing aids, mobility devices, oxygen therapy equipment, assistive technology, and auxiliary aids and services (such as interpreters and readers), makes it such that you are not substantially limited in a major life activity.⁸⁰ The one exception is that courts will consider the effect of ordinary eyeglasses or contact lenses when considering whether a visual impairment substantially limits a major life activity.⁸¹

When you start doing legal research to help you argue that your impairment counts as a disability, you will probably find that most of the cases discussing the term “substantially limits” have been about employment discrimination, which falls under a different ADA section: Title I.⁸² Courts considering whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity for an incarcerated person frequently look to Title I cases and regulations for guidance.⁸³ Right now, the regulations for Title I set forth nine rules to be used in determining whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity.⁸⁴ The rules state that⁸⁵:

- (1) The term “substantially limits shall be construed broadly . . . [and is] not meant to be a demanding standard;
- (2) An impairment is a disability . . . if it substantially limits the ability of an individual to perform a major life activity as compared to most people in the general population. An impairment need not prevent, or significantly or severely restrict, the individual from performing a major life activity in order to be considered substantially limiting;
- (3) The primary object of attention . . . should be whether covered entities have complied with their obligations and whether discrimination has occurred, not whether an individual’s impairment substantially limits a major life activity. Accordingly, the threshold issue of whether an impairment “substantially limits” a major life activity should not demand extensive analysis;
- (4) The determination of whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity requires an individualized assessment. However, in making this assessment, the term “substantially limits” shall be interpreted and applied to require a degree of functional limitation that is lower than the standard for “substantially limits” applied prior to the ADA Amendments Act;
- (5) The [analysis] of an individual’s performance of a major life activity . . . usually will not require scientific, medical, or statistical analysis;
- (6) The determination of whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity shall be made without regard to the [effects of certain aids other than ordinary eyeglasses and contact lenses];
- (7) An impairment that is episodic or in remission is a disability if it would substantially limit a major life activity when active;
- (8) An impairment that substantially limits one major life activity need not substantially limit other major life activities in order to be considered a substantially limiting impairment; and
- (9) The effects of an impairment lasting or expected to last fewer than six months can be substantially limiting within the meaning of this section.

79. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 2(b)(4), 122 Stat. 3553–3554 (2008).

80. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 3(4)(E)(i), 122 Stat. 3556 (2008).

81. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 3(4)(E)(ii), 122 Stat. 3556 (2008).

82. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 12111–12117 (Title I of the ADA, covering discrimination in private employment).

83. See, e.g. Mingus v. Butler, 591 F.3d 474, 482 (6th Cir. 2010).

84. 29 C.F.R. § 1630.2(j)(1) (2020).

85. 29 C.F.R. § 1630.2(j)(1) (2020).

After the ADA Amendments Act of 2008, courts have interpreted “substantially limits” more broadly than before. In fact, a seven-month long impairment, which previously would not have been long enough to qualify, was found to be substantially limiting because temporary impairments can be substantially limiting under the ADA Amendments Act of 2008.⁸⁶ Since “substantially limits” is to be viewed expansively, courts recognize that the test for “substantially limits” is easier to meet than in cases occurring before the ADA Amendments Act of 2008,⁸⁷ though they occasionally conclude that “minor impairments” are excluded from coverage.⁸⁸ As previously mentioned, while there have been a few cases that define “substantially limits” in a prison disability context after the enactment of the ADA Amendments Act of 2008, many of the cases that have occurred since the Act have used the Title I regulations listed above, so it would be wise to consider them when determining whether or not your disability “substantially limits” a major life activity.

The Supreme Court has defined “major life activities” as “those activities that are of central importance to [most people’s] daily li[ves].”⁸⁹ Under the ADA Amendments Act of 2008, major life activities “include, but are not limited to, caring for oneself, performing manual tasks, seeing, hearing, eating, sleeping, walking, standing, lifting, bending, speaking, breathing, learning, reading, concentrating, thinking, communicating, and working.”⁹⁰ For example, if you have vision problems and cannot read regular-size print, or require braille materials, then your condition limits the major life activity of seeing. The 2008 Act states that major life activities also include “the operation of a major bodily function, including but not limited to, functions of the immune system, normal cell growth, digestive, bowel, bladder, neurological, brain, respiratory, circulatory, endocrine, and reproductive functions”.⁹¹ Courts have found other important activities, such as eating⁹² and reproduction,⁹³ to be major life activities.

86. Summers v. Altarum Inst., Corp., 740 F.3d 325, 330 (4th Cir. 2014).

87. See, e.g., Matthews v. Pa. Dept. of Corr., 613 F. App’x 163, 167–168 (3d Cir. 2015) (unpublished); Borwick v. Univ. of Denver, 569 F. App’x 602, 604–605 (10th Cir. 2014) (unpublished); Neely v. PSEG Tex., Ltd. P’ship, 735 F.3d 242, 245 (5th Cir. 2013); Kravtsov v. Town of Greenburgh, No. 10-CV-3142 (CS), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94819, at *35 (S.D.N.Y. July 9, 2012) (unpublished); Anderson v. Nat’l Grid, PLC, 93 F. Supp. 3d 120, 135 (E.D.N.Y. 2015) (citation omitted).

88. See, e.g., Steele v. Stallion Rockies, LTD, 106 F. Supp. 3d 1205, 1219 (D. Colo. 2015) (finding that the plaintiff’s Lumbar Degenerative Disc Disease did not substantially impair a major life activity); Clark v. Western Tidewater Reg’l Jail Auth., No.: 2:11cv228, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9497, at *21–22 (E.D. Va. 2012) (unpublished) (finding that a three week restriction on the ability to stand for prolonged periods of time was not a substantial limitation on the major life activity of standing).

89. Toyota Motor Mfg., Inc. v. Williams, 534 U.S. 184, 197, 122 S. Ct. 681, 691, 151 L. Ed.2d 615, 631 (2002) (holding that, to be considered substantially limited in performing manual tasks, an “individual must have an impairment that prevents or severely restricts the individual from doing activities that are of central importance to most people’s daily lives”). But Congress has used the ADA Amendments Act of 2008 to criticize the Supreme Court on this point. The new law rejects the Court’s ruling “that the terms ‘substantially’ and ‘major’ . . . need to be interpreted strictly to create a demanding standard for qualifying as disabled,” and that to be substantially limited in performing a major life activity under the ADA “an individual must have an impairment that prevents or severely restricts the individual from doing activities that are of central importance to most people’s daily lives.” ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-325, § 2(b)(4), 122 Stat. 3553, 3554 (2008). Newer cases have found that “the ADA Amendments Act’s . . . regulations indicate that a substantial limitation need not severely restrict an individual’s ability to perform a major life activity,” but that “minor impairments” are not considered substantial limitations on major life activities. Clark v. Western Tidewater Reg’l Jail Auth., No.: 2:11cv228, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9497 at *21 (E.D. Va. 2012) (unpublished). In other words, now that Congress has stepped in to protect the rights of people with disabilities, many courts are no longer using the Toyota standard to determine whether a major life activity is substantially impaired.

90. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-325, § 3(2)(A), 122 Stat. 3553, 3555 (2008).

91. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-325, § 3(2)(B), 122 Stat. 3553, 3555 (2008).

92. Scott v. Garcia, 370 F. Supp. 2d 1056, 1074 (S.D. Cal. 2005) (holding that while eating is a major life activity, a plaintiff with stomach and digestive problems must show that his dietary restrictions are serious enough to constitute a disability).

93. Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624, 637–642, 118 S. Ct. 2196, 2204–2207, 141 L. Ed. 2d 540, 556–559 (1998) (holding that an asymptomatic HIV-positive woman had a disability because her HIV infection substantially limited her ability to reproduce, but refusing to decide whether HIV infection is always a disability).

Note that the ADA Amendments Act includes “working” as a major life activity. Previously, the Supreme Court had questioned whether working was a major life activity, at least in employment discrimination cases.⁹⁴ The pre-2008 test for whether you were substantially limited in your ability to work required that you be limited in performing a “class of jobs” that made use of your skills, not just a “single, particular job.”

The Title I regulations that apply to employment discrimination, but that have also been used by courts in an incarcerated person disability discrimination context further define working as a major life activity. The regulations keep the original “class or broad range of jobs” standard, though they explain how the standard must be applied in ways that are different from how the standard was applied before the ADA Amendments Act. They state: “the determination of whether a person is substantially limited in working is more straightforward and simple than it was prior to the Act.”⁹⁵ The broader category of “major life activity,” created by the 2008 Act means that, frequently, even if you cannot show substantial impairment of working, you will be able to show substantial impairment of another major life activity.⁹⁶ Because of this, the major life activity of working will probably be used less frequently. Nonetheless, the Title I regulations state that you can show substantial impairment of the major life activity of working by “showing that the impairment substantially limits his or her ability to perform a class of jobs or broad range of jobs in various classes as compared to most people having comparable training, skills, and abilities.”⁹⁷ This standard, while similar to the older standard used by courts, is not meant to be as strict. That said, showing substantial impairment in “performing the unique aspects of a single specific job is not sufficient.”⁹⁸ A court may define a class of jobs by looking to the nature of the work (e.g., food service jobs or clerical jobs), or to the job-related requirements (e.g., heavy lifting or driving).⁹⁹

In the prison context, the “substantially limits” and “major life activities” requirements are not usually a focus in ADA and Section 504 cases. If you sue the prison or prison officials, alleging discrimination on the basis of your disability, the case likely will focus on whether you are (1) a “qualified individual with a disability,” and (2) whether you were “excluded from participation in or . . . denied the benefits of the services, programs, or activities” of the prison, or discriminated against by the prison.¹⁰⁰ The next two Sections discuss how courts interpret these questions in your disability discrimination claim.

(c) Who is a Qualified Individual under the ADA and Section 504?

Not everybody who has a disability under the ADA and Section 504 is protected from discrimination.

The ADA and Section 504 prohibit discrimination based on your disability only if you are a “qualified individual with a disability.”¹⁰¹ The ADA defines the phrase “qualified individual with a disability” as:

An individual with a disability who, with or without reasonable modifications to rules, policies, or practices, the removal of architectural, communication, or transportation barriers, or the provision of auxiliary aids and services, meets the under the ADA); Mullen v. New Balance Ath., Inc., No. 1:17-cv-194-NT, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30967, at *12 (D. Me. Feb. 27, 2019) (unpublished) (noting that reproduction is a major life activity under the ADA)

94. Sutton v. United Air Lines, Inc., 527 U.S. 471, 492, 119 S. Ct. 2139, 2151, 144 L. Ed. 2d 450, 468–469 (1999) (noting that “there may be some conceptual difficulty in defining ‘major life activities’ to include work”).

95. 29 C.F.R. § Pt. 1630, App. (2020).

96. See, e.g., Corley v. Dept. of Veterans Affairs ex rel. Principi, 218 F. App’x 727, 738 (10th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (finding no substantial impairment of major life activity of working for employee with seizure disorder when employee was not foreclosed from certain jobs; employee would now be limited in neurological function according to Title I Regulations.).

97. 29 C.F.R. § Pt. 1630, App. (2020).

98. 29 C.F.R. § Pt. 1630, App. (2020).

99. 29 C.F.R. § Pt. 1630, App. (2020).

100. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12132; see also Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794(a).

101. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12132; Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794(a).

essential eligibility requirements for the receipt of services or the participation in programs or activities provided by a public entity.¹⁰²

So, in addition to having a disability, you also must be eligible to participate in or benefit from a particular program, service, or activity. If you decide to file suit under either the ADA or Section 504, your complaint must include: (1) generally what your disability is, and (2) that you are a “qualified individual with a disability” within the meaning of the ADA and Section 504. In its answer to your complaint, the prison might say that even if you have a disability, you are not a qualified individual. If the prison convinces the court that you are not a qualified individual, the court will dismiss your case.

The fact that you are an incarcerated person does not mean you are disqualified from programs or services. The Supreme Court has firmly established that an incarcerated person is not excluded from being a qualified individual with a disability just because he is in prison.¹⁰³ Incarcerated people are covered by the ADA and Section 504 if they can meet the definition of disability discussed in Section B(3), above, and can show that they are qualified individuals.

The definition of “qualified individual” has several parts, each of which the prison might use to try to defeat your case. Below, Subsection (a) explains what it means generally to be a “qualified individual with a disability.” Subsection (b) describes the meaning of “reasonable modifications” and the factors courts consider when deciding what is reasonable. Subsection (c) discusses auxiliary aids and services. Subsection (d) addresses the removal of barriers.

(d) Who is a “Qualified Individual with a Disability?”

To be a “qualified individual with a disability,” you must meet “the essential eligibility requirements for . . . participation in programs or activities.”¹⁰⁴ For example, if incarcerated people convicted of a certain offense are not allowed to participate in work release, then a person with a disability who is convicted of that offense is not “qualified” for that program.

There are some situations in which you will not be considered a qualified individual even if you meet program or activity requirements. You are not a qualified individual if the prison can show that, because of your disability, your participation makes you a “direct threat to the health or safety of others.”¹⁰⁵ The appendix to the DOJ’s Title II regulations defines “direct threat” as “a significant risk to the health or safety of others that cannot be eliminated by a modification of policies, practices, or procedures, or by the provision of auxiliary aids or services.”¹⁰⁶

If prison officials are trying to decide whether someone with a disability poses a direct threat, they must determine “the nature, duration, and severity of the risk; the probability that the potential injury will actually occur; and whether reasonable modifications of policies, practices, or procedures will” reduce or eliminate the risk.¹⁰⁷ (The meaning of “reasonable modifications” is discussed in Subsection (b), below.) In making this determination, prison officials must use “reasonable judgment that relies on current medical evidence or on the best available objective evidence.”¹⁰⁸ The prison may not rely on “generalizations or stereotypes about the effects of a disability”—instead, it must assess the particular individual with the disability.¹⁰⁹

Courts use the direct threat analysis in Title II and Section 504 cases even though the direct threat language is not clearly stated in the laws.¹¹⁰ The direct threat argument is a defense the prison may 102. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131(2) (defining “qualified individual with a disability”).

103. Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 210–211, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1955, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 219–220 (1998) (holding that people incarcerated by the state are protected by the ADA).

104. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131(2).

105. 28 C.F.R. § 35.139 (2020) (analyzing the ADA Title II regulations).

106. 28 C.F.R. § 35.104 (2020).

107. 28 C.F.R. § 35.139(b) (2020).

108. 28 C.F.R. § 35.139(b) (2020).

109. 28 C.F.R. § 35.104 (2020).

110. See, e.g., Doe v. Cnty. of Centre, 242 F.3d 437, 447 (3d Cir. 2001) (explaining the “direct threat” raise. Because the argument is a defense, the prison will have the burden of showing that you are a direct threat.¹¹¹ If the court accepts the prison's defense that you are a direct threat, you will not be considered a qualified individual.

The direct threat defense to discrimination often comes up for people with infectious diseases, especially HIV. A few courts have decided that incarcerated people who are HIV-positive, although they are "individuals with a disability," are not "qualified" for various prison programs or activities.¹¹²

For example, in Onishea v. Hopper, the Eleventh Circuit rejected constitutional and Section 504 claims of incarcerated people who were not allowed to participate in prison recreational, religious, and educational programs because they were HIV-positive.¹¹³ These incarcerated people could participate only in a limited number of programs, which were separate from the programs available to the general population.¹¹⁴ The lower court had ruled that the HIV-positive incarcerated people were not "otherwise qualified" to participate in programs with the general population because of the possibility of high-risk behaviors like violence, intravenous drug use, and sex.¹¹⁵ The Eleventh Circuit agreed, finding that the risk of HIV transmission is "significant" because of the severe consequences of HIV infection, even if the probability of transmission is low.¹¹⁶

The Onishea opinion allows a prison to disqualify HIV-positive incarcerated people from participating in many programs, and significantly reduces Section 504 and Title II protections for these incarcerated people.¹¹⁷ The Onishea court claimed to require judges to make program-by-program decisions about whether HIV-positive incarcerated people were qualified to participate.¹¹⁸ But the ruling has had the effect of preventing HIV-positive incarcerated people from participating in most programs with the general population. Beyond the Eleventh Circuit, it appears that only a few other federal courts have considered the issue of whether an HIV-positive incarcerated person can be a "direct threat."¹¹⁹ Notably, the court in Henderson v. Thomas found that the Onishea analysis no longer applies because of the effect of modern medicine in reducing the harm from HIV as well as the likelihood of transmission.¹²⁰ analysis in an ADA Title II and § 504 case); Dadian v. Vill. of Wilmette, 269 F.3d 831, 840 n.6 (7th Cir. 2001) (stating that whether an individual is "otherwise qualified" depends on whether he poses a threat to the safety of others that cannot be reduced by reasonable accommodation); Bay Area Addiction Research & Treatment, Inc. v. City of Antioch, 179 F.3d 725, 735 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a person who poses a direct threat or "significant risk" to others is not a qualified individual under Title II).

111. Dadian v. Vill. of Wilmette, 269 F.3d 831, 840 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that the burden of showing a direct threat due to a disability is on the party that claims there is a direct threat).

112. See Chapter 26 of the JLM, "Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prison," for additional information on the rights of HIV-positive incarcerated people.

113. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1296–1297 (11th Cir. 1999) (reading Section 504's definition of "individual with a disability" as not including a person "who has a currently contagious disease or infection and who, by reason of such disease or infection, would constitute a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals"). The Onishea court relied on 29 U.S.C. § 705(20)(D), a section of the Rehabilitation Act that excludes from employment protection people who are a direct threat to others because they have a currently contagious disease or infection.

114. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1292–1293 (11th Cir. 1999).

115. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1293–1295 (11th Cir. 1999).

116. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1299 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that "when transmitting a disease inevitably entails death, the evidence supports a finding of 'significant risk' if it shows both (1) that a certain event can occur and (2) that according to reliable medical opinion the event can transmit the disease. . . . [E]vidence of actual transmission of the fatal disease in the relevant context is not necessary to a finding of significant risk").

117. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1305 (11th Cir. 1999) (Barkett, J., dissenting). A dissenting opinion is an opinion, written by a judge on the court, that disagrees with the court's decision. A dissenting opinion is not controlling law, but it may suggest arguments other courts will make in future rulings.

118. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1293 (11th Cir. 1999).

119. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1293 (11th Cir. 1999).

120. Henderson v. Thomas, 913 F.Supp.2d 1267, 1289–1290 (M.D. Ala. 2012) (finding HIV to not constitute a direct threat justifying segregation of HIV-positive incarcerated people at correctional facilities).

Other courts have looked at specific programs to decide whether HIV-positive incarcerated people are qualified.¹²¹ For more information on segregation (separation) of HIV-positive incarcerated people from the general population, and other issues of special interest to HIV-positive incarcerated people, see Chapter 26 of the JLM, “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prison.”

4. Your Right to “Reasonable Modifications” of Prison Policy under the ADA

The ADA requires state and local entities to make “reasonable modifications” to policies, rules, and practices so that people with disabilities can participate in public programs and services.¹²² A reasonable modification should allow you, as a person with a disability, to take part in a program or activity, or gain access to a facility. Reasonable modifications may be simple—for example, creating an exception to the rule forbidding incarcerated people from storing food in their cells, so a diabetic person can keep his “blood sugar at an appropriate level.”¹²³ Other modifications are more complicated.

Whether a modification is considered reasonable depends on the specific circumstances and modification you ask for. To decide what a “reasonable modification” is, courts weigh the needs of incarcerated people with disabilities against the structural, financial, and administrative concerns of the prison. In particular, courts look at: (1) whether the modification will “fundamentally alter” a program or activity,¹²⁴ (2) the cost of the modification, and (3) the burden the modification would have on administration of the prison.¹²⁵ Some courts also look at concerns relating to prison management and incarcerated person rehabilitation, such as safety.¹²⁶

You should be prepared for the prison to make these kinds of arguments. The prison has the burden of showing that a modification would “result in a fundamental alteration in the nature of a service, program, or activity or in undue [extreme] financial and administrative burdens.”¹²⁷ Even if the prison succeeds in showing that changes would fundamentally alter a program, or cause an undue financial or administrative burden, it must still “take any other action” that would “ensure that individuals with disabilities receive the benefits or services provided” by the prison.¹²⁸ This means they are supposed to come up with other ways for you to get the benefits offered. The following Subsections describe the fundamental alteration defense, the undue burden defense, and the “penological interests” (relating to prison management or incarcerated person rehabilitation) defense to incarcerated people’s ADA and Section 504 claims.

121. Bullock v. Gomez, 929 F. Supp. 1299, 1305 (C.D. Cal. 1996) (finding that the prison’s reasons for excluding the incarcerated person from the conjugal visit program—transmission of tuberculosis and other strains of HIV—might not be justified, given that evidence showed low risk of transmission) dismissed as settled. See also Doe v. Coughlin, 71 N.Y.2d 48, 61, 518 N.E.2d 536, 544, 523 N.Y.S.2d 782, 790 (1987) (reviewing specific program requirements before deciding that an HIV-positive incarcerated person was not qualified for the family reunion program because the program required applicants to be free of communicable diseases).

122. Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131(2).

123. This example was taken from the Disability Rights Section of the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division. Commonly Asked Questions about the Americans with Disabilities Act and Law Enforcement, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE (2006), available at http://www.ada.gov/q%26a_law.htm (last visited Oct. 6, 2019). Contact information for the DOJ can be found at footnote 12.

124. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.130(b)(7), 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

125. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

126. See, e.g., Randolph v. Rodgers, 170 F.3d 850, 859 (8th Cir. 1999) (noting that the prison could present evidence that providing an interpreter for a deaf incarcerated person at disciplinary hearings created safety and security concerns); Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 561 (7th Cir. 1996) (noting that the prison could justify its refusal to make reasonable accommodations because the overall demands of running a prison made it impossible to make such accommodations).

127. See 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(7) (2020) (defining the general application of fundamental alteration defense); 28 C.F.R. § 35.150(a)(3) (2019) (defining the fundamental alteration and undue burden defenses for existing facilities); 28 C.F.R. § 35.164 (2020) (defining the fundamental alteration and undue burden defense to providing effective communication). Furthermore, the “decision that compliance would result in such alteration or burdens must be made by the head of a public entity or his or her designee after considering all resources available for use in the funding and operation of the service, program, or activity and must be accompanied by a written statement of the reasons for reaching that conclusion.” 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

128. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

(a) Modifications Are Not Reasonable if They Result in a Fundamental Alteration to the Prison's Programs, Services, or Activities

A prison does not have to make modifications to a service, program, or activity if doing so would “fundamentally alter the nature of the service, program, or activity.”¹²⁹ A fundamental alteration has to be so big that something essential is lost. This allows prisons to balance the rights of incarcerated people with disabilities against the integrity of its services, programs, and activities.¹³⁰ If you are seeking a change that would make it difficult for the prison to provide the particular service, program, or activity to other incarcerated people, this could be considered a fundamental alteration that the prison does not have to provide.¹³¹

Courts will likely consider the circumstances surrounding a modification when determining if such modification is a fundamental alteration,¹³² and will expect the prison to provide support for their claim that a modification is a fundamental alteration.¹³³ Examples of modifications that might not be considered fundamental alterations include the provision of a shower chair, a non-slip shower floor, and installation of shower handrails.¹³⁴ The determination of whether a modification is a fundamental one is very dependent on the facts of a given case, and courts will look closely to the specific circumstances surrounding your situation.¹³⁵

(b) Modifications Are Not Reasonable if They Cause Undue Financial or Administrative Burden

Prisons also do not have to make modifications that would result in “undue financial and administrative burdens.”¹³⁶ For example, in Onishea v. Hopper, the court found that hiring additional guards to prevent high-risk behavior (so that HIV-positive incarcerated people could participate in programs with the general population) would not be a “reasonable accommodation,” because it would be too expensive, causing undue financial burden.¹³⁷

129. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.130(b)(7), 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

130. See Galusha v. N.Y. State Dept. of Envtl. Conservation, 27 F. Supp. 2d 117, 123 (N.D.N.Y. 1998) (noting that the Supreme Court struck this balance in Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 300, 105 S. Ct. 712, 720, 83 L. Ed. 2d 661, 671 (1985)).

131. See Olmstead v. L.C. ex rel. Zimring, 527 U.S. 581, 604, 119 S. Ct. 2176, 2189, 144 L. Ed. 2d 540, 560 (1999) (“[s]ensibly construed, the fundamental-alteration component of the reasonable-modifications regulation would allow the State to show that, in the allocation of available resources, immediate relief for the plaintiffs would be inequitable, given the responsibility the State has undertaken for the care and treatment of a large and diverse population of persons with mental disabilities”). See also Raines v. Florida, 983 F.Supp 1362, 1372 (N.D. Fla. 1997) (rejecting the prison’s defense that allowing incarcerated people with disabilities into the work portion of the Incentive Gain Time program would fundamentally alter the program’s incentives).

132. See, e.g., Bircoll v. Miami-Dade Cty., 480 F.3d 1072, 1087–1088 (11th Cir. 2007) (finding that waiting for an oral interpreter after arresting deaf person was not a reasonable modification, given the demanding circumstances of such an arrest).

133. See, e.g., Frederick L. v. Dept. of Pub. Welfare of Pa., 422 F.3d 151, 157–159 (3rd Cir. 2005) (discussing the defendant’s obligation to raise fundamental-alteration arguments as affirmative defenses).

134. See, e.g., Kaufman v. Carter, 952 F.Supp. 520, 532 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (noting the insufficiency of shower and toilet accommodations for wheelchair users).

135. Norfleet v. Walker, No. 09-cv-347-JPG-PMF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29817 (S.D. Ill. Mar. 22, 2011) (“[the determination of whether a modification is a fundamental alteration] is both fact-intensive and context-specific”). See, e.g., Kaufman v. Carter 952 F.Supp. 520, 523–524 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (repeating in great detail the plaintiff’s complaints regarding the shower and toilet specifications).

136. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.150(a)(3), 35.164 (2020).

137. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1303–1304 (11th Cir. 1999). See also, e.g., Spurlock v. Simmons, 88 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1196 (D. Kan. 2000) (holding that a deaf incarcerated person had “meaningful access” to TDD when he was allowed to use it at least twice a week, and more frequently if he had a legitimate reason); see also Paulone v. City of Frederick, 787 F. Supp. 2d 360, 397 n.43 (D. Md. 2011) (expressing skepticism that it would be an undue financial or administrative burden to provide an interpreter, when the State provided interpreters as a matter of policy).

The DOJ seems to believe that the undue burden test is hard for a prison to pass—that it would apply only in “the most unusual cases.”¹³⁸ While some courts (as in Onishea and Spurlock) may allow defendant prisons to pass the test in situations the DOJ would not consider unusual, others are requiring more than “administrative or fiscal convenience” to segregate services under Title II.¹³⁹ For example, in Pierce v. County of Orange, the court found no evidence that allowing incarcerated people access to an adjacent “Inmate Programming Building” would impose undue financial or administrative burdens.¹⁴⁰ As with the “fundamental alteration” defense, the determination of whether a modification will cause undue financial or administrative burden is very dependent on the facts of a given case, and courts will look closely to the specific circumstances surrounding your situation.¹⁴¹

(c) Modifications Are Not Reasonable if They Impact Overall Institutional Concerns (Penological Interests)

The ADA regulations only mention fundamental alterations and undue burdens as the two arguments prisons can use to avoid making modifications for incarcerated people with disabilities. However, courts have permitted prisons to make a third argument to avoid making those modifications: “overall institutional requirements,” such as “[s]ecurity concerns, safety concerns, and administrative” needs.¹⁴² In considering these institutional requirements, some courts strongly presume that prison policies are acceptable.¹⁴³ (This is called “deference to prison management.”) In jurisdictions that use this approach, you will have to overcome this strong presumption that the prison’s concerns are legitimate.¹⁴⁴

Not all courts recognizing the defense of “overall institutional concerns” will show deference to prison officials. For example, in Armstrong v. Schwarzenegger, defendants argued that they had legitimate “penological” (relating to prison management or criminal rehabilitation) reasons to house a class of incarcerated people in county jails rather than state prisons, and that they were entitled to deference. The court, however, found that prison management “demand[ed] deference to which they

138. 28 C.F.R. § Pt. 35, App. B (2020) (discussing 28 C.F.R. § 35.150 and noting that “Congress intended the ‘undue burden’ standard in Title II to be significantly higher than the ‘readily achievable’ standard in Title III” and that “the program access requirement of Title II should enable individuals with disabilities to participate in and benefit from the services, programs, or activities of public entities in all but the most unusual cases”); see also Commonly Asked Questions about the Americans with Disabilities Act and Law Enforcement, Question 22, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE (2003), available at http://www.ada.gov/q%26a_law.htm (last visited Nov. 23, 2020) (noting that new jails and prisons “must be made fully accessible to, and usable by, individuals with disabilities”; that there is “no undue burden limitation for new construction”; and that “if an agency alters an existing facility for any reason—including reasons unrelated to accessibility—the altered areas must be made accessible to individuals with disabilities”). Contact information for the DOJ can be found at footnote 12.

139. See, e.g., Greist v. Norristown State Hosp., Civil Action No. 96-CV-8495, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16320 (E.D. Penn. Oct. 16, 1997). See also Blunt v. Lower Merion School Dist., 767 F.3d 247, 274 (3rd Cir. 2014) (noting that “mere administrative or fiscal convenience does not constitute a sufficient justification for providing separate or different services to a handicapped child”).

140. Pierce v. County of Orange, 761 F. Supp. 2d 915, 936 (C.D. Cal. 2011).

141. Norfleet v. Walker, No. 09-cv-347-JPG-PMF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29817 (S.D. Ill. Mar. 22, 2011) (“[the determination of whether a modification would cause undue financial or administrative burden] is both fact-intensive and context-specific”).

142. Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 561 (7th Cir. 1996) (noting that the prison could have attempted to justify its refusal to make reasonable accommodations because of the overall needs of running a prison); Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1266 (11th Cir. 2004) (“courts must be mindful of the necessary balance between the ADA’s worthy goal of integration and a prison’s unique need for security, safety, and other penological concerns”), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006).

143. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 228, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2397, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 193 (2005) (finding that “courts must give substantial deference to prison management decisions”); see also Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1448 (9th Cir. 1994) (noting that separation of powers, especially with regard to state penal systems, favors judicial deference to prison authorities).

144. Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 874 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that the incarcerated person has the burden of refuting the defense that there were legitimate penological interests behind prison action); see also Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1447 (9th Cir. 1994).

are not entitled” and did not find any penological reasons for such housing.¹⁴⁵ Additionally, some courts require more than penological interests alone for a modification to qualify as unreasonable. For example, in Henderson v. Thomas, the court stated that prior cases did not “require this court to treat penological interests as a trump on the plaintiffs’ [ADA] statutory rights,” before finding that, while the prison had a legitimate penological interest in diminishing the spread of HIV to other incarcerated people, they could prevent HIV transmissions while still allowing reasonable modifications for the plaintiff.¹⁴⁶ Because of the variety of approaches used by courts, as well as the fact-specific nature of the courts’ determinations, you should see how courts have ruled in your jurisdiction when making a claim.

(d) The Turner Test in ADA and Section 504 Claims for Incarcerated People with Diabetes.

Circuit courts have used the *Turner v. Safley*¹⁴⁷ test in ADA and Section 504 cases to decide when a prison policy can legally discriminate against incarcerated people with disabilities. Under this test, prison policies are acceptable if they are “reasonably related to legitimate penological interests,” meaning that the policies make sense and are related to a valid prison concern or goal.¹⁴⁸ Some courts have used this test to decide what is a reasonable modification under the ADA for incarcerated people with disabilities.¹⁴⁹

The Turner test is usually used to decide incarcerated people’s constitutional claims, not statutory claims like the ADA and Section 504. Some experts believe the Turner test is inappropriate in ADA cases.¹⁵⁰ It is better for incarcerated people when courts do not use Turner, because the ADA and

145. Armstrong v. Schwarzenegger, 622 F.3d 1058, 1069 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding that defendant’s practice of placing certain classes of incarcerated people in county jails as opposed to state jails did not have a legitimate penological interest).

146. Henderson v. Thomas, 913 F.Supp.2d 1267, 1313–1314 (M.D. Ala. 2012).

147. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) (establishing a reasonableness test for courts to apply to incarcerated people’s constitutional challenges to prison regulations).

148. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987). In Turner, the Supreme Court identified four factors used to determine the “reasonableness” of a challenged prison regulation: (1) whether there is a “valid, rational connection” between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it; (2) whether there are other ways an incarcerated person could exercise the right at issue; (3) “the impact [that] accommodation . . . will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources generally”; and (4) whether there are “ready alternatives” to the regulation. The Turner test generally is used when incarcerated people claim that their constitutional rights have been violated. For further discussion of the Turner test, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

149. See, e.g., Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 898 n.4 (9th Cir. 2002) (noting that a prison might be able to give legitimate penological justifications for considering certain disabilities in parole decisions, particularly when the disability is a history of substance abuse); Randolph v. Rodgers, 170 F.3d 850, 859 (8th Cir. 1999) (noting that a prison should be allowed to present evidence that providing an interpreter for a deaf incarcerated person at disciplinary hearings created security concerns); Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1300 (11th Cir. 1999) (allowing the use of a test almost identical to the Turner test, despite explicitly stating that the Turner test “does not, by its terms, apply to” the ADA); Crawford v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 115 F.3d 481, 487 (7th Cir. 1997) (noting that what is “reasonable” or an “undue” burden is different in the prison context and that security concerns are relevant to whether accommodations for incarcerated people with disabilities are “feasible”); Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1447–1448 (9th Cir. 1994) (applying the Turner test to uphold a policy of excluding HIV-positive incarcerated people from food service assignments); Kaufman v. Carter, 952 F. Supp. 520, 532 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (finding it sensible that incarcerated people’s ADA rights are limited by “legitimate penological interests”).

150. See Christopher J. Burke, Note, Winning the Battle, Losing the War?: Judicial Scrutiny of Prisoners’ Statutory Claims Under the Americans with Disabilities Act, 98 MICH. L. REV. 482, 495–498 (1999) (arguing that (1) Turner’s rationale regarding the restrictions on constitutional rights are not applicable to statutory rights, because statutes represent congressional determinations of policy and resource allocation; (2) statutory rights allow Congress to provide guidance to prison administrators and allow flexibility and modification if the statute is unworkable; and (3) legislation like the ADA provides much detail to courts and prison administrators, whereas constitutional rights necessarily are dependent on judicial determinations).

Section 504 require defendants to make any reasonable accommodations for incarcerated people's disabilities. Also, reasonable accommodations or modifications under the ADA often include expensive physical renovations or other expenditures.¹⁵¹ In comparison, the Turner v. Safley reasonableness standard prescribes only "de minimis cost" (minor cost) solutions. (So a prison would have to make more accommodations for you under the ADA and Section 504, and fewer and cheaper accommodations under Turner.) However, some courts have held that the ADA/Section 504 standard must be interpreted consistently with the Turner standard,¹⁵² or at least may be influenced by the Turner standard.¹⁵³

Gates v. Rowland is an early case in which a court applied the Turner test to an incarcerated person's Section 504 claim. In Gates, HIV-positive incarcerated people sued under Section 504 to be allowed to work as food preparers and servers in a prison food service program. The prison argued that it was justified in excluding the incarcerated people based solely on their HIV status because other incarcerated people "frequently have irrational suspicions or phobias" about people with HIV, and these suspicions or phobias cannot be reversed by educating incarcerated people about HIV.¹⁵⁴ Prison officials claimed that allowing HIV-positive incarcerated people to serve food could lead to violence against HIV-positive food workers and the prison staff.¹⁵⁵

The Gates court concluded that the Turner test was the correct test for deciding incarcerated people's rights under Section 504, even though the Turner test normally is used only for incarcerated people's constitutional claims.¹⁵⁶ Under the Turner test, the court upheld the policy discriminating against HIV-positive incarcerated people, stating that the prison had a "reasonable basis for [the] restriction based on legitimate penological concerns."¹⁵⁷

Courts following the Gates approach do not always uphold challenged discriminatory conduct.¹⁵⁸ In your complaint, be sure to provide the court with appropriate language from the ADA, Section 504, and the regulations that cover those laws. Generally speaking, the ADA and Section 504 (written by Congress) and the ADA regulations (written by the DOJ) protect your rights as an incarcerated person with disabilities more than many courts recognize. You should emphasize the extent to which the laws and regulations plainly protect your rights.¹⁵⁹

151. But see Olmstead v. L.C. ex rel. Zimring, 527 U.S. 581, 607, 119 S. Ct. 2176, 2190, 144 L. Ed. 2d 540, 562 (1999) (holding that a state's ADA obligations are determined by "taking into account the resources available to the State").

152. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1446–1447 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding the Turner standard applicable under the ADA). Contra (decided exactly the opposite in) Amos v. Md. Dept. of Public Safety & Corr. Servs., 178 F.3d 212, 220 (4th Cir. 1999) (rejecting application of Turner as inconsistent with Yeskey), dismissed as settled, Amos v. Md. Dept. of Public Safety & Corr. Servs., 205 F.3d 687 (4th Cir. 2000).

153. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1300–1301 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that the Turner standard can be "properly considered" when applying the ADA).

154. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1448 (9th Cir. 1994).

155. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1447–1448 (9th Cir. 1994).

156. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1447 (9th Cir. 1994).

157. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1448 (9th Cir. 1994).

158. See, e.g., Chisolm v. McManimon, 275 F.3d 315, 327 (3d Cir. 2001) (refusing to decide whether the Turner test is appropriate in ADA and Section 504 claims, but noting that the prison's mention of "security" concerns, without evidence that these security concerns were real, would not be enough under the Turner test even if the test were used); Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 874 (9th Cir. 2001) (finding that the state failed to meet its burden under the Turner test by not presenting "any justification, rational or not," for its parole hearing policies that discriminated against incarcerated people and parolees with hearing and vision impairments, and learning and developmental disabilities).

159. See Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837, 843–844, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 2782, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694, 703 (1984) (holding that when Congress gives authority to an agency to interpret a law through regulations, the regulations have "controlling weight unless they are arbitrary, capricious," or are clearly contrary to the law as written by Congress).

(e) If Your Claim Involves Architectural Barriers at the Prison

If your complaint is about physical access within your prison, keep in mind that the ADA implementing regulations do not allow the undue burden defense for facilities built or significantly altered after January 26, 1992.¹⁶⁰ For example, if you are housed in a cellblock built or significantly altered any time after 1992, and you cannot use your wheelchair to get into the bathroom because the doorway is too narrow, the prison cannot say, “It would cost too much to enlarge the doorway.” If you are in (or need access to) a unit, cellblock, or compound significantly altered after 1992—even if the rest of the prison was built before 1992—and your complaint is about your ability to physically access those parts of the facility, your complaint should (1) cite to the regulations, and (2) state that significant changes have been made since 1992.

If your disability restricts your movement or requires that you use a cane, wheelchair, or other device, many courts have said prisons must make reasonable accommodations for your disability. Some courts have found that the ADA does not create any right for an incarcerated person to be housed at a specific prison.¹⁶¹ But at least one court has ruled that if there is a specific unit that treats incarcerated people with specific disabilities, it is a violation of the ADA and Section 504 to (1) transfer eligible incarcerated people out of, or (2) refuse to transfer eligible incarcerated people into that unit unless the prison can provide the treatment at other facilities.¹⁶² This applies even if the prison wants to do so for disciplinary, safety, medical, or mental health reasons.¹⁶³

Even if no special unit exists for incarcerated people with disabilities, prisons and jails must make reasonable accommodations for incarcerated people with mobility impairments. Courts have found that using bathroom facilities is a basic prison activity, and that prisons violate the ADA and Section 504 if they do not provide incarcerated people with disabilities such things as shower chairs, handrails, guard rails, and shower hoses.¹⁶⁴ Any architectural barrier that restricts access or creates risks of

160. 28 C.F.R. § 35.151(a)–(b) (2020) (“Each facility or part of a facility constructed by, on behalf of, or for the use of a public entity shall be designed and constructed in such manner that the facility or part of the facility is readily accessible to and usable by individuals with disabilities, if the construction was commenced after January 26, 1992”).

161. Garrett v. Angelone, 940 F. Supp. 933, 942 (W.D. Va. 1996), aff’d, Garrett v. Angelone, 107 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1997) (finding that “inmates . . . have no constitutional right to be housed in any particular prison or housing unit”).

162. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1050–1051 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that transferring incarcerated people from facilities with appropriate accommodations, even for “disciplinary, safety, and/or medical reasons,” violates both the ADA and Section 504).

163. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1051 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

164. See, e.g., United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 157, 126 S. Ct. 877, 881, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 658 (2006) (“[I]t is quite plausible that the alleged deliberate refusal of prison officials to accommodate Goodman’s disability-related needs in such fundamentals as mobility, hygiene, medical care, and virtually all other prison programs constituted ‘exclusion’ from participation in or . . . denial of the benefits of the prison’s ‘services, programs, or activities.’”); Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1196 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that “because of physical barriers that deny disabled inmates access to certain prison facilities (bathrooms, showers, exercise and other common areas), and because of disparate programs and services offered to disabled versus non-disabled inmates, the County is in violation of the ADA”); Kiman v. N.H. Dept. of Corr., 451 F.3d 274, 286–288 (1st Cir. 2006) (holding that denial of access to a shower chair, as well as other necessary accommodations, to an incarcerated person with disabilities raised an issue of material fact regarding defendant’s failure to provide the incarcerated person with reasonable accommodations as required by the ADA); Grant v. Schuman, No. 96-3760, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 16852, at *4, 7–8 (7th Cir. July 16, 1998) (unpublished) (allowing an incarcerated person with paralysis and nerve damage to proceed with an ADA claim regarding lack of handrails in toilet and shower areas); Cotton v. Sheahan, No. 02 C 0824, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20539, at *9 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 24, 2002) (unpublished) (allowing incarcerated person who used a wheelchair to bring the claim that he was denied access to a shower); Schmidt v. Odell, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1032–1033 (D. Kan. 1999) (noting a possible ADA violation even though the incarcerated person was able to use most of the services, because doing so required exceptional and painful exertion against his doctor’s orders); Cooper v. Weltner, No. 97-3105-JTM, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17292, at *19–20 (D. Kan. Oct. 27 1999) (unpublished) (allowing an incarcerated person who used a wheelchair to bring an ADA claim that the prison discriminated against him by failing to provide assistive devices for the shower); Kaufman v. Carter, 952 F. Supp. 520, 523, 532–533 (W.D. Mich. 1996) (allowing a bilateral amputee incarcerated person to go forward with his claim that the jail violated the ADA by failing to provide an accessible shower and toilet); injury to incarcerated people with disabilities also violates the ADA.¹⁶⁵ In your complaint, make sure to describe any barriers carefully and in detail—do not just state they exist.¹⁶⁶

(f) Provision of Auxiliary Aids and Services

The ADA and Section 504 also require prisons and jails to provide incarcerated people with disabilities auxiliary (extra) aids or services to help them participate in the facility's programs and activities. As with modifications, the prison or jail only has to provide these aids or services if they are reasonable. Examples of aids and services for hearing-impaired people include:

(A) qualified interpreters or other effective methods of making aurally [able to be heard] delivered materials available to individuals with hearing impairments; (B) qualified readers, taped texts, or other effective methods of making visually delivered materials available to individuals with visual impairments; (C) acquisition or modification of equipment or devices; and (D) other similar services and actions.¹⁶⁷

Examples of aids and services for people with visual impairments include: “[q]ualified readers; taped texts; audio recordings; Brailled materials . . . ; [and] large print materials.”¹⁶⁸ Other aids and services might include providing an incarcerated person who is an amputee with a wheelchair, shower seat, and similar assistive devices.¹⁶⁹

If you meet all of the eligibility requirements for a program, but cannot participate without an aid or service like the ones mentioned above, then the ADA requires the prison to provide any aids and services that will allow you to participate. However, as with modifications, a prison may justify not providing aids and services by saying the request is not reasonable, and then use the undue burden defense, or even the Turner test, to justify its action or lack of action.

Incarcerated people with hearing impairments have been particularly successful with ADA and Section 504 claims that argue prisons discriminated by failing to provide auxiliary aids and services to help them communicate. Courts have found that prisons violated the ADA and Section 504 by failing to provide qualified interpreters during reception and classification, counseling sessions, administrative and disciplinary hearings, and medical treatment and diagnosis.¹⁷⁰ Some courts also Outlaw v. City of Dothan, No. CV-92-A-1219-S, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21063, at *11 (M.D. Ala. Apr. 27, 1993) (unpublished) (holding that the ADA required the city jail to make its showers accessible to and usable by incarcerated people with disabilities).

165. See, e.g., Montez v. Romer, 32 F. Supp. 2d 1235, 1237, 1243 (D. Colo. 1999) (allowing incarcerated people to go forward with an ADA and Section 504 suit claiming that physical barriers in the prison created safety risks).

166. See, e.g., Barr v. Abrams, 810 F.2d 358, 363 (2d Cir. 1987) (“[C]omplaints relying on the civil rights statutes are insufficient unless they contain some specific allegations of fact indicating a deprivation of rights, instead of a litany of general conclusions that shock but have no meaning.”); Carrasquillo v. City of New York, 324 F. Supp. 2d 428, 443 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (dismissing the suit because the incarcerated person’s claim did not allege that he was prevented from accessing the law library and infirmary due to his disability).

167. ADA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110–325, § 4(1)(A)–(D), 122 Stat. 3553, 3556 (2008).

168. 28 C.F.R. § 35.104(2) (2020).

169. See Schmidt v. Odell, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1031–1033 (D. Kan. 1999) (allowing a double amputee incarcerated person to go forward with his ADA and Section 504 suit against a county jail that delayed in providing him with a shower chair and refused to transfer him to a jail that had enough space for him to use a wheelchair).

170. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1034–1035 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that not providing incarcerated people with hearing-impaired with qualified interpreters and other assistive devices for numerous programs, services, and activities violates the ADA and Section 504); Bonner v. Ariz. Dept. of Corr., 714 F. Supp. 420, 423 (D. Ariz. 1989) (holding that not providing a deaf, mute, and vision-impaired incarcerated person with a qualified interpreter for prison counseling, medical treatment, and disciplinary and administrative hearings violates Section 504 unless the prison can prove that the incarcerated person could communicate effectively without a qualified interpreter); see also Duffy v. Riveland, 98 F.3d 447, 453–456 (9th Cir. 1996) (allowing a deaf have found that a lack of interpreters in such settings violates incarcerated people's constitutional due process, Eighth Amendment, and privacy rights.¹⁷¹ The term "qualified interpreter" is defined as "an interpreter who is able to interpret effectively, accurately, and impartially both receptively and expressively, using any necessary specialized vocabulary."¹⁷² This means that a prison guard who knows only basic sign language is not a qualified interpreter, because he is neither impartial nor able to interpret effectively. Also, someone who knows Signed English is not a qualified interpreter for a hearing-impaired incarcerated person who communicates in American Sign Language, and vice versa.¹⁷³

Access to interpreters is not the only service that hearing-impaired incarcerated people have demanded successfully under the ADA and Section 504. The ADA also requires that public entities (1) provide persons with disabilities the opportunity to request the auxiliary aids and services of their choice, and (2) give "primary consideration to the requests of individuals with disabilities."¹⁷⁴ The regulations require prisons to notify persons with disabilities of their ADA protections,¹⁷⁵ and to have a grievance process for people who believe their prison has failed to make programs and services accessible to disabled individuals.¹⁷⁶ For example, one court held that a prison violated the ADA and Section 504 by failing to provide various adaptations for the deaf, including TDDs, closed-caption decoders for televisions, and fire alarms that alert people visually.¹⁷⁷ Another court has held that failure to provide TDD for the deaf fiancée of an incarcerated person may be a violation of the ADA.¹⁷⁸

5. What are "Services, Programs, or Activities?"

Under both the ADA and Section 504, prison authorities cannot exclude you from participating in services, programs, or activities if reasonable modifications would allow you to participate. Almost everything you do in prison—from your work assignment, to your use of the recreation yard, to your use of the library to your visitation privileges—is considered a program or service offered by the incarcerated person to go forward with his claim that the prison failed to provide him with a qualified interpreter for classification and disciplinary hearings, in violation of the ADA and Section 504).

171. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1034, 1042–1043 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that, by failing to provide qualified interpreters or other assistive devices necessary for medical and mental health treatment, the Department of Corrections and prison officials violated deaf incarcerated people's 14th Amendment substantive due process right and constitutional right to privacy, and the 8th Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment).

172. 28 C.F.R. § 35.104 (2020).

173. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1026–1027 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (indicating that an interpreter who uses Signed English is not qualified to interpret for an incarcerated person who uses American Sign Language).

174. 28 C.F.R. § 35.160(b)(1)–(2) (2020); see Disability Rights Section, Americans with Disabilities Act: Title II Technical Assistance Manual, II-1.2000, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <http://www.ada.gov/taman2.html> (last visited Nov. 23, 2020) (indicating that the individual's preferences should be considered when deciding what aids to provide for him).

175. 28 C.F.R. § 35.106 (2020) (describing the requirement that public entities notify people with disabilities of their rights under the ADA); see also 28 C.F.R. § 35.163(a) (2020) ("A public entity shall ensure that interested persons, including persons with impaired vision or hearing, can obtain information as to the existence and location of accessible services, activities, and facilities").

176. 28 C.F.R. § 35.107(b) (2020) ("A public entity that employs 50 or more persons shall adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable resolution of complaints alleging any action that would be prohibited by this part.").

177. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1047 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). But see Spurlock v. Simmons, 88 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1196 (D. Kan. 2000) (holding that providing a deaf incarcerated person with only limited telephone access, while permitting other incarcerated people unlimited access, did not violate the ADA because the deaf incarcerated person's request was unreasonable). Clarkson also held that deaf female incarcerated people were discriminated against on the basis of their sex because New York had a special prison unit that could accommodate many of the needs of deaf and hearing-impaired male incarcerated people, but did not have a similar unit for female incarcerated people. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1051 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

178. Niece v. Fitzner, 922 F. Supp. 1208, 1217–1219 (E.D. Mich. 1995) (finding a possible ADA violation in prison officials' refusal to provide accommodations for an incarcerated person to communicate with his deaf fiancée).

prison.¹⁷⁹ Incarcerated people with disabilities have argued that prisons and jails must accommodate their needs in the use of the following programs: boot camp,¹⁸⁰ conjugal visitation programs,¹⁸¹ libraries and law libraries,¹⁸² educational programs,¹⁸³ vocational training,¹⁸⁴ job opportunities,¹⁸⁵ the commissary and dispensary,¹⁸⁶ transition programs,¹⁸⁷ dining halls,¹⁸⁸ visitations,¹⁸⁹ telephone calls,¹⁹⁰ church services,¹⁹¹ eligibility for trustee status,¹⁹² substance abuse classes,¹⁹³ access to reading

179. See Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 210, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1955, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 219 (1998) (stating that “[m]odern prisons provide inmates with many recreational ‘activities,’ medical ‘services,’ and educational and vocational ‘programs,’ all of which at least theoretically ‘benefit’ the prisoners”).

180. See Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 210, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1955, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 219 (1998) (noting that the prison’s motivational boot camp for first-time offenders is a program).

181. See Bullock v. Gomez, 929 F. Supp. 1299, 1303–1304 (C.D. Cal. 1996) (noting that the incarcerated person was able to show that he was excluded from the conjugal visit program, although the issue of whether he was “otherwise qualified” was not yet resolved).

182. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 558–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding the decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights had been violated when he was denied access to prison libraries).

183. See Crawford v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 115 F.3d 481, 483 (7th Cir. 1997) (“[T]here is no doubt that an educational program is a program.”). While Crawford recognizes educational programs as programs, some courts have held that the ADA does not require a prison to implement a specific type of rehabilitation or education program that is not already available. Garrett v. Angelone, 940 F. Supp. 933, 942 (W.D. Va. 1996), aff’d, Garrett v. Angelone, 107 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1997).

184. See Montez v. Romer, 32 F. Supp. 2d 1235, 1237 (D. Colo. 1999) (noting that incarcerated people argue that they were unable to participate in vocational training because the prison did not accommodate their disabilities).

185. See Montez v. Romer, 32 F. Supp. 2d 1235, 1237 (D. Colo. 1999) (noting that incarcerated people argue that they were excluded from employment programs because of their disabilities); Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 560–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding the decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s rights under the ADA had been violated when he was denied access to “work programs”).

186. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 560–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding the decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights had been violated when he was denied access to the prison commissary); Kiman v. N.H. Dept. of Corr., 451 F.3d 274, 284 (1st Cir. 2006) (finding that access to medication is one of the “services, programs, or activities” covered by the ADA).

187. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 559–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding the decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s rights under the ADA were violated when he was denied access to transition programs).

188. See Crawford v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 115 F.3d 481, 483 (7th Cir. 1997) (noting that use of the dining hall is an activity under the ADA); Rainey v. County of Delaware, No. CIV.A.00-548, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10700, at *4–5, *10, *14 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 1, 2000) (unpublished) (permitting the claim that a disabled incarcerated person was given insufficient time to travel to the dining hall, thereby depriving him of food).

189. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 558–559 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding a decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights were violated when he was denied access to “visitation facilities that were open to the general inmate population”); Love v. Westville Correctional Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 558–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (allowing an incarcerated person who used a wheelchair to bring the claim that being housed in an infirmary unit cut off his access to many prison facilities, including visitation rooms).

190. Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1032–1033 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (granting summary judgment under the ADA where deaf incarcerated people were denied amplified headsets or telephone communication devices for the deaf).

191. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 558–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding a decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights were violated when he was denied access to church services).

192. See Dean v. Knowles, 912 F. Supp. 519, 522 (S.D. Fla. 1996) (allowing an asymptomatic HIV-positive incarcerated person to bring a discrimination suit against prison officials who denied him trustee status).

193. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 558–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding a decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights were violated when he was denied access to substance abuse programs).

materials and television,¹⁹⁴ college classes,¹⁹⁵ and access to medical care.¹⁹⁶ At least one court has determined that granting parole is an “activity,” and thus the actions of the parole board must comply with the ADA.¹⁹⁷ Even disciplinary measures like shackling have been challenged as violating the ADA and the Constitution if, although they apply to all incarcerated people, they have a disparate (uniquely unfair) impact on incarcerated people with disabilities.¹⁹⁸ Prison disciplinary hearings are also subject to the ADA.¹⁹⁹

Because programs and services vary from prison to prison, the ADA and Section 504 define programs and activities very broadly. Courts rarely dismiss suits because the activity in question did not qualify as a program.²⁰⁰ If you have a disability, are qualified for the activity or program (even if it is not listed above), and the prison refuses to allow you to participate, you may have a claim under the ADA and Section 504.

6. State Accessibility Laws and Regulations

Many states have accessibility and anti-disability discrimination statutes similar to the ADA. If you live in a state with a law that provides such protection, you should sue under state law as well. Most states require public and government facilities to be physically accessible to people with disabilities.²⁰¹ Some states have laws that clearly require state services or programs to provide

194. See Walker v. Snyder, 213 F.3d 344, 345 (7th Cir. 2000) (stating that the district court had found an ADA violation in the prison’s failure to provide books on tape); Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1032–1033 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding ADA violation where deaf in incarcerated people were denied a closed-caption decoder for televisions).

195. See Love v. Westville Corr. Ctr., 103 F.3d 558, 559–561 (7th Cir. 1996) (upholding the decision that a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s ADA rights were violated when he was denied access to prison educational programs).

196. Most courts have held that the ADA does not provide a cause of action for inappropriate medical care. See, e.g., Moore v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 24 F. Supp. 2d 1164, 1168 (D. Kan. 1998) (holding that a claim of inadequate medical care is not appropriate under the ADA), aff’d, Moore v. Prison Health Servs., 201 F.3d 448 (10th Cir. 1999). However, courts have upheld claims alleging discriminatory access to medical care because of the incarcerated person’s disability. See, e.g., Roop v. Squadrito, 70 F. Supp. 2d 868, 877 (N.D. Ind. 1999) (allowing an incarcerated person to go forward with ADA claim that, among other things, the prison did not dispense his medication properly, due to his HIV-positive status); McNally v. Prison Health Servs., 46 F. Supp. 2d 49, 58–59 (D. Me. 1999), reh’g denied, McNally v. Prison Health Servs., 52 F. Supp. 2d 147, 148 (D. Me. 1999) (allowing an incarcerated person to go forward with his claim that the prison violated the ADA by refusing to administer HIV medication because of his HIV status). The 8th Amendment may provide an alternative cause of action for inappropriate or inadequate medical care. See, e.g., Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1032–1033 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that failure to provide sign language interpreters prevented deaf incarcerated people from receiving adequate medical care, in violation of their due process and 8th Amendment rights).

197. Thompson v. Davis, 295 F.3d 890, 898–899 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that parole proceedings are subject to the ADA’s requirements).

198. Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 859 (9th Cir. 2001) (affirming the district court’s injunction ordering a prison to stop shackling, during parole hearings, incarcerated people with hearing impairments or who used sign language).

199. Duffy v. Riveland, 98 F.3d 447, 455 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that prison disciplinary hearings are subject to the ADA’s requirements).

200. But see Aswegan v. Bruhl, 113 F.3d 109, 110 (8th Cir. 1997) (holding that cable television is not a “service, program or activity” within the meaning of the ADA).

201. See ALA. CODE §§ 21-4-1–4 (2011); ALASKA STAT. § 35.10.015 (2007); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 41-1492.0–1492.05. (2008); CAL. CIV. CODE § 54 (WEST 2007); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 46A-7 (2018); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 16 § 9502 (WEST 2018); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 255.21 (WEST 2017), §§ 553.501–553.513 (WEST 2013); GA. CODE ANN. §§ 30-3-2–5 (2011); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 103-50 (2008); KAN. STAT. ANN. §§ 58-1303–1304 (WEST 2008); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 198B.260 (2007); LA. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 40:1731–1736 (2018); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 5, § 4591 (2013); MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. CH. 22, § 13A (WEST 2019); MO. ANN. STAT. § 8.620 (WEST 2000); MONT. CODE ANN. § 50-60-201 (WEST 2009); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 52:32-4 (WEST 2010); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 28-7-3 (WEST 2011); N.Y. PUB. BLDGS. § 51 (2007); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 168-2 (WEST 2007); N.D. CENT. CODE ANN. § 48-01.2-24 (WEST 2008); OHIO. REV. CODE. ANN. § 3781.111 (WEST 2018); OKLA. STAT. tit. 61, § 11 (2008); OR. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 447.210–280 (WEST 2011); PA. STAT. ANN. tit. 35, § 7210.102 (2008); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 37-8-15 (2007); S.C. CODE ANN. §§ 10-5-210–330 (2007); S.D.

modifications or accommodations for people with disabilities.²⁰² When researching state laws to see if they apply to you—if they cover the type of discrimination you are encountering—be sure to (1) read the statutory language carefully, and (2) review cases interpreting the statute.²⁰³ Some state laws have broader definitions of “disability” than the ADA does. Also, the constitutional challenges to the ADA (discussed at the beginning of this Chapter) do not apply to state accessibility statutes.

C. Enforcing Your Rights Under the ADA and Section 504

This Part discusses other issues you should consider when deciding whether to file a claim. These issues are: (1) finding an attorney, (2) filing a complaint with the DOJ instead of in court, (3) figuring out the damages you can ask for, and (4) determining whether you can also sue under your state’s antidiscrimination laws.

Before deciding to file a lawsuit under the ADA, Section 504, or any other civil rights statute, you should read Chapter 14 of the JLM, about the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). If you fail to follow the PLRA’s requirements, you may lose your good time credit and/or your right to bring future claims without paying the full filing fee. Make sure your attorney also knows about the PLRA—many attorneys do not.

1. Finding an Attorney

There are not enough lawyers willing and able to represent incarcerated people, in part because most lawsuits by incarcerated people do not pay lawyers well. But the ADA and Section 504 do allow the recovery of attorney’s fees;²⁰⁴ attorneys (and plaintiffs who are representing themselves) can ask for attorney’s fees from defendants after winning a case. Courts have found that the PLRA rule that limits recovery of attorney’s fees in lawsuits by incarcerated people do not apply to ADA or Section 504 claims.^{205,206} Even if you do not have a lawyer, you should ask for compensation for lawyer’s fees under the ADA and Section 504. You are also entitled to recover your court, or “in pauperis,” fees.

If you decide to sue under the ADA and Section 504, you should contact lawyers or disability rights groups in the area to see if they can assist you. You also might want to contact your state’s CODIFIED LAWS § 5-14-12 (2004); TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 68-120-201–205 (2015); TEX. GOV’T CODE ANN. §§ 469.001–469.003 (2004); UTAH CODE ANN. §§ 26-29-1–4 (2007); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 20, §§ 2900–2907 (2007); WASH. REV. CODE §§ 70.92.100–170 (2007); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 101.13 (2010).

A number of states have laws that simply require equal rights: people with disabilities have full and free use of facilities. See, e.g., ARK. CODE ANN. § 20-14-303 (2017); COLO. REV. STAT. § 24-34-601 (2010); IOWA CODE § 216C.3 (WEST 2017); MD. CODE ANN. HUMAN SERVS. § 7-704 (WEST 2007); MICH. COMP. LAWS. § 37.1102 (2008); MINN. STAT. § 363A.11 (2008); NEB. REV. STAT. § 20-127 (WEST 2000); NEV. REV. STAT. § 233.010 (2016); VA. CODE ANN. § 51.5-44 (2018); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 35-13-201 (2007).

202. See, e.g., CONN. GEN. STAT. § 46A-7 (2018); FLA STAT. § 110.215 (2014); 775 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/5-101, 102 (2001 & SUPP. 2008); LA. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 46:2252 to 2254 (2015); MD. CODE ANN. HUMAN SERVS. §§ 7-127 to 132 (2007); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 168A-7 (WEST 2007); OR. REV. STAT. § 410.060 (WEST 2012); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 42-87-2 (2007); S.C. CODE ANN. § 43-33-520 (2015); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 20-13-23.7 (2016); TEX. HUM. RES. CODE ANN. §§ 22.010–.011 (VERNON 2001); UTAH CODE ANN. § 62A-5-102 (2012); VA. CODE ANN. § 51.5-40 (2018).

203. For more information on legal research, see JLM, Chapter 2, “An Introduction to Legal Research.”

204. 29 U.S.C. § 794a(b) (“In any action or proceeding to enforce or charge a violation of [the Rehabilitation Act] . . . , the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party . . . reasonable attorney’s fee as part of the costs.”); Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12205 (“In any action or administrative proceeding commenced pursuant to this Chapter, the court or agency, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party . . . a reasonable attorney’s fee, including litigation expenses, and costs.”); see also 28 C.F.R. § Pt. 35, App. B. (2020) (discussing 28 U.S.C. § 35.175 and specifying that “attorneys fees” include “litigation expenses and costs,” including “items such as expert witness fees, travel expenses, etc.”).

205. Prison Litigation Reform Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d) (discussing attorney’s fees in incarcerated person suits).

206. Armstrong v. Davis, 318 F.3d 965, 974 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that the PLRA restrictions on attorney’s fees do not apply to claims brought under the ADA or Section 504 because the two laws have their own attorney’s fees provisions); Beckford v. Irvin, 60 F. Supp. 2d 85, 88 (W.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding that the PLRA’s restrictions on attorneys fees do not apply to incarcerated people’s ADA claims).

Protection & Advocacy (“P&A”) organization for advice and/or representation. P&As, which are usually non-profit organizations, advocate on behalf of persons with disabilities, including those in criminal and civil institutions.²⁰⁷ Your P&A may help you by providing information, referrals, or advice; helping you file your complaint; or even representing you. To find the P&A in your area, contact:

The National Disability Rights Network
820 First Street NE, Suite 740
Washington, DC 20002
Tel: 202-408-9514

2. Filing a Complaint

If you believe you have been discriminated against because of your disability, you can file a complaint with the DOJ²⁰⁸ and/or bring a lawsuit in court.²⁰⁹ Neither Title II nor Section 504 requires you to file with the DOJ, but the PLRA may require you to file with the DOJ before you sue in state court. In New York, prior to the 2005 Rosario v. Goord decision, several federal courts had held that incarcerated people must file a complaint with the DOJ before filing a complaint in federal court, because the PLRA requires incarcerated people to exhaust all administrative remedies.²¹⁰ However, in a 2005 decision by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, the New York Department of Correctional Services (“DOCS”)²¹¹ said it would stop requiring incarcerated people to file their ADA claims with the DOJ before bringing suits in federal court.²¹² Since most courts have not decided whether the PLRA’s administrative exhaustion requirement demands that incarcerated people first file with the DOJ, you probably should do it anyway, to avoid having your ADA or Section 504 lawsuit dismissed. For more information on the PLRA, see Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

207. Protection and Advocacy of Individual Rights (PAIR), 29 U.S.C. § 794e(a)(1) (supporting “a system in each State to protect the legal and human rights of individuals with disabilities”); Protection and Advocacy for Individuals with Mental Illness Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 10803, 10805 (requiring that each state establish systems designed “to protect and advocate the rights of individuals with mental illness . . . [and] investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of individuals with mental illness”); 42 U.S.C. § 15043 (listing the systems’ requirements, and noting that each system “shall have the authority to . . . pursue legal, administrative, and other appropriate remedies or approaches to ensure the protection of, and advocacy for, the rights of such individuals within the State who are or who may be eligible for treatment, services, or habilitation”).

208. 28 C.F.R. § 35.170(a), (c) (2020).

209. 28 C.F.R. § 35.172(d) (2020).

210. See, e.g., Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 532, 122 S. Ct. 983, 992, 152 L. Ed.2d 12, 26, (2002) (holding that the PLRA requires incarcerated people to exhaust all administrative remedies before filing an ADA claim); William G. v. Pataki, No. 03-8331, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *15 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished) (“The DOJ remedies, to the extent that they are available to Plaintiffs, must be exhausted pursuant to the plain language of the PLRA.”); Burgess v. Garvin, No. 01 Civ. 10994, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14419, at *3, *7–9 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 19, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that the PLRA requires incarcerated people to exhaust all administrative remedies, including DOJ remedies, before filing an ADA claim: “[t]he plain language of [the PLRA] requires the prisoner to exhaust ‘such administrative remedies as are available.’ It is not limited to administrative redress within the prison system in which the prisoner is being held, or to administrative remedies provided by any particular sovereign.”).

211. The New York State Department of Correctional Services is now called the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”).

212. Rosario v. Goord, 400 F.3d 108, 109 (2d Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (stating that DOCS does not intend to challenge ADA lawsuits on the ground that administrative remedies have not been exhausted because complaints were not first filed with the DOJ). But see William G. v. Pataki, 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *1–4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished) (where a court, post-Rosario, applied the DOJ exhaustion requirement to a proposed class action on behalf of parole detainees with disabilities housed in New York city jails, and where defendants were not DOCS but the State of New York and the New York State Division of Parole and Offices of Mental Health and of Alcohol and Substance Abuse Services).

(a) Filing a Claim with the DOJ

Starting from the date of the discrimination you experienced, you have 180 days to file a complaint with the DOJ.²¹³ The DOJ will either investigate the complaint,²¹⁴ or, if you include a Section 504 claim and the DOJ thinks another agency can investigate better, the DOJ will refer your complaint to another agency.²¹⁵ If the agency or the DOJ finds a violation of your rights, it will try to negotiate with the prison to get them to comply with the law.²¹⁶ If the prison does not comply, the agency will refer your case to the U.S. Attorney General.²¹⁷ The Attorney General can sue the prison, but they do not have to—and in most cases, they will not.

To file a disability discrimination complaint, contact the DOJ and ask for a “Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 Discrimination Complaint Form.”²¹⁸ The contact information for the DOJ is:

U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Civil Rights Division
Disability Rights Section - NYA
Washington, D.C. 20530
Tel.: (202) 307-0663
ADA Information Line (voice): (800) 514-0301
TTY: (800) 514-0383

If you do not have time to request a form, send a letter to the DOJ that includes the following:

- (1) Your name, full address, and telephone number;
- (2) The name of the institution that discriminated against you (for example, the prison);
- (3) The address and phone number of the institution that discriminated against you;
- (4) The date(s) you encountered the discrimination (and whether the discrimination is ongoing);
- (5) A description of the acts of discrimination, including the names of any individuals who discriminated against you;
- (6) Whether you have filed a complaint or formal grievance, and, if you have, what the status of your complaint or grievance is;
- (7) Whether you have complained to any other agencies (such as a state human rights commission or another bureau of the Department of Justice) or filed with a court about the discrimination (and if you have complained or filed, give the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the agencies or courts and the date(s) you filed the claim(s));
- (8) Whether you plan to file with another agency or court, and, if you plan to file, the name, address, and telephone number of the agency or court (even if you say you do not plan to file with any other agency or court, you can change your mind and file later on); and
- (9) Your signature and the date.

(b) Filing a Lawsuit

As mentioned above, the ADA and Section 504 do not require that you file with the DOJ, although, because of the PLRA, you may have to do so anyway. If you are in a jurisdiction that does not require 213. 28 C.F.R. § 35.170(a)–(b) (2020).

214. 28 C.F.R. § 35.172(a) (2020).

215. 28 C.F.R. § 35.171(a)(2)(ii) (2020).

216. 28 C.F.R. § 35.173(a)(2) (2020).

217. 28 C.F.R. § 35.174 (2020).

218. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Civil Rights Division, Form No. 1190-0009, Americans with Disabilities Act Discrimination Complaint Form (last updated May 2019), available at <http://www.ada.gov/t2cmpfrm.htm> (last visited Nov. 23, 2020).

you to file first with the DOJ, you may go directly to court if you have first completely used your prison's internal grievance process.²¹⁹ If you do file with the DOJ, you can bring a lawsuit even if the DOJ does not find a violation of your rights, but you must also completely use your prison's internal grievance process. The statute of limitations (deadline) for filing a lawsuit under Title II and Section 504 depends on your state. Because neither law has its own statute of limitations, most federal courts use the statute of limitations for personal injury claims in the state.²²⁰ Other federal courts use the statute of limitations for the most similar state law.²²¹ Note that some of these deadlines²²² are fairly long (six years in Minnesota),²²³ while others are very short (180 days in North Carolina).²²⁴

3. What Kind of Damages Can You Seek Against a State

What you can win in court depends on the facts of your case, and on whether you sue under Title II or Section 504. You should carefully consider what you want the court to do before you file your suit.

(a) Money Damages

Courts are divided over whether you can sue a state for money damages under the ADA and Section 504. This is because they are split as to states' Eleventh Amendment immunity (also known as "sovereign immunity").

219. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 202, 127 S. Ct. 910, 914, 166 L. Ed.2d 798, 805 (2007) (requiring exhaustion of prison's internal grievance process before suit can be brought).

220. See Everett v. Cobb Cty. Sch. Dist., 138 F.3d 1407, 1409 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding that Georgia's two-year personal injury statute of limitations applies to ADA and § 504 claims since Georgia has no law "identical to the Rehabilitation Act").

221. See Wolsky v. Med. Coll. of Hampton Rds., 1 F.3d 222, 223–224 (4th Cir. 1993) (holding that the statute of limitations for the most similar state statute should be applied to Rehabilitation Act suits). However, in addressing the lack of uniformity among the states and the difficulty in identifying the most similar state statute, Congress enacted a four-year statute of limitations for causes of actions "arising under an Act of Congress enacted after December 1, 1990". 28 U.S.C. § 1658. While Title II and Section 504 were enacted before December 1990, post-1990 amendments have been made to the statutes and it is your duty to show that your claim arises out of post-1990 amendments in order for the Section 1658 statute of limitations to apply. Frame v. City of Arlington, 657 F.3d 215, 236–237 (5th Cir. 2011). For Section 1658 to apply, you must determine whether the post-1990 enactment creates "a new right" or "new rights of action and corresponding liabilities", or if your claim "was made possible by a post-1990 enactment". Jones v. R. R. Donnelley & Sons Co., 541 U.S. 369, 381–382, 124 S. Ct. 1836, 1844–1845, 158 L. Ed. 2d 645, 656–657 (2004).

222. In New York, the deadline is three years. Noel v. Cornell Univ. Med. Coll., 853 F. Supp. 93, 94 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). In California, the deadline is one year, although the issue remains to be definitively settled. Pickern v. Holiday Quality Foods, Inc., 293 F.3d 1133, 1137 n.2 (9th Cir. 2002). In Illinois, the deadline is two years. Winfrey v. City of Chicago, 957 F. Supp. 1014, 1023 (N.D. Ill., 1997). In Georgia, the deadline is two years. Everett v. Cobb Co. Sch. Dist., 138 F.3d 1407, 1409 (11th Cir. 1998). In Texas, the deadline is two years. Hickey v. Irving Ind. Sch. Dist., 976 F.2d 980, 982–983 (5th Cir. 1992). In Pennsylvania, the deadline is two years. Disabled in Action of Penn. v. Southeastern Penn. Transp. Co., 539 F.3d 199, 208 (3d Cir. 2008). In Louisiana, the deadline is one year. Joseph v. Port of New Orleans, Civil Action No. 99-1622 Section "N", 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4133, *49–51 (E.D. La. Mar. 4, 2002) (unpublished).

223. Faibisch v. Univ. of Minn., 304 F.3d 797, 802 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that Minnesota's six-year personal injury statute of limitations applies to Rehabilitation Act suits).

224. McCullough v. Branch Banking & Tr. Co., 35 F.3d 127, 132 (4th Cir. 1994) (holding that the statute of limitations for Rehabilitation Act claims is determined by the most similar state law; in North Carolina, the most similar state law was a state antidiscrimination law with a deadline of 180 days, so the deadline for filing a Section 504 complaint became 180 days). The McCullough court noted that it was following its decision in Wolsky v. Med. Coll. of Hampton Rds., 1 F.3d 222, 223–224 (4th Cir. 1993), where the court found that, because (1) Virginia had its own act protecting disabled individuals, and (2) that act had the same purpose as the federal Rehabilitation Act, the Virginia Act was the most analogous statute, and its one-year statute of limitations should be used, rather than the statute of limitations for personal injury suits. McCullough v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 53 F.3d 127, 130 (4th Cir. 1994).

Under the Eleventh Amendment, states (but not federal or local government) have what is called “sovereign immunity.”²²⁵ This means individuals cannot sue them for money in federal court—unless Congress creates an exception. It is true that both the ADA and Section 504 apply to state incarcerated people.²²⁶ But it is not clear whether states have waived their immunity, so that you can sue them for money damages under those laws.

States do not want to have to pay money when they lose lawsuits. So, they argue that, in enacting the ADA and Section 504, Congress did not have the authority to create an Eleventh Amendment exception to sovereign immunity. Therefore, states argue, people bringing claims under the ADA and Section 504 should not be able to win money damages against the states. Once courts decide that states cannot be sued for money damages, individuals suing states can only receive “injunctive relief,”²²⁷ discussed in subsection (b), below.

States do not want to have to pay money when they lose lawsuits. So they argue that, in enacting the ADA and Section 504, Congress did not have the authority to create an Eleventh Amendment exception to sovereign immunity. Therefore, states argue, people bringing claims under the ADA and Section

504 should not be able to win money damages against the states. Once courts decide that states cannot be sued for money damages, individuals suing states can only receive “injunctive relief,”²²⁸ discussed in subsection (b), below.

(b) Sovereign Immunity and the ADA

The Supreme Court has taken the middle road between allowing and not allowing state prisons to be sued for money damages under Title II of the ADA. Recently, in Tennessee v. Lane, the Supreme Court held that states may be sued for money damages for violations of Title II, at least when the violations relate to court access for a disabled person.²²⁹ Before Lane, most federal courts had held that states could not be sued for money damages at all.²³⁰ Then after Lane, in United States v. Georgia, the 225. Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ala. v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 363, 121 S. Ct. 955, 962, 148 L. Ed. 2d 866, 877 (2001).

226. Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 213, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1956, 141 L. Ed.2d 215, 221 (1998) (holding that Title II of the ADA applies to incarcerated people in state prisons); Harris v. Thigpen, 941 F.2d 1495, 1522 n.41 (11th Cir. 1991) (ruling that Section 504 applies to incarcerated people in state prisons because state prisons receive money from the federal government); Bonner v. Lewis, 857 F.2d 559, 562–563 (9th Cir. 1988) (ruling that Section 504 applies to state correctional institutions that receive federal funding).

227. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 155, 126 S. Ct. 877, 879, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 657 (2006); Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1263–1267 (11th Cir. 2004), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006).

228. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 155, 126 S. Ct. 877, 879, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 657 (2006); Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1263–1267 (11th Cir. 2004), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006).

229. Tennessee v. Lane, 541 U.S. 509, 531, 124 S. Ct. 1978, 1993, 158 L. Ed. 2d 820, 842 (2004).

230. Prior to Lane, the First, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuit Courts of Appeals ruled that individuals may not receive money damages under Title II. Many of these cases stated that Congress created a remedy that was not “congruent” nor “proportional,” meaning the remedy was inappropriate, to the harm the remedy was supposed to address. See Kiman v. N.H. Dept. of Corr., No.01-134-B, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21894, *2–3 (D.N.H. Dec. 19, 2001) (unpublished) (agreeing with the Second, Fifth, and Tenth Circuits that, under Garrett, the 11th Amendment does not allow courts to hear Title II claims against states), aff’d, Kiman v. N.H. Dept. of Corr., 332 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2003) (en banc), vacated, Kiman v. N.H. Dept. of Corr., 541 U.S. 1059, 124 S. Ct. 2387, 158 L. Ed. 2d 961 (2004); Wessel v. Glendening, 306 F.3d 203, 215 (4th Cir. 2002) (holding that while Congress expressed its intent to diminish state sovereign immunity, it acted without enough information and created a remedy that was not proportionate nor congruent), overruled by Constantine v. Rectors & Visitors of George Mason Univ., 441 F.3d 474, 486 n.8 (4th Cir. 2005); Reickenbacker v. Foster, 274 F.3d 974, 983 (5th Cir. 2001) (holding that Title II and Section 504 are not proportional and congruent responses to legislative findings of unconstitutional discrimination by the states against the disabled), overruled by Pace v. Bogalusa City Sch. Bd., 403 F.3d 272, 277 n.14 (5th Cir. 2005); Thompson v. Colorado, 278 F.3d 1020, 1034 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding that Title II cannot be found to be a proportional and congruent response to constitutional violations if Congress has not identified a history and pattern of unconstitutional discrimination by the states); Walker v. Snyder, 213

Supreme Court held that incarcerated people may sue states for money damages under Title II, at least in situations where the alleged misconduct actually violates the parts of the Constitution that apply to the states.²³¹ In that case, the plaintiff alleged Eighth Amendment violations.²³² However, the ruling is broad, and applies to more than just the Eighth Amendment. The court did not say whether the waiver of sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment also applies to ADA violations that do not involve constitutional violations.²³³

So the current rule is that incarcerated people may sue states for money damages under Title II when a state prison system (1) violates any of the rights that are part of the Fourteenth Amendment and (2) violates Title II.²³⁴ The Fourteenth Amendment makes most of the rights in the first eight amendments to the Constitution apply against the states. Specifically, it includes the following rights from the first eight amendments:

- (1) Guarantee against establishment of religion;²³⁵
- (2) Guarantee of free exercise of religion,²³⁶
- (3) Guarantee of freedom of speech,²³⁷
- (4) Guarantee of freedom of the press,²³⁸
- (5) Guarantee of freedom of assembly,²³⁹
- (6) Right to keep and bear arms,²⁴⁰
- (7) Right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure,²⁴¹
- (8) Warrant requirements,²⁴²
- (9) Protection against double jeopardy,²⁴³
- (10) Privilege against self-incrimination,²⁴⁴
- (11) Protection against taking of private property without just compensation,²⁴⁵

F.3d 344, 346–347 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that, like Title I, Title II is barred by the 11th Amendment), overruled by Bruggeman v. Blagojevich, 324 F.3d 906, 912–913 (7th Cir. 2003); Alsbrook v. City of Maumelle, 184 F.3d 999, 1002 (8th Cir. 1999) (finding that Title II is not a valid exercise of Congress’ power under Section 5 of the 14th Amendment, and so Arkansas retains its 11th Amendment immunity). The Second Circuit has ruled that individuals may not receive money damages under Title II of the ADA unless they can show that the state acted with “discriminatory animus or ill will” toward the disabled. Garcia v. State Univ. of N.Y. Health Scis. Ctr. of Brooklyn, 280 F.3d 98, 111 (2d Cir. 2001). The Sixth Circuit has allowed money damages against the state under Title II only if the discrimination amounted to a violation of an individual’s due process rights under the 14th Amendment. Lane v. Tennessee, 315 F.3d 680, 682–683 (6th Cir. 2003) (holding that “it was reasonable for Congress to conclude that it needed to enact [the ADA] to prevent states from unduly burdening” rights protected by the 14th Amendment), aff’d, Lane v. Tennessee, 541 U.S. 509, 534, 124 S. Ct. 1978, 1994, 158 L. Ed. 2d 820, 844 (2004). Only the Ninth Circuit has held that individuals may sue the state for money damages under Title II. Hason v. Med. Bd. of Cal., 279 F.3d 1167, 1171 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that Congress validly diminished states’ 11th Amendment immunity when enacting Title II).

231. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 882, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 660 (2006).

232. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 160–161, 126 S. Ct. 877, 883, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 661 (2006) (Stevens, J., concurring).

233. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 882, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 660 (2006); Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1263–1267 (11th Cir. 2004), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006).

234. United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 882, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 660 (2006).

235. Everson v. Bd. of Educ., 330 U.S. 1, 14–15, 67 S. Ct. 504, 511, 91 L. Ed. 711, 723 (1947).

236. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S. Ct. 900, 903, 84 L. Ed. 1213, 1217–1218 (1940).

237. Hustler Magazine v. Falwell, 485 U.S. 46, 50–51, 108 S. Ct. 876, 879, 99 L. Ed. 2d 41, 48–49 (1988).

238. Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 707, 51 S. Ct. 625, 628, 75 L. Ed. 1357, 1363 (1931).

239. De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364, 57 S. Ct. 255, 260, 81 L. Ed. 278, 284 (1937).

240. McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 749–750, 130 S. Ct. 3020, 3026, 177 L. Ed. 2d 894, 903 (2010).

241. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 654–655, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 1691, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1089–1090 (1961).

242. Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 110, 84 S. Ct. 1509, 1512, 12 L. Ed. 2d 723, 726 (1964).

243. Benton v. Maryland, 395 U.S. 784, 787, 89 S. Ct. 2056, 2058, 23 L. Ed. 2d 707, 711 (1969).

244. Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964).

245. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U.S. 226, 236–237, 17 S. Ct. 581, 584–585, 41

- (12) Right to a speedy trial,²⁴⁶
- (13) Right to a public trial,²⁴⁷
- (14) Right to trial by jury,²⁴⁸
- (15) Right to question opposing witnesses,²⁴⁹
- (16) Right to assistance of counsel,²⁵⁰
- (17) Protection against cruel and unusual punishment.²⁵¹

Additionally, the Fourteenth Amendment itself provides that:

- (1) No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of U.S. citizens;
- (2) No State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of the law; and
- (3) No State shall deny equal protection of the law.²⁵²

If any of these rights are violated in addition to a violation of Title II, you may be able to sue for money damages. It appears that, after Lane and Georgia, lower courts will take a case-by-case approach, considering the particular circumstances, in determining whether the plaintiff can sue the state for money damages.²⁵³ Some courts will be more likely than others to permit money damages.²⁵⁴

If you are considering bringing a disability discrimination claim under Title II, you should look at how the decisions in Lane and Georgia have been analyzed and interpreted by other courts, disability rights organizations, and academics. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for information on performing legal research.

L. Ed. 979, 984–985 (1897).

246. Klopfer v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 222–223, 87 S. Ct. 988, 993, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1, 7–8 (1967).

247. In re Oliver, 333 U.S. 257, 266–268, 68 S. Ct. 499, 504–505, 92 L. Ed. 682, 690–691 (1948).

248. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 149, 88 S. Ct. 1444, 1447, 20 L. Ed. 2d 491, 496 (1968).

249. Pointer v. Texas, 380 U.S. 400, 403, 85 S. Ct. 1065, 1068, 13 L. Ed. 2d 923, 926 (1965).

250. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 342, 83 S. Ct. 792, 795, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 804 (1963).

251. Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 667, 82 S. Ct. 1417, 1420–1421, 8 L. Ed. 2d 758, 763 (1962).

252. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1.

253. See United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 882, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 660 (2006). In United States v. Georgia, the Supreme Court held that lower courts were in the best position to determine (1) which aspects of the State's alleged conduct violated Title II of the ADA, and (2) to what extent such conduct also violated the 14th Amendment. Additionally, the Supreme Court held that when lower courts find that the State's conduct violated Title II but did not violate the 14th Amendment, lower courts should determine whether Congress intended that people should still have a right to sue the states for money damages. Since United States v. Georgia, a number of courts have allowed incarcerated people to sue for monetary damages when they establish both that (1) the state prison system violated Title II of the ADA, and (2) the actions of the state prison system violated incarcerated people's 14th Amendment rights. Degrafinreid v. Ricks, 417 F. Supp. 2d 403, 411–413 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (ruling that an incarcerated person could bring a claim for money damages against his prison system for confiscating and destroying his hearing aid; the prison's actions might have violated the incarcerated person's 8th Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment).

However, in the past, courts have been hesitant to allow incarcerated people to sue for monetary damages when a State's actions violate Title II but not a 14th Amendment constitutional right. See, e.g., Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1272–1275 (11th Cir. 2004), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006) (noting that Title II damages suits may only be brought where the ADA provides an "appropriate . . . response to [a] . . . history and pattern of unconstitutional treatment. . . . "specifically in the prison context," and finding that because "Title II addresses all prison services, programs, and activities—and goes well beyond the basic, humane necessities guaranteed by the Eighth Amendment," incarcerated person could not bring a Title II damages suit against the state); Flakes v. Franks, 322 F. Supp. 2d 981, 983 (W.D. Wisc. 2004) (noting that it was not clear whether the incarcerated person's Title II claim for money damages against the state could go forward because the court had not yet reviewed all of the facts the incarcerated person might include in his complaint).

254. See, e.g., Phiffer v. Columbia River Corr. Inst., 384 F.3d 791, 792–793 (9th Cir. 2004) (upholding a prior decision permitting an incarcerated person to bring a Title II claim for damages against the state); see also Carrasquillo v. City of New York, 324 F. Supp. 2d 428, 442 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (noting that Lane permits Title II claims for money damages against state and local governments, but dismissing the claim on other grounds).

(c) Sovereign Immunity and Section 504

Courts are divided over whether states are protected by sovereign immunity under Section 504. Most courts of appeals that have addressed this issue have held that you can seek monetary damages under Section 504.²⁵⁵ But the Second Circuit has held that you might not be able to get monetary damages from states under Section 504, since states only agreed to be sued for money damages under Title II, and not Section 504.²⁵⁶

Overall, though, the arguments supporting Section 504 sovereign immunity are weak. This is because so many state agencies receive federal funding, and Congress only offers them federal funding in exchange for complying with Section 504—and in doing so waiving their state’s sovereign immunity. Therefore, even Second Circuit courts would find that, in reality, most states have waived their sovereign immunity under Section 504 and can be sued for money damages. However, in some courts, you may still not be able to get money damages against a state under Section 504.²⁵⁷

(d) Some Practical Tips

To receive money damages, you have to convince the court that the state has waived its sovereign immunity. Generally, this is easier under Section 504 than under the ADA. However, this area of the law is changing. If you plan to file a Title II or Section 504 lawsuit, you should research this issue thoroughly to determine current law in your circuit. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for help in determining what is “current law.” (Although “Shepardizing” cases in LexisNexis is a good place to start, you should do additional research to make sure you are using up-to-date laws.)

If you find that you live in a federal circuit that prohibits money damages in such suits, you still can file a lawsuit against the state. However, you will only be able to receive relief that is injunctive (ordering the prison to take certain actions) and/or declaratory (determining applicable rights under the statute) and not money damages.²⁵⁸ Even if you are able to sue for money damages, you cannot receive punitive damages under Title II or Section 504.²⁵⁹

255. See Garrett v. Univ. of Ala. at Birmingham Bd. of Trs., 344 F.3d 1288, 1293 (11th Cir. 2003) (explaining that states waive their 11th Amendment immunity to § 504 suits when they receive federal funds); A.W. v. Jersey City Pub. Schs., 341 F.3d 234, 238 (3d Cir. 2003) (stating that Congress clearly required states to waive their immunity if they accepted federal funding); Doe v. Nebraska, 345 F.3d 593, 604 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding that the state knowingly waived its immunity by accepting federal funds, despite the state’s claims that it thought it had already waived immunity through prior actions); Miranda B. v. Kitzhaber, 328 F.3d 1181, 1186 (9th Cir. 2003) (stating that “it is clear that a state waives its immunity from suit under the Rehabilitation Act by accepting federal funds”); Carten v. Kent State Univ., 282 F.3d 391, 398 (6th Cir. 2002) (finding, as it did in an earlier case, that the state “unambiguously waived Eleventh Amendment immunity against Rehabilitation Act claims when it agreed to accept federal funds pursuant to” a federal act requiring states that accept such funds to waive their immunity); see also Pace v. Bogalusa City Sch. Bd., 403 F.3d 272, 280–287 (5th Cir. 2005) (en banc) (holding that, by accepting federal financial assistance, the state waived its 11th Amendment immunity to suits under Section 504).

256. Garcia v. State Univ. of N.Y. Health Scis. Ctr. of Brooklyn, 280 F.3d 98, 114 (2d Cir. 2001). Garcia does not say that the state can never be sued for money damages under Section 504, but it requires that the state—when it accepted federal funds—believed it was giving up its immunity from suits for money damages. It is not clear at what point courts will find that states knew they could be sued. See Press v. State Univ. of N.Y., 388 F. Supp. 2d 127, 132–133 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (discussing subsequent treatment of Garcia in the Second Circuit after Lane). As such, if you are in the Second Circuit, you may want to include a claim for money damages under § 504. But keep in mind the “three strikes” provision of the PLRA (see Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” to learn more about the PLRA).

257. See Howard v. Bureau of Prisons, No. 3:05-CV-1372, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7997, at *12–13 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 1, 2008) (unpublished).

258. Remember that in lawsuits against the federal government, you can seek only injunctive relief (a court-ordered act or prohibition) and declaratory relief (the judge’s determination of each party’s rights). You cannot get money damages. For a reminder of this information, see Part B(1) of this Chapter.

259. See Barnes v. Gorman, 536 U.S. 181, 189, 122 S. Ct. 2097, 2103, 153 L. Ed. 2d 230, 239 (2002) (stating that “punitive damages may not be awarded . . . in suits brought under Section 202 of the ADA and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act.”).

You should probably cite both the ADA and Section 504 when filing your claim (so long as both of those laws apply to you). Then, if the Supreme Court ever rules that Congress exceeded its power in enacting one of those laws, your claim for money damages still will be viable against a state prison if (1) it includes claims against the law that is still in effect, and (2) you are in a jurisdiction that allows suits for money damages under the law that is still in effect.

(e) Injunctive Relief

Even when you cannot sue the state for money damages, you can ask for injunctive relief.²⁶⁰ Injunctive relief is when the court orders the prison to take certain actions (for example, to provide interpreters to hearing-impaired incarcerated people during disciplinary hearings)²⁶¹ or not to take certain actions (for example, to stop excluding incarcerated people with HIV from certain programs).²⁶² If you are seeking injunctive relief, you must make your claim for an injunction against individual prison officials in their official capacities.²⁶³ Under the ADA and Section 504, you cannot sue individual officials in their individual capacities. For example, if you sue Prison Warden John Smith, you will be suing him as the Warden (who represents the state), not as Mr. John Smith (who just represents himself). Although the state will be providing the injunctive relief the court orders, the law requires you to request the injunctive relief from specific officials. (If you are suing a county, however, you can ask for injunctive relief directly from the county or the county jail.)

4. Filing an ADA or Section 504 Claim Against a County, City, or Town

The Eleventh Amendment/sovereign immunity challenges to the ADA and Section 504 do not apply to local entities like counties, cities, and towns.²⁶⁴ So you can ask for money damages (as well as injunctive relief) if you sue a county, city, or town for violating your rights under these laws. Also, if you are in a private prison that receives federal financial assistance, you can sue the prison for money damages and injunctive relief under Section 504. But punitive damages are never available under Title II or Section 504.²⁶⁵

260. See Randolph v. Rodgers, 253 F.3d 342, 345 (8th Cir. 2001) (noting that a “private party may seek prospective injunctive relief in federal court against a state official, even if the state is otherwise protected by Eleventh Amendment immunity”). “Eleventh Amendment immunity” means sovereign immunity. When you sue a state official in his official capacity for injunctive relief, it is called an Ex parte Young suit. Ex parte Young is the Supreme Court case allowing state officials to be sued for injunctive relief even when the state itself cannot be sued. Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 155–156, 28 S. Ct. 441, 452, 52 L. Ed. 714 (1908).

261. Duffy v. Riveland, 98 F.3d 447, 454–455 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that a deaf incarcerated person was disabled and could make a claim under Section 504 where the incarcerated person might be entitled to a certified interpreter at disciplinary hearings).

262. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” which discusses the different types of relief and remedies available in a lawsuit.

263. Henrietta D. v. Bloomberg, 331 F.3d 261, 287–288 (2d Cir. 2003) (distinguishing between individual and official capacity, and explaining that defenses that apply to individuals do not apply to entities); Bruggeman ex rel. Bruggeman v. Blagojevich, 324 F.3d 906, 912–913 (7th Cir. 2003) (explaining that Ex Parte Young permits state officials (and not just states) to be sued in their official capacities for injunctive relief); Miranda B. v. Kitzhaber, 328 F.3d 1181, 1187–1188 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding “no difference between declaring that a named officer in her official capacity represents the ‘State’ for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, and declaring that the same officer represents a ‘public entity’ under Title II,” and “holding that Title II’s statutory language does not prohibit Miranda B.’s injunctive action against state officials in their official capacities”); Carten v. Kent State Univ., 282 F.3d 391, 395–396 (6th Cir. 2002) (affirming that Ex Parte Young creates “an exception to Eleventh Amendment immunity for claims for injunctive relief against individual state officials in their official capacities,” so that the plaintiff chose his defendant correctly in this suit); Randolph v. Rodgers, 253 F.3d 342, 345 (8th Cir. 2001) (affirming lower court’s ruling that prison officials could be sued in their official capacities despite 11th Amendment immunity); see also Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ala. v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 374 n.9, 121 S. Ct. 955, 968 n.9, 148 L. Ed. 2d 866, 884 n.9 (2001) (noting that its decision that states may not be sued for money damages under ADA Title I does not prevent a person from bringing a claim for injunctive relief).

264. Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ala. v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 369, 121 S. Ct. 955, 965, 148 L. Ed.2d 866, 880 (2001) (noting that “the Eleventh Amendment does not extend its immunity to units of local government,” so local entities are “subject to private claims for damages under the ADA”).

265. Barnes v. Gorman, 536 U.S. 181, 189, 122 S. Ct. 2097, 2103, 153 L. Ed.2d 230, 239 (2002) (stating

5. Filing in State or Federal Court

Most suits about the rights of incarcerated people with disabilities have been brought in federal court. However, in recent years, the Supreme Court has weakened the protections of the ADA (and federal courts have followed the Supreme Court). This makes state courts an appealing alternative. As explained above, state laws (1) can incorporate or expand ADA protections, and (2) do not have the constitutional weaknesses of the ADA and Section 504. If you are in a state where federal case law has limited your ability to sue the state, you should research the possibility of filing in state court and using state law. You should make sure to find out how your state's courts have dealt with suits by incarcerated people brought after the decisions in Lane and Georgia (discussed in subsection (c), above), which dealt with Eleventh Amendment/sovereign immunity. See Chapter 5 of the JLM, "Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit", for general information about state versus federal court.

D. Conclusion

If you are an incarcerated person with a physical or mental disability, Section 504 and the ADA (and maybe state law as well) guarantee you certain rights and protections. To realize your protections under these laws, you must meet the elements of the two laws. You may be able to hire an attorney to assist you with your complaint, because both Section 504 and the ADA allow you to recover attorney's fees. Although you might not be able to recover money damages, you may be able to change the practices that are denying you a particular prison service, program, or activity. Before filing your complaint, make sure to refer to Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for information about the PLRA (which may impose additional requirements before filing a lawsuit). Also, if you claim a violation of a state statute, make sure you meet your state's statute of limitations.

that, "[b]ecause punitive damages may not be awarded in private suits brought under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, it follows that they may not be awarded in suits brought under § 202 of the ADA and § 504 of the Rehabilitation Act").

CHAPTER 29

SPECIAL ISSUES FOR INCARCERATED PEOPLE WITH MENTAL ILLNESS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter will explain your rights as an incarcerated person with a mental illness. Part A discusses basic information you will need in order to understand how the law applies to incarcerated people with a mental illness (including the definitions of important terms such as “mental illness” and “treatment”). Part B explains your right to receive treatment for a mental illness. Part C explains how and when you can refuse unwanted treatment and transfer, and the consequences of transfer for hospitalization. Part D gives details about conditions of confinement, and explains how they overlap with mental health issues. Part E describes things to consider if you are a pretrial detainee with a mental illness. Part F explains the resources that are available to help you plan for your release. Part G describes resources available to you as an incarcerated person.

For more information on topics that might be important to incarcerated people with a mental illness, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care,” and Chapter 28, “Rights of Incarcerated People with Disabilities.” You should also read Part E of Chapter 23 to learn more about your right to medical privacy.

In addition, if you decide to file a lawsuit based on your rights in federal court, you must read JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.” Failing to do so does not follow the requirements of the Prison Litigation Reform Act can lead to negative consequences such as the loss of your good-time credits or the loss of your right to bring future claims in federal court without immediately paying the full filing fee. Also, if you plan to bring a lawsuit because you believe your federal constitutional rights have been violated, you should read JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.” “Section 1983” (42 U.S.C. § 1983) is the law that allows you to sue when your constitutional rights are violated. Although this manual is intended to help you file your own lawsuit, keep in mind that it is always useful, if possible, to get assistance with your claims from a family member, friend, fellow incarcerated person, or lawyer. For advice on how to find a lawyer to help with your civil claims against the prison, please see Part C of Chapter 4 of the JLM, “How to Find a Lawyer.”

1. Defining “Mental Illness” and “Treatment”

(a) What Is Mental Illness?

This Chapter is written for incarcerated people with behavioral (involving the way that you act or behave) or psychological (involving your mental or emotional state) illnesses and symptoms or risks that can be diagnosed by a doctor. You might have heard people use the terms mental illness, serious mental illness, major mental illness, mental disorder, mental abnormality, mental sickness, serious and persistent mental illness, or mentally retarded. People (including courts and legislatures) use the terms as if they mean the same thing, but they do not. Many people say “mentally ill prisoners” or “prisoners with a mental illness” when they are referring to different groups of people, such as people who are not guilty by reason of insanity (also known as “NGIs”), those incompetent to stand trial, or people with developmental disabilities (that is, low intellectual function that usually starts at childhood). When you read this Chapter, pay close attention to the way different terms are used to mean different things. The differences between different terms are important for you and any lawsuit you may decide to file.

There are many kinds of “mental illness,” but some common types include Bipolar Disorder, Borderline Personality Disorder, Major Depression, Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder (“OCD”), Panic

* This Chapter was revised by Katharine Skolnick, based on a previous version by Jennifer Moore. Special thanks to Heather Barr, John Boston, Sarah Kerr, and Amy Lowenstein for their valuable contributions.

Disorder, Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (“PTSD”), and Schizophrenia. Others include Dissociative Disorders, Dual Diagnosis or MICA (Mentally Ill and Chemically Addicted—mental illness with substance abuse), Eating Disorders, Schizoaffective Disorder, Tourette’s Syndrome, and Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder.¹ This Chapter will not discuss the separate issues of NGIs, sexual offenders, incarcerated people with developmental disabilities, or incarcerated people who do not identify with the biological gender they were given at birth. For more information on issues related to sex offenders, see Chapter 32 of the JLM, “Special Considerations for Sex Offenders.”

Many state laws define “mental illness” to include only behavioral or psychological problems with noticeable symptoms. According to the American Psychiatric Association (“APA”), a person has a mental disorder if he suffers from a significant disturbance in “behavior that reflects a dysfunction in the psychological, biological, or developmental processes underlying mental functioning . . . mental disorders are usually associated with significant distress or disability in social and occupational activities.”² This definition of a mental disorder refers to daily activities and not psychological responses to particular events (like the death of a loved one) or certain behaviors (like sexual offenses).³ Mental illnesses may last for varying periods of time. Some last for a short period and then disappear; others are constantly ongoing. Courts have also recognized that immediate psychological trauma (a sudden event that causes a lot of stress) also deserves mental health treatment,⁴ generally “serious” mental illnesses last longer, affect behavior, and have noticeable symptoms or risks.

In order to prove that you have a mental disorder, most state laws require you show that you have (1) a behavioral or psychological problem; (2) a symptom as a result of the problem; and (3) a diagnosis of mental illness by a professional, such as a doctor.⁵ For instance, in New York, “mental illness” means having “a mental disease or mental condition which is [expressed as] . . . a disorder or disturbance in behavior, feeling, thinking, or judgment to such an extent that the person with the illness afflicted

1. See Mental Health Conditions, NATIONAL ALLIANCE ON MENTAL ILLNESS, <http://www.nami.org/Learn-More/Mental-Health-Conditions> (last visited Feb. 1, 2020).

2. Awais Aftab, Mental Disorders and Naturalism, 11 AM. J. OF PSYCHIATRY RESIDENTS’ J. 10, 11 (2016).

3. See, e.g., Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 412–413, 122 S. Ct. 867, 870–871, 151 L. Ed. 2d 856, 862–853 (2002) (requiring the state to distinguish dangerous sexual offenders with mental illnesses from ordinary criminals for civil commitment purposes); AM. PSYCHIATRIC ASS’N, HIGHLIGHTS OF CHANGES FROM DSM-IV-TR TO DSM-5 18 (2013), available at: https://psychiatry.msu.edu/_files/docs/Changes-From-DSM-IV-TR-to-DSM-5.pdf (last visited Oct. 4, 2020) (explaining that in the DSM-5, paraphilias (intense sexual arousal to objects, children, or nonconsenting adults) are not automatically considered mental disorders).

4. See Carnell v. Grimm, 872 F. Supp. 746, 756 (D. Haw. 1994) (holding that “an officer who has reason to believe someone has been raped and then fails to seek medical and psychological treatment for the victim after taking her into custody manifests deliberate indifference to a serious medical need”) (emphasis added), appeal dismissed in part, aff’d in part, 74 F.3d 977, 979 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that the 8th Amendment prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment, which includes denying medical and psychological care, applies to pretrial detainees).

5. See, e.g., Public Welfare & Related Activities, MINN. STAT. ANN. §253B.02(13) (2015) (“an organic disorder of the brain or a substantial psychiatric disorder of thought, mood, perception, orientation, or memory that grossly impairs judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or to reason or understand that is manifested by instances of grossly disturbed behavior or faulty perceptions.”); OHIO PUBLIC WELFARE ANN. § 5122.01(A) (Baldwin 2010) (“Mental illness” means a substantial disorder of thought, mood, perception, orientation, or memory that grossly impairs judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to meet the ordinary demands of life.”); TEX. HEALTH & SAFETY CODE ANN. § 571.003(14) (Vernon 2012) (“[I]llness, disease, or condition, other than epilepsy, substance abuse or intellectual disability that: (A) substantially impairs a person’s thought, perception of reality, emotional process, or judgment; or (B) grossly impairs behavior as demonstrated by recent disturbed behavior.”).

requires care and treatment.”⁶ Like the APA approach, some state laws specifically exclude sexual offenses, substance abuse, and mental retardation from the definition of mental illness.⁷

(b) What the Law and This Chapter Mean by “Treatment”

The definition of “treatment” under the law generally includes three steps: (1) diagnosis (a finding by a doctor or mental health specialist that there is a mental illness), (2) intervention (a decision to treat the illness with therapy, drugs, or other care), and (3) planning (developing a method to relieve suffering or find a cure for their illness).⁸

A particular medical action is considered as “treatment” when it is medically necessary and whether it will substantially help or cure your medical condition. An action is medically necessary when it involves a serious medical need, which “could well result in the deprivation of life itself” if untreated.⁹ The test to determine whether an incarcerated person should go to a mental health facility is not whether the person suffers from mental illness but instead whether that mental illness “requires care and treatment.”¹⁰

The law assumes that doctors are the best people to make medical choices to treat mental illness. Therefore, whether something is an appropriate treatment is a decision that judges and lawmakers leave to medical professionals. Just because an incarcerated person or a judge prefers a particular course of action to treat mental illness does not mean it is a necessary course of treatment under the law.¹¹ In New York, the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services and the Commissioner of the Office of Mental Health (the head of the department that handles mental illness issues) are responsible for establishing treatment plans that can be done in correctional facilities rather than in hospitals. Although treatment plans need only satisfy what the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services “deem[s] appropriate” for the treatment of incarcerated people with mental illnesses, the law does require that “[i]nmates with serious mental illnesses shall receive therapy and programming in settings that are appropriate to their clinical (activities relating to the observation and treatment of patients) needs while maintaining the safety and security of the facility.”¹² While adequate medical and health services must always be provided,¹³ different states require different levels of psychiatric care.¹⁴

6. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 400(6) (McKinney 2014). Additionally, the private settlement agreement in the case Disability Advocates, Inc. v. N.Y. State Office of Mental Health, No. 1:02-cv-04002 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) includes a definition of “serious mental illness” that provides a heightened level of care for prisoners in Special Housing Units and keeplock. The settlement requires that the heightened level of care take effect after several different programs and facilities, including a residential mental health unit, are established. After the settlement, New York passed a statute defining “serious mental illness” for prisoners who are in disciplinary segregated confinement in a way that closely resembles the settlement agreement’s definition. Case profile is available at: <https://www.clearinghouse.net/detail.php?id=5560> (last visited Feb. 2, 2020). The statute went into effect on July 1, 2011. See N.Y. CORR. LAW § 137(e) (McKinney 2014). The settlement agreement is available at <https://www.clearinghouse.net/chDocs/public/PC-NY-0048-0002.pdf> (last visited Feb 2, 2020).

7. See, e.g., ALABAMA STAT. § 22-52-1.1(1) (2012) (stating that mental illness “excludes the primary diagnosis of epilepsy, mental retardation, substance abuse, including alcoholism, or a developmental disability”).

8. 88 N.Y. Jur. 2d Public Welfare and Elder Assistance §24 (2014).

9. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976) (finding that an incarcerated person must rely on prison authorities to treat his medical needs, and in the worst case, failure to treat “may actually produce physical ‘torture or a lingering death’”); Bowring v. Goodwin 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977) (finding that federal courts have required provision of treatment for serious medical needs and that “the failure or refusal to treat ‘could well result in the deprivation of life itself’”); Fitzke v. Shappell, 468 F.2d 1072, 1076 fn. 5 (6th Cir. 1972) (quoting McCollum v. Mayfield, 130 F. Supp. 112, 115 (N.D. Cal. 1955)).

10. See, e.g., U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1084 (2d Cir. 1969) (holding that, before a prisoner may be transferred to a mental health facility, it must be shown that he suffers from a mental disease that requires “care and treatment”).

11. See Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47–48 (4th Cir. 1977) (“We disavow any attempt to second-guess the propriety or adequacy of a particular course of treatment.”); see also Russell v. Sheffer, 528 F.2d 318, 318–319 (4th Cir. 1975) (stating that a prisoner must show that his medical mistreatment or the correctional facility’s denial of medical treatment can be characterized as “cruel and unusual punishment” to bring a § 1983 claim).

12. N.Y. Correct. Law § 401 (McKinney 2014).

13. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103–104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290–291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259–260 (1976) (citing Spicer v. Williamson, 191 N.C. 487, 490, 132 S.E. 291, 293 (1926)) (“It is but just that the public be required to care for the prisoner, who cannot by reason of the deprivation of his liberty, care for himself.”).

14. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 31-201.01(B) (2002) (“In addition to the medical and health services to

You do not have a right to decide your treatment plan,¹⁵ however, you do have access to the following rights. You have the right to mental health care that meets the standards of the medical profession.¹⁶ Next, you have the right to information about your treatment's risks and alternatives. Finally, you have a limited right to refuse treatment (see Part C of this Chapter). Once a decision to treat your mental illness has been made, you cannot specify which treatment alternatives (such as medication, counseling, or therapy) you should receive.¹⁷ You may, however, be able to protect yourself against unfair medical treatment by arguing that a certain treatment is not necessary.

2. Understanding Treatment Facilities

There are three basic types of psychiatric care that are used to treat incarcerated people:¹⁸

- (1) Acute (or crisis) care, which is twenty-four hour care for incarcerated people whose symptoms of psychosis (losing contact with reality), suicide risk, or dangerousness justify intensive care and forced medication;
- (2) Sub-acute (or intermediate) care, usually outside of a hospital for incarcerated people suffering from severe and chronic conditions that require intensive care management, psychosocial interventions (treatment that is both social and psychological), crisis management, and psychopharmacology (drugs that affect the mind) in a safe and contained environment; and
- (3) Outpatient care is for incarcerated people who can function relatively normally. It can—but does not have to—include medication, psychotherapy (meeting with a psychiatrist or other trained mental health professional), supportive counseling, and other interventions.

The most common type of care that incarcerated people receive is outpatient care. If you require more intensive care, you may be treated in a hospital within the prison system or at an off-site medical facility set up specifically to treat people with mental illnesses. The severity of mental illness, the types and availability of facilities, and the doctor's medical diagnosis will all determine where, of the three facilities, you will receive treatment.

The Division of Forensic Services at the New York State Office of Mental Health (“OMH”) runs the New York psychiatric facility system. There are four forensic psychiatric care centers, which are medical facilities that provide examinations for and treat incarcerated people with mental health issues. One of them, Central New York Psychiatric Center, is both a regional forensic unit and the inpatient psychiatric hospital that services all incarcerated people in the state prisons and operates the many “satellite mental health units” and “mental health units” located within New York State prisons.¹⁹ You should note that administrative segregation, such as solitary confinement or be provided pursuant to [this statute], the director may . . . provide to prisoners psychiatric care and treatment.”) (emphasis added).

15. See Barrett v. Coplan, 292 F. Supp. 2d 281, 285–286 (D.N.H. 2003) (noting that the right to adequate medical care “does not mean that an inmate is entitled to the care of his or her choice, simply that the care must meet minimal standards of adequacy”); see also Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 107–108, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292–293, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262 (1976) (rejecting a prisoner's claim of mistreatment based on the number of care options that were not pursued).

16. Barrett v. Coplan, 292 F. Supp. 2d 281, 285 (D.N.H. 2003) (noting that adequate medical treatment requires qualified medical personnel to provide services that meet “prudent professional standards in the community” and that meet the particular needs of prisoners).

17. See, e.g., Barrett v. Coplan, 292 F. Supp. 2d 281, 285–286 (D.N.H. 2003) (noting the right to adequate medical care “does not mean that an inmate is entitled to the care of his or her choice, simply that the care must meet minimal standards of adequacy”); see also Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 107, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292–293, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262 (1976) (rejecting a prisoner's claim of mistreatment based on the fact that a number of care options were not pursued).

18. Ill Equipped: U.S. Prisons and Offenders with Mental Illness, HUMAN RIGHTS WATCH 128 (2003). Available at: <https://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/usa1003/usa1003.pdf> (last visited Feb. 1, 2020).

19. The New York Office of Mental Health's forensic facilities include Mid-Hudson Forensic Psychiatric Center, Kirby Forensic Psychiatric Center, Rochester Regional Forensic Unit located within Rochester Psychiatric Center, and Central New York Psychiatric Center and Northeast Regional Forensic Unit located within Central New York Psychiatric Center. Within State correctional facilities, OMH operates 29 satellite and mental health units. New York State Office of Mental Health Division of Forensic Services, NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF MENTAL HEALTH, <http://www.omh.ny.gov/omhweb/forensic/bfs.htm> (last visited Feb. 2, 2020).

disciplinary segregated confinement in “special housing units” (“SHUs”) or “keeplock,” is not a treatment facility. Many mental health experts, advocates, and clinicians believe that those forms of isolated confinement make mental health conditions worse, and courts also recognize the harm they cause. For more information on isolation and mental health, see Part D(1) of this Chapter.

(a) Treatment Facility Admissions in New York

In New York, whenever the doctor of a prison, jail, or other correctional institution believes you need hospitalization because of a mental illness, the doctor must tell the facility superintendent, who will then submit a commitment order to a judge to request that you be taken to a hospital. The judge will require two other doctors to examine you.²⁰ In New York City, the two doctors may examine you in your prison or you may be transferred to a county hospital for the examination.²¹ First, the doctors have to consider whether options other than taking you to a hospital would provide appropriate treatment for your mental illness.²² If not, the doctors must both agree that you have a mental illness and need care or treatment in order for you to be hospitalized.²³ If you were previously treated by a doctor for mental illness, then the doctors performing your evaluation while you are currently incarcerated must try to contact your previous doctor.²⁴

If the two doctors agree that you need to be hospitalized to treat a mental illness, the prison superintendent will apply to a judge for permission to commit you.²⁵ You should receive notice of any court order and have a chance to challenge it.²⁶ In addition, your wife, husband, father, mother, or nearest relative must also receive notice of the decision to commit you. If you have no known relatives within the state, that notice must be given to any known friend of yours.²⁷ If you decide to challenge the decision, you have a right to know the hospital's placement procedure. You also have the right to a lawyer, a hearing, an independent medical opinion, and judicial review including a jury trial.²⁸ However, you do not have a right to a hearing in an emergency, during which two doctors agree that your mental illness is likely to result in serious immediate harm to you or to other incarcerated people.²⁹ In that case, you are still entitled to notice, a lawyer, an independent medical opinion, a hearing, and a jury trial, but only after you arrive at a hospital.³⁰

B. Your Right to Receive Treatment

This Part explains two doctrines (that is, rules) that relate to your right to psychiatric medical care. Section 1 of this Part discusses whether the prison must provide psychiatric care, and how much care the prison must provide. Section 1 also mentions special considerations for incarcerated people with substance-related disorders and what medical treatment they should receive. Section 2 addresses your rights if psychiatric medical care is delayed or denied.

1. What to Do if the Psychiatric Medical Care You Receive Is Inadequate

This Subsection discusses situations in which an incarcerated person claims that the medical care he received is inadequate. You have a right to adequate medical care and treatment. Under the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution,³¹ the federal government has an obligation to provide medical care to

20. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(1) (McKinney 2014).

21. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(1) (McKinney 2014).

22. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(1) (McKinney 2014).

23. See generally N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 9.27(a) (McKinney 2020); see also U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1084 (2d Cir. 1969) (suggesting that to be found in need of care and treatment through inpatient hospitalization, you must be found, after proper procedures, to be so mentally ill that you pose a danger to yourself or others).

24. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(1) (McKinney 2014).

25. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(1), (3) (McKinney 2014).

26. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(3) (McKinney 2014).

27. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(3) (McKinney 2014).

28. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(3) (McKinney 2014).

29. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(9) (McKinney 2014).

30. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 402(9) (McKinney 2014).

31. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII (“Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.”) (emphasis added).

incarcerated people.³² This right includes the regular medical care that is necessary to maintain your health and safety. Many states also have state laws requiring prisons to provide medical care to incarcerated people.³³ For more information about this general right, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

(a) Your Right to Adequate Psychiatric Care

The Eighth Amendment requires that mental health care of incarcerated people be governed in the same way as physical health care. Most federal circuits have held the right to adequate medical care includes any psychiatric care that is necessary to maintain incarcerated people’s health and safety.³⁴ In Bowring v. Godwin, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals included treatment of mental illnesses as part of the right to medical care. The court noted that there is “no underlying distinction between the right [of an incarcerated person] to medical care for physical ills and its psychological or psychiatric counterpart.”³⁵

The Bowring court developed a three-part test to determine whether an incarcerated person has a right to psychiatric care. Under the test, an incarcerated person who suffers from a mental illness is likely to have a right to mental health treatment if a health care provider decides that:

- (1) the incarcerated person has the symptoms of a serious disease or injury;
- (2) that disease or injury can be cured, or can be substantially improved; and
- (3) the likelihood of harm to the incarcerated person (in terms of safety and health, including mental health) is substantial if treatment is delayed or denied.³⁶

However, the right to psychiatric treatment is still limited to reasonable medical costs and a reasonable length of time for treatment.³⁷ Therefore, psychiatric treatment will be given to the incarcerated person on the basis of what is necessary, not what is desirable.³⁸

You should note that the Bowring test is the law only in the Fourth Circuit, which only includes Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. Therefore, the only courts that must apply the Bowring test are federal courts in Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. However, other courts are likely to consider using the Bowring test in 32. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103–104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290–291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259–260 (1976) (holding that the 8th Amendment prohibits the denial of needed medical care).

33. See, e.g., ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 31-201.01(D) (West 2002 & Supp. 2012); GA. CODE ANN. § 42-5-2 (2009).

34. See Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977) (finding that a prisoner is entitled to psychiatric treatment where a doctor has concluded that the prisoner has a serious disease that might be curable, and where a delay in treatment might cause potential harm); Clark-Murphy v. Foreback, 439 F.3d 280, 292 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating that a prisoner’s right to mental health care, not just physical medical care, is clearly established under the 8th Amendment); Riddle v. Mondragon, 83 F.3d 1197, 1202 (10th Cir. 1996) (“The states have a constitutional duty to provide necessary medical care to their inmates, including psychological or psychiatric care.”); Woodall v. Foti, 648 F.2d 268, 272 (5th Cir. 1981) (“In balancing the needs of the prisoner against the burden on the penal system, the district court should be mindful that the essential test is one of medical necessity and not one simply of desirability.”); Doty v. Cnty. of Lassen, 37 F.3d 540, 546 (9th Cir. 1994) (“[W]e now hold that the requirements for mental health care are the same as those for physical health care needs.”); Torraco v. Maloney, 923 F.2d 231, 234 (1st Cir. 1991) (“The extension of the Eighth Amendment’s protection from physical health needs, as presented in Estelle v. Gamble, to mental health needs is appropriate because, as courts have noted, there is no underlying distinction between the right to medical care for physical ills and its psychological or psychiatric counterpart.” (internal quotation marks omitted)); Langley v. Coughlin, 888 F.2d 252, 254 (2d Cir. 1989) (“We think it plain that from the legal standpoint psychiatric or mental health care is an integral part of medical care. It thus falls within the requirement of Estelle v. Gamble . . . that it must be provided to prisoners.”); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 332, 343 (5th Cir. 2004) (“[M]ental health needs are no less serious than physical needs.”); Inmates of Allegheny Cnty. Jail v. Pierce, 612 F.2d 754, 763 (3d Cir. 1979) (explaining that prisoners with serious mental illness have a right to adequate treatment, and that psychiatric or psychological treatment should be held to the same standard as medical treatment for physical ills).

35. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977).

36. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977).

37. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47–48 (4th Cir. 1977) (stating that the right to treatment is limited by reasonable cost and time, and that the test is what is medically necessary, not what is “merely desirable”); but see Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 161 (D. Mass. 2002) (noting that it is not permissible to deny a prisoner adequate medical care just because the treatment is costly).

38. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47–48 (4th Cir. 1977).

similar cases,³⁹ especially because no court has issued a disagreeing opinion. So, you should still cite to Bowring even if you are not bringing a case in the Fourth Circuit, because the court in your circuit might find Bowring persuasive. For more information on what you may cite in your jurisdiction, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

(b) Your Right to Treatment for Substance Abuse

The American Psychiatric Association incorporates in its definition of mental illness “substance-related disorders,” as illnesses like substance use, abuse, and withdrawal.⁴⁰ The law, however, does not always consider such diseases as serious enough⁴¹ to require prison authorities to provide medical care to treat the diseases.⁴² However, many courts have found that incarcerated people have the right to treatment for substance abuse in certain circumstances. The sections below describe these situations.

(i) You Have No Right to Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation in Prison

As a general rule, you have no right to rehabilitation while in prison.⁴³ Individual states or corrections departments may decide that rehabilitation is an important goal and may implement programs to achieve that aim, but the Constitution does not require them to do so because one application of this rule is that there is no right to narcotics or alcohol treatment programs in prison.⁴⁴ However, courts have at times ordered prisons to implement drug and alcohol treatment programs where the denial of these programs would otherwise lead to conditions that were so bad that they violated incarcerated people’s rights to medical care. Incarcerated people often raise these issues successfully when filing broader claims about unconstitutional conditions of confinement.⁴⁵ Additionally, at least one court has found that incarcerated people should be “free to attempt 39. See Riddle v. Mondragon, 83 F.3d 1197, 1202 (10th Cir. 1996) (citing the Bowring test).

40. AM. PSYCHIATRIC ASS’N, DIAGNOSTIC AND STATISTICAL MANUAL OF MENTAL DISORDERS 481 (5th ed. 2013).

41. A prisoner having a “serious medical need” triggers an analysis under Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104–105, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976), which provides that deliberate indifference to that serious medical need violates the 8th Amendment’s ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Cases like Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977), have extended this rule requiring treatment to the psychiatric context, but only where the prisoner has an illness that might be curable and where delay might cause substantial harm. For more information on your rights when necessary treatment has been denied or delayed, please see Part B(2) of this Chapter, “Denied or Delayed Treatment.”

42. See, e.g., Pace v. Fauver, 479 F. Supp. 456, 458–459 (D.N.J. 1979) (“The Court does not regard plaintiffs’ desire to establish and operate an alcoholic rehabilitation program within . . . [p]rison as a serious medical need for purposes of Eighth Amendment and § 1983 analysis.”), aff’d, 649 F.2d 860 (3d Cir. 1981). But see Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417, 432 n.3, 94 S. Ct. 700, 709 n.3, 38 L. Ed. 2d 618, 629 n.3 (1974) (Marshall, J., dissenting) (citing Senate Report characterizing drug addiction as a disease); State v. Sevelin, 554 N.W.2d 521, 524, 204 Wis. 2d 127, 134 (Wis. Ct. App. 1996) (“The unambiguous meaning of ‘medical care’ includes treatment of all diseases. Alcoholism is a disease.”).

43. Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417, 421–422, 94 S. Ct. 700, 704, 38 L. Ed. 2d 618, 623 (1974) (explaining that there is no “fundamental right” to rehabilitation from narcotics addiction after conviction of a crime and confinement in a penal institution rather than in a civil facility); see also Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 686 n.8, 98 S. Ct. 2565, 2571 n.8, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522, 531 n.8 (1978) (“[T]he Constitution does not require that every aspect of prison discipline serve a rehabilitative purpose.”); Grubbs v. Bradley, 552 F. Supp. 1052, 1124 (M.D. Tenn. 1982) (finding that a lack of rehabilitative programs does not violate the Constitution).

44. See, e.g., Gibson v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 121 F. App’x 549, 551 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that an incarcerated person does not have a protected liberty interest in participating in a drug treatment program); Abraham v. Danberg, 832 F. Supp. 2d 368, 375 (D. Del. 2011) (“Prisoners have no constitutional right to drug treatment or other rehabilitation.”); Bullock v. McGinnis, 5 F. App’x 340, 342 (6th Cir. 2001) (“[A] prisoner has no constitutional right to rehabilitation[.]”); Pace v. Fauver, 479 F. Supp. 456, 460 (D.N.J. 1979) (stating that prison authorities, not the court, should decide whether to provide alcoholism treatment to incarcerated people), aff’d, 649 F.2d 860 (3d Cir. 1981).

45. See, e.g., Palmigiano v. Garrahy, 443 F. Supp. 956, 989 (D.R.I. 1977) (ordering prison to establish drug and alcohol treatment program conforming to public health standards); Alberti v. Sheriff of Harris Cnty., 406 F. Supp. 649, 677 (S.D. Tex. 1975) (requiring prison to establish treatment program for prisoners suffering from alcoholism and drug abuse in consultation with trained specialist); Barnes v. Gov’t of Virgin Islands, 415 F. Supp. 1218, 1235, 13 V.I. 122, 158 (D.V.I. 1976) (ordering prison to introduce drug and alcohol rehabilitation program); see also Laaman v. Helgemoe, 437 F. Supp. 269, 316–317 (D.N.H. 1977) (“The absence of an affirmative program of training and rehabilitation may have constitutional significance where in the absence of such a program conditions and practices exist which actually militate against reform and rehabilitation” (internal citations omitted)).

rehabilitation or the cultivation of new socially acceptable and useful skills and habits.”⁴⁶ It might be possible to argue that failure to receive drug treatment violates that freedom.

There is also no right to methadone or to the establishment of methadone maintenance programs in prison.⁴⁷ On the other hand, a few courts have found that if you are already participating in a drug treatment program, then you do have the right to continue drug treatment.⁴⁸ This right primarily protects you pretrial.⁴⁹ Pretrial detainees are people who have not been found guilty but still must remain in jail because they cannot afford to post bail or they have been determined to be a flight risk or danger to the community. These individuals cannot be punished beyond detention.⁵⁰ Courts view forced rehabilitation as a punishment. They also view the pain suffered when methadone is discontinued as a punishment. For more information on your right to treatment as a pretrial detainee, please see Part E(1) of this Chapter.

(ii) Your Right to Avoid Deterioration (Getting More Sick) While Incarcerated

Many courts have held that even if you do not have an absolute constitutional right to treatment for certain illnesses like substance abuse; you do have a right to avoid having your illness get worse while you are in prison.⁵¹ Some courts have not found a right that protect incarcerated people getting sicker while incarcerated, several have at least found that where conditions are “so bad that serious physical or psychological deterioration is inevitable,” you can state an Eighth Amendment claim of cruel and unusual punishment.⁵²

So, if your drug or alcohol addiction is likely to worsen your condition, you might be able to make a claim that failure to receive adequate treatment violates your right to avoid getting sicker while in prison. Even though different federal circuits have established different rules as to the extent of that right, at a minimum, if your deterioration results from the State’s intent to cause harm,⁵³ you can claim the State violated your rights.

(iii) Your Right to Care for Withdrawal from Drugs and Alcohol

Another exception to the general rule that prisons do not need to provide medical care for substance-related disorders is that prisons do need to provide care for withdrawal, which can be excessively painful and dangerous, and is therefore considered a serious medical condition.⁵⁴ Because

46. Laaman v. Helgemoe, 437 F. Supp. 269, 316–317 (D.N.H. 1977) (explaining that the absence of training and rehabilitative programs may have significance where their absence causes significant deterioration).

47. See, e.g., Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1188 (3d Cir. 1978) (overturned on other grounds) (“There is no constitutional right to methadone ...”); Hines v. Anderson, 439 F. Supp. 12, 17 (D. Minn. 1977) (stating that even though prisons cannot take away prescriptions without doctor’s approval, prisons are not required to administer methadone as part of a maintenance program).

48. See Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1189 (3d Cir. 1978) (stating that interference with pretrial detainee’s status as recipient of methadone infringed his rights); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 312–313 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (stating that it violates fundamental due process rights to deny pretrial detainees methadone that they are already receiving as part of drug treatment).

49. Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 313 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (stating that it violates due process to deny pretrial detainees methadone that they are already receiving as part of drug treatment).

50. See Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (explaining that since pretrial detainees are considered innocent in the eyes of the law, they should be entitled to all liberties they would have were they not imprisoned, except that which is necessarily lost through detention).

51. Battle v. Anderson, 564 F.2d 388, 403 (10th Cir. 1977) (“We believe that while an inmate does not have a federal constitutional right to rehabilitation, he is entitled to be confined in an environment which does not result in his degeneration or which threatens his mental and physical well-being.”); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 566 (10th Cir. 1980) (extending the right to avoid deterioration established in Battle to medical care context); Laaman v. Helgemoe, 437 F. Supp. 269, 316 (D.N.H. 1977) (holding prisoners have an interest in avoiding physical and mental deterioration). But see Reddin v. Israel, 561 F.2d 715, 718 (7th Cir. 1977) (“[T]he state need not avoid conduct which may result in detrimental psychological effects unless the state acts in a torturous or barbarous manner or with a wanton intent to inflict pain” (internal citation omitted)).

52. Grubbs v. Bradley, 552 F. Supp. 1052, 1124 (M.D. Tenn. 1982).

53. See Reddin v. Israel, 561 F.2d 715, 718 (7th Cir. 1977) (“[T]he state need not avoid conduct which may result in detrimental psychological effects unless the state acts in a torturous or barbarous manner or with a wanton intent to inflict pain.”).

54. See, e.g., Kelley v. Cnty. of Wayne, 325 F. Supp. 2d 788, 791 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (“Heroin withdrawal is of the seriousness of withdrawal symptoms, you are entitled to treatment.⁵⁵ Most of the cases have come up in the context of pretrial detainees going through withdrawal just after arrest, but the courts have not explicitly limited the right to treatment to pretrial detainees. If a convicted incarcerated person experiences a serious medical need due to withdrawal then he should receive treatment.

2. What to do if Treatment is Denied or Delayed

This Subsection focuses on your rights when the treatment you need has been deliberately (purposely) denied or delayed.⁵⁶ Although courts do not like second-guessing doctors' decisions,⁵⁷ a prison official who denies or delays treatment knowing that you need that treatment might be violating your constitutional right to be free of "cruel and unusual punishment" under the Eighth Amendment.⁵⁸ A court that finds this deliberate denial or delay will step in to help you. Not every delay in medical care is a violation of the Constitution.

A prison official only violates the Eighth Amendment when two requirements are met.⁵⁹ The first requirement is that the denial of your medical care is "sufficiently serious." The second requirement is that the prison official must have acted with a culpable (bad) state of mind and ignored your health needs on purpose.⁶⁰ To meet this standard you must show that you have actually been deprived of adequate medical care, and that the lack of treatment has caused you harm, or will cause you harm in the future.⁶¹ The second requirement for an Eighth Amendment violation is that the prison official acted with "deliberate indifference" to your medical or mental health needs.⁶² These requirements are discussed in more detail below. If care has been denied, the court will look at whether "a reasonable doctor or patient would find [it] important and worthy of comment," whether the condition significantly affects your daily activities, and whether it causes "chronic and substantial pain."⁶³ In cases where treatment has been delayed or interrupted, the question of how serious the situation is focuses on the impact of the delay and not on the main medical condition alone.⁶⁴

(a) You Must Satisfy the Deliberate Indifference Standard

The Supreme Court has decided that a prison official shows deliberate indifference when he "knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety."⁶⁵ For example, an a serious medical condition."); Morrison v. Washington County, 700 F.2d 678, 681 (11th Cir. 1983) (finding that delirium tremens is a severe form of alcohol withdrawal that should be monitored because of the risk of death).

55. See, e.g., Pedraza v. Meyer, 919 F.2d 317, 319–320 (5th Cir. 1990) (finding that pretrial detainee who had not received treatment for his heroin withdrawal symptoms could have stated a claim of deliberate indifference to serious medical needs); Walker v. Fayette Cnty., 599 F.2d 573, 576 (3d Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (where pretrial detainee had informed jail that he was addicted to heroin, failure to treat him for withdrawal could show deliberate indifference).

56. See, e.g., Pinon v. Wisconsin, 368 F. Supp. 608, 610 (E.D. Wis. 1973) (explaining that courts usually refuse to second-guess whether a prisoner's treatment is adequate, but that the situation is different where the prisoner alleges that the facility has completely denied him treatment). See Part B(3) of Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care," for more information on delayed or denied medical treatment.

57. See, e.g., Varnado v. Lynaugh, 920 F.2d 320, 321 (5th Cir. 1991) (finding prisoner's disagreement with medical treatment did not rise to the level of violating his rights); Smith v. Marcantonio, 910 F.2d 500, 502 (8th Cir. 1990) (granting doctor immunity where prisoner disagreed with the doctor-ordered treatment).

58. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (citing Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976)) ("We therefore conclude that deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners constitutes the 'unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain . . . proscribed by the [8th] Amendment.'").

59. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 847, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1984, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 832 (1994) ("[A] prison official may be held liable under the [8th] Amendment . . . only if he knows that inmates face a substantial risk of serious harm and disregards that risk . . .").

60. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 298–299, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2324–2325, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 278–280 (1991).

61. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 32–33, 113 S.Ct. 2475, 2480–2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 30–31 (1993) (holding that prisoners may complain about both current harm and "very likely" future harm).

62. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976) ("[A] prisoner must allege acts or omissions sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to serious medical needs.").

63. Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 702 (2d Cir. 1998).

64. Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 186 (2d Cir. 2003) ("[I]t's the particular risk of harm faced by a prisoner due to the challenged deprivation of care, rather than the severity of the prisoner's underlying medical condition . . . that is relevant for Eighth Amendment purposes.").

65. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976) ("[A] prisoner must incarcerated person might submit evidence that prison officials “refused to treat him, ignored his complaints, [or] intentionally treated him incorrectly.”⁶⁶

A prison official can be “deliberately indifferent” by: (1) taking action (doing something), or (2) refusing to act (not doing something).⁶⁷ An example of an act showing deliberate indifference might be knowingly taking away an incarcerated person’s asthma inhaler, knowing that it will really harm the incarcerated person. An example of a deliberate failure to act might be refusing to provide necessary medication⁶⁸ or refusing to treat a prisoner’s cavity.⁶⁹

Although the deliberate indifference standard traditionally applied to physical injury and medical care, it also applies to medically necessary treatment for mental illnesses.⁷⁰ Deliberate indifference to the serious mental health needs of a prisoner violates the Eighth Amendment just as much as deliberate indifference to physical medical needs.⁷¹

Many deliberate indifference claims about inadequate prison mental health care argue that the facility’s mental health staff is too small to meet prisoners’ needs or that the staff members are unqualified.⁷² Several courts have found that the lack of an on-site psychiatrist in a large prison is allege acts or omissions sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to serious medical needs.”).

66. Johnson v. Treen, 759 F.2d 1236, 1238 (5th Cir. 1985) (refusing to hold for plaintiff where he did not present evidence of deliberate indifference).

67. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976) (“In order to state a cognizable claim [of deliberate indifference], a prisoner must allege acts or omissions sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to serious medical needs.”) (emphasis added).

68. McElligott v. Foley, 182 F.3d 1248, 1257 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that a jury could find that the medication provided to a prisoner was so cursory as to amount to a deliberate indifference to the prisoners’ serious medical needs); see also West v. Keve, 571 F.2d 158, 162 (3d Cir. 1978) (finding that a prisoner’s post-operative treatment, which consisted of aspirin but no prescription-strength medication, may constitute deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs).

69. Harrison v. Barkley, 219 F.3d 132, 137 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that prison officials’ refusal to treat cavity in one of prisoner’s teeth unless he consented to extraction of another tooth constituted deliberate indifference).

70. See Torraco v. Maloney, 923 F.2d 231, 234 (1st Cir. 1991) (reiterating that there is no underlying distinction between medical care for physical and psychological ills); Belcher v. City of Foley, 30 F.3d 1390, 1396 (11th Cir. 1994) (holding that the right to treatment “encompasses a right to psychiatric and mental health care”).

71. See, e.g., Gibson v. Cnty. of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1187 (9th Cir. 2002) (“Th[e] duty to provide medical care encompasses detainees’ psychiatric needs.”); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1187 (5th Cir. 1986) (“A serious medical need may exist for psychological or psychiatric treatment, just as it may exist for physical ills.”).

72. Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d 829, 837–840 (11th Cir. 1990) (stating that prison clinic director, prison system mental health director, and prison warden could be found deliberately indifferent based on their knowing toleration of a “clearly inadequate” mental health staff); Waldrop v. Evans, 871 F.2d 1030, 1036 (11th Cir. 1989) (finding that doctor’s failure to refer a suicidal prisoner to a psychiatrist could constitute deliberate indifference); Cabrales v. Cnty. of L.A., 864 F.2d 1454, 1461 (9th Cir. 1988) (deliberate indifference was established where mental health staff could only spend “minutes per month” with disturbed prisoners); vacated, 490 U.S. 1087, 109 S. Ct. 2425, 104 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1989), reinstated, 886 F.2d 235, 236 (9th Cir. 1989); Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 868 (D.D.C. 1989) (“woefully short” mental health staffing supported a finding of unconstitutionality), rev’d in part sub nom. Brogdsdale v. Barry, 926 F.2d 1184, 1191 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (finding qualified immunity protected mayor and correctional officials from liability, since they could not reasonably have known their conduct in permitting overcrowding violated prisoners’ rights); Tillery v. Owens, 719 F. Supp. 1256, 1302–1303 (W.D. Pa. 1989) (stating that “gross staffing deficiencies” and lack of mental health training of nurses supported finding of deliberate indifference), aff’d, 907 F.2d 418 (3d Cir. 1990); Langley v. Coughlin, 715 F. Supp. 522, 539–540 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), appeal dismissed, 888 F.2d 252 (2d Cir. 1989) (use of untrained or unqualified personnel with inadequate supervision by psychiatrist supported constitutional claims); Inmates of Allegheny Cnty. Jail v. Peirce, 487 F. Supp. 638, 643 (W.D. Pa. 1980) (holding that systemic deficiencies in mental health staffing can be held to constitute deliberate indifference); Ruiz v. Estelle, 503 F. Supp. 1265, 1339 (S.D. Tex. 1980) (setting forth six components of a minimally adequate mental health treatment program), aff’d in part and rev’d in part on other grounds, 679 F.2d 1115 (5th Cir. 1982), amended in part and vacated in part on other grounds, 688 F.2d 266 (5th Cir. 1982).

unconstitutional.⁷³ The failure to train correctional staff to work with prisoners with mental illness can also be considered deliberate indifference.⁷⁴

Courts have considered the following issues with prison mental health care to be “deliberately indifferent”:

- (1) the lack of or inadequate mental health screening on intake,⁷⁵
- (2) the failure to follow up with prisoners who have known or suspected mental disorders,⁷⁶
- (3) the failure to hospitalize prisoners whose conditions cannot adequately be treated in prison,⁷⁷
- (4) failing to follow professional standards in treatment,⁷⁸ and
- (5) the failure to separate prisoners with severe mental illness from those without mental illness.⁷⁹

73. Balla v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 595 F. Supp. 1558, 1577 (D. Idaho 1984) (“There must be at least the equivalent of one full-time psychiatrist to provide treatment to those inmates capable of deriving benefit and to establish written procedures whereby inmates are analyzed and their progress monitored.”).

74. Langley v. Coughlin, 709 F. Supp. 482, 483–485 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (finding deliberate indifference where, among other reasons, officers lacked the training necessary to address issues of abuse, stress, and unsanitary living conditions); Kendrick v. Bland, 541 F. Supp. 21, 25–26 (W.D. Ky. 1981) (holding that incidents arising from failure to adequately train staff constituted cruel and unusual punishment); see also Sharpe v. City of Lewisburg, 677 F. Supp. 1362, 1367–1368 (M.D. Tenn. 1988) (upholding jury verdict based on city and county’s failure to train police to deal with mentally disturbed individuals).

75. Ruiz v. Estelle, 503 F. Supp. 1265, 1339 (S.D. Tex. 1980), aff’d in part and rev’d in part on other grounds, 679 F.2d 1115 (5th Cir. 1982), amended in part and vacated in part on other grounds, 688 F.2d 266 (5th Cir. 1982); see also Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 868 (D.D.C. 1989), rev’d in part sub nom. Brogsdale v. Barry, 926 F.2d 1184, 1191 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (finding qualified immunity protected mayor and correctional officials from liability, since they could not reasonably have known their conduct in permitting overcrowding violated prisoners’ rights); Balla v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 595 F. Supp. 1558, 1577 (D. Idaho 1984) (adopting the Ruiz v. Estelle elements of minimally adequate care, which include screening on intake); Inmates of Allegheny Cnty. Jail v. Peirce, 487 F. Supp. 638, 642–644 (W.D. Pa. 1980); Pugh v. Locke, 406 F. Supp. 318, 324 (M.D. Ala. 1976), aff’d in part and modified sub nom. Newman v. Alabama, 559 F.2d 283 (5th Cir. 1977), rev’d in part sub nom. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 98 S. Ct. 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114 (1978).

76. Clark-Murphy v. Foreback, 439 F.3d 280, 289–292 (6th Cir. 2006) (holding certain staff members were not entitled to qualified immunity for failing to get psychiatric assistance for an obviously psychotic prisoner); see also Terry ex rel. Terry v. Hill, 232 F. Supp. 2d 934, 943–944 (E.D. Ark. 2002) (holding lengthy delays in transferring detainees with mental illness to mental hospital were unconstitutional); Arnold ex rel. H.B. v. Lewis, 803 F. Supp. 246, 257 (D. Ariz. 1992) (finding 8th Amendment violation in part because of the lack of an adequate system for referring prisoners with behavioral problems to psychiatric staff).

77. Arnold v. Lewis, 803 F. Supp. 246, 257–258 (D. Ariz. 1992) (holding that prison officials’ actions constituted deliberate indifference to serious medical needs which violated the 8th Amendment).

78. Smith v. Jenkins, 919 F.2d 90, 93 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that care which “so deviated from professional standards that it amounted to deliberate indifference” would violate the Constitution); see also Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d 829, 835 (11th Cir. 1990) (“grossly inadequate psychiatric care” can be deliberate indifference); Waldrop v. Evans, 871 F.2d 1030, 1033–1035 (11th Cir. 1989) (finding that “grossly incompetent or inadequate care”—here, that prisoner’s medication was discontinued abruptly and without reason—can constitute deliberate indifference); Langley v. Coughlin, 715 F. Supp. 522, 540–541 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (stating that “consistent and repeated failures ... over an extended period of time” could establish deliberate indifference).

79. Cortes-Quinones v. Jimenez-Nettleship, 842 F.2d 556, 560–561 (1st Cir. 1988) (holding that transferring a prisoner with mental illness to general population in a crowded jail with no psychiatric facilities constituted deliberate indifference); see also Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 868 (D.D.C. 1989) (stating that prisoners with mental health problems must be placed in a separate facility and not in the administrative/punitive segregation area), rev’d in part sub nom. Brogsdale v. Barry, 926 F.2d 1184, 1191 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (finding qualified immunity protected mayor and correctional officials from liability); Langley v. Coughlin, 709 F. Supp. 482, 484–485 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (placement of prisoners with mental illness in punitive segregation resulted in conditions that might violate the 8th Amendment), appeal dismissed, 888 F.2d 252 (2d Cir. 1989); Tillery v. Owens, 719 F. Supp. 1256, 1303–1304 (W.D. Pa. 1989) (holding that the Constitution requires separate unit for those with severe mental illness, i.e., those who will not take their medication regularly, maintain normal hygienic practices, accept dietary restrictions, or report symptoms of illness), aff’d, 907 F.2d 418 (3d Cir. 1990); Finney v. Mabry, 534 F. Supp. 1026, 1036–1037 (E.D. Ark. 1982) (finding that the Constitution requires separate facility for the “most severely mentally disturbed” prisoners); Inmates of Allegheny Cnty. Jail v. Peirce, 487 F. Supp. 638, 644 (W.D. Pa. 1980) (requiring that jail must establish a separate area for prisoners who “are seriously disturbed and require observation, protection, or restricted confinement”); see also Morales Feliciano v. Hernandez Colon, 697 F. Supp. 37, 48 (D.P.R. 1988) (stating that prisoners with mental illness may not be housed in a jail for more than 24 hours), aff’d on other grounds sub nom. Morales-Feliciano v. Parole Bd. of P.R., 887 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1989); Delgado v. Cady, 576 F. Supp. 1446, 1452, 1456 (E.D. Wis. 1983) (upholding the housing of psychotic prisoners in segregation unit and finding unconstitutional the coerced double celling of suicidal prisoners with other prisoners: “[I]t is cruel and unusual punishment to force an inmate to share a cell with a suicidal person solely to act as a prophylactic agent. It is the duty of the staff and not the inmates to provide

Mixing incarcerated people with mental illness with those who do not have mental illnesses might violate the constitutional rights of both groups.⁸⁰ Courts have also held that housing incarcerated people with mental illness under conditions of extreme isolation is unconstitutional.⁸¹ However, for this claim, some courts may ask you to show that prison officials knew about the risk that isolation would harm your mental health. Another common violation is stopping psychiatric medications without reason, often with terrible results.⁸²

In a landmark decision in 2011, Brown v. Plata, the Supreme Court held that California prisons provided inadequate mental health care, which violated the Eighth Amendment.⁸³ However, the Supreme Court did not say whether any particular delay or lack of medical treatment would itself violate the Constitution.⁸⁴ Instead, the Court looked at the combination of problems that put incarcerated people at risk of “substantial risk of serious harm.”⁸⁵ The elements considered by the Court included similar factors as those mentioned above, such as not enough staff, not enough space for the staff to perform their jobs, delays in treatment, and “unsafe and unsanitary living conditions,” which prevent effective delivery of medical and mental health care.⁸⁶

It is important to remember that the “deliberate indifference” standard applies to a *significant denial or delay*⁸⁷ of adequate medical care. If you feel that you have been denied mental health treatment, or if you feel that it has been unnecessarily delayed, and you wish to claim deliberate indifference, you must:

surveillance over suicidal inmates.”).

80. DeMallory v. Cullen, 855 F.2d 442, 444–446 (7th Cir. 1988) (finding the allegation of an incarcerated person without mental illness that he was knowingly housed in a high-security unit with prisoners with mental illness, where those mentally ill prisoners caused filthy and dangerous conditions, stated an 8th Amendment claim against prison officials); Nolley v. Cty. of Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 738 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (finding that the automatic segregation of an HIV-positive prisoner with prisoners with mental illness violated the prisoner’s due process rights because “the stigma associated with being involuntarily placed in [the segregated ward, which was] known to house inmates who were ... psychologically unstable [in addition to HIV-positive] ... could have engendered serious adverse consequences for her” and, therefore, her confinement “was qualitatively different from the punishment normally suffered by a person convicted of a crime”), rev’d in part on other grounds, 798 F. Supp. 123 (W.D.N.Y. 1992); Tillery v. Owens, 719 F. Supp. 1256, 1303 (W.D. Pa. 1989) (citing increased tension for prisoners without mental illness and danger of retaliation against those with mental illness), aff’d, 907 F.2d 418 (3d Cir. 1990); Langley v. Coughlin, 709 F. Supp. 482, 484–485 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), appeal dismissed, 888 F.2d 252 (2d Cir. 1989); Langley v. Coughlin, 715 F. Supp. 522, 543–544 (S.D.N.Y. 1988); see Hassine v. Jeffes, 846 F.2d 169, 178 n.5 (3d Cir. 1988) (holding prisoners could seek relief from the consequences of other prisoners’ failure to receive adequate mental health services).

81. Jones’El v. Berge, 164 F. Supp. 2d 1096, 1125–1126 (W.D. Wis. 2001) (granting preliminary injunction requiring removal of prisoners with serious mental illness from “supermax” prison, where inmates spend all but four hours per week in their cells); Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1265–1266 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding keeping prisoners with mental illness or those at a high risk of suffering injury to mental health in Pelican Bay isolation unit unconstitutional), rev’d in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999). But see Scarver v. Litscher, 434 F.3d 972, 976–977 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding that prison officials who were not shown to have known that keeping a psychotic prisoner under conditions of extreme isolation and heat would aggravate his mental illness could not be found deliberately indifferent).

82. See Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d 829, 831–833 (11th Cir. 1990) (holding the law protects incarcerated people from deliberate indifference to their psychiatric needs in case in which prisoner killed himself); see also Waldrop v. Evans, 871 F.2d 1030, 1032 (11th Cir. 1989) (holding there was a factual issue as to whether prison psychiatrist acted with deliberate indifference by withholding depression medication where prisoner blinded and castrated himself); Wakefield v. Thompson, 177 F.3d 1160, 1164 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding 8th Amendment requires prison officials to provide prisoners with mental illness with a supply of medication upon release). But see Campbell v. Sikes, 169 F.3d 1353, 1367–1368 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding discontinuation of medication by doctor who misdiagnosed a prisoner, having not obtained her medical records but having read a summary, was not deliberate indifference).

83. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 543–544, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1947, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 1007–1008 (2011) (holding California’s medical and mental health care fell below standard of decency required by 8th Amendment and that no remedy could be achieved without a reduction in overcrowding).

84. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 494, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1918, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 976 (2011) (holding California had violated 8th Amendment with respect to entire class of mentally ill prisoners in California and entire class of California prisoners with serious medical conditions).

85. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 551, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1951, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 1012 (2011).

86. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 495, 131 S. Ct. 1910 at 1919, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 978 (2011).

87. See, e.g., Monmouth Cty. Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 346–347 (3d Cir. 1987) (holding that prison officials are deliberately indifferent if they delay care “in order to make [you] suffer,” or if they “erect arbitrary and burdensome procedures that result in interminable delays” to care) (internal citations omitted).

- (1) state facts that allege a serious medical need for which medical care has not been provided; and
- (2) claim that a prison official must have been aware of the need for medical care, or at least aware of facts which might have led the official to believe there was a need for medical care.⁸⁸

(i) You Must Show Serious Medical Need

The first part of your deliberate indifference claim must include facts that show you had a serious medical need and did not receive treatment. A medical need is “serious” when there is a large risk that you will suffer serious harm without adequate treatment.⁸⁹ Courts have also found a need diagnosed as requiring treatment or a need that is so obvious a non-doctor could easily recognize it to be a “serious medical need.”⁹⁰ For example, where a prisoner has attempted suicide, the court has found a serious medical need.⁹¹

(ii) You Must Show Actual Knowledge of Your Serious Medical Need

For the second part of your deliberate indifference claim, you must show that prison officials actually knew you needed mental health care but still did not treat you.⁹² In Farmer v. Brennan, the Supreme Court explained a prison official “knows” of a risk when he is not only aware of facts that would lead him to conclude that an incarcerated person faces a substantial risk of serious harm, but also actually comes to that conclusion.⁹³ In other words, this part of the deliberate indifference test is subjective (from the point of view of that particular prison official); he must actually believe you will suffer some serious harm before a court will find he had “knowledge” of the risk.⁹⁴ But, if the risk is extremely obvious, a jury can assume the prison official knew of the risk. For example, the Farmer Court noted that if a plaintiff shows the risk of prisoner attacks was “longstanding, pervasive, well-documented, or expressly noted by prison officials in the past, and the circumstances suggest that the defendant-official being sued had been exposed to information concerning the risk and thus ‘must have known’ about it,” that evidence could be enough to show actual knowledge of the risk.⁹⁵

(c) What Does Not Count as Deliberate Indifference?

Courts will refuse to find deliberate indifference in some situations. The deliberate indifference standard is meant to deal with “unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain.”⁹⁶ Acts or failures to act that are not on purpose, or where the prison officials had no reason to know you might suffer serious

88. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 845–846, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1983–1984, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 830–831 (1994).

89. Harrison v. Barkley, 219 F.3d 132, 136–137 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that prison officials are deliberately indifferent when they refuse to treat a cavity in a prisoner’s tooth unless the prisoner consents to the extraction of another tooth which he wishes to keep).

90. See, e.g., Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Institutional Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 347 (3d Cir. 1987).

91. See, e.g., Perez v. Oakland Cty., 466 F.3d 416, 423–425 (6th Cir. 2006) (finding that the prisoner’s suicide attempts raised a genuine issue as to whether the treating doctor had been deliberately indifferent to a serious medical need); see also Sanville v. McCaughtry, 266 F.3d 724, 733 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that the “serious need” element was met where the prisoner suffered from a mental illness that led him to commit suicide, and finding that mental illness more generally poses a serious medical need).

92. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (“[A] prison official cannot be found liable under the [8th] Amendment . . . unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety.”).

93. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 838, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (“[A]n official’s failure to alleviate a significant risk that he should have perceived but did not, while no cause for commendation, cannot under our cases be condemned as the infliction of punishment.”).

94. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (“[T]he official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference.”).

95. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994) (“[A] factfinder may conclude that a prison official knew of a substantial risk from the very fact that the risk was obvious.”).

96. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976)).

harm, will not satisfy the standard.⁹⁷ A complaint claiming inadequate psychiatric care because officials did not provide the treatment you would have personally chosen will not meet the deliberate indifference standard.⁹⁸ This is because prison officials have leeway to decide what treatment is adequate for a serious medical need. Courts will not find deliberate indifference when prison officials were merely negligent,⁹⁹ made a mistake, or had a difference of opinion regarding adequate medical care.¹⁰⁰

Similarly, a complaint based on malpractice (improper or negligent treatment by a doctor) or misdiagnosis (a medical mistake) will not meet the high deliberate indifference standard.¹⁰¹ So, “a complaint that a [doctor] has been negligent in diagnosing or treating a medical condition does not state a valid claim of medical mistreatment under the Eighth Amendment.”¹⁰² You may instead be able to file a medical malpractice claim for negligence. See JLM, Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more information about negligence and how to file a tort claim.

(d) How to Bring a Deliberate Indifference Claim Under Section 1983

If you think your case meets the legal standard as described above, you may bring a claim of deliberate indifference to your personal health and wellbeing under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (“Section 1983”). You can use Section 1983 to sue cities and local governments for constitutional violations including, for example, the government body in charge of the institution where the violation took place.¹⁰³ For detailed information on bringing a claim under Section 1983, please read Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.” If you plan to file your suit in federal court, you should also read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

You can also use Section 1983 to challenge inadequate prison medical care under the Eighth Amendment.¹⁰⁴ To prove inadequate care, you must show: (1) you have a mental health need that is serious enough that denial of treatment violates the Constitution; and (2) the prison was “deliberately indifferent” to this serious mental health need.¹⁰⁵ You must show the policy or custom at the prison directly caused the constitutional violation.

When the complaint is for inadequate mental health care, you should keep a few things in mind. First, if you believe you suffer from a mental illness and want medical treatment, you should tell prison officials. If you are afraid you will hurt yourself or other people, you should tell prison officials that too. Prison officials can only be held responsible under the deliberate indifference standard if they

97. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 105, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (“An accident, although it may produce added anguish, is not on that basis alone to be characterized as wanton infliction of unnecessary pain.”).

98. See United States v. DeCologero, 821 F.2d 39, 42 (1st Cir. 1987) (“[T]hough it is plain that an inmate deserves adequate medical care, he cannot insist that his institutional host provide him with the most sophisticated care that money can buy.”).

99. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 835, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1978, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824 (1994) (“[D]eliberate indifference entails something more than mere negligence, [but] the cases are also clear that it is satisfied by something less than acts or omissions for the very purpose of causing harm or with knowledge that harm will result.”).

100. See Banuelos v. McFarland, 41 F. 3d 232, 235 (5th Cir. 1995) (finding that, except in exceptional circumstances, a prisoner’s disagreement with his medical treatment is not enough for a deliberate indifference claim).

101. See, e.g., Domino v. Tex. Dept. of Crim. Justice, 239 F.3d 752, 756 (5th Cir. 2001) (“It is indisputable that an incorrect diagnosis by prison medical personnel does not suffice to state a claim for deliberate indifference.”); U.S. ex rel. Hyde v. McGinnis, 429 F.2d 864, 867 (2d Cir. 1970) (finding that the “faulty judgment on the part of the prison doctor in choosing to administer one form of the same medication instead of another” is not deliberate indifference).

102. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976).

103. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694–695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978) (holding that “when execution of a government’s policy or custom...inflicts the injury...the government as an entity is responsible under § 1983”).

104. Gil v. Vogilano, 131 F. Supp. 2d 486, 492–493 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding that a prisoner who was denied access to treatment despite repeated requests and obvious pain had stated a valid claim under § 1983).

105. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994); see also Letterman v. Does, 789 F.3d 856, 861 (8th Cir. 2015).

have actual knowledge of, or some other reason to believe, that you have a mental illness that requires treatment.¹⁰⁶

C. What to Do if You Receive Unwanted Treatment

While the previous Parts of this Chapter focused on your right to receive medical treatment for your mental illness, this Part discusses treatment that you do not want. You should also look at Part C(5)(a) and (E)(1) of Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

1. You Have the Right to Informed Consent

You have a right to receive enough information about a potential medical treatment to make a reasonable decision whether to try the treatment.¹⁰⁷ After you learn about the treatment, you can choose whether or not to give permission for the doctor to treat you.¹⁰⁸ This right is known as informed consent. “Informed consent” means that you have the right to learn about all treatment options and the risks associated with each option before you allow mental health doctors or other caregivers to treat you. Informed consent is a way of making sure that you understand, before you start the treatment, what a treatment includes, and what effects it may have on you.¹⁰⁹ Informed consent is an important part of your right to refuse treatment.¹¹⁰ If you do not give your consent, you are refusing treatment; however, informed consent does have some limits. If you pose a danger to yourself or others, the doctor may be able to treat you in a way that the doctor believes will immediately help and benefit you.¹¹¹

Doctors have a duty to obtain informed consent from patients, including incarcerated people,¹¹² before treating them. A doctor must almost always tell you about the options and risks when there is penetration of the body (such as with a scalpel, needle, or pill).¹¹³ Also, when the direct side effects of

106. Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 222 (3d Cir. 2004) (finding that prison officials who did not believe an inmate’s symptoms were serious could not be deliberately indifferent).

107. Pabon v. Wright, 459 F.3d 241, 246 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that since prisoners have a right to refuse treatment, they have a right to get enough information about the treatment “to make an informed decision” whether to accept or refuse it). To prove that officials violated this right, you must show: (1) government officials did not tell you enough about the treatment for you to make an informed decision, (2) because you couldn’t make an informed decision, you were given treatment that you would have refused if you had been informed, and (3) the prison officials acted with deliberate indifference to your right to be informed.

108. See In re Ingram, 689 P.2d 1363, 1368, 102 Wash. 2d 827, 836 (Wash. 1984) (en banc) (finding a person has a right to choose one medical treatment over another, or to refuse treatment, even if the treatment she refuses is more likely to cure her); Schloendorff v. Soc’y of N.Y. Hospital 211 N.Y. 125, 130, 105 N.E. 92, 93 (1914) (“Every human being of adult years and sound mind has a right to determine what shall be done with his own body; and a surgeon who performs an operation without his patient’s consent commits an assault.”), abrogated by Bing v. Thunig, 2 N.Y.2d 656, 665, 143 N.E.2d 3, 8, 163 N.Y.S.2d 3, 10 (finding that hospitals are not immune for the negligence of its employees for medical acts); Superintendent of Belchertown State Sch. v. Saikewicz, 373 Mass. 728, 738–739, 370 N.E.2d 417, 424 (Mass. 1977) (finding that both the Constitution and other laws protect a person from “nonconsensual invasion of his bodily integrity.”).

109. Zebarth v. Swedish Hosp. Med. Ctr., 499 P.2d 1, 8, 81 Wash. 2d 12, 23 (Wash. 1972) (en banc) (defining “informed consent” as enough information to let a patient decide his treatment “by reasonably balancing the probable risks against the probable benefits”), superseded by statute, RCW 7.70.050(1)(a), as recognized in Flyte v. Summit View Clinic, 183 Wash. App. 559, 573, 333 P.3d, 566, 574 (2014) (noting that the statute expanded the duty to disclose to patient a material fact relating to the treatment); see also Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1048 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (referring to New York’s statutory definition of informed consent, which requires the medical professional to tell the patient about “such alternatives [to the treatment or medication in question] and the reasonably foreseeable risks and benefits involved as a reasonable [medical or dental] ... practitioner under similar circumstances would have disclosed in a manner permitting the patient to make a knowledgeable evaluation”) (citing N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2805-d(1) (McKinney 2013)).

110. Pabon v. Wright, 459 F.3d 241, 246 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding prisoners’ constitutionally protected liberty interest in refusing medical care encompasses a right to receive information that would enable a reasonable person to decide).

111. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 225–226, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1039, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 201 (1990) (holding that in order to protect other prisoners, a prison can give anti-psychotic medication against a prisoner’s will).

112. See U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1084 (2d Cir. 1969) (finding a constitutional violation of prisoner’s rights where he received different procedural treatment than civilians receive).

113. See Cruzan v. Dir., Mo. Dept. of Health, 497 U.S. 261, 269, 110 S. Ct. 2841, 2846, 111 L. Ed. 2d 224, 236 (1990) (“[T]his notion of bodily integrity has been embodied in the requirement that informed consent is generally required for medical treatment.”); See also N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2805-d(1) (McKinney 2012).

treatment are painful or serious, your informed consent is usually required.¹¹⁴ Some states specifically require by law that doctors consider other possible forms of care,¹¹⁵ and inform you of the procedures and risks associated with each option. You should research what the law is in your state.

You should carefully consider whether or not to give your consent to be treated. State law varies as to whether informed consent must be given for each treatment. Some states will allow informed consent to cover all risks associated with a particular procedure or additional procedures that a doctor believes will help you. In New York, if you have not consented to a previous treatment, doctors cannot assume they have consent for a different or additional treatment, even in an emergency.¹¹⁶ Similarly, in California, consent to a previous treatment does not mean consent to another treatment plan; there, a court held that a prisoner who consented to shock treatment did not necessarily consent to receive drugs that produced nightmares.¹¹⁷

2. Medication Over an Incarcerated Person's Objection

Medication is one form of treatment. Incarcerated people have a right to refuse antipsychotic or psychotropic drugs, with some exceptions.¹¹⁸ Such medications help cure symptoms of mental illness, but these drugs also alter a person's perception, emotions, or behavior. For example, psychotropic drugs can have serious side effects, such as nightmares and muscle tics (sudden movements). The law provides protection against the unwanted use of serious drugs by giving incarcerated people the right to refuse treatments that significantly interfere with the body. However, this right is not absolute, meaning there are some circumstances when medication can be given to you, even over your objection.¹¹⁹

(a) Your Right to Refuse Medication Under the Due Process Clause

The Due Process Clause of the U.S. Constitution says that, "no State shall ... deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."¹²⁰ Some deprivations are so important that the Constitution requires states to create processes (such as a court hearing) to ensure that you are not deprived unfairly. For example, in Vitek v. Jones, the Supreme Court found that classifying an (discussing what constitutes lack of informed consent); N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2805-d (McKinney 2012).

114. See, e.g., Clites v. State, 322 N.W.2d 917, 922–923 (Iowa Ct. App. 1982) (en banc) (rejecting administration of "major tranquilizers" to patient with a mental illness without consent where the medical industry standard required written consent from patient or guardian).

115. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 402(2) (McKinney 2014) (stating that before committing a prisoner, a doctor must "consider alternative forms of care and treatment available"); see also Cobbs v. Grant, 502 P.2d 1, 9–10, 8 Cal. 3d 229, 242–243 (1972) (finding doctors must reasonably disclose alternatives to a proposed treatment plan and the risks of any treatment).

116. In re Storar, 52 N.Y.2d 363, 376, 420 N.E.2d 64, 70, 438 N.Y.S.2d 266, 272 (1981) (finding that "[t]he basic right of a patient to control the course of his medical treatment has been recognized by the Legislature."), superseded by statute on other grounds, Surrogate's Court Procedure Act, SCPA 1750(2), as recognized in In re M.B., 6 N.Y.3d 437, 441, 846 N.E.2d 794, 796 (2006).

117. Mackey v. Procunier, 477 F.2d 877, 877–879 (9th Cir. 1973).

118. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–223, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036–1038, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 197–199 (1990) (holding antipsychotic drugs can be administered only if "a mental disorder exists which is likely to cause harm if not treated" and if one psychiatrist has prescribed and another reviewed the treatment); Cruzan v. Dir., Mo. Dept. of Health, 497 U.S. 261, 278, 110 S. Ct. 2841, 2851, 111 L. Ed. 2d 224, 242 (1990) (stating that "prisoners possess 'a significant liberty interest in avoiding the unwanted administration of antipsychotic drugs under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.'") (quoting Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990)).

119. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 227, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1039–1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 201–202 (1990) (holding that "given the requirements of the prison environment, the Due Process Clause permits the State to treat a prison inmate who has a serious mental illness with antipsychotic drugs against his will, if the inmate is dangerous to himself or others and the treatment is in the inmate's medical interest."). The government may also medicate criminal defendants to make them competent to stand trial for certain serious charges, as long as the treatment is medically appropriate, unlikely to have serious side effects, and necessary "significantly to further important governmental trial-related interests." Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 179, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2184–2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211 (2003); See United States v. Baldovinos, 434 F.3d 233, 241–242 (4th Cir. 2006) (finding that involuntarily medicating a mentally ill defendant was not in his best interests but was solely done to make him competent to stand trial, but upholding the conviction after finding that a procedural mistake did not seriously affect the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of the judicial process), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1203, 126 S. Ct. 1407, 164 L. Ed. 2d 107 (2006).

120. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1.

incarcerated person as mentally ill and moving him to a psychiatric hospital were such serious (“grievous”) losses that the State was required to have procedural protections in place to make sure that the loss was fair.¹²¹ These losses included the harm to the prisoner’s reputation and the change in conditions of confinement.¹²²

Similarly, before the State can force you to take medication, the state must have “procedural protections” in place to make sure you are not receiving the medication randomly or unfairly. You must receive these procedures, including notice and a hearing, before you can be involuntarily medicated.¹²³ A decision to treat you with drugs requires these procedural due process protections because drugs can produce serious and irreversible side effects.¹²⁴ These side effects are considered a significant State intrusion into your body.¹²⁵

(b) Your Right to Refuse Medication Based on State Law

Your right to refuse medication may come not only from the Constitution, but also from state laws that specifically require procedural protections (such as notice and a hearing) before you can be forcibly medicated.¹²⁶ If your state has such a law, the state must follow the procedures set out by the law.¹²⁷ If your state wishes to avoid the process that is laid out by state law, it must have a rational reason for doing so. If the state does not have a rational reason, the avoidance will be considered a due process violation. In other words, your state must show that it has good reasons, reasonably related to its interests, before it may take away a process that was granted to you through its own law.

Unless your state can show both that you have a mental illness and are dangerous,¹²⁸ or that your state’s law has so many protections that it is unlikely that you will receive medication unfairly,¹²⁹ it cannot force you to take medication without some procedural protections.

121. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 488, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1261, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 561 (1980).

122. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 488, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1261, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 561 (1980).

123. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036–1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990); see, e.g., Mills v. Rogers, 457 U.S. 291, 299 n.16, 102 S. Ct. 2442, 2448 n.16, 73 L. Ed. 2d 16, 23 n.16 (1982) (noting that involuntary administration of psychotropic drugs bears on liberty interests), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1010, 108 S. Ct. 709, 98 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1988).

124. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 229–231, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1041, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 203–204 (1990) (describing the side effects of antipsychotic drugs, including severe spasms and neurological dysfunction); see also Mental Health Medications, NAMI <http://www.nami.org/Learn-More/Treatment/Mental-Health-Medications> (last visited Feb. 03, 2020); Nat’l Inst. of Mental Health, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Servs., Medications, NIH (2016), available at <https://www.nimh.nih.gov/health/topics/mental-health-medications/index.shtml> (last visited Nov. 18, 2019). To order National Institute of Mental Health publications, call (301) 443-4513 or (866) 615-6464 (toll-free), or (301) 443-8431 (TTY), or write to the National Institute of Mental Health, Office of Communications, 6001 Executive Blvd., Room 8184, MSC 9663, Bethesda, MD 20892-9663.

125. Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 316, 102 S. Ct. 2452, 2458, 73 L. Ed. 2d 28, 37 (1982) (“[Liberty] from bodily restraint always has been recognized as the core of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause from arbitrary governmental action.”) (quoting Greenholtz v. Neb. Penal Inmates, 442 U.S. 1, 18, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2109, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 682–683 (1979)); Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 229, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1041, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 203 (1990) (stating that “The forcible injection of medication into a non-consenting person’s body represents a substantial interference with that person’s liberty.”).

126. See, e.g., WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 71.05.215(1) (West 2008 & Supp. 2009) (“Right to Refuse Antipsychotic Medication”).

127. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990) (finding that a Washington state policy requiring a finding of mental illness and dangerousness before a prisoner can be forcibly medicated with antipsychotic drugs “creates a justifiable expectation on the part of the inmate that the drugs will not be administered unless those conditions exist”); Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 488, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1261, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 561–562 (1980) (“We have repeatedly held that state statutes may create liberty interests that are entitled to the procedural protections of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.”).

128. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 232–233, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1042–1043, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 204–205 (1990) (finding that a state policy was consistent with Due Process because review of medical treatment required asking (1) whether the prisoner had a mental illness, and (2) whether the mental illness made the prisoner a danger to himself or to others, and it required constant monitoring of drug dosage).

129. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 222, 235, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 1044, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198, 207 (1990) (upholding a state policy that required psychiatric evaluation, notice, and hearing for a prisoner before forcible medication); see also Lappe v. Loeffelholz, 815 F.2d 1173, 1176–1178 (8th Cir. 1987) (finding that prisoner’s constitutional rights were not violated by a treatment transfer where he had access to written notice, an adversarial hearing with an independent decision maker, and legal counsel).

(c) Your Right to Refuse Medication Under the Eighth Amendment

In some circumstances, you also have a right to refuse medication under the Eighth Amendment, which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment.¹³⁰ Administering drugs as a means of punishment (rather than as treatment) is unconstitutional.¹³¹

Forcible treatment with psychotropic medication that causes pain or fear can be considered cruel and unusual punishment, violating the Eighth Amendment.¹³² The district court in Souder v. McGuire cited cases in the Eighth and Ninth Circuits¹³³ that held that treating incarcerated people with drugs without consent may raise Eighth Amendment claims. In those cases, the courts found that drugs causing pain or fright could invade the body and mental processes to an unconstitutional degree.

While some courts have emphasized that an allegation that you were given a particular kind of medicine is not enough to prove that giving you the drug was cruel and unusual (and thus a violation of the Eighth Amendment),¹³⁴ the Supreme Court has held that states may not avoid the obligations of the Eighth Amendment just by calling a medical act a “treatment.”¹³⁵

(d) Limitations on Your Right to Refuse Medication

The right to refuse medication does not mean that the State can never medicate you against your will. Instead, it means that the State must provide a process (such as a hearing) that reduces the chance that the decision to medicate you will be random or arbitrary.

One important limitation on an incarcerated person’s right to refuse medication is danger or emergency. Prisons may administer psychotropic drugs over a prisoner’s objection if the incarcerated person poses a danger to himself or others. Receiving medication against your will is called “medication over objection.” In Washington v. Harper,¹³⁶ the Supreme Court upheld a policy allowing the state to medicate an incarcerated person without consent if a licensed psychiatrist found that the incarcerated person suffered from a mental disorder, and the incarcerated person was “gravely disabled”¹³⁷ or posed a “likelihood of serious harm”¹³⁸ to himself or others. Therefore, situations in which an incarcerated person presents a danger to himself or the general prison population are an exception to the right to refuse treatment. A good example is a Kansas incarcerated person who objected to psychotropic medication but was not allowed to refuse treatment because he had previously destroyed his prison cell and started fights with other prisoners.¹³⁹

130. U.S. CONST. AMEND. VIII.

131. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 241, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1047, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 211 (1990) (“Forced administration of antipsychotic medication may not be used as a form of punishment.”).

132. Souder v. McGuire, 423 F. Supp. 830, 831–832 (M.D. Pa. 1976) (“[I]nvuntary administration of drugs which have a painful or frightening effect can amount to cruel and unusual punishment, in violation of the [8th] Amendment.”).

133. Knecht v. Gillman, 488 F.2d 1136, 1139–1140 (8th Cir. 1973) (holding that a drug that caused prisoners to vomit for 15 minutes to an hour “can only be regarded as cruel and unusual unless the treatment is being administered to a patient who knowingly and intelligently has consented to it”); Mackey v. Procunier, 477 F.2d 877, 878 (9th Cir. 1973) (finding that “serious constitutional questions respecting cruel and unusual punishment or impermissible tinkering with the mental processes” could be raised where a prisoner who had consented to shock treatment was given extra drugs, without his consent, that caused fright and nightmares).

134. See, e.g., Gittlemacker v. Prasse, 428 F.2d 1, 6 (3d Cir. 1970) (“It is only where an inmate’s complaint of improper or inadequate medical treatment depicts conduct so cruel or unusual as to approach a violation of the [8th] Amendment’s prohibition of such punishment that a colorable constitutional claim is presented.”).

135. See Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 95, 78 S. Ct. 590, 595, 2 L. Ed. 2d 630, 639 (1958) (finding that substance—not a label—determines the meaning of a statute).

136. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178 (1990).

137. WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 71.05.020(22) (Supp. 2009) (defining that term as a condition resulting from a mental disorder where there is a danger of serious physical harm from inability to provide for one’s “essential human needs” like health or safety, or where there is a severe decrease in function evidenced by repeated and increasing loss of control over actions).

138. WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 71.05.020(35) (Supp. 2009) (defining the term as a substantial risk that a person will physically harm himself, others, or property of others evidenced by threats or suicide attempts or actual harm to himself, others, or property).

139. Sconiers v. Jarvis, 458 F. Supp. 37, 38–39 (D. Kan. 1978) (finding that the prison physician and psychiatrist possessed the authority to provide incarcerated person with involuntary medical treatment in order to protect him and other incarcerated people from a substantial possibility of harm and that the physician and psychiatrist did not act in an arbitrary or capricious manner by administering psychotropic medication against

There are a few other limitations on an incarcerated person's right to refuse treatment. An incarcerated person may receive medication despite objections or religious beliefs if the State can prove that its interests are legitimate.¹⁴⁰ Also, the State may give drugs to an incarcerated person over his objections if the court feels that enough procedural protections are in place to ensure that the decision to treat with drugs was reasonable.¹⁴¹ You should also note that, in some cases, if a doctor finds that medication is necessary and in the incarcerated person's medical interest, then the State does not have to grant an incarcerated person's request to stop taking the drugs so that he can prove he can do without them.¹⁴²

A determination of whether the right to refuse is limited in any given case "must be defined in the context of the inmate's confinement."¹⁴³ This means that the court will review your current prison conditions, the threat of danger that you pose to yourself or others, and the procedures that the State has in place to protect you from an unfair decision to treat you with drugs.¹⁴⁴

(e) How Do Courts Decide Whether State Interests Are Legitimate?

To determine whether or not the State may rightfully force an incarcerated person to take medication due to a situation of danger or emergency, courts apply what is called the Turner v. Safley rational basis test. With this test, the court tries to see if the State's decision to treat a non-consenting incarcerated person with psychotropic drugs is "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."¹⁴⁵ Legitimate State interests include the health and safety of the public, the incarcerated person, and the general prison population.¹⁴⁶ The rational basis test presumes that State interests are legitimate. This means that a court will consider the State's choice to be reasonable unless it does not serve one or more of these legitimate State goals.

There are some common arguments that incarcerated people use to counter the presumption that the State's actions are the result of a legitimate interest. One challenge to medication over objection is that the decision to medicate is unfair or arbitrary (random or not supported by a reason).¹⁴⁷ In such cases, courts consider a competing risk that the determination of danger will be incorrect and may cause harm to the incarcerated person's reputation.¹⁴⁸ In order to avoid mistakes in determining if there is a danger, taking the drugs must be in the incarcerated person's medical interest and can only be for treatment purposes.¹⁴⁹

In addition, states must provide certain procedural safeguards to ensure that the decision to medicate is not arbitrary or erroneous. Common safeguards include (1) an administrative hearing before an independent decision maker (someone not involved in the incarcerated person's treatment prisoner's will).

140. Smith v. Baker, 326 F. Supp. 787, 787–788 (W.D. Mo. 1970) (denying relief to an incarcerated person who objected to administration of drugs "against [his] will and religious belief"), aff'd, 442 F.2d 928 (8th Cir. 1971).

141. See, e.g., Lappe v. Loeffelholz, 815 F.2d 1173, 1176 (8th Cir. 1987) (finding that an incarcerated person's constitutional rights were not violated by a treatment transfer where he had written notice, an adversarial hearing with an independent decision maker, and legal counsel).

142. See, e.g., Sullivan v. Flannigan, 8 F.3d 591, 592 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding the Illinois Department of Corrections, which had forced incarcerated person to take mind-altering drugs against his will for five years after he was determined to be a danger to others, was not constitutionally required to give him a chance to stop taking the drugs to prove he didn't need them).

143. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990).

144. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990) (holding that certain procedures, such as having different psychiatrists prescribe and review medication, ensure "that the treatment in question will be ordered only if it is in the prisoner's medical interests, given the legitimate needs of his institutional confinement").

145. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 223, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 199 (1990) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987), superseded by statute on other grounds).

146. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 241, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1047, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 228 (1990).

147. See, e.g., Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 217, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1034, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 195 (1990) (challenging as arbitrary a decision allowing treatment with antipsychotic drugs against the will of an incarcerated person with mental illness without a judicial hearing).

148. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 565–566 (1980) (finding that characterization of mental illness, transfer, and treatment had "stigmatizing consequences").

149. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 227, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 202 (1990).

but who may come from within the institution);¹⁵⁰ (2) written notice;¹⁵¹ (3) the right to be present at an adversary hearing;¹⁵² and (4) the right to present and cross-examine witnesses.¹⁵³ While the State may provide a lawyer to represent the incarcerated person in administrative hearings, providing a non-attorney adviser may satisfy due process.¹⁵⁴

3. Challenging Transfers for Treatment

(a) What Is a Treatment Transfer?

Many treatments are available for incarcerated people and sometimes these treatments must be administered at a site outside of the prison. This requires that the incarcerated person be transferred from his present location in order to be treated. An incarcerated person may submit to the transfer or voluntarily agree to various forms of treatment including medication, counseling, therapy, or commitment to a psychiatric center. Or, in some cases, the incarcerated person may be treated involuntarily. This Section explains when the prison can and cannot transfer you for treatment if you do not consent to the transfer.

Incarcerated people who suffer from a mental illness may be treated at one of several possible locations. For more details on these facilities, please see Part A(2) above. Please note that if you are transferred to a facility that has a significantly different quality than the normal and typical conditions of prison confinement, this might violate your constitutional rights.

(b) Procedural Safeguards Under the Due Process Clause

Lawful imprisonment may take away some of your rights, but you still have a right to basic protections.¹⁵⁵ In certain circumstances, basic procedures must be in place to protect you from an unfair action of the State. For more information on procedural due process, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings,” and Chapter 23, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.” A hearing and written notice are two common examples of procedures that might be required, often before an incarcerated person can be involuntarily committed to a psychiatric hospital.¹⁵⁶

Prison to hospital transfers might mean a significant change in living conditions and type of confinement. A determination of mental illness by a doctor and subsequent transfer does not automatically mean that an incarcerated person has a mental illness for the purposes of other laws in the state.¹⁵⁷ Still, there is a chance that the incarcerated person might suffer harm to his reputation. When the risk of physical and/or reputational harm is high, your constitutional right to due process might be triggered.

In addition, if the State tries to avoid the requirements imposed by its own laws, then a law giving you the right to procedures before transfer will also trigger due process protections. Where state regulations require a finding of mental illness before transfer, the State creates an “objective expectation” in the incarcerated person that there will be a procedure to determine whether or not a mental illness exists.¹⁵⁸ Without such procedures, the incarcerated person could suffer a due process

150. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–496, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264–1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566–567 (1980).

151. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–496, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264–1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566–567 (1980).

152. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–496, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264–1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566–567 (1980).

153. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–496, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264–1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566–567 (1980).

154. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 236, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1044, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 207 (1990).

155. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 555, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2974, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 950 (1974) (“[T]hough his rights may be diminished by the needs and exigencies of the institutional environment, a prisoner is not wholly stripped of constitutional protections when he is imprisoned for crime.”).

156. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 495–496, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566–567 (1980); see, e.g., Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 235, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1044, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 207 (1990) (upholding a Washington state policy which required a non-judicial hearing and notice of that hearing before the involuntary treatment of an incarcerated person).

157. See In re Will of Stephani, 250 A.D. 253, 254–257, 294 N.Y.S. 624, 624 (3d Dept. 1937) (finding that an incarcerated person who was determined to be insane by a physician and transferred to mental hospital was still mentally competent when he later wrote his will).

158. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 489–490, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1262, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 562–563 (1980) (holding that an incarcerated person had a state-created liberty interest because Nebraska law created an objective expectation that an incarcerated person would not be transferred unless he suffered from a mental disease or violation. In short, you may have a right to due process protections (such as the right to a hearing and the right to receive notice of the hearing) when the State's action creates a high level of harm to you (physical or reputational), or when a state law gives you the expectation that some particular act or process must be followed, and then the State fails to follow this act or process.

The due process protection to which you are entitled is the same, no matter how your liberty interest is implicated.¹⁵⁹

In Vitek v. Jones, the Supreme Court found that a Nebraska statute requiring a finding of mental illness before transfer to an outside mental facility created an expectation among incarcerated people that transfer would occur only if they were found to have mental illness.¹⁶⁰

Under Vitek, the State must adequately protect your liberty interests (if it has created them through state law) in the transfer process by providing:

- (1) Written notice that the prison is considering your transfer;
- (2) A hearing;
- (3) An opportunity to present witness testimony and cross-examine state witnesses at the hearing;
- (4) An independent decision maker;
- (5) A written statement by the decision maker stating the reasons and evidence relied on for your transfer;
- (6) Legal assistance from the State if you cannot afford your own; and
- (7) Effective and timely notice of rights (1) through (6).¹⁶¹

All of these protections are triggered if your liberty interests are implicated and there is a chance that you will suffer a serious loss. Failure to provide them violates your rights.

(i) Are Your Liberty Interests Implicated?

Courts determine whether the State can deprive you of a liberty interest by balancing the interests of the State (for example, prison safety) with your liberty interest in freedom from random deprivations (for example, the right to agree or disagree to medication). If the interest of the incarcerated person is found to be stronger than the interest of the State, then the incarcerated person is entitled to due process protections.¹⁶² Whether or not an incarcerated person has a state-created liberty interest depends on whether the incarcerated person faces a serious loss.

Liberty interests are limited: incarcerated people are entitled to freedom from restraint only to the extent that restraint cannot exceed the conviction sentence in an unexpected manner.¹⁶³ This is true unless there is an "atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life."¹⁶⁴ In other words, for due process to apply, you must have both a liberty interest and a defect that could not be adequately treated in the prison).

159. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036–1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990) (finding "that the Due Process Clause confers upon ... [the prisoner] no greater right than that recognized under state law" where a Washington law created a liberty interest in being free from unwanted medical treatment for mental illness).

160. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 489–490, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1262, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 562–563 (1980).

161. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–495, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264–1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566 (1980). However, you may not be entitled to all of these procedures. In Shakur v. Selsky, 391 F.3d 106, 119 (2d Cir. 2004), the lower court held that "regardless of state procedural guarantees, the only process due an inmate is that minimal process guaranteed by the Constitution, as outlined in" Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974) (emphasis in original). As explained above in note 146, the minimal process may be limited to (1) advance written notice; (2) an opportunity for you to call witnesses and present documentary evidence in your defense; and (3) a written document from the fact-finder explaining the reasons for your transfer and the evidence relied on.

162. Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 334–335, 96 S. Ct. 893, 902–903, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18, 33 (1976) (developing a three-part balancing test to determine whether state-provided procedural protections are sufficient).

163. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429–430 (1995) (recognizing that while states may create liberty interests, these interests are generally limited to freedom from restraint that is significant and atypical rather than expected).

164. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484–485, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300–2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430–431 (1995) (finding that holding an incarcerated person in a segregated housing unit for 30 days "though concededly punitive, does not present a dramatic departure from the basic conditions of [prisoner's] indeterminate sentence.").

deprivation of that liberty that imposes a significant and atypical (unusual) hardship. Only if both of these factors are present are you entitled to due process protections¹⁶⁵ like written notice and a hearing. Transfer from one prison to another within the State's system does not necessarily infringe upon any liberty interest.¹⁶⁶

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution prohibits states from denying any person equal protection of the laws.¹⁶⁷ In other words, state laws must treat each person in the same manner as others in similar conditions and circumstances. In the context of mental health, the equal protection rights of incarcerated people who are being committed entitle them to substantially the same procedures as those available to free persons subjected to an involuntary commitment proceeding.¹⁶⁸ In United States ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, the Second Circuit found that a incarcerated person in custody in New York who was transferred from prison to an institution for the criminally insane was deprived of equal protection because there was an unlawful difference between procedural protections given to civilians facing involuntary commitment and those given to incarcerated people.¹⁶⁹ Therefore, to determine the procedural protections that apply in your state, you should review civil commitment laws in addition to laws that govern corrections facilities. We discuss procedural protections and treatment transfers later in this Chapter.

(ii) What is a Serious Loss?

Courts might consider transfers to be a serious loss because of three factors: (1) there is a high risk of stigma associated with a declaration of mental illness; (2) there is an actual change in the type of confinement; and (3) there is actual behavior modification treatment.¹⁷⁰ As with challenges to medication over objection, these changes require that the State provide procedural protections.

165. Frazier v. Coughlin, 81 F.3d 313, 317 (2d Cir. 1996) (“To prevail, [the prisoner] must establish both that the confinement or restraint creates an ‘atypical and significant hardship’ under Sandin, and that the state has granted its inmates, by regulation or by statute, a protected liberty interest in remaining free from that confinement or restraint.”); see also Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 64 (2d Cir. 2004) (“Factors relevant to determining whether the plaintiff endured an ‘atypical and significant hardship’ include ‘the extent to which the conditions of the disciplinary segregation differ from other routine prison conditions’ and ‘the duration of the disciplinary segregation imposed compared to discretionary confinement.’” (quoting Wright v. Coughlin, 132 F.3d 133, 136 (2d Cir. 1998))).

166. See Montanye v. Haymes, 427 U.S. 236, 242, 96 S. Ct. 2543, 2547, 49 L. Ed. 2d 466, 471 (1976) (stating that “no Due Process Clause liberty interest of a duly convicted prison inmate is infringed when he is transferred from one prison to another within the State, whether with or without a hearing, absent some right or justifiable expectation rooted in state law that he will not be transferred except for misbehavior or upon the occurrence of other specified events.”) (citing Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976) (finding mere transfer of prisoner from one prison to another within the state's system does not implicate an incarcerated person's liberty interests and does not violate due process)). But see Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 223–224, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2394–2395, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 190–191 (2005) (noting that Ohio's Supermax facility “imposes an atypical and significant hardship under any plausible baseline” and thus prisoners have a liberty interest in not being confined in the facility).

167. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1.

168. U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1073 (2d Cir. 1969) (“[W]e believe that before a prisoner may be transferred to a state institution for insane criminals, he must be afforded substantially the same procedural safeguards as are provided in civil commitment proceedings”); see also Souder v. McGuire, 516 F.2d 820, 821–822 (3d Cir. 1975) (finding that “serious equal protection and due process issues” were raised regarding the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania mental health statute that gave the warden a choice whether or not to adopt certain procedures for the commitment of people already in a correctional facility even though the same procedures were mandatory for the involuntary commitment of “non-confined” civilian adults); Evans v. Paderick, 443 F. Supp. 583, 585 (E.D. Va. 1977) (rejecting defendant's argument that a Virginia civil commitment procedure was not required when the person to be committed is a state incarcerated person); People v. Arendes, 86 Misc. 2d 468, 470, 382 N.Y.S.2d 684, 686 (Sup. Ct. Queens County 1976) (“[W]here the issue in the first instance is mental illness itself or dangerousness, there is no valid ground to distinguish between a civilian and a prisoner since the issues have no connection to the circumstance of incarceration and the same psychiatric criteria will apply to all people to determine mental illness.”); cf. Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 110, 86 S. Ct. 760, 762, 15 L. Ed. 2d 620, 623 (1966) (holding that a New York state incarcerated person was denied equal protection of the laws by the statutory procedure that allowed him to be civilly committed at the expiration of his sentence without jury review available to all other civilly committed people in New York).

169. U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1073 (2d Cir. 1969).

170. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 488, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1261, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 561 (1980).

The test courts apply to determine if a loss is serious examines whether the loss is “atypical and significant.”¹⁷¹ Atypical and significant state actions are those actions not similar to prison conditions or those that substantially alter the environment, duration, or degree of the prison condition. For example, an incarcerated person who was placed in segregated confinement did not suffer a serious loss that implicated a liberty interest because the segregation was of the same duration and degree as that of his normal prison conditions.¹⁷²

More specifically, under the Vitek standard, “significant and atypical” means that the loss suffered by the prisoner is different than the loss already suffered as a result of prison confinement.¹⁷³ The loss to the prisoner in Vitek was “serious” enough to require due process protections because he had reasonably developed an “objective expectation” based on the state law¹⁷⁴ and the risk that mistaken mental illness could damage the incarcerated person’s reputation was great.¹⁷⁵ In another case, a loss of good-time credits was significant because such a loss of credits meant that there was a change in the length of the prison term.¹⁷⁶ Finally, confinement in a psychiatric prison unit might be far more restrictive than prison, and therefore might be considered a serious loss, implicating a liberty interest.¹⁷⁷

4. When Due Process Procedures Are Not Required for Transfer

The protections discussed in the previous Subsection might not be afforded to the incarcerated person if the transfer is voluntary or on an emergency basis. Additionally, the Due Process Clause does not protect against every change in the conditions of your imprisonment, even if that change has a negative impact on you.¹⁷⁸ This is true even if the incarcerated person has a reasonable expectation that state actions will produce a particular result. In some jurisdictions, the law says that the State may not need to have due process procedures in place before transferring you so you can participate in clinical evaluations¹⁷⁹ (you are not considered to be under the same great hardship in this case as 171. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995) (holding that disciplinary segregation of an incarcerated person “did not present the type of atypical, significant deprivation” of a state-created liberty interest after comparing conditions inside and outside of disciplinary segregation in the prison and finding that the placement “did not work a major disruption in his environment.”). See also Tellier v. Fields, 280 F.3d 69, 80 (2d Cir. 2000) (concluding as a matter of law that “a confinement of 514 days under conditions that differ markedly from those in the general population” may be atypical and significant).

172. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995) (finding segregated confinement that “mirrored” prison conditions was not significant and atypical); see also Frazier v. Coughlin, 81 F.3d 313, 317–18 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding no significant deprivation of a liberty interest to incarcerated person who failed to show that confinement conditions in a SHU were “dramatically different” from basic prison conditions). But see Tellier v. Fields, 280 F.3d 69, 80 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that an extended confinement in the SHU may amount to a deprivation of a liberty interest).

173. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 493, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 565 (1980) (finding “transfer of a prisoner to a mental hospital is [not] within the range of confinement justified by imposition of a prison sentence”).

174. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 489–490, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1261–1262, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 562–563 (1980).

175. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 495, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1265, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566 (1980).

176. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974) (holding that a state law allowing a reduction in sentence for good time, and providing that such credit would only be forfeited for serious misbehavior, created a recognizable liberty interest); see also Eichwedel v. Chandler, 696 F.3d 660, 675 (7th Cir. 2012) (finding that Illinois incarcerated people have a liberty interest in their good-conduct credits that entitles them to due process procedures if revocation occurs).

177. U.S. ex rel. Schuster v. Herold, 410 F.2d 1071, 1078 (2d Cir. 1969) (“Not only did the transfer effectively eliminate the possibility of [the prisoner’s] parole, but it significantly increased the restraints upon him, exposed him to extraordinary hardships, and caused him to suffer indignities, frustrations and dangers, both physical and psychological, [that] he would not be required to endure in a typical prison setting.”).

178. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 224, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976) (“[W]e cannot agree that any change in the conditions of confinement having a substantial adverse impact on the prisoner involved is sufficient to invoke the protections of the Due Process Clause.” (emphasis in original)).

179. See Trapnell v. Ralston, 819 F.2d 182, 184–185 (8th Cir. 1987) (finding there was no need for a pre-transfer hearing where the transfer was temporary and for evaluation purposes only); United States v. Jones, 811 F.2d 444, 448 (8th Cir. 1987) (finding “a temporary transfer for a psychological evaluation places no more of an imposition on a prisoner than does a transfer for administrative reasons,” and transfers for administrative reasons do not require pre-transfer hearings).

with commitment). In a few states, procedural protections do not have to occur before transfer, but may instead occur promptly after physical transfer.¹⁸⁰

As with challenges to medication over objection, there are limits to a transfer challenge. Transfer to a mental health facility without a hearing is generally not a due process violation when an incarcerated person poses an immediate threat to himself or the general population.¹⁸¹ These transfers are called emergency commitments. However, a hearing must be held as soon as possible after commitment.¹⁸² If it is determined you will be transferred to a psychiatric hospital or unit, you cannot challenge a transfer back to prison after treatment on due process grounds because no liberty interest existed.¹⁸³ For example, in Washington, D.C., prisoners may be moved, with the superintendent's certification, from psychiatric hospitals back to prisons after being restored to health.¹⁸⁴ You should check the laws in your state to determine the necessary steps the state must take to transfer you back to prison.

5. If You Are Transferred to a Hospital or Other Treatment Facility

If you are transferred or committed to a psychiatric facility, you maintain many of the same rights you had in prison, including the right to treatment and the right to adequate medical care. Similarly, if you are confined in a hospital or treatment facility prior to serving your criminal sentence in prison, you may be entitled to have your time spent there count toward your sentence.

(a) How Long Will I Be Held?

Generally, the time spent in commitment is left to the judgment of clinical mental health staff and prison officials, but it cannot be longer than your criminal sentence unless you are first granted significant due process protections.¹⁸⁵ Under New York State law, for example, the psychiatric hospital director may apply for a new commitment after your sentence expires.¹⁸⁶ If this happens in a state where there are requirements set up for a civil commitment proceeding, your criminal sentence is not relevant to any post-sentence confinement, and the State must provide the same procedural safeguards before committing or holding you for psychiatric care that it would if you were not incarcerated.¹⁸⁷ This means that if the State determines you need further commitment and treatment after your prison sentence has ended, you will be treated as a non-incarcerated person. If the psychiatric hospital director successfully extends commitment past your term sentence, you have the right to another hearing before a jury to determine whether commitment to a civilian mental health facility is appropriate.¹⁸⁸

180. See, e.g., Baugh v. Woodward, 808 F.2d 333, 336 (4th Cir. 1987) (finding that the North Carolina Department of Correction does not have to provide a hearing on an incarcerated person's involuntary mental health transfer prior to physical transfer and that a prompt hearing after transfer satisfies due process).

181. See, e.g., Vermont Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 445 A.2d 1122, 1124–1125, 122 N.H. 442, 446 (N.H. 1982) (noting that a hearing can be delayed after transfer to a hospital if the transfer is done to prevent harm to self or others); Luna v. Van Zandt, 554 F. Supp. 68, 72 (S.D. Tx. 1982) (holding that a hearing can take place after the deprivation of a right if there is a compelling interest, such as an immediate potential harm to others); Mignone v. Vincent, 411 F. Supp. 1386, 1389 (S.D.N.Y. 1976) (noting that a hearing can be delayed after transfer to a hospital if the transfer is made to prevent harm to self or others).

182. See, e.g., Mignone v. Vincent, 411 F. Supp. 1386, 1389 (S.D.N.Y. 1976).

183. Jackson v. Fair, 846 F.2d 811, 814–815 (1st Cir. 1988) (holding that as the incarcerated person did not have a liberty interest in remaining at a psychiatric hospital, no hearing was required before returning the prisoner to prison).

184. D.C. CODE ANN. § 24-503(b) (West 2017).

185. Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 110, 86 S. Ct. 760, 762, 15 L. Ed. 2d 620, 623 (1966) (holding that a New York incarcerated person “was further denied equal protection of the laws by his civil commitment to an institution maintained by the Department of Correction beyond the expiration of his prison term without a judicial determination that he is dangerously mentally ill such as that afforded to all so committed except those, like [the prisoner], nearing the expiration of a penal sentence.”).

186. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 402(10), 404(1) (McKinney 2014).

187. Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 110, 86 S. Ct. 760, 762, 15 L. Ed. 2d 620, 623 (1966).

188. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 402(11) (McKinney 2014).

(b) What Happens to My Good-Time Credits?

In some jurisdictions, an incarcerated person may lose the opportunity to earn good-time credits after a mental illness determination and hospitalization.¹⁸⁹ The reasoning that many courts give for this policy is that the goals of hospitalization differ from the goals of imprisonment. Hospitalization is meant to treat incarcerated people with mental illness,¹⁹⁰ while incarceration is intended to punish and also rehabilitate.¹⁹¹ However, the Eighth Circuit found that there is a difference between meritorious credits (credits that are given at the State's discretion) and statutory good-time credits (credits that a state statute specifically grants for particular behavior). Unlike discretionary credits, statutory credits come from state laws. Therefore, a loss of statutory credits based on a mental health assessment could violate your constitutional right to equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment, which prohibits states from applying the law differently to different citizens in the same condition and circumstances.¹⁹²

Even if the law in your jurisdiction does not permit you to continue to earn credits while you are hospitalized, your existing credits may be held in abeyance (paused) during treatment, meaning that all good-time credits that would have been credited will be restored when you are transferred back to prison.¹⁹³ However, if you have existing credits, in many jurisdictions they will not apply until you are restored to health; in other words, you are not entitled to early release if you are still hospitalized on your early release date.¹⁹⁴ Other states, in contrast, do permit you to receive good-time credits even while in the hospital. For example, the Connecticut Supreme Court has found that the language of Connecticut's statute orders the corrections commissioner to apply earned good-time credit to any incarcerated person's sentence,¹⁹⁵ in keeping with the idea that the law should treat equally prisoners with mental illness confined in hospitals and those incarcerated in prisons.¹⁹⁶ Since the law varies according to the statutes of each jurisdiction, you should check the law in your state, or the United States Code if you are in federal prison, to determine what happens to your credits during transfer to a hospital.

(c) Can I Receive Credit for Pre-Sentence Confinement in a Hospital or Treatment Program?

Though the law varies significantly by state regarding whether you can receive custody or conduct credits for time spent and good behavior in institutions other than prisons, there are a few general

189. See, e.g., Urban v. Settle, 298 F.2d 592, 593 (8th Cir. 1962) (per curiam) (finding that an incarcerated person who has "been removed to a hospital for defective delinquents" under federal law to determine mental competency is not entitled to receive further good time for conditional release purposes until, in the judgment of the superintendent of the hospital, he has become "restored to sanity or health"); Bush v. Ciccone, 325 F. Supp. 699, 701 (W.D. Mo. 1971) (holding under the express provisions of 18 U.S.C. § 4241, credit for good time is suspended as to an incarcerated person who has been found by a Board of Examiners to be insane or of unsound mind). But see Sawyer v. Sigler, 320 F. Supp. 690, 699 (D. Neb. 1970) (distinguishing between meritorious good time, which is permissive and may be withheld, and statutory good time, which cannot be denied without violating the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment if the withholding does not result from the incarcerated person's misconduct), aff'd, 445 F.2d 818–819 (8th Cir. 1971). The federal law that these cases mention has changed several times, so you should proceed with care, researching the current case and statutory law. If you are in state custody, you should check your state's statutes.

190. See, e.g., People v. Callahan, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677, 683, 144 Cal. App. 4th 678, 687 (Cal. Ct. App. 2006) (finding that where an incarcerated person was confined pretrial to treat him to restore his competency to stand trial, he could not later recover credit for that time).

191. People v. Smith, 175 Cal. Rptr. 54, 56, 120 Cal. App. 3d 817, 822–823 (Cal. Ct. App. 1981) ("The purposes of the provision for 'good time' credits . . . are [to encourage prisoners] to conform to prison regulations . . . and to make an effort to participate in what may be termed 'rehabilitative activities'" (quoting People v. Saffell, 599 P.2d 92, 97, 25 Cal. 3d 223, 233, 157 Cal. Rptr. 897, 903 (1979)).

192. See Cochran v. Kansas, 316 U.S. 255, 257, 62 S. Ct. 1068, 1070, 86 L. Ed. 1453, 1455 (1942).

193. Dobbs v. Neverson, 393 A.2d 147, 150 n.9 (D.C. Cir. 1978).

194. See, e.g., Dobbs v. Neverson, 393 A.2d 147, 154 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (holding that an incarcerated person transferred from a prison to a hospital under the D.C. transfer statute is not entitled to statutory early release unless restored to mental health).

195. Murray v. Lopes, 529 A.2d 1302, 1305–1306, 205 Conn. 27, 33–35 (Conn. 1987).

196. Murray v. Lopes, 529 A.2d 1302, 1306–1308, 205 Conn. 27, 36–38 (Conn. 1987).

rules you can use to determine if you are entitled to custody credit.¹⁹⁷ First, if the facility you are in before you receive your sentence is the “functional equivalent of a jail,” you may be entitled to credit.¹⁹⁸ Second, some courts make distinctions based on whether the program you are in is voluntary or involuntary.¹⁹⁹ However, these are general rules, so you should make sure to find out how courts have interpreted the law in your state.

6. Credit for Time in a Mental Hospital

If you were housed in a hospital before being sentenced to prison, you might be entitled to custody credit for your time there. State statutes and courts’ interpretations of those laws determine whether you can receive custody credits. Several states have found that, because time in these institutions is similar to being in jail, you should receive credit.²⁰⁰ As one court stated:

“The physical place of confinement is not important as the [incarcerated person] technically continued to be in jail while held in custody at the hospitals. [The incarcerated person] was not free on bail, had no control over his place of custody and was never free to leave the hospitals. For all practical intents and purposes, he was still in jail.”²⁰¹

But other courts have found incarcerated people housed in psychiatric hospitals pre-sentence underwent treatment rather than incarceration and therefore could not receive custody credits for that time.²⁰² These courts reason the two types of confinement are different in kind: imprisonment punishes, while hospitalization or civil commitment provides treatment.²⁰³ So, some courts have

197. Custody credit is statutory credit that prisoners may be awarded for their time spent in confinement prior to trial and sentencing. The reason that many states allow prisoners to count these days as part of their sentence is that it would be unfair to treat defendants who can post bail differently than those who cannot and who therefore have to stay in jail. See, e.g., People v. Callahan, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677, 680–681, 144 Cal. App. 4th 678, 684 (2006) (stating that the purpose of actual custody credit statute is to eliminate unequal treatment of indigent and non-indigent defendants). However, courts have taken differing approaches as to whether to grant that time to prisoners detained for reasons other than inability to post bail or bond, like psychiatric evaluation or drug treatment. This section will discuss some of these approaches so that you can figure out whether you are entitled to credit for any time you spent pre-sentence in an institution other than a jail.

198. Maniccia v. State, 931 So. 2d 1027, 1030, 31 Fla. L. Weekly D1622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006).

199. Maniccia v. State, 931 So. 2d 1027, 1030, 31 Fla. L. Weekly D1622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006) (holding that where confinement is coercive, an incarcerated person is entitled to credit for pre-sentence time in a “lockdown facility”, even if the incarcerated person requested treatment there); State v. Mackley, 552 P.2d 628, 629, 220 Kan. 518, 519 (1976) (per curiam) (finding an incarcerated person in pretrial custody at a hospital where he was not free to leave was effectively in jail and therefore entitled to custody credit for his time there).

200. See, e.g., State v. Mackley, 552 P.2d 628, 629, 220 Kan. 518, 519 (1976) (per curiam) (holding that the word “jail” meant a place of enforced confinement, and included a hospital that the incarcerated person was not free to leave); Maniccia v. State, 931 So. 2d 1027, 1028, 31 Fla. L. Weekly D1622 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006) (holding that pretrial confinement in a “lockdown psychiatric hospital” entitles the incarcerated person to credit for time served); Murray v. Lopes, 529 A.2d 1302, 1305, 205 Conn. 27, 33–34 (1987) (holding that statute entitles incarcerated people confined pre-sentence to credit for time served); People v. Smith, 175 Cal. Rptr. 54, 56, 120 Cal. App. 3d 817, 822 (1981) (finding incarcerated person entitled to credits for time spent in hospital when proceedings were suspended because he was incompetent to stand trial).

201. State v. Mackley, 552 P.2d 628, 629, 220 Kan. 518, 519 (1976) (per curiam).

202. Harkins v. Wyrick, 589 F.2d 387, 391–392 (8th Cir. 1979) (finding incarcerated person’s due process and equal protection rights were not violated when he was not credited for time undergoing evaluation and treatment at a hospital prior to serving his sentence); Makal v. Arizona, 544 F.2d 1030, 1035 (9th Cir. 1976) (holding it did not violate incarcerated person’s rights to deny him credit for time in a psychiatric hospital, where the purpose was treatment rather than punishment, unless state law provides otherwise, which it did not); People v. Callahan, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677, 683, 144 Cal. App. 4th 678, 687 (2006) (finding that where an incarcerated person was confined pretrial for treatment to restore his competency to stand trial, he could not later recover credit for that time); Closs v. S.D. Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 656 N.W.2d 314, 317–319, 2003 S.D. 1, (2003) (holding that because the time that incarcerated person spent in civil commitment was not related to his criminal punishment and because no South Dakota statute provided a right to credit for time served while awaiting trial, court refused to award credits); State v. Sorenson, 617 N.W.2d 146, 147, 150, 2000 S.D. 127, ¶1, ¶17 (2000) (per curiam) (holding that incarcerated person was not entitled to credit for pre-sentence confinement to undergo psychiatric evaluation unless he remained in state custody only because he could not afford to post bail).

203. See Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346, 361–362, 117 S. Ct. 2072, 2082, 138 L. Ed. 2d 501, 515 (1997); see also Harkins v. Wyrick, 589 F.2d 387, 392 (8th Cir. 1979) (holding that time in hospital was rehabilitative, not punitive); Makal v. Arizona, 544 F.2d 1030, 1035 (9th Cir. 1976) (“The state hospital was established for the confinement, treatment, and rehabilitation of the mentally ill . . . [not] for purposes of punishment . . .”); People determined awarding credits for time in non-penal institutions toward prison sentences does not make sense.

7. Credit for Time in Drug Treatment

The law varies as to whether you may receive credit for time you spent in narcotics or alcohol treatment prior to serving your sentence. Some states permit credit,²⁰⁴ and some states do not.²⁰⁵ Additionally, like in the hospitalization context, whether you may count the days in treatment toward your sentence often depends on the nature of the institution and the terms of your confinement there, such as whether or not you will be returned to prison if you fail to complete the program.²⁰⁶ Typically, the court that sentences you is free to determine whether to award you credit.²⁰⁷

D. Conditions of Confinement for Prisoners with Mental Illness

This Part explains how your mental health may be a factor in determining conditions of confinement and in disciplinary proceedings. Section 1 details the rights of incarcerated people who are subjected to isolation and solitary confinement. This includes an explanation of the steps taken by many states to exclude prisoners with serious mental illness from isolated confinement and to increase mental health services for prisoners held in restrictive settings. Section 2 explains your right to have mental health considered in disciplinary proceedings. Some states require that prison administrators consider an incarcerated person's mental health when deciding whether and how to sanction incarcerated people for disciplinary misconduct.

1. Isolation and Solitary Confinement

Courts have recognized that isolating incarcerated people with mental illness in Special Housing Units (SHUs) or "keep-lock" for various reasons—among them protection or discipline—is a harmful

v. Callahan, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677, 683, 144 Cal. App. 4th 678, 687 (2006) (finding that prisoner's confinement was "nonpenal and treatment oriented").

204. See, e.g., State v. Sevelin, 554 N.W.2d 521, 523, 204 Wis. 2d 127, 132–133 (Wis. Ct. App. 1996) (finding that state statute's definition of "custody" for the purpose of determining whether the incarcerated person should get pre-sentence credit includes those temporarily outside of a correctional institution in order to receive medical care, which included treatment for alcoholism); Lock v. State, 609 P.2d 539, 543–546 (Alaska 1980) (interpreting statute granting credit for time "in custody" to include time in non-penal rehabilitation centers, since these institutions also involve restraints on liberty); People v. Rodgers, 144 Cal. Rptr. 602, 606, 79 Cal. App. 3d 26, 33 (1978) (holding "custody" includes participation in live-in drug treatment programs, and so defendant was entitled to credit for time spent in such a program).

205. See, e.g., Pennington v. State, 398 So. 2d 815, 817 (Fla. 1981) (holding that because the purpose of "[h]alfway houses, rehabilitative centers, and state hospitals . . . is structured rehabilitation and treatment, not incarceration," incarcerated person who attended live-in drug treatment as a condition of probation was not entitled to statutory credit for time spent there prior to sentencing); Commonwealth v. Fowler, 930 A.2d 586, 597–598, 2007 Pa. Super. 219, ¶27–29 (2007) (holding that incarcerated person was not "in custody," within the meaning of the statute granting credit for time in custody prior to sentence, where he participated in drug treatment program that did not involve lock-down but did require reinstatement of court case if the defendant breached the terms of his program); State v. Vasquez, 736 P.2d 803, 804–805, 153 Ariz. 320, 321–322 (Ct. App. 1987) (holding that only time spent "in the actual or constructive control of jail or prison officials" qualifies as "in custody" for the purposes of the credit statutes, and so defendant's time in a residential treatment program under the supervision of his probation officer did not qualify for credit); People v. Scott, 548 N.W.2d 678, 680, 216 Mich. App. 196, 200–201 (1996) (holding that "the sentencing credit statute does not entitle that defendant to sentencing credit for his time in the [rehabilitative] treatment facility").

206. See, e.g., Lock v. State, 609 P.2d 539, 546 (Alaska 1980) (holding that because defendant would be returned to prison if he violated the terms of the drug treatment program, he is entitled to credit for time spent in that program).

207. See, e.g., Commonwealth v. Fowler, 930 A.2d 586, 596, 2007 Pa. Super. 219, 25 (2007) (noting that "it is within the trial court's discretion whether to credit time spent in an institutionalized rehabilitation and treatment program as time served 'in custody'").

practice.²⁰⁸ Although isolation of prisoners with mental illness is not unconstitutional as a rule,²⁰⁹ it is subject to Eighth Amendment limitations.²¹⁰ There are certain conditions under which isolating incarcerated people with mental illness is unconstitutional. When those conditions exist, courts will be more likely to intervene to help incarcerated people. For instance, courts will grow more suspicious if incarcerated people are segregated indefinitely without review²¹¹ or if there is a possibility that an incarcerated person will experience psychological harm.²¹² Several federal courts have found that, even though segregation does not by itself violate the Constitution, isolation can pose particular risks for those with mental illness or on the verge of developing mental illness.²¹³ For these groups, isolation can provide extreme stress and worsen their conditions,²¹⁴ and therefore violates their rights.²¹⁵

208. It has been known for many years that isolated confinement—the deprivation of human contact and other sensory and intellectual stimulation—can have disastrous consequences. See In re Medley, 134 U.S. 160, 168, 10 S. Ct. 384, 386, 33 L. Ed. 835, 839 (1890) (finding that “[a] considerable number of the prisoners fell, after even a short confinement, into a [state of foolishness], from which it was next to impossible to arouse them, and others became violently insane; others, still, committed suicide; while those who stood the ordeal better were not generally reformed, and in most cases did not recover sufficient mental activity to be of any subsequent service to the community”); see also Davenport v. DeRobertis, 844 F.2d 1310, 1316 (7th Cir. 1988) (“[T]here is plenty of medical and psychological literature concerning the ill effects of solitary confinement (of which segregation is a variant.”). Modern courts have reiterated these consequences in addressing present-day forms of isolated confinement. See, e.g., Langley v. Coughlin, 715 F. Supp. 522, 540 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (citing expert’s affidavit regarding effects of SHU placement on individuals with mental disorders); Baraldini v. Meese, 691 F. Supp. 432, 446–447 (D.D.C. 1988) (citing expert testimony on sensory disturbance, perceptual distortions, and other psychological effects of segregation), rev’d on other grounds sub nom. Baraldini v. Thornburgh, 884 F.2d 615, 280 U.S. App. D.C. 176 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Bono v. Saxbe, 450 F. Supp. 934, 946 (E.D. Ill. 1978) (“Plaintiffs’ uncontroverted evidence showed the debilitating mental effect on those inmates confined to the control unit.”), aff’d in part and remanded in part on other grounds, 620 F.2d 609 (7th Cir. 1980); Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1235 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (concluding, after hearing testimony from experts in corrections and mental health, that “many, if not most, inmates in the SHU experience some degree of psychological trauma in reaction to their extreme social isolation and the severely restricted environmental stimulation in the SHU”), rev’d in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999).

209. See, e.g., Jackson v. Meachum, 699 F.2d 578, 583 (1st Cir. 1983) (finding that an incarcerated person with mental illness had no constitutional right to contact with other incarcerated people, even if it would have therapeutic value); Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1261 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (“[W]e are not persuaded that the SHU, as currently operated, violates [8th] Amendment standards vis-a-vis all inmates.”), rev’d in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999).

210. See, e.g., Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 34–35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993) (holding that prison conditions that “pose an unreasonable risk of serious damage to [a prisoner’s] future health” may violate the 8th Amendment); Casey v. Lewis, 834 F. Supp. 1477, 1548–1549 (D. Ariz. 1993) (condemning placement and retention of incarcerated people with mental illness on lockdown); Langley v. Coughlin, 715 F. Supp. 522, 540 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (holding that psychiatric evidence that prison officials fail to screen out from SHU “those individuals who, by virtue of their mental condition, are likely to be severely and adversely affected by placement there” raises a triable 8th Amendment issue); Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 868 (D.D.C. 1989) (holding that inmates with mental health problems must be placed in a separate area or a hospital and not in administrative/punitive segregation area), rev’d in part sub nom. Brogdsdale v. Barry, 926 F.2d 1184, 1191 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

211. See Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 685–687, 98 S. Ct. 2565, 2570–2571, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522, 531–532 (1978) (length of time in isolation should be considered when determining whether confinement there violates the 8th Amendment ban on cruel and unusual punishment); see also Jackson v. Meachum, 699 F.2d 578, 584–585 (1st Cir. 1983) (suggesting courts should be more willing to inquire where an incarcerated person has been held for a long period without a time limit).

212. Jackson v. Meachum, 699 F.2d 578, 584–585 (1st Cir. 1983) (urging that officials continue to monitor incarcerated people in segregation and that courts intervene in cases where there is evidence of psychological harm).

213. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1265 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (finding the risk of isolating incarcerated people with mental illness or those likely to develop mental illness is unreasonable and violates the 8th Amendment), rev’d in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999); Jones’El v. Berge, 164 F. Supp. 2d 1096, 1125–1126 (W.D. Wis. 2001) (granting preliminary injunction requiring removal of those with serious mental illness from “supermax” prison, which isolates incarcerated people); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 343 (5th Cir. 2004) (“[T]he isolation and idleness of Death Row combined with the squalor, poor hygiene, temperature, and noise of extremely psychotic prisoners create an environment ‘toxic’ to the prisoners’ mental health.”); Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 650 F. Supp. 619, 630 (D.D.C. 1986) (holding that housing incarcerated people with mental illness in segregation unit is inappropriate), on remand to Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 868 (D.D.C. 1989).

214. Fred Cohen, The Mentally Disordered Inmate and the Law 11–8 (1998) (“Social science and clinical literature have consistently reported that when human beings are subjected to social isolation and reduced environmental stimulation, they may deteriorate mentally.”).

215. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1265 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding that confining those with marginal

However, to succeed on a claim that isolation violated your rights, you will need to show more than mild or generalized psychological pain.²¹⁶

A growing number of states have taken steps to exclude incarcerated people with serious mental illness from some isolated confinement housing areas and to increase mental health services for incarcerated people with serious mental illness who are held in restrictive settings. Courts have approved remedies, many in the form of settlement agreements, for incarcerated people with mental illness in isolation. In New Jersey, incarcerated people must be released from administrative segregation if they have a mental illness history and it appears that ongoing confinement there would harm them.²¹⁷ The Mississippi Department of Corrections was ordered to provide annual assessments and better mental health care for incarcerated people on death row who were subject to conditions of isolation.²¹⁸ In California, Madrid v. Gomez resulted in incarcerated people with serious mental illness being excluded from the Pelican Bay prison's SHU.²¹⁹ In Connecticut, the settlement of Connecticut Office of Protection & Advocacy for Persons with Disabilities v. Choinski called for exclusion of incarcerated people with serious mental illness from the Northern Correctional Institution.²²⁰ And, in Wisconsin, the settlement in Jones'El v. Berge excluded incarcerated people with serious mental illness from super-maximum security housing.²²¹

In New York, advocates with the goal of improving mental health treatment in state prisons brought the case Disability Advocates, Inc. v. New York State Office of Mental Health.²²² The suit was brought state-wide and alleged that because of inadequate mental health treatment, incarcerated people with mental illness were trapped in the disciplinary process and ended up in isolated confinement settings, which caused them to deteriorate psychiatrically. The case resulted in a private settlement agreement that included among its provisions: a minimum of two hours per day of out-of-cell treatment or programming for incarcerated people with serious mental illness confined in SHU, universal and improved mental health screening of all incarcerated people upon admission to prison, creation and expansion of residential mental health programs, required and improved suicide prevention assessments upon admission to SHU, and improved treatment and conditions for incarcerated people in psychiatric crisis in observation cells. A stated goal of this agreement was to treat rather than isolate and punish incarcerated people with serious mental health needs. This settlement applies only to incarcerated people in New York State. Also, note that because this is a private settlement agreement, it does not create an individual cause of action, and a court did not order its terms. If you intend to bring a lawsuit based on the failure of New York to provide necessary mental health treatment to you in isolation, you must exhaust your administrative remedies and file a separate lawsuit. If you are an incarcerated person in New York State and are concerned you are not or full mental illness causes undue suffering for these groups), rev'd in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999).

216. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1263–64 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding incarcerated people must show more than loneliness, boredom, or mild depression to state a claim of cruel and unusual punishment), rev'd in part on other grounds, 190 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 1999).

217. D.M. v. Terhune, 67 F. Supp. 2d 401, 403 (D.N.J. 1999) (“The Special Administrative Segregation Review Committee shall release the prisoner from Administrative Segregation if the prisoner has a history of mental illness and the Committee decides that continued confinement in the unit would be harmful to the prisoner’s mental health.”).

218. Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 342 (5th Cir. 2004) (ordering mental health examinations and care for death row incarcerated people).

219. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1265–1266 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (finding that placing incarcerated people with mental illness within SHU would result in an unreasonable risk of exacerbating their illnesses).

220. Connecticut Office of Protection & Advocacy for Persons with Disabilities v. Choinski, No. 3:03-cv-1352 (RNC) (D. Conn. 2004) (private settlement agreement), available at <http://www.aclu.org/FilesPDFs/f07s2zl.pdf> (last visited Feb. 1, 2020).

221. Jones'El v. Berge, 164 F. Supp. 2d 1096, 1125–1126 (W.D. Wis. 2001) (granting preliminary injunction requiring removal of those with serious mental illness from “supermax” prison, which isolates incarcerated people).

222. Disability Advocates, Inc. v. New York State Office of Mental Health, No. 1:02-cv-04002 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (private settlement agreement), available at <https://www.clearinghouse.net/chDocs/public/PC-NY-0048-0002.pdf> (last visited Feb. 1, 2020).

receiving services required by the settlement, you may write to the lawyers who are enforcing this agreement. Appendix B contains a list of organizations to contact for help.

In 2008, the New York Legislature passed and the Governor signed bill S.333/A.4870 into law. This statute amends various sections of the New York Correction Law, expanding on some of the provisions of the settlement agreement and adopting others. Notably, it defines “mental illness,”²²³ provides for incarcerated people with serious mental illness to receive therapy and programming in environments that meet their clinical needs, and specifies that mentally ill incarcerated people will not be placed in segregated confinement except in exceptional circumstances.²²⁴

2. Your Right to Have Mental Health Considered in Disciplinary Proceedings

Mental health may be relevant in a prison disciplinary proceeding in three separate but related ways: whether the incarcerated person is mentally competent to proceed with the hearing; whether the incarcerated person was responsible for conduct at the time of the incident (or should not be held responsible because of his mental state at the time); and whether the incarcerated person’s mental status should be considered to lessen the penalty or in determining what the penalty should be. When there is a connection between mental illness and disciplinary misconduct, an incarcerated person with serious mental illness might commit a disciplinary infraction that jeopardizes chances for parole, results in lost good time credits,²²⁵ or results in isolated confinement.²²⁶ Some states recognize the relevance of mental health and require that prison administrators consider an incarcerated person’s mental health during disciplinary proceedings when deciding whether to sanction incarcerated people and, if so, how to sanction them. In New Jersey, the Department of Corrections implemented disciplinary regulations following a lawsuit stating that hearing officers must submit the names of any incarcerated people facing disciplinary hearings to mental health staff to find out whether mental illness might have played a role in the incarcerated person’s behavior.²²⁷ The hearing officer must take all information available to him into account in deciding whether to request a psychiatric evaluation and in deciding whether to impose punishment or refer the incarcerated people to a mental health unit instead of disciplining him.²²⁸

The New York State courts also recognize that evidence of an incarcerated person’s poor mental health at the time of the incident which led to disciplinary charges should be considered at prison disciplinary hearings.²²⁹ The seriousness of the offense or the number of incidents should not interfere

223. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 400 (McKinney 2014).

224. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 401(1) (McKinney 2014).

225. The effect of such discipline is a longer period of incarceration for these incarcerated people because of psychiatric disabilities. Suits challenging these practices have included claims based on the Americans with Disabilities Act and Rehabilitation Act. For more information on bringing suit under these acts, see JLM, Chapter 28, “Rights of Incarcerated People With Disabilities.”

226. Some courts clearly recognize the psychological effects of prolonged isolation as relevant to determining whether the discipline imposed constitutes an atypical and significant hardship under Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429–430 (1995). See, e.g., Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 232 (2d Cir. 2000) (advising district courts in the Second Circuit that, in cases challenging SHU confinement, evidence of psychological effects of prolonged confinement in isolation is relevant); Lee v. Coughlin, 26 F. Supp. 2d 615, 637 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (finding that 376 days in SHU was atypical and significant and also observing that “[t]he effect of prolonged isolation on inmates has been repeatedly confirmed in medical and scientific studies”); McClary v. Kelly, 4 F. Supp. 2d 195, 205–208 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding that evidence of psychological harm (both expert and the plaintiff’s own testimony) created a triable issue under the Sandin “atypical and significant” standard).

227. D.M. v. Terhune, 67 F. Supp. 2d 401, 403 (D.N.J. 1999) (stating that mental health staff will be given a list of all incarcerated people with pending disciplinary charges and then will inform the disciplinary hearing officer before the hearing that the incarcerated person is undergoing mental health treatment).

228. D.M. v. Terhune, 67 F. Supp. 2d 401, 403 (D.N.J. 1999).

229. Huggins v. Coughlin, 155 A.D.2d 844, 845, 548 N.Y.S.2d 105, 106–107 (3d Dept. 1989) (determining that the hearing officer is required to consider the incarcerated person’s mental condition in making the disciplinary disposition when the inmate’s mental state is at issue because “that principle is in conformity with the well-established proposition that evidence in mitigation of the penalty to be imposed or that which raises a possible excuse defense to the charged violation is relevant and material in a disciplinary proceeding”), aff’d 76 N.Y.2d 904, 905, 563 N.E.2d 281, 282, 561 N.Y.S.2d 910, 911 (1990); People ex rel. Reed v. Scully, 140 Misc. 2d 379, 382, 531 N.Y.S.2d 196, 199 (Sup. Ct. Oneida County 1988) (“[T]he mental competence and mental illness of a prisoner must be considered during the prison disciplinary process where a Penal Law § 40.15 adjudication has with a determination that alleged misconduct was caused by deteriorating mental health.²³⁰ Litigation in New York²³¹ led to amendment of existing state-wide regulations that govern procedures at prison disciplinary hearings. The amendments contain criteria that establish when an incarcerated person's mental state must be considered at the hearing.²³² These amendments also establish that the hearing officer must ask the incarcerated person and other witnesses about his condition and interview an Office of Mental Health doctor concerning the incarcerated person's condition at the time of the incident and the time of the hearing.²³³ The amendments also created committees with full-time mental health staff at the maximum security prisons.²³⁴ The committees review people incarcerated in the SHU every two weeks and may recommend restoration of privileges, reduction of SHU term, housing reassignment, medication adjustment, or commitment to a psychiatric hospital.²³⁵ Mental illness is taken into consideration in determining whether to dismiss, make a finding of guilt, or lessen any penalty imposed.²³⁶ The settlement reached as a part of *Disability Advocates, Inc. v. New York State Office of Mental Health*²³⁷ provides for additional changes to the disciplinary process including expansion of case management committees to additional prisons, multiple reviews of SHU sentences for incarcerated people receiving mental health services, restrictions on charging incarcerated people with serious mental illness for acts of self-harm, and restrictions on punishing incarcerated people with serious mental illness with the "loaf" (a restricted diet). These changes are contained in a private settlement agreement. They apply only to incarcerated people in New York State. Also, note that the private settlement agreement does not create an individual cause of action and its terms were not ordered by the court. If you intend to bring a lawsuit based on the failure of New York to follow these procedures, you must exhaust your administrative remedies and file a separate lawsuit. If you are an incarcerated person in New York State prison and are concerned that you are not receiving considerations required by the settlement, you may write to the lawyers who are enforcing this agreement. Appendix B contains a list of organizations to contact for help.

For more information on your rights at disciplinary hearings, please see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings." In addition, because much of the information in this section is specific to New York and New Jersey, you should research the law in your own state if you live elsewhere.

been made or a well-documented history of serious psychiatric problems calls the prisoner's mental health into question."); see also Powell v. Coughlin, 953 F.2d 744, 749 (2d Cir. 1991) (upholding Office of Mental Health policy that testimony at prison disciplinary hearings provided by clinical staff concerning an incarcerated person's mental health status must be done outside the presence of the incarcerated person, as reasonably related to legitimate penological interests) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987), superseded by statute on other grounds). The requirement is now part of New York State regulations. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(c) (2020).

230. Gittens v. Coughlin, 143 Misc. 2d 748, 750–751, 541 N.Y.S.2d 718, 719–720 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1989) (expunging incarcerated person's disciplinary record where at each hearing the incarcerated person was charged with aggressive behavior similar to behavior for which he was receiving psychiatric treatment; mental illness was not taken into account; there was no consideration of whether he was competent to participate in the hearing; his psychiatric history was well-documented; he had been committed to the forensic psychiatric hospital seventeen times; and the hearing officer did not inquire, based on his nonattendance at hearings, into whether or not he was competent); Trujillo v. LeFevre, 130 Misc. 2d 1016, 1017, 498 N.Y.S.2d 696, 698 (Sup. Ct. Clinton County 1986) ("[A]ny determination by the mental health unit that the petitioner's lack of mental health was a causal factor in his misbehavior should apply equally to all charges.").

231. See, e.g., Anderson v. Goord, 87-cv-141 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (challenging the adequacy of mental health treatment for incarcerated people in disciplinary housing units at Attica and Auburn Correctional Facilities).

232. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(b)(1) (2020).

233. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(c)(3) (2020).

234. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 310.1 (2020).

235. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 310.3 (2020).

236. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(f) (2020).

237. Disability Advocates, Inc. v. N.Y. Office of Mental Health, No. 1:02-cv-04002 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (providing changes under private settlement agreement to the disciplinary process for incarcerated people in New York). For a brief summary of settlement provisions, visit the case profile on The Civil Rights Litigation Clearinghouse, University of Michigan School of Law website, available at <http://www.clearinghouse.net/detail.php?id=5560> (last visited Feb. 1, 2020).

E. Special Considerations for Pretrial Detainees

Pretrial detainees are individuals in custody who have not yet been convicted. Because they are considered “innocent until proven guilty,”²³⁸ pretrial detainees enjoy many of the rights they would have were they not in jail. Put another way, pretrial detainees, unlike convicted incarcerated people, may not be punished, and can claim that jail practices subjecting them to punishment violate their due process rights to be found guilty before punishment is inflicted.²³⁹ In Bell v. Wolfish, the Supreme Court declared that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment governs whether conditions of confinement violate the rights of incarcerated people.²⁴⁰ The Court established in Bell that jail conditions should not be assessed under the Eighth Amendment, which bans cruel and unusual punishment,²⁴¹ because pretrial detainees cannot be punished at all.²⁴² Instead, claims are assessed under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. For more information about filing a constitutional claim under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

Note that the Supreme Court has also made it clear that losing your liberty by confinement before trial does not violate the Constitution; it is only when your loss of liberty goes beyond what necessarily comes with detention that incarcerated people may raise claims that their rights have been violated.²⁴³ The Bell rule shapes most of the law surrounding your rights as a pretrial detainee to adequate mental health care and to avoid unwanted treatment.

1. Your Right as a Pretrial Detainee to Psychiatric Medical Care

In City of Revere v. Massachusetts General Hospital, the Supreme Court applied the Bell v. Wolfish rule, that pretrial detainees are entitled to be free of punishment under the Due Process Clause, to the medical care context. In that case, the Court found the Due Process Clause requires the government to provide medical care to pretrial detainees in its custody, and those detainees must receive protections “at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections available to a convicted incarcerated person.”²⁴⁴ Pretrial detainees’ claims that they have been denied adequate medical care are assessed under the Due Process Clause of the Constitution, rather than under the Eighth Amendment.²⁴⁵ However, many circuit courts have imported Estelle v. Gamble’s²⁴⁶ “deliberate indifference” test, which is based on the Eighth Amendment, to evaluate pretrial detainees’ claims.²⁴⁷

238. See, e.g., Campbell v. McGruder, 580 F.2d 521, 527 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (pretrial detainees are presumed innocent and therefore may not be punished).

239. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) (holding that conditions of confinement should be evaluated for whether they inflict punishment on incarcerated people without due process).

240. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) (“[U]nder the Due Process Clause, a detainee may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt.”).

241. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII (“Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.”) (emphasis added).

242. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872 n.16, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 n.16 (1979) (“Due process requires that a pretrial detainee not be punished.”).

243. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468 (1979) (“A court must decide whether the disability is imposed for the purpose of punishment or whether it is but an incident of some other legitimate governmental purpose.”).

244. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983) (emphasis added).

245. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872 n.16, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 n.16 (1979) (“[The] State does not acquire the power to punish with which the [8th] Amendment is concerned until after it has secured a formal adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of law. Where the State seeks to impose punishment without such an adjudication, the pertinent constitutional guarantee is the Due Process Clause of the [14th] Amendment.”) (quoting Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 671–672 n.40 (1977)).

246. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 107, 97 S. Ct. 285, 293, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262 (1976) (finding that “[a] medical decision not to order an X-ray, or like measures, does not represent cruel and unusual punishment. At most it is medical malpractice.”). For more information on the deliberate indifference standard, which requires showing more than negligence, please see Part B(2) of this Chapter.

247. See, e.g., Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10–12 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that jail officials violated detainees’ rights when they exhibited deliberate indifference to medical needs); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987, 990–992 (4th Cir. 1992) (finding deliberate indifference is the proper standard under which to assess

Some courts have found delaying treatment for pretrial detainees violates due process because delay punishes detainees and shows deliberate indifference to the serious medical needs of the detainees.²⁴⁸

The deliberate indifference test is subjective, not objective.²⁴⁹ This means for an official to be found “deliberately indifferent,” the official must have been aware there was a substantial risk of serious harm but failed to respond reasonably to the risk.²⁵⁰ The official’s conduct must go beyond mere negligence.²⁵¹

The bottom line is that as a pretrial detainee, you have at least the same rights that a convicted incarcerated person has to adequate and timely medical and psychiatric care. Your right comes from the Fourteenth Amendment, and may come from state statutes.²⁵² So, before filing your complaint, you should find out what the law is in your state.

(a) Your Right to Protection from Self-Harm and to Screening for Mental Illness

One application of the right to mental health care is the right to protection from self-harm and suicide. As a general rule, courts have found that jail staff and administrators have a duty to protect pretrial detainees²⁵³ and/or provide them with adequate psychiatric care.²⁵⁴ Jail officials are liable for detainees’ rights to medical and mental health care); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1186–1187 (5th Cir. 1986) (finding pretrial detainees are entitled to at least the level of medical care required under the deliberate indifference test); Heflin v. Stewart County, 958 F.2d 709, 714–717 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that pretrial detainees must show jail acted with deliberate indifference to serious medical needs), overruled on other grounds by Monzon v. Parmer County, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43798 (N.D. Tex. June 15, 2007) (unpublished); Hall v. Ryan, 957 F.2d 402, 404–405 (7th Cir. 1992) (finding that pretrial detainees are at least entitled to protection from jailers’ deliberate indifference); Bell v. Stigers, 937 F.2d 1340, 1342–1343 (8th Cir. 1991) (holding that under either the 8th or 14th Amendments, deliberate indifference is the appropriate standard for assessing pretrial detainees’ claims); Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1441 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (finding deliberate indifference is the appropriate test for pretrial detainees’ claims, but distinguishing other levels of culpability in the prison context); Howard v. Dickerson, 34 F.3d 978, 980 (10th Cir. 1994) (holding deliberate indifference test applies to pretrial detainees); Cottrell v. Caldwell, 85 F.3d 1480, 1490–1491 (11th Cir. 1996) (rejecting a pretrial detainee’s mistreatment claim because of a failure to show subjective deliberate indifference).

248. Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1443 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (“We therefore hold that deliberate indifference is the level of culpability that pretrial detainees must establish for a violation of their personal security interests under the fourteenth amendment. We also hold that conduct that is so wanton or reckless with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur . . . will also suffice to establish liability.”) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Terry v. Hill, 232 F. Supp. 2d 934, 943–944 (E.D. Ark. 2002) (holding it violates due process and the 8th Amendment to subject pretrial detainees to an average wait of over eight months for admission to a hospital for mental health care); Swan v. Daniels, 923 F. Supp. 626, 631 (D. Del. 1995) (finding the court could apply either the 8th or 14th Amendment to assess incarcerated person’s claims, since both amendments provide equivalent protection).

249. See, e.g., Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) (“[A] finding of deliberate indifference requires . . . that defendant’s knowledge of a large risk can be inferred.”) (citation omitted); Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 636 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (“We hold that the episodic act or omission of a state jail official does not violate a pretrial detainee’s due process right to medical care or protection from suicide unless the official acted or failed to act with subjective deliberate indifference to the detainee’s rights.”); Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–155 (6th Cir. 1995).

250. Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–155 (6th Cir. 1995) (adopting and applying the Farmer v. Brennan subjective deliberate indifference test to a pretrial detainee’s claim).

251. Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–155 (6th Cir. 1995) (adopting and applying the Farmer v. Brennan subjective deliberate indifference test to a pretrial detainee’s claim).

252. See, e.g., N.Y. CORR. LAW § 505 (McKinney 2014) (establishing a provision of routine medical, dental and mental health services); 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. 125/17 (2019) ((requiring wardens to provide medical treatment necessary for all incarcerated people in their care).

253. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 649 (5th Cir. 1996) (holding that the state has a duty to provide mental health care to suicidal pretrial detainees where to deny it would suggest deliberate indifference); Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) (“It is clearly established . . . that jail officials violate the due process rights of their detainees if they exhibit a deliberate indifference to the medical needs of the detainees that is tantamount to an intent to punish.”); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987, 990–991 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding that a pretrial detainee who had committed suicide was entitled to medical care, and its denial could be assessed under the deliberate indifference standard); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1187 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding that jail officials had a duty not to be deliberately indifferent to an inmate’s psychiatric needs).

254. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 649 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (holding that the state has a duty to provide mental health care to suicidal pretrial detainees where to deny it would suggest deliberate indifference); Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) (“It is clearly established . . . that jail officials violate the due process rights of their detainees if they exhibit a deliberate indifference to the medical needs of the detainees that is tantamount to an intent to punish.”); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987, 990–991 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding failing to prevent a suicide or a suicide attempt only if they knew or should have known that an incarcerated person was suicidal.²⁵⁵ The standard that courts typically apply to determine if the State failed to protect incarcerated people from themselves or failed to provide mental health care is “deliberate indifference,”²⁵⁶ which is outlined in Parts E(1)(a) and B(2) of this Chapter. In a case of self-harm, “deliberate indifference” requires a strong likelihood that self-infliction of harm will occur.”²⁵⁷

Similarly, courts have not established a clear rule requiring screening for mental health problems or suicidal tendencies upon arrival at a jail. Some courts have held incoming incarcerated people must be screened so that they can be provided with mental health care.²⁵⁸ Other courts have found there is no duty to screen.²⁵⁹

(b) Your Right to Continuation of Drug Treatment

Although prisons are not usually required to offer specific types of treatment like methadone maintenance,²⁶⁰ you do have a protected liberty interest in treatments that you are already receiving at the time you begin your incarceration. Since pretrial detainees retain many of their rights, any unnecessary deprivation of liberty—like withdrawing methadone—violates their due process rights.²⁶¹ Additionally, withdrawal pain can be considered punishment, which is not allowed prior to trial or plea.²⁶² The only limit on this right is if the government can claim that its interest in ensuring, for example, jail security or your presence at trial²⁶³ overrides your interest in liberty. In addition to due process, if you are detained rather than released and are being denied methadone, you may be able to claim that you are not being treated the same as pretrial defendants who are out on pretrial release.²⁶⁴ that a pretrial detainee who had committed suicide was entitled to medical care, and its denial could be assessed under the deliberate indifference standard); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1187 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding that jail officials had a duty not to be deliberately indifferent to an inmate’s psychiatric needs).

255. Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10–11 (1st Cir. 1991).

256. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 643 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (adopting a test of deliberate indifference for episodic acts of inadequate medical care or failure to protect).

257. Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) (quoting Torraco v. Maloney, 923 F.2d 231, 236 (1st Cir. 1991)).

258. Campbell v. McGruder, 580 F.2d 521, 548–550 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (creating an affirmative duty to screen pretrial detainees displaying unusual behavior for mental illness, and requiring treatment for their medical needs); Alberti v. Sheriff of Harris County, 406 F. Supp. 649, 677 (S.D. Tex. 1975) (ordering that jail establish an intake screening process to detect alcohol and drug abuse, and mental illness).

259. Belcher v. Oliver, 898 F.2d 32, 34–35 (4th Cir. 1990) (holding detainee’s right to be free from punishment did not include right to be screened for mental illness or suicide risk); Gagne v. City of Galveston, 805 F.2d 558, 560 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding arresting officer had no duty to screen for suicidal tendencies); Danese v. Asman, 875 F.2d 1239, 1244 (6th Cir. 1989) (“It is one thing to ignore someone who has a serious injury and is asking for medical help; it is another to be required to screen prisoners correctly to find out if they need help.”); Estate of Cartwright v. City of Concord, 856 F.2d 1437, 1439 (9th Cir. 1988) (upholding a finding that did not impose liability for failure to screen for mental illness).

260. See Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1188 (3d Cir. 1978) (“There is no constitutional right to methadone.”); Hines v. Anderson, 439 F. Supp. 12, 17 (D. Minn. 1977) (finding no requirement that prison administer methadone as part of a drug maintenance program).

261. Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1189 (3d Cir. 1978) (finding that under the circumstances, the pretrial detainee’s methadone treatment should have continued); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311–312 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (holding that it violates due process to deny incarcerated person the right to continue methadone treatment); see generally Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) (applying the Due Process Clause to assess pretrial detainees’ conditions of confinement claims).

262. See Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1187 (3d Cir. 1978) (“A detainee . . . may not be ‘punished’ at all.”); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (“[A] pretrial detainee should not be subjected to . . . punishment or loss.”).

263. Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1189 (3d Cir. 1978) (providing that the state can only override an incarcerated person’s liberty interest in limited circumstances: those inherent to confinement, necessary to guarantee jail security, or needed to ensure defendant’s presence at trial); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (finding pretrial detainees should lose only those liberties incident to confinement).

264. Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 312 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (holding that those detained pretrial should not suffer greater deprivations—other than confinement—than those released pending trial).

2. Unwanted Treatment as a Pretrial Detainee

Just as you have the right to refuse medication while you are in prison,²⁶⁵ you have the right to refuse treatment if you are a detainee awaiting trial.²⁶⁶ However, your right to refuse medication is not absolute. Even though you have more rights as a detainee than as a convicted incarcerated person, the nature of the government interest in giving you medication is unique in this context. Specifically, the government may give you medication before trial in order to make you competent to stand trial.²⁶⁷ However, the government may do this only if several conditions are met.²⁶⁸ Similarly, there are several procedural checks in place to make sure that medicating you is absolutely necessary.²⁶⁹ If you are a detainee in federal custody, for example, you are entitled to an administrative hearing for which you had prior notice and are provided representation, and at which you may appear, present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, and hear the testimony of your treating mental health professional.²⁷⁰ You also may appeal a decision that you do not like.²⁷¹ The reason that there are so many checks is that you have a strong interest in defining your own treatment. You also have a strong interest in conducting your defense.²⁷² Thus, courts will be very careful to make sure that your interests are appropriately balanced against the government's interests.²⁷³

(a) The Sell Test: Conditions the Government Must Meet Before Medicating You

In Sell v. United States,²⁷⁴ the Supreme Court created the test that determines when it may be appropriate for the government to forcibly medicate you prior to trial. You may be medicated for serious but non-violent crimes. This test also determines when it violates your rights to be medicated prior to trial. There, the Court required the government to comply with all of the following conditions before medicating the pretrial detainee:

(i) Important Government Interests Are at Stake.²⁷⁵

The Court has held that determining a defendant's guilt or innocence for a "serious crime" is an important government interest.²⁷⁶ However, there is no clear rule defining what "serious" means. Courts may measure seriousness based on the sentence to which the charged crime exposes you.²⁷⁷

265. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990) (finding incarcerated person had a protected liberty interest under the Due Process Clause in avoiding unwanted medication).

266. Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 490 (1992) (holding lower court erred by not acknowledging criminal defendant's liberty interest in avoiding unwanted antipsychotic drugs); see generally Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 545, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1877, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 472 (1979) (holding that pretrial detainees enjoy at least as much protection as convicted incarcerated people).

267. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 169, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2178, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 205 (2003) (concluding that the government may administer antipsychotic drugs to pretrial detainees in limited circumstances). In prison, in contrast, the government interest is often defined in terms of avoiding harm to self or others. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 227, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1039–1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 202 (1990).

268. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180–181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211–213 (2003) (establishing a multi-part test for when a detainee may be medicated to restore competence to stand trial).

269. United States v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 955 (6th Cir. 1998) (ordering a hearing before a judge to decide whether to medicate defendant before trial).

270. 28 C.F.R. § 549.46(a) (2020).

271. 28 C.F.R. § 549.46(a)(8) (2020).

272. See, e.g., Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 490 (1992) (concluding that side effects from antipsychotic medication likely unfairly impaired prisoner's defense at trial); United States v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 955 (6th Cir. 1998) (holding that courts should consider whether medication will affect the defendant's physical appearance at trial or as the defendant's ability to aid in the preparation of his own defense).

273. See United States v. Rivera-Guerrero, 377 F.3d 1064, 1069 (9th Cir. 2004) (finding that only federal district courts, not federal magistrates, may authorize the involuntary administration of medication because protection from unwanted medication is such an important right).

274. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197 (2003).

275. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211 (2003).

276. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211 (2003).

277. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 237 (4th Cir. 2005) (looking to the maximum statutory sentence to determine whether a crime is "serious"); United States v. Dallas, 461 F. Supp. 2d 1093, 1097 (D. Neb.

One court, for instance, declined to fix a clear line defining what crimes are serious. However, the court found that one exposing a defendant to a maximum of 10 years of imprisonment was serious.²⁷⁸ Therefore, the government had an interest in trying the detainee in that case.²⁷⁹

(ii) No Special Circumstances Exist that Lessen the Government's Interest in Prosecution.²⁸⁰

If special circumstances exist, the government's interest in trying you will be less important. But the Sell Court noted that, if the detainee is deemed dangerous to himself or others, the State may medicate him on those grounds instead. Under these circumstances, the court would not need to reach the question of whether medication is necessary to enable the detainee to stand trial.²⁸¹ In such a case, special circumstances might not lessen the government's interest, which would involve safety rather than ensuring a detainee could stand trial. You should note that the burden on the government is lower if it desires to medicate you for dangerousness reasons rather than to stand trial.²⁸²

(iii) Involuntary Medication "Significantly Further[s]" Government Interests, Making Defendant's Competence to Stand Trial Substantially Likely.²⁸³

Several courts have tried to define what "substantially likely" means. One court found that a 50% likelihood that the pretrial detainee would regain competency was not enough to justify giving him medication over his objection.²⁸⁴ Another court held that a 70% success rate among other detainees was enough.²⁸⁵ Yet another court has stated that an 80% chance was enough.²⁸⁶ Thus, it is not clear exactly what counts as "substantially likely." But the greater the percentage chance you will be restored to health, the smaller the chance you have of successfully claiming that the government should fail the Sell test. This percentage is a matter about which a psychiatrist will testify at your involuntary medication hearing. However, because the government must meet all of Sell's conditions, you still might be able to claim that you should not be medicated for other reasons. Furthermore, some courts have been skeptical of the practice of using statistical evidence of how likely a defendant is to regain competence.²⁸⁷ Therefore, you might be able to argue that the statistics themselves are flawed.

2006) ("The seriousness of the crime is measured by its maximum statutory penalty.").

278. United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 232 (4th Cir. 2005) (finding that a defendant facing federal charges of assaulting a U.S. agricultural employee and threatening to murder a U.S. judge had committed a "serious" crime).

279. United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 238 (4th Cir. 2005).

280. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003) (finding that special circumstances, like the fact that the detainee is likely to be civilly confined for a length of time, might lessen the need to prosecute criminally and therefore also lessen the need to medicate a detainee for the sake of standing trial).

281. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181–183, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185–2186, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 213–214 (2003) (finding that if the government can instead seek civil commitment, where the detainee may be medicated because of risk to self or others, it should do that prior to seeking to medicate to stand trial); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1159 n.2 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (noting that courts often conduct a Washington v. Harper dangerousness assessment prior to a trial competence one because of the difficulty of the Sell inquiry to determine whether a person can be forcibly medicated); United States v. White, 431 F.3d 431, 434–435 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding that government should have sought a dangerousness assessment before assessing whether to forcibly medicate to restore competency).

282. See United States v. Rodman, 446 F. Supp. 2d 487, 496 (D.S.C. 2006) ("[T]he standard for determining whether to forcibly medicate a detainee for the sole purpose of rendering him competent for trial is greater than the standard for medicating a detainee who poses a significant danger to himself or others.").

283. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003) (noting that the use of drugs must be "in the patient's best medical interest in light of his medical condition" and must take into account the chance of side effects).

284. United States v. Rivera-Morales, 365 F. Supp. 2d 1139, 1141 (S.D. Cal. 2005).

285. United States v. Gomes, 387 F.3d 157, 161–162 (2d Cir. 2004).

286. United States v. Bradley, 417 F.3d 1107, 1115 (10th Cir. 2005).

287. United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1162 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (doubting the "predictive value and applicability of the government's statistic regarding the likelihood of success").

Courts are also concerned that side effects may affect the detainee. Even side effects that are not medically harmful may affect the ways that the detainee is able to assist in his defense.²⁸⁸ Whether this will happen is another factor that courts should consider when deciding whether to allow you to be medicated before trial.

- (iv) Involuntary Medication is Necessary to Further Government Interests, and Less Intrusive Means Are Unlikely to Achieve the Same Result.²⁸⁹

The Supreme Court requires the government to explore alternatives before deciding to use the very invasive practice of giving you medication over your objection.²⁹⁰ These alternatives might include non-drug therapies. It may also include a court order to the detainee backed by the court's power to punish him for contempt if he does not comply.²⁹¹

- (v) Medication is Medically Appropriate (in the Detainee's Best Interest).²⁹²

If the State is trying to medicate you, the drugs must be in your best interest. If the side effects are too dangerous, for example, a court may deny the government's request to medicate you.²⁹³ Courts have even held that the government must provide evidence that shows how the drugs are likely to affect you specifically. This differs from evidence that shows how the drug affects people generally.²⁹⁴

(b) Other Procedural Requirements

The Sell case involves what is called your "substantive due process" right to avoid unwanted intrusions into your personal liberty. The Sell test weighs your interests against the government's interests. You also have the right to certain procedures before your rights are taken away. For example, you are entitled to a hearing before you are forcibly medicated. If the government seeks to medicate you for dangerousness, it must at least give you an administrative hearing.²⁹⁵ If, however, the government is trying to restore your competence to stand trial, you are entitled to a full judicial hearing in a court.²⁹⁶ In both instances, you have the right to protections. These include notice (you must be told when and where your hearing will occur), representation by a lawyer, and the ability to present evidence. The precise procedural requirements vary by state.

Another protection that courts have established is the burden of proof that the government must meet when trying to forcibly administer medication to pretrial detainees. Not all federal circuits have decided this question. However, the general rule is that the government must show medication is necessary by "clear and convincing evidence."²⁹⁷ This differs from the standard used in criminal cases,

288. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

289. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

290. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

291. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

292. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

293. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 242 (4th Cir. 2005) (requiring government to state what the likely side effects will be, and whether the benefits of treatment will outweigh them); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1162–1163 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (finding antipsychotic drugs can have severe side effects, and the government had not met its burden of showing that the benefits of giving them to the detainee outweighed the risks).

294. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 241–242 (4th Cir. 2005) (finding fault with government's failure to provide evidence about this particular detainee).

295. See United States v. White, 431 F.3d 431, 435 (5th Cir. 2005) (finding the federal government regulatory scheme entitled pretrial detainee to an administrative hearing on the issue of forcible medication).

296. United State v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 956 (6th Cir. 1998) (finding that judicial, rather than administrative, hearing is necessary because there is "great risk" in allowing the decision to be made by individuals without legal training).

297. United States v. Gomes, 387 F.3d 157, 160 (2d Cir. 2004) (requiring the government to make its case for involuntary medication with clear and convincing proof); United States v. Bradley, 417 F.3d 1107, 1114 (10th Cir. 2005) (finding that because important interests are involved, the government must prove its case by clear and convincing evidence); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1160 n.3 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (adopting the "clear and convincing" burden of proof standard).

“beyond a reasonable doubt”. Although clear and convincing is not as difficult a standard to meet as “beyond a reasonable doubt,” it is still very hard to meet. Furthermore, the government may not use conclusory evidence to prove its case.²⁹⁸ Conclusory evidence is evidence that presumes the point it is trying to make. Though these protections do not offer you an absolute right to avoid treatment, they make it more difficult for the State to take away your rights.

F. Planning for Your Release

If you are an incarcerated person in New York and are receiving mental health care while in custody, your institution should provide you with some assistance in planning for treatment upon your release. A staff member familiar with your case should complete a written service plan. The plan should at least include a statement of your need for supervision, medication, aftercare services, or assistance in finding employment. The service plan should include a list of organizations and facilities that are available to provide treatment.

G. Planning for Parole

Although there is no constitutional right to parole,²⁹⁹ the State may not use a mental illness as a reason to deny a parole hearing to an incarcerated person.³⁰⁰ Even if you have been determined to have a mental illness, you have the right to a parole hearing. At the hearing, you also have the right to the same procedures that incarcerated people without mental illness have.³⁰¹ You cannot be denied parole because of your mental illness if you are eligible for psychological or psychiatric treatment³⁰² and the prison has failed or refused provide you those services.³⁰³ If state regulations provide for parole and specific conditions of parole, then you may have a constitutionally protected liberty interest in the procedures provided by the state statute.³⁰⁴ For more information, please see Chapter 35: “Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release,” and Chapter 32: “Parole” of the JLM. You should also check the laws of your state to determine whether procedural protections apply to parole denial.

H. Where to Go for Help

In most states, there are organizations called Protection and Advocacy (“P&A”) agencies that protect and advocate for the rights of people with mental illnesses. P&A agencies also investigate reports of abuse and neglect in facilities that care for or treat individuals with mental illnesses. These facilities include hospitals, nursing homes, homeless shelters, jails, and prisons. These facilities can be either public or private. P&As may advocate for incarcerated people and investigate issues that 298. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 240 (4th Cir. 2005) (criticizing the government for its failure to explain how it reached its conclusions about alleged necessity to medicate pretrial detainee).

299. See Greenholtz v. Inmates of the Neb. Penal & Corr. Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 7–8, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2103–2104, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 675–676 (1979) (finding that while a state may establish a parole system, it has no duty to do so because there is no constitutional right of an incarcerated person to be conditionally released before the expiration of his sentence).

300. Sites v. McKenzie, 423 F. Supp. 1190, 1195 (N.D. W. Va. 1976) (finding a prisoner cannot be denied a parole hearing afforded to other prisoners solely because he is in a mental hospital). But see Lopez v. Evans, 25 N.Y.3d 199, 206–207 (2015) (holding that conducting a parole revocation hearing after a court has deemed the parolee to be mentally incompetent violates due process and, therefore, made be precluded from going forward).).

301. See, e.g., Sites v. McKenzie, 423 F. Supp. 1190, 1195 (N.D. W. Va. 1976) (holding that liberty interest for the prisoner with mental illness included the right to a parole hearing and also the right to several procedural protections).

302. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977) (finding there is a right to psychological treatment when an incarcerated person is eligible for it. An incarcerated person is eligible if a physician or other health care provider concludes that “(1) that the prisoner’s symptoms evidence a serious disease or injury; (2) that such disease or injury is curable or may be substantially alleviated; and (3) that the potential for harm to the prisoner by reason of delay or the denial of care would be substantial”).

303. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 46 (4th Cir. 1977) (reversing dismissal of incarcerated person’s complaint that he had been denied parole in part because of his mental illness, for which he had not received treatment).

304. See Greenholtz v. Inmates of the Neb. Penal & Corr. Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 7–8, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2103–2104, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 675–676 (1979) (finding Nebraska parole statute created a protected liberty interest a prisoner may enforce).

come up during transportation or admission to such treatment facilities. P&As also investigate issues that come up during residency in these facilities, or within ninety days after discharge from them.³⁰⁵

I. Conclusion

This Chapter explains your rights as an incarcerated person with a mental illness. It covers the basic information you will need to understand how the law applies to incarcerated people with mental illnesses. It also covers your right to receive treatment, and your limited right to refuse unwanted treatment and transfers. For a list of organizations that might be able to help you with legal issues related to your mental illness, see Appendix A or write to the JLM for further assistance.

305. This general definition of Protection and Advocacy Agencies was taken from various publications by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, such as Transforming Housing for People with Psychiatric Disabilities Report 17 (2006), available at <https://www.yumpu.com/en/document/read/34895762/transforming-housing-for-people-with-psychiatric-disabilities-report> (last visited Feb. 2, 2020).

APPENDIX A

RESOURCES FOR PRISONERS WITH MENTAL ILLNESS

The following is a list of organizations, including Protection and Advocacy organizations (P&As) that you might wish to contact for help with legal issues related to your mental illness. This list is not complete, and every state should have at least one P&A that assists people with mental illness. To find out the name and contact information for the P&A in your area, contact the National Disability Rights Network, 900 Second Street NE, Suite 211, Washington, D.C. 20002; Phone: (202) 408-9514, TTY: (202) 408-9521, Fax: (202) 408-9520.

National Organization

The Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law

1101 15th Street NW, Suite 1212

Washington, DC 20005

Phone: (202) 467-5730

Fax: (202) 223-0409

TDD: (202) 467-4232

<http://www.bazelon.org>

California

Disability Rights California

1831 K Street

Sacramento, CA 95811

Phone: (916) 504-5800

Fax: (916) 504-5802

<http://www.disabilityrightscalifornia.org/>

Florida

Advocacy Center for Persons with Disabilities, Inc.

2728 Centerview Drive, Suite 102

Tallahassee, FL 32301

Phone: (850) 488-9071

Toll Free: (800) 342-0823 (in-state)

Fax: (850) 488-8640

TDD: (800) 346-4127

<http://www.disabilityrightsflorida.org/>

Massachusetts

Disability Law Center, Inc.

11 Beacon Street, Suite 925

Boston, MA 02108

Phone: (617) 723-8455

Toll Free: (800) 872-9992

TTY: (800) 381-0577

Fax: (617) 723-9125

<http://www.dlc-ma.org/index.htm>

New York

The Urban Justice Center

123 William Street, 16th Floor

New York, NY, 10038

Phone: (646) 602-5600

Fax: (212) 533-4598

<http://www.urbanjustice.org/>

Counties served: Bronx, Brooklyn, Manhattan, Queens

Disability Advocates, Inc.

5 Clinton Square, 3rd Floor

Albany, NY 12207

Phone: (518) 432-7861 (voice and TTY)

Toll Free: (800) 993-8982

Fax: (518) 427-6561 (voice and TTY)

<http://www.disabilityadvocates.info/>

Counties served: Albany, Columbia, Dutchess, Fulton, Greene, Montgomery, Orange, Putnam, Rensselaer, Rockland, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Sullivan, Ulster, Westchester

New York State Commission on Quality of Care and Advocacy for Persons with Disabilities ("CQCAPD")

401 State Street

Schenectady, NY 12305

Toll Free: (800) 624-4143 (Voice/TTY/Spanish)

<http://www.cqcaped.state.ny.us>

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.

100 Court Street, P.O. Box 989

Plattsburgh, NY 12901

Phone: (518) 563-4022

Toll Free: (800) 722-7380

Fax: (518) 563-4058

<http://www.lasnny.org/>

Counties served: Franklin, Clinton, Essex, Hamilton

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.

17 Hodskin Street

Canton, NY 13617

Phone: (315) 386-4586

Toll Free: (800) 822-8283

Fax: (315) 386-2868

<http://www.lasnny.org/>

Counties served: St. Lawrence, St. Regis Indian Reservation

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.

112 Spring Street

Saratoga Springs, NY 12866

Phone: (518) 587-5188

Toll free: (800) 870-8343

Fax: (518) 587-0959

<http://www.lasnny.org/>

Counties served: Saratoga, Warren, Washington

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.

1 Kimball Street

Amsterdam, NY 12010

Phone: (518) 842-9466

Toll free: (800) 821-8347

Fax: (518) 843-1792

<http://www.lasnny.org/>

Counties served: Fulton, Montgomery, Schoharie

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.

55 Colvin Avenue

Albany, NY 12206

Phone: (518) 462-6765

Toll free: (800) 462-2922

Fax: (518) 427-8352

http://www.lasnny.org

Counties Served: Albany, Columbia, Greene, Rensselaer, Schenectady

New York Lawyers for the Public Interest

151 West 30th Street, 11th Floor

New York, NY 10001-4017

Phone: (212) 244-4664

Fax: (212) 244-4570

<http://nylpi.org>

Counties served: Bronx, Brooklyn, Manhattan, Queens, Richmond

Neighborhood Legal Services, Inc.

237 Main Street, 4th Floor

Buffalo, NY 14203

Phone: (716) 847-0650

TTY: (716) 847-1322

Fax: (716) 847-0227

<http://www.nls.org/>

Counties served: Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, Yates

Legal Services of Central New York, Inc.

472 South Salina Street, Suite 300

Syracuse, NY 13202

Phone: (315) 703-6500

Toll Free: (866) 475-9967 (in-state)

TTY: (866) 475-3120

Fax: (315) 475-2706

<http://www.lscny.org/>

Counties served: Broome, Cayuga, Chemung, Chenango, Cortland, Delaware, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Madison, Oneida, Onondaga, Otsego, Oswego, Schuyler, Tompkins, Tioga

Touro College Clinic Program

Jacob D. Fuchsberg Law Center

225 Eastview Drive

Central Islip, NY 11722

Phone: (631) 761-7080

Fax: (631) 421-2675

*Counties served: Nassau, SuffolkTexasAdvocacy, Inc.

7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Suite 171-E

Austin, TX 78757-1024

Phone: (512) 454-4816

Toll Free: (866) 362-2851 (Voice/TDD)

Fax: (512) 323-0902

(only in county and city jails)

<http://www.disabilityrightstx.org>

APPENDIX B

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR DISABILITY ADVOCATES, INC. v. NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF MENTAL HEALTH

Disability Advocates, Inc.

5 Clinton Square, 3rd Floor
Albany, NY 12207
Phone: (518) 432-7861
Toll Free: (800) 993-8982
Fax: (518) 427-6561
www.disability-advocates.org

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York

102 Prospect Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
<http://www.plsny.org>

Prisons Served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Monterey Shock, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York

41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY 12207
<http://www.plsny.org>

Prisons Served: Arthurkill, Bayview, Beacon, Bedford Hills, Mt. McGregor, Summit Shock, CNYPC, Cossackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Lincoln, Marcy, Midstate, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York

237 Maine Street, Suite 1535
Buffalo, NY 14203
<http://www.plsny.org>

Prisons Served: Albion, Attica, Buffalo, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming

CHAPTER 30

SPECIAL INFORMATION FOR LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL, TRANSGENDER, AND/OR QUEER INCARCERATED PEOPLE*

A. Introduction

Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and/or queer (“LGBTQ”) incarcerated people face the same challenges as other incarcerated people, but due to prejudice and a lack of knowledge about issues surrounding sexual orientation and gender identity, LGBTQ incarcerated people often encounter additional difficulties.

Many of the issues unique to LGBTQ incarcerated people have not been litigated extensively.¹ And many of the issues that have been litigated may change significantly in light of relatively recent Supreme Court decisions.² The outcomes of these claims are now less predictable. This unpredictability, combined with the fact that prejudice against LGBTQ individuals may play a role in many judges’ and juries’ decision-making processes, means that LGBTQ incarcerated people face uphill battles when they bring claims in court. For this reason, you should consider contacting an LGBTQ impact litigation organization to see if its lawyers would be willing to take your case.³ This is especially important if you are seeking to apply new theories about sexual orientation or gender identity to your case. Even if such an organization cannot take your case, someone may be able to refer you to an attorney who has experience working with LGBTQ plaintiffs.

Throughout this Chapter, the term “transgender” is used to describe people whose gender identity is different from their assigned sex at birth. Gender identity is used to describe the gender a person identifies as, regardless of whether that gender is the same as the one they were assigned at birth. Male pronouns (he, him, his) are used throughout this chapter and manual. The use of male pronouns is not intended to suggest that only people who identify as men can use the manual. The information contained in this chapter can be helpful to anyone, regardless of their gender identity.

This Chapter attempts to address the most pressing concerns of LGBTQ incarcerated people. Part B explains what to do if you are being treated unfairly because of your sexual orientation or gender identity. Part C through Part H address day-to-day issues that may arise as a lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender or queer person in prison. Part C addresses your right to control your gender identity while in prison and includes a discussion of your right to gender-related medical care such as hormone treatment. Part D explains your right to confidentiality regarding your sexual orientation or gender identity. Part E addresses assault and harassment by prison officials and other incarcerated people. Part F discusses protective custody and housing placements for transgender incarcerated people. Part G discusses visitation rights. Part H discusses your right to receive LGBTQ literature. Part I of this Chapter discusses important Supreme Court cases and how they may affect past and future prison

* This Chapter was revised by Lillian Morgenstern, based on previous versions by Meredith Duffy, Jen Higgins and Kari Hong. Special thanks to Amy Whelan of the National Center for Lesbian Rights (NCLR) and Professor Brett Dignam of Columbia Law School.

1. Unfortunately, some legal decisions of significance to LGBTQ incarcerated people are unreported—that is, they do not appear in the Federal Reporter or Federal Supplement volumes available in prison law libraries. In the JLM, these cases have citations like “U.S. App. LEXIS 12345 (unpublished).” Make sure you read Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for important information about unpublished cases. At the very least, even if you cannot cite an unpublished case in your claim, the case may help you predict the outcome of a similar lawsuit.

2. See Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 192 L. Ed. 2d 609 (2015); Hollingsworth v. Perry, 570 U.S. 693, 133 S. Ct. 2652, 186 L. Ed. 2d 768 (2013); United States v. Windsor, 570 U.S. 744, 133 S. Ct. 2675, 186 L. Ed. 2d 808 (2013).

3. Impact litigation organizations fight cases where the law is unresolved with the hope of creating favorable law for future cases. A list of such organizations appears in Appendix A at the end of this Chapter.

regulations more generally. Finally, Part J discusses your remedies if you feel that homophobic or transphobic beliefs (prejudice against LGBTQ individuals) led to jury bias in your conviction.

As you read this Chapter, you should always keep in mind that Title 42 of the United States Code, Section 1983 (known as “Section 1983”), is a federal statute that permits you to sue a person who, while acting on behalf of the state, violates either your federal statutory rights or your constitutional rights, such as your right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment or your right to equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment.⁴ If you are a federal incarcerated person, you will file a Bivens action or a Federal Tort Claim if you are looking for monetary damages. If you are held in state or municipal custody, Section 1983 may also apply to you. Also, if you are a state or municipal incarcerated person and prison officials have violated your rights, you should also check state and local laws. Depending on where you are located, bringing a lawsuit under Section 1983 may be your best option. For a more detailed explanation of Section 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

It is also very important to be aware of the restrictions placed on prisoner litigation by the Prisoner Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). Please read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for a more detailed explanation of the PLRA before filing any lawsuit.

B. Unequal Treatment Because of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity

1. Equal Protection

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the government from treating different classes of people differently unless there is a sufficiently legitimate purpose for doing so.⁵ If you believe that benefits are being withheld from you and that they are not being withheld from heterosexual incarcerated people, you may bring a Section 1983 claim against the prison or prison officials for violation of your equal protection rights. To do this successfully, you must convince the court that (1) “similarly situated” incarcerated people are treated differently by the prison; and (2) the difference between their treatment and your treatment is not rationally related to a legitimate penological (prison-related) interest.⁶ In other words, the prison rule or policy that results in your being treated differently must have a commonsense connection to a valid goal or concern of the prison. For a more thorough discussion of equal protection claims, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

When LGBTQ incarcerated people claim that they are being treated differently than heterosexual incarcerated people, prisons have often tried to justify their actions by claiming that different treatment is necessary to protect LGBTQ incarcerated people because they are often more vulnerable to attack than other incarcerated people. For instance, two cases in the Sixth Circuit involved LGBTQ incarcerated people who, having been denied the opportunity to participate in religious services while in prison, brought suit under Section 1983 for a violation of their First Amendment rights. In both cases, the prison argued that because the LGBTQ incarcerated person was vulnerable to attack, his

4. To challenge the conduct of an official or employee of the federal government, you must bring a Bivens action. See Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971). You can find an explanation of how to do this in Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

5. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1; see also Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 635, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1629, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 868 (1996) (holding that an amendment to the Colorado Constitution prohibiting the Colorado government from protecting gay men or lesbians from discrimination failed to serve any legitimate government purpose).

6. 42 U.S.C. § 1983; see also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987); Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 171 (2003) (“In Turner we held that four factors are relevant in deciding whether a prison regulation affecting a constitutional right that survives incarceration withstands constitutional challenge: whether the regulation has a valid, rational connection to a legitimate governmental interest; whether alternative means are open to incarcerated people to exercise the asserted right; what impact an accommodation of the right would have on guards and incarcerated people and prison resources; and whether there are ready alternatives to the regulation.”) (internal citations omitted).

participation in the services posed a security risk. The prison argued that the restriction on the incarcerated person's First Amendment rights served the valid penological interest of prison security and so was justified.⁷

Several LGBTQ incarcerated people have, with some success, sued prison officials, claiming they were terminated from their prison jobs because they are LGBTQ. For instance, in Holmes v. Artuz, a federal court in New York said that a gay incarcerated person who claimed he was removed from his food service prison job may have stated a claim under Section 1983 for violation of his equal protection rights.⁸ The court did not decide whether the equal protection guarantee of the Constitution had been violated because the plaintiff, appearing without counsel, did not present enough information for the court to reach that decision.⁹ However, the court was clearly sympathetic to the incarcerated person's claim, and the opinion contains strong language saying that the prison would have to show, rather than just say, that its decision was rationally related to the state's interest in maintaining security.¹⁰

2. Sex Discrimination

Although your chances of prevailing on an equal protection claim may have increased after United States v. Windsor, you might also have a chance of winning a case if you state your grievance in terms

7. Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408, 412—413 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding a prison's total ban on group worship services by a church for gay people was reasonably related to the state interest in maintaining internal security in the prison). But see Phelps v. Dunn, 965 F.2d 93, 100 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether a gay incarcerated person alleging he was denied permission to attend religious services was in fact so denied, and whether he posed a security risk because he was gay); see also Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 733 (9th Cir. 1989) (affirming summary judgment for defendant prison because allowing plaintiff incarcerated person to receive mailings from North American Man/Boy Love Association would make him a likely victim of incarcerated person violence); Star v. Gramley, 815 F. Supp. 276, 278—279 (C.D. Ill. 1993) (granting summary judgment to prison that refused to allow an incarcerated person in a men's facility to wear dresses and skirts because it could pose a security threat by promoting or provoking sexual activity or assault).

8. Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 27, 1995) (unpublished). But see Counce v. Kemna, No. 02-6065-CV-SJ-HFS-P, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4021, at *9—10 (W.D. Mo. Mar. 8, 2005) (unpublished) (granting defendant prison officials qualified immunity in case where plaintiff alleged job discrimination based on his sexual orientation).

9. The plaintiff was granted leave to replead (rewrite his complaint and bring it again). Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished).

10. The Holmes court reasoned as follows:

Defendants argue that "the decision to reassign plaintiff from his job in food service is rationally related to a legitimate state interest in preserving order in the correction facility mess hall (sic)." However, defendants proffer no explanation of what this "rational relationship" might be. A person's sexual orientation, standing alone, does not reasonably, rationally or self-evidently implicate mess hall security concerns. It is not sufficient to assert, as defendants do in their motion papers, that the prison's exclusionary policy is designed to prevent "potential disciplinary and security problems which could arise from heterosexual inmates' reaction to and interaction with homosexual and/or transsexual inmates who serve and prepare food" in the mess hall. Defendants as yet have offered no evidence that these alleged disciplinary and security problems are real threats to prison life, or that the exclusionary policy is a rational response to such threats if they do exist.

Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished) (citations omitted); see also Johnson v. Knable, No. 88-7729, 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 20071, at *2 (4th Cir. Oct. 31, 1988) (unpublished) (vacating lower court's summary judgment dismissal of an equal protection claim brought by a gay incarcerated person after he was allegedly denied a job in the prison's education department because he was gay, and remanding for further proceedings, noting that "[i]f [the plaintiff] was denied a prison work assignment simply because of his sexual orientation, his equal protection rights may have been violated"); Kelley v. Vaughn, 760 F. Supp. 161, 163—164 (W.D. Mo. 1991) (denying defendant's motion to dismiss on the ground that a gay incarcerated person, bringing an action against the correctional center's food service manager to challenge his removal from his job as bakery worker, might have a valid equal protection claim); Howard v. Cherish, 575 F. Supp. 34, 36 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (stating, that a gay incarcerated person who claimed he was punished because he was gay would have a claim under § 1983 if he had shown evidence in his claim that he was discriminated against solely because of his sexual preferences). But see Fuller v. Rich, 925 F. Supp. 459, 463 (N.D. Tex. 1995) (finding that mistaken rumors that a gay incarcerated person was HIV-positive were enough to raise a legitimate safety concern that justified firing him from food handling job).

of sex discrimination.¹¹ Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 creates a federal cause of action where “sex ... was a motivating factor”¹² for discrimination, and this law has been held to prohibit sex discrimination against both men and women.¹³ Sex discrimination is discrimination that occurs based on whether you are a man or a woman. It is also sex discrimination when you suffer discrimination based on stereotypes about how men or women should behave or look. LGBTQ people have used this “sex-stereotyping” theory to argue they have suffered from sex discrimination. This is useful because courts look at laws and policies that treat people differently according to their sex with “intermediate scrutiny.”¹⁴ Intermediate scrutiny is a higher level of scrutiny than “rational basis scrutiny.” Intermediate scrutiny requires the prison to show a substantial relationship between a prison rule and a legitimate goal of the prison to justify a sex-based classification.¹⁵ For an explanation on the different levels of scrutiny that the court uses, see Part I(2) of this Chapter “Romer v. Evans and the Equal Protection Clause.”

Sex-stereotyping claims include claims of discrimination against people for not conforming to the expected behavior of their sex (not acting like people think their sex is “supposed to” act). The Supreme Court recognized this cause of action in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, finding sex discrimination existed when an accounting firm told an employee she had to “walk, talk, and dress more femininely, style her hair, and wear make-up and jewelry” to get a promotion.¹⁶ This case is particularly useful for transgender incarcerated people who suffer from discrimination in prison. For many years, courts were unsympathetic to transgender plaintiffs, particularly in prisons. But, several cases have held that Price Waterhouse protects transgender people and overrules previous decisions like Ulane v. Eastern Airlines, Inc.,¹⁷ which denied transgender people protection under Title VII and similar sex discrimination laws.¹⁸

11. See Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1200–1202 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that the evidence showed the attack by a prison guard was at least in part motivated by sex discrimination, as the guard was not interested in the incarcerated person sexually until his discovery of her “true” sex). But see Neal v. Dept. of Corr., 583 N.W.2d 249, 254, 230 Mich. App. 202, 214–215, (Mich. Ct. App. 1998) (“Prisoners simply are not protected against [sex] discrimination by the [Civil Rights Act] (which is by no means to say that they are entirely unprotected; whatever restraints exist, however, are found outside the four corners of the act).”). It is difficult to predict, then, how courts would respond, and you should be mindful of the consequences under the Prison Litigation Reform Act of filing claims deemed frivolous by the court. See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

12. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(m). Numerous state statutes also prohibit sex discrimination. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”) has also held that discrimination against an individual because that person is transgender is discrimination because of sex and is therefore prohibited under Title VII. See Macy v. Dept. of Justice, EEOC Appeal No. 0120120821 at *11 (April 20, 2012). Furthermore, the EEOC held that discrimination against an individual because of that person’s sexual orientation is discrimination because of sex and prohibited under Title VII. See David Baldwin v. Dept. of Transportation, EEOC Appeal No. 0120133080 at *10 (July 15, 2015). While the EEOC cases described did not occur in the prison context, looking at them may help you to develop an argument for your claim.

13. See, e.g., Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Servs., 523 U.S. 75, 78, 118 S. Ct. 998, 1001, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201, 206 (1998); Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. v. EEOC, 462 U.S. 669, 682, 103 S. Ct. 2622, 2630, 77 L. Ed. 2d 89, 101 (1983).

14. Different constitutional challenges receive different levels of scrutiny (review). There are three levels of scrutiny: strict scrutiny, intermediate scrutiny, and rational basis. For a more detailed explanation of levels of scrutiny, you can look at Part I(2) of this Chapter.

15. See JLM, Chapter 16.

16. Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 235, 109 S. Ct. 1175, 1782, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268, 278 (1989).

17. Ulane v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 742 F.2d 1081, 1084–1085 (7th Cir. 1984) (construing “sex” in Title VII narrowly to mean only anatomical sex rather than gender); see also Holloway v. Arthur Andersen, 566 F.2d 659, 661 (9th Cir. 1977) (affirming trial court decision “that Title VII does not embrace transsexual discrimination”).

18. See Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1201 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding Price Waterhouse’s logic overruled “the initial judicial approach” in cases like Holloway); Smith v. City of Salem, 378 F.3d 566, 573 (6th Cir. 2004) (“It is true that, in the past, federal appellate courts regarded Title VII as barring discrimination based only on ‘sex’ (referring to an individual’s anatomical and biological characteristics), but not on ‘gender’ (referring to socially-constructed norms associated with a person’s sex) ... However, [this] approach ... has been eviscerated

Sex-stereotyping can also be used by lesbian, gay, and bisexual people in making discrimination claims. For example, if you are a gay man and you believe you were fired from your prison job because you are gay, you could argue that you were discriminated against based on sex or sex stereotypes. For instance, you are a man who desires male sexual partners and therefore you were fired, but male incarcerated people who desired female sexual partners would not have been fired.¹⁹ By framing the argument in this way, you can perhaps get the court to be more careful in its review of the prison officials' actions by applying the "intermediate scrutiny" standard.

3. State Laws

Many state laws (and state constitutions) provide greater protection to LGBTQ people than the federal Constitution does. Examples are the Minnesota State Constitution²⁰ and California's Unruh Civil Rights Act.²¹ You should research your state's laws to find out if you could have a stronger statutory claim under those laws than the federal constitutional claims (discussed in the above two sections). If you are in a state with LGBTQ-friendly statutes, you can bring a claim under a state statute as a "pendent claim" (an additional claim to your Section 1983 claim) in federal court, or you can bring the state claim alone in state court. Also, sometimes federal courts have analyzed whether a state law violates the federal Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.²²

C. Your Right to Control Your Gender Presentation While in Prison

Transgender incarcerated people often have difficulty expressing their gender while in prison. These difficulties range from denial of access to gender-related medical care to denial of access to personal items like clothes and cosmetics.

1. Access to Gender-Related Medical Care

Many transgender incarcerated people seek access to gender-related medical care while in prison. The most common requests are for hormone treatments and gender reassignment surgery. For general by Price Waterhouse."); Schroer v. Billington, 525 F. Supp. 2d 58, 63 (D.D.C. 2007) ("Title VII is violated when an employer discriminates against any employee, transsexual or not, because he or she has failed to act or appear sufficiently masculine or feminine enough for an employer."); Mitchell v. Axcan Scandipharm, Inc., No. 05-243, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6521, at *3 (W.D. Pa. Feb. 17, 2006) (unpublished) ("Plaintiff claims that he was fired because he began to present as a female. He claims that he was the victim of discrimination and a hostile work environment created by defendant due to plaintiff's appearance and gender-related behavior. These allegations, if true, state a claim under Title VII."); Kastl v. Maricopa County Cmty. College Dist., No. 02-1531-PHX-SRB, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29825, at *7 (D. Ariz. June 3, 2004) (unpublished) (finding plaintiff's allegation that she was required to use the men's restroom stated a claim under Title VII where plaintiff was a biological female born with male genitalia); Tronetti v. TLC Healthnet Lakeshore Hosp., No. 03-CV-0375E(Sc), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23757, at *12 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2003) (unpublished) ("This Court is not bound by the Ulane decisions. More importantly, the Ulane decisions predate the Supreme Court's decision in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 109 S. Ct. 1775, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1989), which undermined the reasoning of the Ulane decisions."); but see Etsitty v. Utah Transit Auth., No. 2:04CV616 DS, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12634, at *10-12 (D. Utah June 24, 2005) (unpublished) ("The Price Waterhouse prohibition against sex stereotyping should not be applied to transsexuals ... [because] there is a huge difference between a woman who does not behave as femininely as her employer thinks she should, and a man who is attempting to change his sex and appearance to be a woman. Such drastic action cannot be fairly characterized as a mere failure to conform to stereotypes.").

19. See Rosa v. Park West Bank & Trust Co., 214 F.3d 213, 214-216 (1st Cir. 2000) (holding that it was possible that a bank that refused a loan application made by a man wearing a dress until he went home and changed into "male attire" had engaged in sex discrimination because it likely would not have refused a loan application to a woman wearing a dress); Glenn v. Brumby, 663 F.3d 1312, 1317 (11th Cir. 2011) ("Accordingly, discrimination against a transgender individual because of her gender-nonconformity is sex discrimination, whether it's described as being on the basis of sex or gender.").

20. Minn. Const. art. I, § 2.

21. Unruh Civil Rights Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 51 (West 2007).

22. See Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232 (W.D. Pa. 1990) (finding that even though federal law allowed discrimination based on sexual activity, Pennsylvania state law did not, and Pennsylvania law could be used to evaluate the decision to bar a lesbian partner from visitation).

information about your right to adequate medical care while in prison, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

(a) Serious Medical Need and Deliberate Indifference

The Supreme Court established in Estelle v. Gamble that “deliberate indifference” to an incarcerated person’s “serious medical needs” violates that incarcerated person’s Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.²³

Circuit courts (appellate courts) have regularly found that “gender dysphoria”²⁴ is a “serious medical need” that meets the Estelle standard.²⁵ Many federal courts have held that transgender incarcerated people are therefore constitutionally entitled to some type of medical treatment for their condition.²⁶ Nevertheless, most of these courts have held that transgender incarcerated people do not have a constitutional right to any particular type of treatment, so long as they receive some kind of treatment, such as psychological counseling.²⁷ Under these rulings, prison officials do not violate the Eighth Amendment when, based on their professional judgment, they refuse to provide an incarcerated person with the particular treatment or he requests.²⁸ As a result, most courts that have considered

23. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976). For general information about your right to adequate medical care while in prison, see Chapter 23 of the JLM.

24. Gender dysphoria (“GD”) is distress because your gender identity does not match your biological sex. Gender Dysphoria, American Psychiatric Association, available at <https://www.psychiatry.org/patients-families/gender-dysphoria/what-is-gender-dysphoria> (last visited November 6, 2020); see also Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671 (7th Cir. 1997). Many older cases will not use the term “gender dysphoria,” but will state that “transsexualism” or “gender identity disorder” are “serious medical needs.” See, e.g., Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2000) (treating “transsexualism” as a “serious medical need”). Even though these cases do not use up to date language, they can help you argue for trans-affirming medical care.

25. See, e.g., Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2000) (treating “transsexualism” as a “serious medical need”); White v. Farrier, 849 F.2d 322, 325 (8th Cir. 1988) (finding that “transsexualism is a very complex medical and psychological problem” that constitutes a serious medical need”); Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding that “transsexualism” may present a “serious medical need,” which constitutionally entitles incarcerated person to at least some type of medical care); Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 162 (D. Mass. 2002) (holding plaintiff’s transgender healthcare was a “serious medical need” and prison officials were required to provide treatment, including psychotherapy with a professional experienced in treating gender identity disorder and potentially also including hormone therapy or gender reassignment surgery). But see Long v. Nix, 86 F.3d 761, 765 n.3 (8th Cir. 1996) (noting that the court’s holding in White that “transsexualism” is a “serious medical need” may be in doubt in light of Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994)).

26. Injunctive relief is where you ask the court to make a prison do something or stop doing something. For instance, if you are trying to get a medical treatment which the prison has previously refused, you are seeking injunctive relief. If you are trying to get “damages” (usually money) from a prison official, you will have to show that the prison official is not entitled to “qualified immunity.” If you are trying to get damages, see Chapter 16 of the JLM for an explanation of qualified immunity and other defenses to § 1983 suits.

27. See, e.g., Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding that a transgender incarcerated person is entitled to medical treatment but has no constitutional right to any one particular type of treatment).

28. See Long v. Nix, 86 F.3d 761, 765–766 (8th Cir. 1996) (holding a prison official was not deliberately indifferent for choosing a different course of treatment than the tranquilizers recommended by the incarcerated person’s expert, where the prison medical staff tried to evaluate the incarcerated person’s psychological condition and the incarcerated person failed to cooperate); White v. Farrier, 849 F.2d 322, 327–328 (8th Cir. 1988) (holding a different diagnosis by prison medical staff than by incarcerated person’s experts does not establish deliberate indifference on its own, since doctors are entitled to exercise their medical judgment and an incarcerated person is not entitled to hormone treatment if the prison instead decides to provide her with psychotherapy); Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding a transgender incarcerated person is entitled to some type of medical treatment but has no constitutional right to any one particular type of treatment); Supre v. Ricketts, 792 F.2d 958, 963 (10th Cir. 1986) (holding that prison officials are not required to administer estrogen to treat transgender people, because it is one of a variety of treatment options and there is no medical consensus that it is the best option; therefore a transgender person denied estrogen treatment may have a claim for medical malpractice but not for deliberate indifference); Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 162 (D. Mass. 2002)

the question have denied transgender incarcerated people' requests for hormonal treatment while still upholding their right to medical care.²⁹

Several more recent federal court decisions, however, suggest that courts are beginning to recognize circumstances in which prisons are required to provide hormone therapy. In Phillips v. Michigan Department of Corrections, for example, a Michigan federal court granted a preliminary injunction directing prison officials to provide estrogen therapy. The incarcerated person had been taking estrogen since she was a teenager but was prevented from doing so in prison. As a result, she started experiencing a physical transformation and severe depression.³⁰ The Phillips court held that denying hormonal treatment in this case caused "irreparable harm" and violated the Eighth Amendment:

It is one thing to fail to provide an inmate with care that would improve his or her medical state, such as refusing to provide sex reassignment surgery or to operate on a long-endured cyst. Taking measures which actually reverse the effects of years of healing medical treatment ... is (holding that a prison could deny transgender incarcerated person hormones or sex reassignment surgery if security concerns made such treatment impossible but was required to provide some kind of treatment, including, at a minimum, psychotherapy); Madera v. Corr. Med. Sys., No. 90-1657, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11878, at *10 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 5, 1990) (unpublished) ("[T]here is no absolute constitutional right to hormonal treatments for a transsexual, any more than there is for any other specific therapy requested by a prisoner."); Farmer v. Carlson, 685 F. Supp. 1335, 1340 (M.D. Pa. 1988) (finding denial of plaintiff's estrogen medication resulted from an informed medical opinion, and therefore plaintiff did not have a legal claim of deliberate indifference); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) ("[T]he key question in this case is whether defendants have provided plaintiff with some type of treatment, regardless of whether it is what plaintiff desires."). These are all cases where the incarcerated person sought injunctive relief, trying to get the prison to give some kind of medical treatment. The courts' refusal to recognize a specific right to hormone therapy, and the recognition instead of a broader right to medical care, has at least once prevented prison officials from avoiding liability by claiming qualified immunity (which would allow an incarcerated person to possibly get damages). In a Ninth Circuit case, prison officials sued by an incarcerated person whose hormonal therapy they had terminated argued that they were entitled to qualified immunity because incarcerated people suffering from gender dysphoria have no clearly established right to female hormone therapy. The Ninth Circuit rejected the officials' claim, holding that "with respect to prisoner medical claims, the right at issue should be defined as an incarcerated person's [8th] Amendment right 'to officials who are not "deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs,"' and not as a right to something more specific. South v. Gomez, 211 F.3d 1275 (9th Cir. 2000), opinion reported in full at No. 99-15976, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 3200, at *4 (9th Cir. Feb. 25, 2000) (unpublished) (quoting Kelley v. Borg, 60 F.3d 664, 667 (9th Cir. 1995)). See Chapter 16 of the JLM for an explanation of qualified immunity and other defenses to § 1983 suits.

29. In Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671–672 (7th Cir. 1997), a court recognized what many other courts have not: hormone therapy is necessary to "cure" gender dysphoria. Nevertheless, the Maggert court held that prisons should not be required to provide hormonal therapy—not because other treatments would work, but because such therapy goes beyond the minimal treatment that prisons are required to provide. Though a prison is required by the 8th Amendment to provide an incarcerated person with medical care, it need not provide care as good as the person would receive if he were a free person; incarcerated people are entitled only to minimum care. Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671–672 (7th Cir. 1997) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992)). The Maggert court reasoned that because neither public nor private health insurance programs typically pay for sex reassignment, it would be inaccessible to most transgender incarcerated people even if they were not in prison. "[M]aking the treatment a constitutional duty of prisons would give incarcerated people a degree of medical care that they could not obtain if they obeyed the law," which may lead to "transsexuals committing crimes because it is the only route to obtaining a cure." Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 672 (7th Cir. 1997); see also Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (assuming that, because "transsexualism" presents a "serious medical need," den of hormone therapy was not deliberate indifference based on the plaintiff's term length, the prison's inability to perform gender confirmation surgeries, the lack of medical necessity for the hormone, and the disruption to all-male prison).

30. Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792, 794 (W.D. Mich. 1990).

measurably worse, making the cruel and unusual determination much easier.³¹

Despite these encouraging developments in a few federal courts, courts in many other jurisdictions have continued to deny claims by transgender incarcerated people for hormonal treatment.³² Prisoners who are unable to demonstrate that they previously received hormone treatment before incarceration may still face an uphill battle, despite recent changes to the federal Bureau of Prisons policy.³³ Courts will give more weight to the original decision made by prison medical personnel rather than prior treatment history.³⁴

(b) Access to Gender Reassignment Surgery

Courts generally do not require a prison to pay for or conduct any surgery related to an incarcerated person's gender identity or transition.³⁵ If you are diagnosed with gender dysphoria (GD) by prison medical staff, then the prison may be required to give you treatment to comply with due process under the Eighth Amendment "deliberate indifference" test.³⁶ However, it may be difficult to get staff to diagnose you with gender dysphoria. If you are successfully diagnosed with GD, you will not have a choice in what treatment you receive because treatment decisions are left to prison health care staff.³⁷ If the "choice" of treatment is unacceptable to you, you can always refuse. If you feel that your medical need for gender reassignment surgery is not being addressed, you can try to show an Eighth Amendment violation. To do this, you must show (1) proof of a "serious medical need," and (2) a prison's deliberate indifference to that need.³⁸ Unless a doctor is willing to 31. Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792, 800 (W.D. Mich. 1990); see also De'Lonta v. Angelone, 330 F.3d 630, 635 (4th Cir. 2003) (holding that termination of a transgender incarcerated person's hormone treatment could constitute deliberate indifference where such treatment was terminated because of prison policy rather than because of medical judgment); South v. Gomez, 211 F.3d 1275 (9th Cir. 2000), opinion reported in full at No. 99-15976, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 3200, at *5-6 (9th Cir. Feb. 25, 2000) (unpublished) (holding when an incarcerated person was already receiving hormones at the time of her transfer to a prison, it was a violation of her 8th Amendment rights for that prison to halt all hormone treatment at once rather than end it gradually); Wolfe v. Horn, 130 F. Supp. 2d 648, 653 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (ruling that where a prison doctor discontinued a patient's hormone treatment that she had been receiving for almost a year, there was "at least a fact question as to whether each of the defendants was deliberately indifferent to treating [the plaintiff's] gender identity disorder").

32. See, e.g., Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (holding that denial of hormone therapy and gender confirmation surgery does not constitute deliberate indifference when the prison's medical director found no medical necessity for such treatment and the prison was unable to perform a gender confirmation surgery); Farmer v. Moritsugu, 163 F.3d 610, 615 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (denying incarcerated person's claim against the medical director of the Bureau of Prisons because the director was not in a position to diagnose and treat individual patients); Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 672 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that prisons are not required to provide hormone therapy because it is unnecessary and expensive, and because gender dysphoria is not a serious enough condition to justify the cost).

33. See FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT 6031.04, PATIENT CARE 41-42 (June 3, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/6031_004.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019) (stating that if an incarcerated person is diagnosed with gender dysphoria, a treatment plan may include hormone therapy).

34. See, e.g., Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (deferring to treating physician's recommendations).

35. Darren Rosenblum, "Trapped" in Sing Sing: Transgendered Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binarism, 6 MICH. J. GENDER & L. 499, 543 (2000); see also Lewis v. Berg, No. 9:00-CV-1433, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39571, at *22, *30 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 10, 2005) (unpublished) (finding it reasonable for prison grievance committee to deny incarcerated person's request for gender reassignment and cosmetic surgery and refer her back to medical personnel for other appropriate treatment).

36. See Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 106-107 (2d Cir. 2000) (assuming transgender individuals have a "serious medical need" within the meaning of the 8th Amendment deliberate indifference test).

37. See Sires v. Berman, 834 F.2d 9, 13 (1st Cir. 1987) ("Where the dispute concerns not the absence of help, but the choice of a certain course of treatment, or evidences mere disagreement with considered medical judgment, we will not second guess the doctors.").

38. See Kosilek v. Spencer, 774 F.3d 63, 82 (1st Cir. 2014) (en banc) ("Therefore, to prove an Eighth say that the chosen option would not address the “serious medical need,” prison health care providers have freedom to choose your treatment. Therefore, there is a chance that even if gender reassignment surgery is an option, it may not be chosen by the prison.³⁹

Finally, if you experience health complications as a result of a prior gender-related surgery, the government is obligated to provide you the medical care necessary to treat those complications.⁴⁰

(c) Access to Hormonal Treatment

The federal Bureau of Prisons’ medical policy has recently changed to allow incarcerated people to be provided with hormone therapy even if they did not have hormone therapy prior to incarceration.⁴¹ Nevertheless, many federal and state prisons have refused to provide hormone treatment to transgender incarcerated people, even though the cost of hormone treatment does not necessarily exceed the costs of other routine medical treatments administered to the general prison population.⁴²

If you were undergoing hormone therapy before you went to jail, or if you need hormones now but prison officials deny you access to the treatment, you can sue those officials for violations of your constitutional right to medical care. As you will see in the following subsections, the issue of whether a transgender person is entitled to hormone therapy while in prison has been looked at a lot by the courts. In recent years in particular, several courts have required prisons to provide transgender incarcerated people with hormonal treatment.⁴³

2. Access to Personal Items Associated with Gender Identity

Clothing, cosmetics, jewelry, and personal care products are often significant components of a person’s gender presentation. Prisons vary as to whether they permit incarcerated people to access the clothing of their choice and other personal items.⁴⁴ Prisoners have used Section 1983 to challenge Amendment violation, a prisoner must satisfy both of two prongs: (1) an objective prong that requires proof of a serious medical need, and (2) a subjective prong that mandates a showing of prison administrators’ deliberate indifference to that need.”). But see Norsworthy v. Beard, 802 F.3d 1090, 1092 (9th Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (holding Norsworthy’s case moot, meaning the court did not need to decide the issue anymore, because even though the district court required the California prison system to perform sex reassignment surgery, she was released from prison on parole).

39. See Kosilek v. Spencer, 774 F.3d 63, 89–90 (1st Cir. 2014) (en banc) (finding that when the Department of Corrections chose to provide hormonal treatment, facial hair removal, feminine clothing, antidepressants, and psychotherapy instead of gender reassignment surgery, it was not the court’s place to second-guess prison medical professionals’ judgment and so no 8th Amendment violation was found).

40. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103–104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290–291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259–260 (1976) (“These elementary principles [per the Eighth Amendment] establish the government’s obligation to provide medical care to those whom it is punishing by incarceration.”)

41. See FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT 6031.04, PATIENT CARE 41 (June 3, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/6031_004.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019) (“If a diagnosis of GID [GD] is reached, a proposed treatment plan will be developed ... The treatment plan may include elements or services that were, or were not, provided prior to incarceration, including, but not limited to: those elements of the real-life experience consistent with the prison environment, hormone therapy, and counseling.”).

42. See Darren Rosenblum, “Trapped” in Sing Sing: Transgendered Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binarism, 6 MICH. J. GENDER & L. 499, 545–546 (2000).

43. See Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792, 800–801 (W.D. Mich. 1990) (granting transgender incarcerated person’s request for a preliminary injunction requiring prison officials to provide her with estrogen therapy where she had taken estrogen for the 16 years prior to incarceration); Gammett v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., No. CV05-257-S-MHW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55564, at *43–44 (D. Idaho July 27, 2007) (unpublished) (granting incarcerated person’s request for a preliminary injunction to provide estrogen therapy but only after self-castration required the provision of some type of hormone). Because many prisons refuse to prescribe hormones to incarcerated people who do not have a previous doctor’s prescription, incarcerated people who had been getting hormones through informal means may have an additional challenge in bringing suit.

44. See, e.g., Tates v. Blanas, No. CIV S-00-2539 OMP P, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26029, at *31 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 11, 2003) (unpublished) (rejecting a categorical rule that denies an incarcerated person a bra simply because he is transgender or is housed in a men’s ward; the possibility that the bra could be misused as a weapon or noose must be balanced against any medical or psychological harm resulting from denial of a bra); Lucrecia v. Samples, prison policies that deny them access to certain kinds of clothing and products, as well as specific refusals of prison staff to provide them with such property. In both situations, incarcerated people claim that the prison policies and refusals violate their constitutional rights. These challenges have been mostly unsuccessful, however, because courts show significant respect to prison officials' decisions about how to oversee daily life in prison.⁴⁵

Claims under the First Amendment generally fail when they come up against arguments by prisons that restrictions on dress, jewelry, and makeup are justified by legitimate penological interests.⁴⁶ Several courts have noted that such deprivations are simply not of a constitutional nature.⁴⁷

As one court stated:

“Because routine discomfort is part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society, only those deprivations denying the minimal civilized measures of life’s necessities are sufficiently grave to form the basis of an Eighth Amendment violation.” Cosmetic products are not among the minimal civilized measure of life’s necessities.⁴⁸

Additionally, courts have held that different grooming regulations for male and female incarcerated people do not trigger an incarcerated person’s equal protection rights.⁴⁹

No. C-93-3651-VRW, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15607, at *1–2, *15–16 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1995) (unpublished) (noting that transgender incarcerated person was permitted access to “female clothing and amenities” in one prison, but denying relief for second facility’s refusal of permission to wear female undergarments because of significant penological interests and lack of demonstration that wearing the female undergarments was a medical necessity).

45. See Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (holding a prison regulation intruding on an incarcerated person’s constitutional right will be upheld if the regulation is reasonably related to a legitimate prison interest).

46. See, e.g., Star v. Gramley, 815 F. Supp. 276, 278–279 (C.D. Ill. 1993) (holding that restrictions on clothing incarcerated people can wear are reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest and hence do not violate the 1st Amendment and allowing prison to prevent an incarcerated person from wearing women’s makeup and apparel on the ground that the individual would be more vulnerable to attack if he dressed that way); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) (denying request by transgender incarcerated person for cosmetics and female clothing and holding that “prison authorities must have the discretion to decide what clothing will be tolerated in a male prison”); Ahkeen v. Parker, No. 02A01-9812-CV-00349, 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 14, at *25–26 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 10, 2000) (unpublished) (upholding prison policy denying men the right to wear earrings, which was challenged on equal protection grounds, because by discouraging cross-dressing the policy discouraged sexual assaults).

47. Remember that in order to bring a successful § 1983 claim, you must allege a violation of a federal constitutional or statutory right. See Murray v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 95-5204, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 1716, at *7–8 (6th Cir. Jan. 28, 1997) (unpublished) (per curiam) (holding that denial of access to hair and skin products that transgender incarcerated person claimed were necessary for her to maintain a feminine appearance did not state a constitutional claim); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) (failing to be “convinced that a denial of female clothing and cosmetics is a constitutional violation”); Ahkeen v. Parker, No. 02A01-9812-CV-00349, 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 14, at *22 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 10, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that confiscation of the incarcerated person’s earrings by prison officials did not violate the individual’s privacy rights, as “loss of freedom of choice and privacy are inherent incidents of confinement” (quoting Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 528, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 404 (1984))).

48. Murray v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 95-5204, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 1716, at *7–8 (6th Cir. Jan. 28, 1997) (unpublished) (per curiam) (citation omitted) (quoting Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992)).

49. See, e.g., Hill v. Estelle, 537 F.2d 214, 215–216 (5th Cir. 1976) (holding that difference in application of state prison regulations, in failing to enforce hair length regulations against female incarcerated people, impinged on no fundamental right, created no suspect classification, and did not constitute violation of equal protection); Poe v. Werner, 386 F. Supp. 1014, 1019 (M.D. Pa. 1974) (holding that state prison hair length regulation does not violate the Equal Protection Clause, even though it does restrict female hair length or style).

D. Your Right to Confidentiality Regarding Your Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity

If you are an LGBTQ incarcerated person, you may not have disclosed your sexual orientation or transgender status to fellow incarcerated people. The disclosure by a prison official of your sexual orientation or gender identity could subject you to harassment or abuse by other officials or fellow incarcerated people. If a prison official has told others that you are gay, lesbian, transgender, or bisexual, you might have a claim under Section 1983 that the official violated your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment and/or your right to privacy under the Fourteenth Amendment.

1. Disclosure of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity as an Eighth Amendment Violation

(a) Sexual Orientation

One case specifically addresses an incarcerated person's Eighth Amendment right to be free from disclosure of his sexual orientation. Thomas v. District of Columbia involved a corrections officer at the Maximum Security Facility in Lorton, Virginia, who allegedly sexually harassed an incarcerated person and spread rumors that the incarcerated person was gay and a "snitch."⁵⁰ As a result of these rumors, the incarcerated person claimed he suffered emotional distress and feared for his safety when confronted and threatened with bodily harm by other incarcerated people. The incarcerated person sued the corrections officer under Section 1983, claiming the officer had violated his Eighth Amendment rights, and the officer filed a motion to dismiss the complaint.⁵¹

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia found that the incarcerated person had stated a valid Eighth Amendment claim against the officer.⁵² The court held that the officer's "alleged conduct, the physical harm with which [the incarcerated person] was threatened, and the psychic injuries that are alleged to have resulted from such unnecessary, cruel and outrageous conduct, are sufficiently harmful to make out an Eighth Amendment excessive force claim."⁵³

The rumors about the incarcerated person's sexuality were just one part of the abuse the officer allegedly inflicted on the incarcerated person, and it is impossible to know whether the case would have been decided the same way if the case was only about the incarcerated person's sexuality. However, there is language in Thomas that could be useful to incarcerated people bringing suits against prison officials who have revealed their sexual orientation or gender identity to other incarcerated people.

(b) Gender Identity

In 2003, Congress passed the Prison Rape Elimination Act ("PREA") to deal with the high levels of sexual assault and harassment in prisons, jails, police lock-ups, community corrections, and immigration detention.⁵⁴ In 2012, the U.S. Department of Justice created guidelines to implement PREA, known as the PREA Standards.⁵⁵ While the PREA Standards do not allow an incarcerated

50. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 1995); see also Montero v. Crusie, 153 F. Supp. 2d 368, 376–377 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (denying summary judgment for correctional officers who spread rumor that incarcerated person was gay and tried to incite fight between him and other incarcerated people).

51. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 1995).

52. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 5 (D.D.C. 1995) (denying the defendant's motion to dismiss and allowing the case to go to trial).

53. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 1995). But see Davis-Hussung v. Lewis, No. 14-14964, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126964, at *1–2 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 31, 2015) (unpublished) (finding no constitutional right violated when prison officials spread inflammatory rumors about incarcerated person's sexuality, despite fact that remarks led to one incarcerated person being harmed by other others).

54. Prison Rape Elimination Act of 2003, Pub. L. No. 108–79, 117 Stat. 972 (codified at 34 U.S.C. §§ 30301–30309 (2012)).

55. 28 C.F.R. pt. 115 (2018).

person to sue if the standards are violated,⁵⁶ they do create a baseline to help show that your constitutional rights have been violated otherwise. The PREA Standards provide specific protections to transgender individuals. For example, the Standards require prisons to screen incarcerated people within seventy-two hours of intake to figure out the incarcerated person's risk for sexual victimization or abuse.⁵⁷ This screening must consider whether the incarcerated person is (or may be thought to be) LGBTQ or gender nonconforming and prison facilities must consider this screening information in making housing and program assignments.⁵⁸

Furthermore, if you do not plan to disclose your gender identity while in prison, the PREA Standards help to maintain privacy for incarcerated people. The PREA Standards require that transgender incarcerated people get access to a private shower if requested. If this is not available, you can ask to either shower at a different time or in a more private area.⁵⁹ Many courts have also held that prison staff must do strip searches in a respectful, professional way—meaning that strip searches performed in full view of other incarcerated people may violate privacy rights.⁶⁰

2. Disclosure of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity as a Fourteenth Amendment Violation

The Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees the right to privacy regarding disclosure of certain personal information.⁶¹ These holdings come out of a Supreme Court tradition of finding a general right to privacy in the Constitution that protects certain intimate matters.⁶² Further, many other courts have also found that a constitutional right of privacy protects against disclosure of some kinds of personal information.⁶³ If a prison official discloses private

56. States that have adopted PREA use the Standards as a guideline for how to treat incarcerated people humanely. The Standards are purely advisory, meaning it is not mandatory for a prison who adopts PREA to follow the Standards. Courts have found that incarcerated people cannot sue prisons or prison officials for violating the PREA Standards. See, e.g., De'Lonta v. Clarke, No. 7:11-cv-00483, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5354, at *7 (W.D. Va. Jan. 14, 2013) (unpublished) (“[T]here is no basis in law for a private cause of action under § 1983 to enforce a PREA violation.”); Chinnici v. Edwards, No. 1:07-CV-229, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119933, at *7 (D. Vt. July 23, 2008) (unpublished) (“PREA confers no private right of action ... The statute does not grant incarcerated people any specific rights.”).

57. 28 C.F.R. § 115.41(b) (2018); 28 C.F.R. § 115.241(b) (2018); 28 C.F.R. § 115.341(a) (2018).

58. 28 C.F.R. § 115.41(b) (2018); 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(a) (2018).

59. 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(f) (2018) (“Transgender and intersex inmates shall be given the opportunity to shower separately from other inmates.”).

60. See Farmer v. Perril, 288 F.3d 1254, 1260 (10th Cir. 2002) (finding transgender incarcerated person has right not to be humiliated and strip searched in full view of other incarcerated people unless reasonably related to legitimate penological interest); Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 418 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding there may be violation of 8th Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment where public bodily searches are wholly unrelated to a penological justification).

61. See, e.g., Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599–600, 97 S. Ct. 869, 876–877, 51 L. Ed. 2d 64, 73–74 (1977) (holding that the “individual interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters” is one of the interests protected by a constitutional zone of privacy, but ultimately finding that a New York statute requiring that the state be provided with a copy of prescriptions for certain drugs did not violate the Constitution because it included appropriate confidentiality protections and furthered a legitimate state interest).

62. See, e.g., Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153, 93 S. Ct. 705, 727, 35 L. Ed. 2d 147, 177 (1973) (holding that the constitutional right to privacy includes a woman's decision whether or not to have an abortion); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–486, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–516 (1965) (holding that prohibiting the use of contraceptives violates the Constitution because the marital relationship is one that lies within the zone of privacy created by several constitutional guarantees).

63. See, e.g., Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 110–113 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding the disclosure of an incarcerated person's confidential medical information regarding transgender status as humor or gossip is not reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest and therefore violates individual's constitutional right to privacy); Nolley v. County of Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 728–736 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (finding that red stickers disclosing plaintiff's HIV status to non-medical staff and automatic segregation of HIV-positive incarcerated people violated constitutional and statutory rights to privacy); Doe v. Coughlin, 697 F. Supp. 1234, 1238–1241 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that the identification of incarcerated people with HIV and/or AIDS violated their right to privacy and information about you, you could be subject to harassment or abuse by other officials or fellow incarcerated people. If this has happened to you, you might be able to bring a claim under Section 1983 against the official who made the disclosure for violating your constitutional right to privacy. While many cases have focused on the disclosure of medical information, you might be able to bring a similar claim for unwarranted disclosure of other personal information.

(a) Privacy Regarding Gender Identity

The Second Circuit has found that a person's transgender status is among those constitutionally protected personal matters and that a prison official may not violate an incarcerated person's right to privacy through disclosure of gender identity when that disclosure is not "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."⁶⁴ In other words, the prison official must have a legitimate reason, related to the prison system's goals, for giving away such private information.

Because it is hard to imagine a situation in which a prison could claim a legitimate interest in "outing" a transgender incarcerated person, you might succeed if you bring a Section 1983 claim arguing that a prison official who told others that you were transgender violated your right to privacy. In Powell v. Schriver, a transgender incarcerated person argued that a corrections officer had violated her constitutional right to privacy when the officer told another corrections officer, in the presence of other prison staff and incarcerated people, that she had undergone gender reassignment surgery. The Second Circuit held that the corrections officer's "gratuitous disclosure" of the incarcerated person's "confidential medical information as humor or gossip ... [was] not reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest" and therefore violated her right to privacy.⁶⁵ Because there was no legitimate reason for the sharing of personal information, it was a violation of the incarcerated person's constitutional right to privacy. Keep in mind, however, that Powell focused on the incarcerated person's transgender status as a medical condition, and not on the sexual orientation of the incarcerated person.⁶⁶

(b) Privacy Regarding Sexual Orientation

Importantly, at least one court has also held that sexual orientation is one of those "personal matters" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.⁶⁷ There is also at least one case containing a that "the incarcerated people subject to this program must be afforded at least some protection against the non-consensual disclosure of their diagnosis").

64. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999); see also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79, 55 U.S.L.W. 4719 (1987) (holding that a regulation that violates incarcerated peoples' constitutional rights is only valid if it is "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests").

65. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999). Despite this finding, the Powell court ultimately found for the corrections officer because that officer was protected by qualified immunity. Qualified immunity shields government officials from liability for money damages on account of their performance of discretionary official functions "insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known." Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 113 (2d Cir. 1999) (quoting Rodriguez v. Phillips, 66 F.3d 470, 475 (2d Cir. 1995)). The Powell court found that the right of an incarcerated person to maintain the privacy of her "transsexualism" was not clearly established at the time the defendant in Powell made the disclosure, so he could not be held liable. Since the Powell case was decided, however, a court in the Second Circuit would likely find that the right to privacy about one's gender identity is "clearly established." See also Hunnicut v. Armstrong, 152 Fed. Appx. 34, 35 (2d Cir. 2005) (holding that the plaintiff adequately alleged a right to privacy claim based on the public discussion of his mental health issues). Also note injunctive relief (where you can make an actor carry out a court's orders) may still be available, even if the prison official has qualified immunity. For more information on qualified immunity and injunctive relief, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

66. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999). The unnecessary disclosure of an incarcerated person's medical information is generally recognized as a constitutional violation of privacy. See Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 317 (3d Cir. 2001) ("[T]he constitutional right to privacy in one's medical information exists in prison.").

67. See Sterling v. Borough of Minersville, 232 F.3d 190, 196 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the disclosure—or even threat of disclosure—of an arrestee's sexual orientation by a police officer constituted a violation of the privacy claim brought by an incarcerated person specifically related to sexual orientation.⁶⁸ However, it is important to recognize that the novelty (or “newness”) of your claim makes it somewhat unlikely to succeed. While cases like Lawrence v. Texas (where the Supreme Court held that sexual activity between people of the same sex was within the zone of privacy protected by the Constitution)⁶⁹ have found a valid privacy claim for the disclosure of sexual orientation, most of these cases are decided outside of the prison context. Again, there are many limits to constitutional rights for incarcerated people (including limitations on privacy rights).⁷⁰

3. Potential Obstacles to Suit

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) prohibits requests for emotional distress without related physical injury (that rises above a “de minimis”, or minimal, level).⁷¹ Therefore, a prison official’s violation of your right to confidentiality would have to create a risk of serious harm to be actionable under the Constitution. Yet, the evidence standard is lower if you are alleging sexual abuse and/or sexual harassment because you do not need to show a physical injury.⁷² For more information, review JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” on the PLRA.

If this rule prevents you from bringing suit under the Constitution, you may still have a state law remedy available to you. Many states recognize the tort of invasion of privacy. A tort is an action, usually for money damages that you can bring against a government or individual defendants if they violate your privacy. If the state in which you are incarcerated recognizes this tort, and has waived Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity (which is a legal concept that prevents you from bring a lawsuit against a state), you can sue for disclosure of your sexual orientation or gender identity under state law.⁷³ Be aware, though, that you may have to file a tort claim or other kind of administrative arrestee’s constitutional right to privacy because sexual orientation is an “intimate aspect of [one’s] personality entitled to privacy protection” and “[i]t is difficult to imagine a more private matter than one’s sexuality and a less likely probability that the government would have a legitimate interest in disclosure of sexual identity”).

68. See Johnson v. Riggs, No. 03-C-219, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44428, at *36–39 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 15, 2005) (unpublished) (recognizing Sterling’s right to privacy in one’s sexual orientation in the prison context and denying any sort of legitimate penological purpose in disclosing this information without incarcerated person’s consent but finding for the defendant on grounds of qualified immunity).

69. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2484, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 525–526, 71 U.S.L.W. 4574, 2003 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5559, 2003 Daily Journal DAR 7036, 16 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 427 (2003) (holding that the “petitioners are entitled to respect for their private lives” and the state “cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime,” relying on the right to liberty under the Due Process Clause and noting that there is an area of personal liberty that the government may not enter).

70. See Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135–137, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169–2170, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172–173, 71 U.S.L.W. 4445, 6 A.L.R.6th 731, 16 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 354 (2003) (finding no substantive due process violation where various prison regulations restricted incarcerated peoples’ rights to receive visits from family members, noting limited privacy rights in prison).

71. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

72. 28 C.F.R. § 115.72 (2018) (explaining that to bring a substantiated allegation, prisons only require “preponderance of the evidence,” meaning it is more likely than not that you were sexually abused or harassed). Several courts have also allowed emotional distress claims under state laws for incarcerated peoples’ allegations of sexual abuse/harassment. See, e.g., Chao v. Ballista, 806 F. Supp. 2d 358, 381 (D. Mass. 2011) (affirming jury verdict that found intentional infliction of emotional distress when incarcerated person was sexually abused by prison guards); Heckenlaible v. Va. Peninsula Reg’l Jail Auth., 491 F. Supp. 2d 544, 553 (E.D. Va. 2007) (“[T]estimony that she was the victim of a sexual assault is sufficient to avoid summary judgment on her intentional infliction of emotional distress claim. She need not come forward with objectively verifiable evidence of severe distress, if the jury believes her testimony about the effects of an intentional sexual assault on her by [prison guard].”).

73. For more information on state tort actions, see Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.” Note such 11th Amendment waivers are almost always triggered by a state statute that requires filing a notice of claim within a short period of time. If you are thinking about filing such a tort claim under state law, you should be aware of the short filing period and look at Chapter 17 as soon as possible.

claim with the state before you can sue state officials for money damages. This is another reason you should consult with an attorney as soon as possible to make sure you do not miss important deadlines that might apply to any potential case.

E. Assault and Harassment

1. Assault⁷⁴

LGBTQ incarcerated people are often more vulnerable than other incarcerated people to assault (including sexual assault), and to illegal searches by prison guards. Assault can happen at the hands of both fellow incarcerated people, guards or prison staff. If you have experienced such assault, you may be able to bring a Section 1983 claim against prison officials for violation of your Eighth Amendment rights either for assaulting you or for failing to protect you from assault.

You should read Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” and Chapter 24, “Your Right to Be Free From Assault” of the JLM if you are considering bringing a suit against prison officials for assault.

(a) Assault by Prison Employees

The Eighth Amendment protects you from punishment that is cruel or unusual.⁷⁵ Courts have been reluctant to find constitutional violations when prison officials use force to maintain or restore security within the prison.⁷⁶ However, if the force has no identifiable purpose and is simply meant to harm the incarcerated person, a prison official may be found to have used excessive force.

To show that an assault by a prison official violates the Eighth Amendment, you must prove that: (1) the prison official acted “maliciously and sadistically”; and (2) you suffered some physical injury.⁷⁷ This standard was explained by the Supreme Court in Hudson v. McMillian, and is known as “the Hudson standard.”⁷⁸

To determine whether an official acted maliciously and sadistically, courts will consider factors such as:

- (1) The extent of the injury suffered;⁷⁹
- (2) The need for the official to have used force under the circumstances;

74. See Chapter 24 of the JLM, “Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated People,” for information on assault in prisons generally.

75. U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

76. U.S. Const. amend. VIII. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6–7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998–999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165–166 (1992) (stating that “application of the deliberate indifference standard is inappropriate when authorities use force to put down a prison disturbance.”).

77. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992). See also Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 36, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995 (2010) (“When prison officials maliciously and sadistically use force to cause harm ... contemporary standards of decency always are violated ... whether or not significant injury is evident.”).

78. The Hudson standard applies to excessive force used against convicted incarcerated people. The standard to determine whether excessive force was used against a pretrial detainee is different. For a pretrial detainee to bring a claim against a prison official, he must show a violation of the 14th Amendment Due Process Clause. To do this, he must show that the force was purposeful (not accidental or negligent) and that the deliberate use of force was objectively unreasonable. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2472–73, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416 (2015). As this is a new case, it is unclear whether the Kingsley objective standard for looking at excessive force claims by pretrial detainees under the 14th Amendment goes against the Hudson prior finding that a subjective standard is required to assess excessive force claims brought by convicted incarcerated people under the 8th Amendment.

79. While the injury does not have to be “significant” to prevail on an 8th Amendment claim, the extent of the injury “may suggest ‘whether the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary’ in a particular situation ‘or instead evinced such wantonness with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur.’” Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (quoting Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261–262 (1986)).

- (3) The relationship between the need to use force and the amount of force that was actually used;
- (4) The seriousness of the threat from the point of view of a reasonable person; and
- (5) Efforts made by prison guards to lessen the severity of a serious use of force.⁸⁰

Under the Hudson standard, you do not need to show you suffered serious injury, but you must show that you did suffer some physical injury. The extent of your injury is one of the factors a court will consider in determining whether the use of force violated the Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Also, the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA)⁸¹ prohibits actions for emotional distress without some physical injury.⁸²

(b) Assault by Other Prisoners

If you have been attacked or feel at risk of attack by fellow incarcerated people, you may bring suit under Section 1983 to claim that prison officials who failed to protect you violated your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.⁸³

To show that a prison official violated the Eighth Amendment by failing to protect you from assault by other incarcerated people, you must prove that: (1) the prison official exhibited "deliberate indifference" to your health or safety by ignoring an excessive risk to you; and (2) the injury you suffered was severe.⁸⁴

Deliberate indifference is a standard that is harder to meet than negligence, but not as difficult as the standard of "malicious and sadistic intent."⁸⁵ Generally, if prison officials were negligent, it means that they should have known of a danger or failed to take the precautions a reasonable person would have taken. If prison officials were acting with malicious and sadistic intent, it would mean that they acted with the intention of causing you harm. "Deliberate indifference" is somewhere in between those two standards; generally, it means that the prison officials were aware of a substantial risk to your safety but ignored it.

The leading case for Section 1983 claims involving assault and deliberate indifference is Farmer v. Brennan, in which a transgender incarcerated person brought a Section 1983 suit based on prison officials' failure to protect her from other incarcerated people because of her feminine appearance.⁸⁶ The Supreme Court defined "deliberate indifference" as the failure of prison officials to act when they know of a "substantial risk of serious harm."⁸⁷ The Court went on to say that an "inference from 80. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992).

81. The physical injury requirement of The Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) may also be important if you are thinking of bringing a sexual abuse claim, which is explained further in subsection 3(b) of Part E. The PLRA also requires that you exhaust administrative options before bringing an action under § 1983. See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information on the PLRA and its requirements.

82. The PREA Standards have a have a lower standard of evidence ("preponderance of the evidence" meaning more than a 50% chance) if you are alleging sexual abuse or sexual harassment. 28 C.F.R. § 115.72 (2016). Although PREA and the PREA Standards do not create a private right of action for incarcerated people (meaning you cannot sue on the basis of a PREA Standard violation), showing that a prison official violated a standard can help to show the seriousness of another claim you are bringing, but again, you cannot sue on this violation alone. See De'lonta v. Clarke, 7:11-CV-00483, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5354, at *7–8 (W.D. Va. Jan. 14, 2013) (collecting cases stating that PREA does not "create a private right of action for inmates to sue prison officials for noncompliance with [PREA]").

83. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding unanimously that prison officials can be liable for damages if they are deliberately indifferent in failing to protect incarcerated people from harm caused by other incarcerated people).

84. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding that a prison official cannot be liable under the 8th Amendment for denying an incarcerated person humane confinement conditions unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to individual's health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and must draw that inference).

85. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 835, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1978, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824 (1994).

86. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 831, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 821 (1994).

87. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

circumstantial evidence” could be used to demonstrate that prison officials had knowledge of a risk.⁸⁸ “Circumstantial evidence” is evidence that tends to support that something is true. This means that an incarcerated person can present evidence showing that it is likely that the prison officials knew of the risk, even if there is no “direct evidence” (such as statements from the officials or documented complaints from the incarcerated person) that shows this risk.

One important thing to keep in mind is that the “inference from circumstantial evidence” does not mean that an official can be held responsible for something he should have known but did not know. Rather, it means the circumstantial evidence should demonstrate that the official actually knew of something that he denies knowing.⁸⁹

Under Farmer v. Brennan, you do not have to wait until you have actually been attacked to bring a viable Section 1983 claim of deliberate indifference. If prison officials did not protect you from a mere risk of harm, they may still have deprived you of your rights under the Eighth Amendment. Your status as gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender may make it easier for you to prove that you are at risk of harm. If prison officials know your status, then they know you are at a higher risk for harm. For example, in Greene v. Bowles, the Sixth Circuit recognized an Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim where the warden admitted knowing that the plaintiff was placed in protective custody because she was “transsexual” and that a “predatory inmate” was being housed in the same unit.⁹⁰ The court held that a vulnerable (e.g. gay or transgender) incarcerated person could prove prison officials knew of a substantial risk to his safety by showing the officials knew of the incarcerated person’s vulnerable status, and of the general risk to his safety from other incarcerated people, even if they did not know of any specific danger.⁹¹ Although it may be easier to prove you are at risk if you are a vulnerable incarcerated person, you should still report any threats against you so that officials know about any specific problems, because there must be a substantial risk to actually prove deliberate indifference.⁹²

In your complaint, you should ask for a temporary injunction while your case is pending. An injunction is an order from a court making the prison officials take or not take a certain action. In your case, you may seek an injunction to be immediately transferred into protective custody while your claim is pending. Note, however, that for the court to grant you a temporary injunction, you will have to show that you are likely to win your case. You should also be aware that, under the PLRA, any temporary injunction that a court grants you is likely to expire before your case is resolved. You may

88. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994).

89. To be clear, under Farmer, to survive a motion to dismiss the complaint must allege that defendants knew or must have known of a substantial risk of serious harm. You are more likely to bring a successful claim if you can point to concrete facts that show that the defendants knew or must have known of your risk. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994). The exhaustion requirements under the PLRA can actually be helpful here because if the procedures require multiple levels of review and you have used up all administrative remedies, there will often be signatures by the supervisors that can be used to argue they “knew” of the risk. For more information on the PLRA, see JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

90. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004). Note that the plaintiff in Greene was actually attacked and severely beaten by the other incarcerated person.

91. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[A] prison official cannot ‘escape liability ... by showing that, while he was aware of an obvious, substantial risk to inmate safety, he did not know that the complainant was especially likely to be assaulted by the specific incarcerated person who eventually committed the assault.’” (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994))). The court also noted that deliberate indifference can be shown alternatively by proving that prison officials knew that a predatory incarcerated person presented a substantial risk to a large class of incarcerated people without segregation or other protective measures.

92. See Purvis v. Ponte, 929 F.2d 822, 825–826 (1st Cir. 1991) (per curiam) (stating the 8th Amendment was not violated when the incarcerated person had a general fear of “gay bashing” and suspected that homophobic cellmates threatened his physical safety, since he did not show a likelihood that violence would occur and officials had tried six different cellmates).

also file a temporary restraining order asking for safe housing, including in a woman's facility if you are a transgender woman.⁹³

Because the PLRA also bars incarcerated people from suing for emotional or mental distress without an accompanying physical injury, and punishes incarcerated people who file multiple lawsuits that courts deem "frivolous" or that fail to state a claim, you should be certain that your claim is one a court will recognize as valid. Be sure to review Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," and Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law."

2. Sexual Abuse

Sexual abuse includes rape and unwanted physical contact of a sexual nature, such as fondling someone else's breasts and/or genitals.⁹⁴ Generally, bringing a Section 1983 suit for sexual abuse in prison requires analyzing whether an Eighth Amendment violation occurred.⁹⁵ For example, if a prison official sexually abuses you, you must show that the prison official acted maliciously, and that you suffered harm.⁹⁶ Under PREA, the "harm" element is broadly interpreted.⁹⁷ Further, you can show sexual abuse by proving that the degree of assault violates "contemporary standards of decency."⁹⁸ Physical assault is easier to prove because you can show that the prison official acted maliciously and sadistically, you have automatically proven that it violates contemporary standards of decency.⁹⁹ With sexual assault cases, the contemporary standards of decency are often evaluated based on what the state law might say about sexual contact between incarcerated people and prison employees, and whether psychological harm was intentionally inflicted, or whether the assault was "offensive to

93. The PREA Standards require prisons to make individualized housing and program placement. 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(c) (2016) (evaluating transgender or intersex incarcerated person assignments by considering "whether a placement would ensure the inmate's health and safety, and whether the placement would present management or security problems"). The Standards also require prison staff to look at housing and program assignments at least twice a year to review for threats and must consider an incarcerated person's own view of his or her own safety. See 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(d)-(e) (2016).

94. 28 C.F.R. § 115.6 (2016).

95. See Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that there are 8th Amendment limitations to imprisonment, and that sexual abuse is unconstitutional); Hovater v. Robinson, 1 F.3d 1063, 1068 (10th Cir. 1993) (stating that "an inmate has a constitutional right to be secure in her bodily integrity and free from attack by prison guards" (citing Alberti v. Klevenhagen, 790 F.2d 1220, 1224 (5th Cir. 1986))). However, some jurisdictions, including New York State, have a zero-tolerance approach to sexual abuse. That means, if you are incarcerated, you are presumed incapable of consent. N.Y. PENAL L. § 130.05. This means that in New York, you can bring a claim against a prison official if you can prove that you were the victim of sexual abuse. N.Y. PENAL L. § 130.52.

96. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1992); but see Freitas v. Ault, 109 F.3d 1335, 1338 (8th Cir. 1997) (showing high bar to meet 8th Amendment violation in a "consensual" situation because "welcome and voluntary sexual encounters, no matter how inappropriate, cannot as a matter of law constitute 'pain' as contemplated by the Eighth Amendment").

97. See 28 C.F.R. § 115.6 (2016) ("Sexual abuse [includes] ... any other intentional contact, either directly or through the clothing, of or with the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or the buttocks, that is unrelated to official duties or where the staff member, contractor, or volunteer has the intent to abuse, arouse, or gratify sexual desire."); Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 260 (2d Cir. 2015) (finding sexual abuse of incarcerated people is broadly understood in light of PREA). While under PREA "harm" is broadly interpreted, neither PREA nor the PREA Standards allow an incarcerated person to sue for such a violation under those regulations. See Peterson v. Burris, No. 14-CV-13000, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 853, at *4 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 6, 2016) (compiling a list of courts which have found that "PREA does not provide incarcerated people with a private right of action"). While violations of the PREA Standards are not directly enforceable, showing a PREA "harm" occurred may support another claim that you bring.

98. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1992). See Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 260 (2d Cir. 2015) (applying spirit of PREA to explain that "contemporary standards of decency" changed so that "sexual abuse of incarcerated people, once overlooked as distasteful ... [now] offends our most basic principles of just punishment").

99. Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 37, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1178, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995 (2010).

human dignity.”¹⁰⁰ Courts have different ways of thinking about the subjective prong (which is a test that focuses on a specific prison guard’s state of mind) and analyzing whether a prison guard acted maliciously. Generally, courts assume that if you can show that the sexual contact did not serve a legitimate penological interest, the contact had malicious intent.¹⁰¹ If another incarcerated person assaulted you, you need to show that prison officials acted with deliberate indifference and that you suffered harm.¹⁰²

In addition, Title 18 of the United States Code, Section 2243, criminalizes sexual intercourse or any type of sexual contact between people with “custodial, supervisory or disciplinary” authority (meaning, prison employees) and incarcerated people in federal correctional facilities.¹⁰³ Moreover, Section 2241 of U.S. Code Title 18 makes it a felony for a prison official to use or threaten force to engage in sexual intercourse in a federal prison.¹⁰⁴ Many states also have laws criminalizing sexual contact between prison officials and incarcerated people.¹⁰⁵ See Chapter 24 of the JLM, “Your Right To Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners,” for more information about assaults.

3. Harassment

(a) Sexual Harassment

Sexual harassment is common in prisons, and LGBTQ incarcerated people are often even more vulnerable to such harassment than other incarcerated people.¹⁰⁶ Federal courts have recognized that sexual harassment of incarcerated people by prison staff can be a constitutional “tort” (an action, usually for money damages that you can bring against a government or individual defendants if they violate your constitutional rights), violating incarcerated people’s Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.¹⁰⁷ A incarcerated person can state an Eighth Amendment claim 100. See, e.g., Rodriguez v. McClenning, 399 F. Supp. 2d 228, 237–238 (S.D.N.Y. 2005); Turner v. Huibregtse, 421 F. Supp. 2d 1149, 1151 (D. Wis. 2006); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1196–1197 (9th Cir. 2000) (“A sexual assault on an inmate by a guard—regardless of the gender of the guard or of the prisoner—is deeply offensive to human dignity.”).

101. See Wood v. Beauclair, 692 F.3d 1041, 1050 (9th Cir. 2012) (“Where there is no legitimate penological purpose for a prison official’s conduct, courts have ‘presum[ed] malicious and sadistic intent.’”) (citing Giron v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 191 F.3d 1281, 1290 (10th Cir. 1999)); Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997); Graham v. Sheriff of Logan County, 741 F.3d 1118, 1123 (10th Cir. 2013) (“Thus, when a prisoner alleges rape by a prison guard, the prisoner need prove only that the guard forced sex in order to show an Eighth Amendment violation.”).

102. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 527 (5th Cir. 2004) (finding a deliberate indifference claim where prison officials continued to house a gay incarcerated person in the general population where he was gang raped and sold as a sexual slave for over 18 months); Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 84 (6th Cir. 1995) (holding that a warden who knows of a risk of physical and sexual assault posed to a vulnerable incarcerated person and fails to take reasonable steps to protect against such abuse may be found to have acted with deliberate indifference).

103. 18 U.S.C. § 2243. Also, under PREA, whether or not you give your consent, any kind of sexual contact between an incarcerated person and a prison official qualifies as sexual abuse. 28 C.F.R. § 115.6 (2016). Any sexual contact between incarcerated people, without consent, is sexual abuse. 28 C.F.R. § 115.6 (2016).

104. 18 U.S.C. § 2241.

105. While PREA and the standards make some distinctions about “consent” within prison, many states have statutes that criminalize sex between incarcerated people and guards regardless of consent, assuming that consent is not possible given the control dynamics of prisons.

106. National Prison Rape Elimination Commission Report (June 2009), available at <https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/226680.pdf> (last visited Mar. 19, 2017) (compiling key findings on the prevalence of rape and sexual harassment in prisons, findings which helped to create the PREA Standards to counteract some of these issues in a more standardized way).

107. See Daskalea v. District of Columbia, 227 F.3d 433, 450 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (finding the District of Columbia deliberately indifferent to a pattern of particularly heinous and widespread sexual harassment and abuse of female incarcerated people, including forced stripteases); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1197 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a pre-operative male-to-female transgender incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment rights were violated by a guard’s attempted rape, which constituted sexual assault offensive to human dignity); Boddie for sexual harassment only if the alleged harassment is so harmful that it could be considered a departure from “the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society,” and only if the defendant acted with intent to harm the incarcerated person.¹⁰⁸ As explained below, incarcerated people generally do not succeed in claims against prison staff for sexual harassment involving words alone. However, incarcerated people have succeeded in claims against prison staff for sexual harassment that did involve repeated physical touching or assault, or that threatened the incarcerated person’s safety.¹⁰⁹

The 1996 passage of the PLRA made it much harder for an incarcerated person to succeed in a sexual harassment claim against prison staff. Again, while the PLRA does not explicitly state that incarcerated people cannot sue for sexual harassment, it does say they cannot receive money damages “for mental or emotional injury ... without a prior showing of physical injury.”¹¹⁰ Many courts have interpreted this to mean that you cannot receive money damages for sexual harassment unless the harasser physically hurt you.¹¹¹ But other sorts of relief, like “injunctions” (where the court orders someone to stop or start some action other than the payment of money damages), may be available to

v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861–862 (2d Cir. 1997) (noting that sexual abuse by corrections officers could be an 8th Amendment violation, but ultimately holding that the particular allegations of verbal harassment and bodily contact made by incarcerated person were not sufficiently serious to be a violation); Freitas v. Ault, 109 F.3d 1335, 1338 (8th Cir. 1997) (recognizing sexual harassment as a constitutional claim where plaintiff alleges that the harassment objectively caused physical or psychological pain and that the officer acted with a sufficiently culpable state of mind); Johnson v. Phelan, 69 F.3d 144, 147 (7th Cir. 1995) (noting that “a prisoner has a remedy for deliberate harassment, on account of sex, by guards of either sex”). But see Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 904 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (dismissing plaintiff’s sexual harassment claim because, although the Ninth Circuit has recognized that sexual harassment may constitute a claim for an 8th Amendment violation, “the Court has specifically differentiated between sexual harassment that involves verbal abuse and that which involves allegations of physical assault, finding the latter to be in violation of the constitution.”); see also James E. Robertson, Cruel and Unusual Punishment in United States Prisons: Sexual Harassment Among Male Inmates, 36 Am. Crim. L. Rev. 1, 19–23 (1999) (looking at cases both involving physical contact and no physical contact).

108. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 1995) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8 (1992)).

109. Wood v. Beauclair, 692 F.3d 1041, 1049 (9th Cir. 2012) (holding that if an incarcerated person brings a claim of sexual harassment against a prison official, the individual enjoys the presumption that the sexual contact was nonconsensual); Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 939–940 (7th Cir. 2003) (finding that the strip search was conducted “in a manner designed to demean and humiliate” the incarcerated person and was therefore a sufficient 8th Amendment claim); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1197 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a pre-operative male-to-female transgender incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment rights were violated by a guard’s attempted rape, which constituted sexual assault offensive to human dignity); Watson v. Jones, 980 F.2d 1165, 1165–1166 (8th Cir. 1992) (finding a valid 8th amendment claim where correctional officer sexually harassed two incarcerated people on an almost daily basis for two months by conducting deliberate examination of their genitalia and anuses); Berry v. Oswalt, 143 F.3d 1127, 1131 (8th Cir. 1998) (upholding a jury’s finding that the incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment rights had been violated when a guard “had attempted to perform non-routine pat-downs on her, had propositioned her for sex, had intruded upon her while she was not fully dressed, and had subjected her to sexual comments”); Webb v. Foreman, No. 93 Civ. 8579 (JGK), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15227, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 1996) (unpublished) (holding that when a guard conducts a strip search that includes grabbing the incarcerated person’s genitals, the conduct may be a valid 8th Amendment claim); Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 4–5 (D.D.C. 1995) (finding a valid 8th Amendment claim where correctional officer harassed incarcerated person and spread rumors that he was gay, thereby endangering him).

110. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

111. Cobb v. Kelly, No. 4:07CV108-P-A, 2007 WL 2159315, at *1 (N.D. Miss. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (finding PLRA’s physical injury requirement not met when plaintiff’s case manager fondled his genitals); Smith v. Shady, No. 3:CV-05-2663, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24754, at *5–6 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 8, 2006) (unpublished) (finding PLRA’s physical injury requirement not met when correctional officer held and fondled incarcerated person’s penis); Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565–566 (W.D. Va. 2000) (finding PLRA’s physical injury requirement not met when correctional officers viewed incarcerated person naked and encouraged him to masturbate). But see Kemner v. Hemphill, 199 F. Supp. 2d 1264, 1270 (N.D. Fla. 2002) (finding that incarcerated person who was forced to perform oral sex on fellow incarcerated person suffered physical injury sufficient to satisfy PLRA’s physical injury requirement).

you.¹¹² For this reason it is important to learn about the PLRA, particularly its physical injury requirement, before you file a suit.¹¹³

Nevertheless, for administrative investigations (investigations done by prison officials) evidence of physical injury is not required to show sexual harassment.¹¹⁴

(b) Verbal Harassment

Prisoners who try to sue based on verbal harassment face two obstacles: (1) an interpretation of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment that prohibits verbal harassment lawsuits and (2) the PLRA's physical injury requirement. Courts often find that words alone, no matter how abusive, do not violate the Eighth Amendment.¹¹⁵ So, claims by incarcerated people against prison staff for harassment consisting only of words generally do not succeed.¹¹⁶

Additionally, even where incarcerated people have alleged valid Eighth Amendment violations, courts have often determined that the PLRA blocks the suits if there is not a physical injury.¹¹⁷ For instance, harassment by prison staff has been found to violate the Eighth Amendment when it includes threats of attack with a lethal weapon.¹¹⁸ But where there is no physical injury, some courts have

112. Multiple circuits have found that the PLRA does not bar an incarcerated person from injunctive relief. See Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002); Herman v. Holiday, 238 F.3d 660, 665 (5th Cir. 2001); Harris v. Garner, 190 F.3d 1279, 1288 (11th Cir. 1999); Perkins v. Kansas Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 808 (10th Cir. 1999); Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1346 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 462–463 (7th Cir. 1997).

113. See JLM, Chapter 14.

114. See 28 C.F.R. §§ 115.71, 115.72 (2020) (governing federal investigations). State administrative investigations may vary and some may require evidence of a physical injury.

115. See, e.g., Adkins v. incarcerated person Rodriguez, 59 F.3d 1034, 1037 (10th Cir. 1995) (holding that a jail deputy who had made comments to a female incarcerated person about her body and his own sexual prowess, and entered her cell, stood over her bed, and told her she had nice breasts, engaged in “outrageous and unacceptable” conduct, but that the conduct did not violate the 8th Amendment, because it did not include “physical intimidation”); Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 903 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (“Allegations of verbal harassment and abuse fail to state [an 8th Amendment] claim cognizable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.”); Ellis v. Meade, 887 F. Supp. 324, 328–329 (D. Me. 1995) (holding that a correctional officer allegedly tapping or spanking an incarcerated person’s buttocks and asking “How’s the little boy doing?” did not violate the 8th Amendment because the comment was isolated and carried no threat of violence); Maclean v. Secor, 876 F. Supp. 695, 699 (E.D. Pa. 1995) (holding that threats alone do not make a constitutional claim even if the threatened incarcerated person has a particular vulnerability to assault).

116. See, e.g., Austin v. Terhune, 367 F.3d 1167, 1171–1172 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that a guard who exposed genitalia to an incarcerated person from a glass-walled control booth for a 30–40 second “isolated incident” was not serious enough to constitute an 8th Amendment violation, and noting generally that “[a]lthough incarcerated people have a right to be free from sexual abuse, whether at the hands of fellow inmates or prison guards, the 8th Amendment’s protections do not necessarily extend to mere verbal sexual harassment” (citation omitted)); DeWalt v. Carter, 224 F.3d 607, 612 (7th Cir. 2000) (finding that a guard’s use of sexually explicit and racially derogatory language was not a constitutional violation, stating that “[s]tanding alone, simple verbal harassment does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment, deprive a prisoner of a protected liberty interest, or deny a prisoner equal protection of the laws”); Barney v. Pulsipher, 143 F.3d 1299, 1310 n.11 (10th Cir. 1998) (holding that verbal harassment and intimidation alone, without allegations of sexual assault, were insufficient to state an 8th Amendment cause of action); Blueford v. Prunty, 108 F.3d 251, 254–255 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that prison guard engaging in “vulgar same-sex trash talk” with incarcerated people incarcerated people was entitled to qualified immunity because an incarcerated person’s right to be free from such behavior was not clearly established at the time the behavior took place); compare Beal v. Foster, 803 F.3d 356, 359 (7th Cir. 2015) (finding verbal harassment actionable because, when prison guard called plaintiff “punk, faggot, sissy and queer” in front of other inmates, the likelihood of subsequent sexual assault and psychological damage increased). But see Chapter 24 of the JLM which cites cases holding that incarcerated people may get money damages for psychological injury inflicted by prison staff.

117. See JLM, Chapter 14.

118. See, e.g., Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1524–1525 (10th Cir. 1992) (finding some forms of verbal harassment can inflict cruel and unusual punishment when they involve threatened use of lethal weapons); Burton v. Livingstone, 791 F.2d 97, 100–101 (8th Cir. 1986); Douglas v. Marino, 684 F. Supp. 395, 397–398 (D.N.J. 1988).

determined that these cases are blocked by the PLRA's physical injury requirement.¹¹⁹ Also, some courts have held the PLRA blocks the recovery of money damages in cases where harassing language or threats are accompanied by groping or abusive touching.¹²⁰

F. Housing and Protective Custody

1. Housing Issues for Transgender Incarcerated People¹²¹

Like most other institutions, prisons are structured around the assumptions that all people are easily classified as either male or female, gender is assigned at birth, and a person's gender remains constant throughout life. These assumptions present challenges for transgender, intersex, and gender-nonconforming incarcerated people, as the overwhelming majority of prisons recognize only two genders and segregate male from female incarcerated people.

Transgender incarcerated people are generally housed either according to the gender they were assigned at birth or by their genitalia.¹²² However, the PREA Standards require housing decisions to be made on an individual basis, taking into consideration the health and safety of the inmate.¹²³ Furthermore, prison staff cannot make housing decisions based only on an incarcerated person's LGBTQ status.¹²⁴

119. See, e.g., Cobb v. Kelly, No. 4:07CV108-P-A, 2007 WL 2159315, at *1 (N.D. Miss. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when plaintiff's case manager fondled his genitals); Smith v. Shady, No. 3:CV-05-2663, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24754, at *5–6 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 8, 2006) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when correctional officer held and fondled incarcerated person's penis); Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565–566 (W.D. Va. 2000) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement was not met when female corrections officers viewed male incarcerated person naked and encouraged him to masturbate); Boxer X v. Harris, 437 F.3d 1107, 1111 (11th Cir. 2006) (finding no 8th Amendment violation when a female prison guard made a male incarcerated person masturbate in front of her under a threat of retaliation, because the case did not present more than a de minimus (minimal) injury); Moton v. Walker, 545 F. App'x 856, 860 (11th Cir. 2013) (finding no 8th Amendment violation when officer, with sadistic smile, conducted a visual body cavity search because the incarcerated person only suffered a de minimus injury).

120. See, e.g., Walker v. Akers, No. 98-C-3199, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14995, at *15–17 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 1999) (unpublished) (holding that the PLRA's physical injury requirement bars the recovery of monetary damages where corrections officer threatened incarcerated person and held electric stun gun to his head).

121. All known transgender incarcerated people who have filed lawsuits contesting their conditions of imprisonment that have resulted in reported opinions have been male-to-female (MTF) transgender people. This, of course, does not mean that female-to-male (FTM) transgender incarcerated people do not face challenges while incarcerated. If you are an FTM incarcerated person who wishes to sue officials of the prison in which you are housed, the lack of precedent for such cases should not stop you from doing so. But, it might be advisable to contact an impact litigation organization specializing in transgender rights for help in preparing your claim. See Appendix A of this Chapter, "LGBTQ Resources," for information on these organizations.

122. See, e.g., Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 829–830, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994) (noting that a pre-operative male-to-female transgender incarcerated person was housed in male housing despite receiving hormone treatments and dressing femininely); Farmer v. Haas, 990 F.2d 319, 320 (7th Cir. 1993) (noting plaintiff's incarceration with the male population despite undergoing estrogen therapy and receiving silicone breast implants). But see Crosby v. Reynolds, 763 F. Supp. 666, 669–670 (D. Me. 1991) (upholding placement of pre-operative transgender person undergoing hormone treatment, at her request and on the recommendation of the jail's contract physician, within the female population, even in the face of a challenge by the incarcerated person's female cellmate, who alleged it was a violation of her right to privacy); Farmer v. Haas, 990 F.2d 319, 320 (7th Cir. 1993) ("the practice of the federal prison authorities . . . is to incarcerate people who have completed sexual reassignment with incarcerated people of the transsexual's new gender.").

123. 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(c) (2020).

124. See 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(g) (2020) ("The agency shall not place lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, or intersex inmates in dedicated facilities, units, or wings solely on the basis of such identification or status, unless such placement is in a dedicated facility, unit, or wing established in connection with a consent decree, legal settlement, or legal judgment for the purpose of protecting such inmates."). Should you experience a violation of these policies, the agency is required to allow you to report the incident to the agency involved and to a public or private third-party agency. See 28 C.F.R. § 115.51 (2020).

To date, no one has successfully challenged the gendered housing policies of prisons that places transgender incarcerated people in housing for genders with which they do not identify.¹²⁵ The Supreme Court has explicitly held that incarcerated people do not have a constitutional right to choose their place of confinement.¹²⁶ Moreover, courts generally respect prison officials' choices about how to manage their institutions, and classification within prisons has not been found to violate a liberty interest.¹²⁷ Thus, it is unlikely that you will be able to successfully challenge your housing classification in court.

2. Segregation and Protective Custody

State prisons may not segregate LGBTQ incarcerated people from the general prison population unless either an incarcerated people asks for this or a court order requires such separation.¹²⁸ If being housed with the general population is difficult or harmful for you, you can request to be placed in segregation or protective custody. While LGBTQ incarcerated people deserve protection, the conditions of protective custody often are horrible.¹²⁹

Segregation means different things in different prisons. Some prisons have so many LGBTQ incarcerated people that they have a wing for people identifying themselves as LGBTQ; other prisons can offer only single rooms, or certain cells within a larger segregation unit, for the occasional LGBTQ incarcerated person.¹³⁰

125. See, e.g., Shango v. Jurich, 681 F.2d 1091, 1104 (7th Cir. 1982) (denying transgender incarcerated person's equal protection claim for not being classified as a woman and housed with female incarcerated people on ground that a prison administrative decision may give rise to an equal protection claim only if the plaintiff can "demonstrate intentional or purposeful discrimination to show an equal protection violation."); Lucrecia v. Samples, No. C-93-3651-VRW, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15607, at *14–15 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1995) (unpublished) (holding a transgender incarcerated person's legal challenge alleging that her incarceration in a male cell violated due process must fail because no liberty interest was infringed and "housing decisions are within the discretion of prison officials"); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) ("Prison authorities must be given great deference to formulate rules and regulations that satisfy a rational purpose and segregation of the sexes is a rational purpose."). See Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," for more information on challenging administrative decisions.

126. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 216, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2534, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 454 (1976) (reversing lower court decision ruling in favor of plaintiff incarcerated people who sought injunctive and declaratory relief for being transferred to prisons with less desirable conditions following a fire at their previous facility).

127. See, e.g., Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 482, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2299, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) ("[F]ederal courts ought to afford appropriate deference and flexibility to state officials trying to manage a volatile environment."); Grayson v. Rison, 945 F.2d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir. 1991) ("When prison officials have legitimate administrative authority, such as the discretion to move inmates from prison to prison or from cell to cell, the due process clause imposes few restrictions on the use of that authority."); McCray v. Sullivan, 509 F.2d 1332, 1334 (5th Cir. 1975) ("The federal courts are extremely reluctant to limit the freedom of prison officials to classify incarcerated people as they in their broad discretion determine appropriate."); Young v. Wainwright, 449 F.2d 338, 339 (5th Cir. 1971) ("Classification of inmates is a matter of prison administration and management with which federal courts are reluctant to interfere except in extreme circumstances"). For example, incarcerated people who have challenged their classification on other bases, such as security or gang classifications, have also been unsuccessful. See Chapter 31 of the JLM, "Security Classification and Gang Validation," for a detailed discussion of legal challenges to security classification decisions and the definition of liberty interests in the prison context.

128. Before the PREA Standards, the separation of LGBTQ-identified incarcerated people was used to punish LGBTQ people or was sometimes based on the false assumption that LGBTQ incarcerated people are sexual predators. 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(g) (2020).

129. Before the PREA Standards, the separation of LGBTQ-identified incarcerated people was used to punish LGBTQ people or was sometimes based on the false assumption that LGBTQ incarcerated people are sexual predators. 28 C.F.R. § 115.42(g) (2020).

130. The New York City prison system, for example, provides separate housing for gay inmates. Darren Rosenblum, "Trapped" in Sing Sing: Transgender Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binaries, 6 Mich. J. Gender & L. 499, 524 (2000). The Los Angeles County Jail includes a "homosexual ward" separate from the general prison population where (as of 1990) 350 gay incarcerated people were housed. Patricia Klein Lerner, Jailer Learns Gay Culture to Foil Straight Inmates, L.A. Times, Dec. 27, 1990, at B1. See also Falls v. Nesbitt, 966 F.2d 375, 376

(a) Getting Into Protective Custody

If you have been placed in general population and have experienced ill treatment there (attack or threat of attack), you may request to be transferred into protective custody through administrative channels.¹³¹ Be aware, though, that the conditions in protective custody could be the same as or very similar to solitary confinement (also called the “hole,” “SHU,” or “AdSeg”). However, according to the PREA Standards, incarcerated people in protective custody should receive access to programs, privileges, education and work opportunities to the greatest extent possible.¹³²

If your protective custody request is not granted when brought through administrative channels, including all administrative appeals processes, you may bring a Section 1983 claim against prison officials for violating your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. As explained in Part E of this Chapter, a prison official may be held liable under Section 1983 for violating the Eighth Amendment if he acted with “deliberate indifference” to your health or safety—that is, if he knew you faced a substantial risk of serious harm but disregarded that risk by not taking reasonable action to stop it.¹³³ In general, the more serious the threats or attacks against you and the more evidence you can produce that the prison officials knew about the risk but did nothing, the better your chances are of winning in court.

Few Section 1983 suits about the failure to house a incarcerated person in protective custody have been brought by LGBTQ incarcerated people, but several courts have recognized the vulnerability of incarcerated people who do not fit within traditional gender norms.¹³⁴ Before Farmer v. Brennan, the few claims that were filed had very limited success.¹³⁵ The Farmer Court’s extensive discussion of the (8th Cir. 1992) (describing a “special section of the prison reserved for those incarcerated people who are slight of build, physically weaker than the typical inmate, preyed upon, or, in many cases, homosexuals”); McCray v. Bennett, 467 F. Supp. 187, 190 (M.D. Ala. 1978) (describing segregation unit housing for, among others, “[k]nown homosexuals,” inmates who have histories of institutional violence, and those who are being punished for violating prison rules); Inmates of Milwaukee Cnty. Jail v. Petersen, 353 F. Supp. 1157, 1160–1161 (E.D. Wis. 1973) (describing cell block housing for, among others, gay men and narcotic addicts undergoing treatment or detoxification).

131. See Chapter 31 of the JLM, “Security Classification and Gang Validation,” for more information on requesting protective custody.

132. 28 C.F.R. § 115.43(b) (2020).

133. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding that “a prison official cannot be found liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying an inmate humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference”). See Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” for more information about Section 1983 and the deliberate indifference standard.

134. But see Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 850, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1985, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 833 (1994) (allowing an 8th Amendment claim by a transgender incarcerated person to go forward where she was placed in the general population and subsequently sexually assaulted, even though the incarcerated person did not express safety concerns beforehand). See, e.g., Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 82–84 (6th Cir. 1995) (noting that “small, youthful incarcerated people are especially vulnerable to sexual pressure”); Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362 (3d Cir. 1992) (noting that “fellow inmates subjected [plaintiff] to sexual assault on several documented occasions, most likely because of [plaintiff]’s youthful appearance and slight stature”); United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–527 (2d Cir. 1991) (noting that “even if [plaintiff] is not gay or bisexual, his physical appearance, insofar as it departs from traditional notions of an acceptable masculine demeanor, may make him . . . susceptible to homophobic attacks. . .”). See also Chapter 24 of the JLM, “Your Right To Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated Persons,” and Part E(1) of this Chapter.

135. See, e.g., Purvis v. Ponte, 929 F.2d 822, 825–827 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that the 8th Amendment rights of a incarcerated person were not violated even after he stated a general fear of “gay bashing” and a suspicion that homophobic cellmates threatened his physical safety, since incarcerated person presented no evidence of strong likelihood that violence would occur and officials had tried six different cellmates); Falls v. Nesbitt, 966 F.2d 375, 380 (8th Cir. 1992) (holding that guard who failed to protect gay incarcerated person from a cellmate who ultimately stabbed him was not deliberately indifferent). But see Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362–363 (3d Cir. 1992) (holding that the rights of an incarcerated person described as small, young, and meaning of “deliberate indifference,” however, may make it easier to win.¹³⁶ Also, the fact that courts have acknowledged the heightened vulnerability of incarcerated people known to be LGBTQ, or who might be thought to be LGBTQ, by giving lighter sentences strengthens the deliberate indifference argument of LGBTQ incarcerated people.¹³⁷ These cases may make it more difficult for a prison official to prove he did not have the required knowledge that LGBTQ incarcerated people are at risk. If you plan to bring a Section 1983 claim for violation of your Eighth Amendment rights, be sure to also read Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

(b) Getting Out of Protective Custody

Although segregation from the general prison population may afford LGBTQ incarcerated people protection from harassment and assault, the conditions of segregated cells are often worse than those in general population.¹³⁸ If segregation makes you ineligible for certain work detail or denies you access to libraries and other facilities, visitation, or proper medical treatment, prison officials must document those limitations, how long the limitation will last and the reason for such limitation.¹³⁹

If you have been placed in segregation and wish to be housed among the general population, you may request a transfer through administrative channels.¹⁴⁰ The PREA Standards state that you cannot be segregated for more than 30 days, and prison officials may involuntarily segregate only until an alternative arrangement, away from your abuser, can be found.¹⁴¹ If you are unsuccessful, you may file a complaint under Section 1983 and claim that the physical conditions of your segregation violate your Eighth Amendment rights or that the decision to place you in segregation is a violation of your equal protection rights. A Section 1983 claim seeking transfer out of protective custody is far less likely to succeed than an administrative claim requesting transfer into protective custody (and is also likely to take a lot longer, and trigger a $350 filing fee).

Courts have held involuntary segregation—even for non-punitive (non-punishment) reasons—does not infringe on a liberty interest except in narrow circumstances.¹⁴² For example, in a Seventh Circuit effeminate may have been violated when he was subjected to sexual assaults by other incarcerated people after officials in the federal prison where he was housed ignored his requests for protection), superseded by statute on other grounds.

136. But see Poole v. Yeazel, No. 94-3199, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 16195, at *3-4 (7th Cir. June 29, 1995) (unpublished) (holding that a guard who knew incarcerated person had been “labeled a homosexual” did not exhibit deliberate indifference when he failed to protect him from attack, rather “at best the defendants negligently failed to recognize a potential for assault,” a failure that does not rise to the level of a constitutional deprivation).

137. The U.S. Sentencing Guidelines are advisory guidelines that assist judges’ decisions in sentencing for federal crimes. Before 2005, federal courts had to follow the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines, but federal courts permitted what were called “downward departures” or reduced sentences when sentencing defendants known to be gay or who might be perceived to be gay, in order to protect these defendants from prison abuse. See 18 U.S.C. app. §5H1.4 see United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 525-526 (2d Cir. 1991) (finding downward departure of gay man’s sentence was authorized, under the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines as interpreted in United States v. Lara, 905 F.2d 599 (2d Cir. 1990), to ensure his safety in prison due to his feminine features which would make him vulnerable to attack by other incarcerated people); see also United States v. Wilke, 156 F.3d 749, 754-755 (7th Cir. 1998) (departing from sentencing guidelines because of incarcerated person’s sexual orientation and demeanor). Note that the Federal Sentencing Commission has discouraged, but not prohibited, the use of physical appearance alone in determining an incarcerated person’s potential for victimization and thus reduction in sentence. See Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 107, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2050-2051, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 418 (1996) (recognizing that use of physical appearance was discouraged by the Commission, but Commission does not prohibit doing so in all cases).

138. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2208-2210; 192 L. Ed. 2d 323, 344-347 (2015) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (emphasizing the terrible conditions of solitary confinement).

139. If you are in protective custody and believe you are being denied proper medical treatment, read Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.” 28 C.F.R. § 115.43(b)(1)-(3) (2020).

140. See Chapter 31 of the JLM, “Security Classification and Gang Validation.”

141. 28 C.F.R. § 115.43© (2020).

142. See, e.g., Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that, “absent extraordinary case, the court noted that, while it sympathized with the incarcerated person's desire not to be segregated, it had to take into account that there might not be possible alternatives to keep the incarcerated person's safe outside of the prolonged segregation.¹⁴³ Nevertheless, given the media attention around the Supreme Court case Davis v. Ayala, solitary confinement conditions may eventually be re-examined.¹⁴⁴

(c) Challenging the Conditions of Protective Custody

If you cannot or do not want to secure a transfer out of protective custody, but the conditions under which you are living in such custody are bad, you may bring a claim under Section 1983 for:

- (1) Violation of your Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment (if, for example, the cell is unclean, or you are not being provided with food and water often enough); or
- (2) Violation of your equal protection rights (if conditions in protective custody are much worse than those in the cells where the general population is housed and the difference is not justified by a legitimate interest, such as security).¹⁴⁵

G. Visitation Rights: Special Issues for LGBTQ Incarcerated People

Most state prisons and all federal prisons have policies that, subject to restrictions, allow incarcerated people to visit with their family members. Unfortunately, because many of these policies define "family" narrowly, LGBTQ incarcerated people whose partners wish to visit them in prison may face special difficulties. Incarcerated people do not have an absolute right to visitation.¹⁴⁶ While prisons may place limitations on visitation, or exclude visitation altogether, those limitations are only allowed if the prison has a legitimate goal rationally related to the functioning of the prison. Courts have accepted justifications such as the rehabilitation of incarcerated people and most importantly, prison security.¹⁴⁷ A prison official cannot simply assert that limitations on your visitation privileges serve circumstances, administrative segregation as such, being an incident to the ordinary life of a incarcerated person, will never be a ground for a constitutional claim' because it 'simply does not constitute a deprivation of a constitutionally cognizable liberty interest,'" (quoting Pichardo v. Kinker, 73 F.3d 612, 612–613 (5th Cir. 1996)); Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 482, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2299, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) (finding that federal courts should defer to prison officials because prisons are "trying to manage a volatile environment."); see also Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

143. Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 417 (7th Cir. 1987) ("Given her transsexual identity. . . it is unlikely that prison officials would be able to protect her from the violence, sexual assault and harassment about which she complains.").

144. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323 (2015).

145. See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 282 (1991) (holding that challenges to physical living conditions of prisons are governed by the deliberate indifference standard). For an explanation of the deliberate indifference standard, see Part C(1)(a) of this Chapter. See, e.g., Williams v. Lane, 851 F.2d 867, 881–882 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding state provisions for programming and living conditions for protective custody incarcerated people violated the Equal Protection Clause because they were unequal in comparison with general population incarcerated people, and not justified by security concerns). But see Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1009–1016 (N.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding that differences in treatment of protective custody incarcerated people at Clinton Correctional Facility with those in other protective custody units in New York State and with those in special programs did not violate equal protection rights of protective custody incarcerated people). For more information about what you need to prove to prevail on a Section 1983 equal protection claim in prison, see Chapter 16 of the JLM and Part B(1) of this Chapter.

146. See Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 133, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2186, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170 (2003) (upholding prison regulations which prevented family member visits with incarcerated people because regulations had rational relation to a "legitimate penological interest"); Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 585–589, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3232–3234, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 446–449 (1984) (finding that the denial of visitation is appropriate when the denial furthered a legitimate government purposes and was not for the purpose of punishment). See Part B(1) of this Chapter for an explanation of the way Turner has courts evaluate whether a constitutional right should be upheld in prison.

147. Prison administrators decide the "legitimate goals of a corrections system and [so] determin[e] the most appropriate means to accomplish them." Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2167, 156 security or rehabilitation interests; the officials must instead show that the visitation policies actually help accomplish the goals they claim and that incarcerated people are given adequate procedural safeguards.¹⁴⁸ This means that if a prison forbids you to visit with your partner because the relationship somehow poses a security risk to the institution, you can challenge the policy by arguing that denying your visitation does not actually help prison security.¹⁴⁹ Although the visitation policies vary from state to state, and state policies are different from the policies in federal prison, the justifications for those policies are similar everywhere. The rest of this Part will help explain why prisons have denied LGBTQ incarcerated people the right to visitation and whether or not those policies can be challenged.

1. Federal Prison Visiting Guidelines

If you are in a federal prison and you want to have regular visitors, you must submit a list of proposed visitors to prison staff members.¹⁵⁰ When prison officials are deciding whether to allow the people on your list to visit you, they will divide your visitors into three categories: (1) members of your immediate family; (2) other relatives; and (3) friends and associates.

Members of your immediate family include your parents, your spouse, and your children. In order for the prison to exclude a member of your immediate family from visitation, prison officials would have to show “strong circumstances” which justify excluding them.¹⁵¹ To exclude a relative who is not a member of your immediate family (including aunts, uncles, and cousins), the prison must have a specific reason.¹⁵² To exclude friends and associates, a prison official only needs to show that they “could reasonably create a threat to the security and good order of the institution.”¹⁵³

Until recently, federal law prohibited treating a same-sex partner as either a member of the immediate family or as another relative. However, the Supreme Court’s recent decisions in Windsor and Obergefell make clear that government policies that refuse to recognize the marriages of same-sex couples are unconstitutional.¹⁵⁴

If you are not married, the federal regulations do not explicitly forbid prisons from counting same-sex partners as immediate family members. However, same-sex partners do not appear on the list of who counts as immediate family members, meaning the prison officials can refuse to place them on the immediate family list.¹⁵⁵

Classification in the third category (friends and associates) means that prison officials only need to reasonably fear that your visitor will harm security or your rehabilitation in order to exclude them.

L. Ed. 2d 162 (2003) (finding that prison regulations which excluded family members, required children to be accompanied by a family member, and that generally banned visits for incarcerated people with two substance-abuse violations furthered the legitimate prison purposes of deterring alcohol and drug use, maintaining security, and protecting child visitors, and so were valid regulations).

148. See Kentucky Dept. of Corr. v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 463, 109 S. Ct. 1904, 1910, 104 L. Ed. 2d 506, 516 (1989) (finding that prison regulations, including prison visitation regulations, must include “specific directives to the decision-maker that if the regulations’ [conditions] are present, a particular outcome must follow, in order to create a liberty interest” for the incarcerated person whose right is being affected). For example, Thompson shows that a prison visitation regulation must be written in such a way that make clear the conditions that would trigger the denial of a visit, so that an incarcerated person could reasonably expect to enforce a regulation if a condition was not met. Kentucky Dept. of Corr. v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 465, 109 S. Ct. 1904, 1911, 104 L. Ed. 2d 506, 518 (1989).

149. If an incarcerated person wants to claim that a visitation regulation is improper because it does not further a legitimate prison purpose, the incarcerated person carries the burden of disproving that a regulation is a valid one. See Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170 (2003).

150. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44 (2020); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 540.44, Visiting Regulations (Dec. 10, 2015) (stating that if an incarcerated person wants to receive regular visitors, he must submit a list of proposed visitors to the staff).

151. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(a) (2020).

152. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(b) (2020).

153. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(c) (2020).

154. United States v. Windsor, 570 U.S. 744, 808, 133 S. Ct. 2675, 2715, 186 L. Ed. 2d 808, 851 (2013); see Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2608, 192 L. Ed. 2d. 609, 635 (2015).

155. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44 (202016).

In the past, prison officials have generally given two reasons for strict visitation policies for LGBTQ incarcerated people. The first reason was rehabilitation. Since sex between men or women was illegal in several states and could be outlawed by the federal government, it was possible for prison officials to claim that allowing incarcerated people visitation with same-sex partners harmed their rehabilitation. After Lawrence v. Texas, this reason is inadequate.¹⁵⁶ Lawrence said that a state cannot outlaw sex between two men or two women. So, it is difficult to imagine how a state could have a rehabilitative interest in preventing constitutionally-protected sexual activity in today's society. The more recent decisions in Windsor and Obergefell also make clear that same-sex couples have a right to marry and to have their marriages recognized.

The other more common justification given for restricting a LGBTQ incarcerated people's visitation was security. Prison officials have sometimes claimed that allowing a same-sex partner to visit or allowing the couple to show affection during visitation would open the gay incarcerated person up to possible violence and retribution.¹⁵⁷ While this justification has worked in other contexts (with the right to receive LGBTQ literature—see Part H of this Chapter), courts have often been harsh on prison officials who try to restrict visitation policies. In Doe v. Sparks, prison officials had a policy that allowed opposite-sex partners to visit incarcerated people, but did not allow same-sex partners to visit.¹⁵⁸ The prison officials claimed that the policy furthered the purpose of promoting the internal security of the prison. Although this case challenged a state prison policy, the case was decided under federal constitutional equal protection standards found in the Fourteenth Amendment. The court looked closely at the "security" reasons given by the prison. In Doe, visitors were not allowed any physical contact, nor were the relationships between the incarcerated people and the visitors announced in any way. The court said that there was no way for other incarcerated people to know of the same-sex relationship between the incarcerated person and the visitor, and therefore any threat to the security of the prison was "so remote as to be arbitrary."¹⁵⁹ The court found that the prison policy was not reasonably related to security concerns, and therefore it violated the federal equal protection standards in the Fourteenth Amendment.

A similar outcome was reached in a case where prison officials denied a gay incarcerated person the ability to kiss and hug his visiting partner. In Whitmire v. Arizona, prison policy allowed incarcerated people to kiss and hug family members and opposite-sex partners briefly at the beginning and end of visits.¹⁶⁰ The prison claimed that allowing a male incarcerated person to hug and kiss his male partner would cause other incarcerated people to label him as gay and therefore open him up to attack from other incarcerated people. In Whitmire, the incarcerated person was openly gay—he told other incarcerated people about his sexuality and the court also felt that it was implied since he had no problem showing affection for his partner. The court held the prison policy lacked "a common-sense connection" to security since the incarcerated person was already labeled as gay—or was at least willing to be so labeled.¹⁶¹ The court thus determined that the prison was potentially in violation of the incarcerated person's First, Third, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights.

These cases show that if a federal prison denies you the same visitation privileges as heterosexual incarcerated people merely because of your sexual orientation, you may have a strong claim against the prison for the denial of visitation.

156. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2483, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508 (2003).

157. See Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that there is no common sense basis for prisons to prevent, for safety reasons, displays of affection between same sex couples when an incarcerated person is openly gay).

158. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

159. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

160. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135 (9th Cir. 2002).

161. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135 (9th Cir. 2002).

2. New York Visitation Policies

New York State's visitation policies are very similar to those of the federal government, with some notable differences. New York prison regulations hold that the staff of a prison may deny, limit, or suspend the visitation privileges of any incarcerated person if there is reason to believe that "such action is necessary to maintain the safety, security, and good order of the facility."¹⁶²

Also, like federal prisons, New York prisons require that the inmate agree to the visit of a first-time visitor.¹⁶³ These visitors will be admitted unless prison officials can show some legitimate security reason for excluding them.¹⁶⁴ While prison officials generally have a lot of discretion in deciding what constitutes a safety concern, keep in mind that your prison will probably have to follow the same general rules as federal prisons. So, only stating that your same-sex partner would cause a security concern is likely not enough.¹⁶⁵

New York prisons generally allow physical contact between incarcerated people and visitors.¹⁶⁶ This contact can involve a small amount of kissing, hugging, and hand-holding (as long as hands remain in plain view of the staff). All of this can occur at the beginning and end of a visit, and brief kisses and embraces should also be allowed during the course of the visit as long as it does not offend other incarcerated people or visitors.¹⁶⁷ If prison officials try to prevent you from engaging in the same physical contact with your partner that heterosexual incarcerated people are allowed to engage in, you may have a valid claim under both federal and state law.¹⁶⁸

(a) New York's Family Reunion Program

Currently, New York has a Family Reunion Program that allows close family members a chance for more private visits with incarcerated people.¹⁶⁹ The program applies to close relatives and spouses who are in legal marriages.¹⁷⁰ Since New York allows same-sex couples to marry, you should qualify to participate in this program if you are married to a same-sex partner.

(b) New York City's Domestic Partnership Laws

Unlike the rest of New York State and the federal government, New York City's Domestic Partnership Law requires city correctional facilities to give registered domestic partners of incarcerated people the same visitation rights as those granted to married couples.¹⁷¹ This not only means that your domestic partner can visit you under the same rules as married couples but also that domestic partners may visit other family members (which includes your parents, spouse, and children) in the same way that heterosexual spouses may.

Very little case law involving the Domestic Partnership Law exists. This may be because that prisons are treating domestic partners in the same manner as heterosexual spouses. At the very least, the law has been upheld under challenges from various opposition groups.¹⁷²

162. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.4(a) (2016).

163. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.2(a)(1) (2016).

164. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.4(a) (2016).

165. See Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990) (striking down prison policy against visits by incarcerated people' same-sex partners on grounds that the connection between the policy and the supposed security concerns the policy is supposed to address is too remote).

166. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.3(i) (2016).

167. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.3(i) (2016).

168. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 201.3(i) (2016). See generally Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135–1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that there is no common-sense basis for prisons to prevent, for safety reasons, displays of affection between same sex couples when an incarcerated person is openly gay and similar displays of affection are permitted for heterosexual couples).

169. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.1 (2016).

170. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.3(a) (2016).

171. Admin. Code of the City of N.Y. 3-240 (2015).

172. See, e.g., Slattery v. City of New York, 179 Misc. 2d 740, 743, 686 N.Y.S.2d 683, 686 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1999) (holding that New York City had the statutory power to enact the Domestic Partnership Law).

H. Right to Receive LGBTQ Literature¹⁷³

Under Thornburgh v. Abbott, prisons may restrict your right to receive publications that may cause a threat to the daily operation of the prison.¹⁷⁴ In other words, you may not be able to receive publications if the prison administration decides that the publication could cause problems with security, order, or discipline. This rule has created special problems for LGBTQ incarcerated people.

1. Sexually Explicit Material with LGBTQ Content

(a) Federal Prisons

In Thornburgh, the Supreme Court found constitutional a federal prison regulation that gave prison officials the power to withhold sexually explicit publications—among other types of mail—from incarcerated people, if the officials reasonably believed that those publications posed a threat to prison order or security.¹⁷⁵ The Thornburgh Court also upheld as constitutional a 1985 Bureau of Prisons program statement that specifically listed “homosexual (of the same sex as the institution population) material” as “sexually explicit,” and a warden could decide not to allow incarcerated people to receive. The Court justified its decision on two grounds: (1) the material would, once in the prison, circulate and lead to “disruptive conduct”; and (2) if incarcerated people observed a fellow incarcerated person reading such material, they might draw inferences about the incarcerated person’s sexual orientation and “cause disorder by acting accordingly.”¹⁷⁶ After Thornburgh, then, all sexually explicit material can potentially be withheld, but it may be easier and more defensible for a warden to censor sexually explicit material depicting two men or two women.

Note that the holding in Thornburgh does not necessarily mean that you may never receive sexually explicit publications while in prison. The Thornburgh Court only held that a warden may choose to restrict your access to such material. The decisions of different wardens will result in different regulations in different prisons.

173. For general information about your right to communicate with the outside world, including your right to engage in non-legal correspondence, your right to communicate with your lawyer, your right to receive non-LGBTQ publications, your right to have access to news media, and your access to visitation while in prison, see JLM, Chapter 19, “Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World.”

174. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989). Note that the Thornburgh standard has replaced the previous and more relaxed standard articulated in Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974). Therefore, cases decided before 1989 are unlikely to be helpful to you because courts will probably only take into account cases decided under the currently prevailing Thornburgh test.

175. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989). Also note that since Thornburgh, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state prison may deny newspapers, magazines, and photos to incarcerated people who are “the worst of the worst” in terms of security threat and behavior. Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 530, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2579, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697 (2006) (finding prison regulation banning all newspapers, magazines, and photographs allowable because the regulation was reasonably related to the legitimate prison goals to motivate better behavior, to make it easier for guards to detect contraband, and to the lessen the amount of property to be used as potential weapons). Again, Beard demonstrates the wide level of discretion provided to prisons as they regulate incarcerated person’s and the materials received in prison.

176. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 412–413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472–473 (1989). Other courts have upheld similar state prison policies on the grounds that pornographic material leads to security risks. See, e.g., Frost v. Symington, 197 F.3d 348, 357–358 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding prison regulation that banned sexually explicit materials depicting sexual penetration because such material could lead to sexual harassment of female guards); Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1057 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding regulations prohibiting incarcerated people from possessing sexually explicit materials on grounds that regulation was “reasonably related to legitimate penological interests”); Allen v. Wood, 970 F. Supp. 824, 831 (E.D. Wash. 1997) (granting defendant prison’s motion for summary judgment because prison regulations prohibiting certain sexually explicit materials satisfied the reasonable relation standard); Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 788–791 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (upholding regulations prohibiting incarcerated person from possessing “general interest magazines directed towards issues relevant to homosexual individuals” on grounds that regulation was “reasonably related to legitimate penological interests”).

Further, though federal regulations allow the censorship of sexually explicit material and several courts have, since Thornburgh, upheld restrictions on such material, if wardens in your prison are exercising their discretion selectively (for example, allowing incarcerated people to receive explicit material about opposite, but not same-sex conduct), you may be able to bring a claim under Section 1983 to challenge this conduct on equal protection grounds.¹⁷⁷ If a warden in a federal prison is censoring only same-sex materials, some of the cases from this Chapter might help you make an equal protection challenge. First, it is not clear whether courts will allow prisons to make life more difficult for you simply because other incarcerated people dislike your sexual orientation.¹⁷⁸ Second, if you are already openly gay, lesbian, or bisexual, the warden will have a difficult time justifying a decision based on the idea that other incarcerated people who observe you reading the magazines would make life more difficult for you.¹⁷⁹

Finally, since the Thornburgh decision, the Bureau of Prison Program Statement has been updated.¹⁸⁰ It does not single out same-sex materials in the list of types of sexually explicit material the warden may reject. However, a court could still allow censorship of sexually explicit material if the prison could demonstrate legitimate prison-related justifications for restricting the material.

(b) State Prisons

Regulations governing many state prisons also contain provisions that permit censorship of sexually explicit materials depicting gay men or lesbians. State courts have found state prisons' regulations prohibiting this literature to be constitutional.¹⁸¹ For example, a court found that the New Hampshire Department of Corrections Policy and Procedure Directive banning "[o]bscene material, including publications containing explicit descriptions, advertisements, or pictorial representations of homosexual acts, bestiality, bondage, sadomasochism, or sex involving children" was constitutional.¹⁸² The New Hampshire Department of Corrections Policy and Procedure Directive has since updated its policy, removing the prohibition against "representations of homosexual acts."¹⁸³

2. Non-Sexually Explicit LGBTQ Publications

(a) Federal Prisons

The 2011 Program Statement on incoming publications, elaborating on the Federal Bureau of Prisons regulations, provides that:

177. See, e.g., Frost v. Symington, 197 F.3d 348, 358 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a prison's restrictions on an incarcerated person's possession of images depicting heterosexual penetration did not violate the incarcerated person's 1st Amendment rights); Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1060 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding regulation prohibiting incarcerated people from possessing sexually explicit materials on grounds that regulation was "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests"); Amatel v. Reno, 156 F.3d 192, 202 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that regulation banning use of Bureau of Prisons funds to distribute sexually explicit material to incarcerated people was reasonable means of advancing penological interests); Snelling v. Riveland, 983 F. Supp. 930, 936 (E.D. Wash. 1997) (rejecting incarcerated person's claim that prison policy banning receipt of written or graphic sexually explicit material violated his 1st Amendment rights), aff'd, 165 F.3d 917 (9th Cir. 1998).

178. See Watkins v. U.S. Army, 875 F.2d 699, 711 (9th Cir. 1989) (showing that, under Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 104 S. Ct. 1879, 80 L. Ed. 2d 421 (1984), the court is unwilling to allow the Army to prevent an individual from reenlisting on the basis of his sexual orientation.).

179. See Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136–1137 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding prison officials could not justify a discriminatory policy based on protecting incarcerated person from rumors about his sexuality when the incarcerated person was already "out" in prison).

180. See Federal Bureau of Prisons, U.S. Department of Justice, Program Statement 5266.11, Incoming Publications (2011), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5266_011.pdf (last visited Sept. 30, 2019).

181. See Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 789–791 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (upholding prison supervisor's denial of plaintiff's "blatantly homosexual" literature, claiming a legitimate penological interest in prison security).

182. Lepine v. Brodeur, No. 97-72-M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23743, at *15 (D.N.H. Sept. 30, 1999) (unpublished) (finding prison regulations forbidding incarcerated people from receiving pornographic publications depicting sex between two men constitutional).

183. N.H. Code Admin. R. Ann. Cor 301.05(j) (Lexis 2016).

“[s]exually explicit material does not include material of a news or information type. Publications concerning research or opinions on sexual, health, or reproductive issues, or covering the activities of gay rights organizations or gay religious groups, for example, should be admitted unless they are otherwise a threat to legitimate institution interests.”¹⁸⁴

This language seems to indicate that you should be allowed to receive a wide variety of LGBTQ publications with political, religious, social, and fictional content while you are in prison. Because prejudice against LGBTQ people often creates the view that everything about sexual orientation is sexual, and anything related to LGBTQ people is about sex, even if it explicitly is not, prison wardens may attempt to keep you from receiving issues of magazines such as The Advocate or Out on the grounds that they are sexually explicit. Under the 2011 Program Statement quoted above, such conduct in federal prisons is not allowed and can be challenged.¹⁸⁵

(b) State Prisons

Your right to receive non-sexually explicit LGBTQ publications in state prisons is less clear and possibly less strong than in the federal context.¹⁸⁶ Most states do not have program statements like the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and the options given to prison officials in Thornburgh v. Abbott may result in many different decisions and regulations even within the same state.¹⁸⁷

I. Changes in the Law

This Part of the chapter is designed to give you a sense of the recent cases that courts look to when deciding cases about LGBTQ incarcerated person rights. This Part begins by briefly explaining a very important Supreme Court case, Lawrence v. Texas, in which the Court ruled that states cannot criminalize same-sex conduct.¹⁸⁸ This case will be discussed alongside Bowers v. Hardwick, which was overruled by Lawrence v. Texas, Romer v. Evans, and Obergefell v. Hodges, all of which may affect claims brought by LGBTQ incarcerated people.¹⁸⁹ Finally, this Part discusses the general changes to the law that Lawrence and Romer might bring about.

Because many of the cases discussed in this Chapter are based explicitly on the court's reasoning in Bowers, keep in mind that the issues may be open to new interpretation because Lawrence and Romer came after. Please note that while both Bowers and Lawrence deal specifically with sexual 184. Federal Bureau of Prisons, U.S. Department of Justice, Program Statement 5266.11, Incoming Publications 2 (2011), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5266_011.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2020).

185. It is worth mentioning that publishers also have First Amendment rights regarding subscribers' ability to receive publications in prison. Unlike incarcerated person, publishers are not subject to the Prison Litigation Reform Act and its exhaustion procedures and fee caps, and so are able to sue the prison more freely. Publishers like Prison Legal News and others have repeatedly sued prisons when they have refused to distribute their materials to incarcerated person.

186. See, e.g., Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 730–731 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that incarcerated person's 1st Amendment rights were not violated when a non-sexually explicit membership application and organization bulletin for the North American Man/Boy Love Association were withheld from him, primarily because they posed a threat to prison security); Espinoza v. Wilson, 814 F.2d 1093, 1099 (6th Cir. 1987) (finding that censorship was justified because sexual activity between men had presented security problems at prison in the past and publications that advocate that activity posed a danger to institutional security); Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 787–91 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (finding incarcerated person did not have the right to receive two gay advocacy magazines, although lacking in sexually explicit material, and that the prison regulation banning “blatant homosexual materials” was constitutional).

187. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 417 n.15, 190 S. Ct. 1874, 1883 n.15, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 475 n.15 (1989) (noting that “[t]he exercise of discretion called for by these regulations may produce seeming ‘inconsistencies’. . . [but that given the] likely variability within and between institutions over time. . . greater consistency might be attainable only at the cost of a more broadly restrictive rule against admission of incoming publications”).

188. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518–519 (2003).

189. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140 (1986); Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855 (1996); Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 192 L. Ed. 2d. 609 (2015).

orientation, they may also affect claims brought by transgender incarcerated people because prison officials may perceive a transgender incarcerated person to be gay, regardless of the incarcerated person's actual sexual orientation.

1. Lawrence v. Texas and Due Process Claims

In the June 2003 case Lawrence v. Texas, the U.S. Supreme Court found a Texas law that criminalized sex between consenting adults who are the same sex to be unconstitutional.¹⁹⁰ While the decision may not have immediate practical impact on you or your conditions of confinement, the Lawrence decision may ultimately have major consequences. In the ruling, the Court held that the right to privacy, as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, includes the right to engage in consensual intimate or sexual activity, including same-sex activity.¹⁹¹

Many of the cases in this Chapter were decided before Lawrence. Because of this, many cases in this Chapter rely on the reasoning in an earlier Supreme Court case, Bowers v. Hardwick.¹⁹² Bowers, decided in 1986, was in many ways the exact legal opposite of Lawrence, and cases that would have relied upon the ruling in Bowers may now be decided differently, since Lawrence is now the law. For an example of how this can change can play out, see section I3 for a practical example.

(a) Bowers v. Hardwick

Bowers v. Hardwick was a Supreme Court case that found the constitutional right to privacy did not extend to sexual acts between consenting adults who are the same sex.¹⁹³ Generally, the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution prohibits the government from infringing upon fundamental rights unless there is a sufficient justification for the government's interference.¹⁹⁴ The question of which rights are "fundamental" has been the subject of many court battles. The Supreme Court has held in the past that very private decisions, such as the decision to use birth control or have an abortion, are protected under the Fourteenth Amendment because they involve a fundamental right to privacy.¹⁹⁵ In Bowers, the Court held that the right to privacy does not protect a man's right to have consensual sex with another man, and that states could prohibit those sexual acts on the basis of views that gay people are immoral.¹⁹⁶

(b) The End of Bowers

When the Supreme Court decided Lawrence v. Texas, it explicitly overruled Bowers, which means that Bowers is longer an acceptable case to use in court.¹⁹⁷ As a result, many cases that relied on Bowers in upholding the unequal treatment of LGBTQ incarcerated people might now be questionable. Several important issues arise after Lawrence. Keep these issues in mind if you are thinking about filing a lawsuit about your treatment in prison.

190. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518–519 (2003).

191. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518–519 (2003).

192. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140 (1986).

193. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 191–192, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2844, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 146 (1986).

194. "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1.

195. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–486, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–516 (1965) (holding that the right of married couples to access contraception falls within the right of personal privacy); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 154, 93 S. Ct. 705, 727, 35 L. Ed. 2d 147, 177–178 (1973) (holding that the abortion decision falls within the right of personal privacy, but qualifying that it must be considered against some important state interests).

196. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 196, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2846–2847, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 149 (1986).

197. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2484, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 525 (2003) ("Bowers was not correct when it was decided, and it is not correct today. It ought not to remain binding precedent. Bowers v. Hardwick should be and now is overruled.").

First, Lawrence says that under the Constitution, all adults, including LGBTQ individuals, have the right to engage in intimate conduct with another adult in private.¹⁹⁸ This means that private, consensual sex between two men or two women is no longer a crime. This does not mean that you have the right to have sex in prison, but it probably does mean that prison officials cannot treat you differently because you identify as LGBTQ or because others see you as LGBTQ.¹⁹⁹

Second, one Supreme Court Justice wrote in Lawrence that previous Supreme Court cases show that moral disapproval is not a good enough reason to treat people differently.²⁰⁰ While this statement is not a part of the main decision of the Lawrence case, the statement may be useful in court when arguing that your rights have been infringed because of your sexual orientation or gender identity.

Third, Lawrence makes all cases that have relied on Bowers open to challenge. When you are considering whether or not to bring a legal claim, pay close attention to whether Bowers was used in any cases in your jurisdiction. If you think a case relied heavily on Bowers and negatively affects your case, contact one of the impact litigation organizations listed in Appendix A at the end of this Chapter. It may be possible to argue that the negative case no longer applies since Bowers was overruled.

(c) The Unknown Effect of Lawrence

It is hard to predict the effects of Lawrence. The case decided that same-sex conduct gets at least some legal protection, so it could influence many other cases involving LGBTQ rights. But courts have hesitated to interpret Lawrence as establishing a basis for LGBTQ rights in cases where the facts are different from the facts in Lawrence. For instance, sometimes courts will use other previous cases—such as Romer v. Evans, which is discussed below—to avoid the question of whether Lawrence protects certain conduct.²⁰¹

At least one case that was decided after Lawrence has ruled that Lawrence does not give incarcerated people a right to receive publications covering LGBTQ issues. In Willson v. Buss, an incarcerated person sued the superintendent of his prison for the right to receive LGBTQ-related magazines.²⁰² The court noted that Lawrence overruled Bowers and recognized a constitutional right to engage in same-sex relationships. However, the court emphasized that this right may not extend fully to the prison context, because prison officials can limit the constitutional rights of incarcerated people for legitimate prison-related reasons.²⁰³

198. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518–519 (2003) (“When sexuality finds overt expression in intimate conduct with another person, the conduct can be but one element in a personal bond that is more enduring. The liberty protected by the Constitution allows homosexual people the right to make this choice.”).

199. Remember that privacy rights can be limited in prison, because courts often decide that the prison rules that affect incarcerated person privacy are “reasonably related” to a “legitimate prison purpose.” Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987) (“[W]hen a prison regulation impinges on inmates’ constitutional rights, the regulation is valid if it is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.”).

200. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 582, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2486, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 528 (2003) (O’Connor, J., concurring) (“Moral disapproval of this group, like a bare desire to harm the group, is an interest that is insufficient to satisfy rational basis review under the Equal Protection Clause.”); see also Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 634, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1629, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 867 (1996) (alteration and emphasis in original) (quoting Dept. of Agric. v. Moreno, 413 U.S. 528, 534, 93 S. Ct. 2821, 2826, 37 L. Ed. 2d 782 (1973)) (“[I]f the constitutional conception of ‘equal protection of the laws’ means anything, it must at the very least mean that a bare. . . desire to harm a politically unpopular group cannot constitute a legitimate governmental interest.”).

201. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855 (1996); see, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532–533 (5th Cir. 2004) (relying on Romer to conclude that the law clearly establishes that disadvantaging an incarcerated person because of his sexuality without any legitimate government purpose violates the Equal Protection Clause).

202. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782 (N.D. Ind. 2005).

203. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 786 (N.D. Ind. 2005). See Part H of this Chapter for more discussion of your right to receive LGBTQ literature while in prison.

2. Romer v. Evans and the Equal Protection Clause

The ruling in Lawrence v. Texas was based on the right to privacy protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, but the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment can be another basis for protecting LGBTQ incarcerated people's rights.

The Equal Protection Clause prevents the government from treating different "classes" or groups of people differently unless it has a good enough government-related reason.²⁰⁴ When courts consider equal protection claims, they use different legal standards depending on how the government is classifying people. For example, if the government treats people differently based on their race, it must convince the court that the different treatment is "necessary" to achieve a "compelling government interest." This is the highest standard, called "strict scrutiny," and it is the most difficult standard for the government to satisfy. If the government classifies people based on gender, the classification must be "substantially related" to an "important government objective." This is the "intermediate scrutiny" standard. Other classifications, such as ones based on age, only need to be "rationally related" to a "legitimate government purpose." This is the lowest standard, called "rational basis review," and it is the easiest for the government to satisfy. In general, the higher the standard of review, the more likely it is that the law will be found unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause.

Romer v. Evans is the most important case for LGBTQ people bringing equal protection claims.²⁰⁵ Romer involved an amendment to Colorado's constitution that prevented local governments from protecting gay, lesbian, and bisexual people as a class. For example, this amendment prevented cities from passing local laws to prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation. In hearing the case, the Supreme Court could have decided which of the legal standards described above should be applied to classifications based on sexual orientation. However, the Court avoided deciding that question by deciding that the Colorado amendment could not satisfy any of the standards, even the lowest one, rational basis review. The Court explained that there was no legitimate government purpose for the amendment. Instead, the amendment seemed to be based on "animus toward the class [gay men and lesbians] it affects."²⁰⁶

Romer v. Evans is important because it says that laws passed to harm a particular group, such as LGBTQ people, cannot survive even the lowest level of constitutional review. That ruling has led to other important victories. In Johnson v. Johnson, for example, the Fifth Circuit relied on Romer in discussing claims against prison officials.²⁰⁷ In Johnson, a gay incarcerated person said that officials failed to protect him from violence and rape by other incarcerated people, even after he told officials about the assaults. The Fifth Circuit said: "It is clearly established that all prison inmates are entitled to reasonable protection from sexual assault. . . . Neither the Supreme Court nor this court has recognized sexual orientation as a suspect classification [or legally protected group]; nevertheless, a state violates the Equal Protection Clause if it disadvantages homosexuals for reasons lacking any rational relationship to legitimate governmental aims."²⁰⁸ In other words, a prison cannot create policies that unfairly harm LGBTQ incarcerated people because it would violate the Equal Protection Clause.

3. A Practical Example

To help you figure out how Lawrence v. Texas and Romer v. Evans can work together to protect LGBTQ rights in prison, consider whether an earlier case about a lesbian incarcerated person, Doe v. Sparks, would have been decided differently if it had been decided after Lawrence and Romer.²⁰⁹

204. For more discussion of the federal Equal Protection Clause, see Part B(2)(g) of Chapter 16.

205. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–627, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1624–1625, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 862 (1996).

206. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 632, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1627, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 865–866 (1996). Animus can be defined as "hostility or ill feeling." Animus, OXFORD DICTIONARIES, Available at: <https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/animus> (last visited Sep. 26, 2020).

207. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532 (5th Cir. 2004).

208. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532 (5th Cir. 2004).

209. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

In Doe v. Sparks, a lesbian incarcerated person was denied a visit from her girlfriend.²¹⁰ The prison claimed that allowing the visit could cause anti-gay violence in the prison. The incarcerated person tried to bring an equal protection claim. She argued that she was being unfairly targeted for being gay, and that the prison's reasons for denying her girlfriend's visit were not rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. The court, in considering the incarcerated person's claim, acknowledged that "the equal protection clause dictates equal administration of rights and privileges, such as visitation, between similarly situated people."²¹¹

However, the court decided that denying gay and lesbian incarcerated people visitation rights was not a violation of the Equal Protection Clause. Because of Bowers v. Hardwick, the court said that LGBTQ people should not be treated as a "class" for equal protection purposes. The court also found that any group that is defined by sexual preference could not bring an equal protection claim.²¹²

This case might have been decided differently after the Lawrence and Romer decisions. The Doe court argued that the Equal Protection Clause can't protect individuals based on their sexual orientation, because Bowers already decided that the Constitution allows states to make it a crime for gay men and lesbians to have sex.²¹³ Since Lawrence overruled Bowers, the Doe court's argument for denying federal equal protection falls apart. In addition, Romer provides a concrete example of the Supreme Court extending federal equal protection to individuals based on sexual orientation. Thus, after those two cases, a court hearing a case identical to Doe would analyze the visitation policy under the federal Equal Protection Clause and would likely find that it does not satisfy even rational basis review.²¹⁴ Nevertheless, as we saw in Willson v. Buss, courts might not give these protections in the prison context, even after Lawrence.²¹⁵

Therefore, after Lawrence and Romer, the incarcerated person in Doe might now have a stronger claim that the policy discriminated against her due to her sexual orientation and interfered with her right to privacy.²¹⁶

J. Jury Bias

The Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution guarantees defendants the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury in all criminal prosecutions.²¹⁷ If you suspect that the jury that delivered the guilty verdict against you could not make an impartial decision because some of them had

210. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 228 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

211. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 231 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

212. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232 (W.D. Pa. 1990) ("We hold that conduct which is not in itself protected by substantive due process, natural right, or some source of substantive protection cannot be the basis of an equal protection challenge by the class which engages in the conduct."). However, the court did decide that the policy violated Pennsylvania state law, and thus struck down the visitation policy. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232–234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

213. Technically, the court concluded that the federal Equal Protection Clause does not protect sexual orientation on its own. However, the court concluded that, because Pennsylvania law protects homosexual conduct, federal equal protection applied and required that the visitation policy satisfy rational basis review.

214. Ultimately, the Doe court actually did conclude that the visitation policy failed to satisfy rational basis review, and therefore violated the federal Equal Protection Clause. But after Lawrence and Romer, a court would apply federal equal protection directly, rather than go through state law like the Doe court did.

215. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 786–791 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (concluding that the prison regulation on LGBTQ publications satisfied the Turner v. Safley test and was therefore constitutional).

216. For further discussion on how Doe might be decided today, see Derrick Farrell, Crime and Punishment Law Chapter: Correctional Facilities: Prisoners' Visitation Rights, The Effect of Overton v. Bazetta and Lawrence v. Texas, 5 Geo. J. Gender & L. 167, 173–174 (2004); Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women's Rts. L. Rep. 357, 384–404 (2009).

217. See Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 721–722, 81 S. Ct. 1639, 1641–1642, 6 L. Ed. 2d 751, 755–756 (1961). Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 149, 88 S. Ct. 1444, 1447, 20 L. Ed. 2d 491, 496 (1968) (holding that the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of a jury trial applies to any criminal case in state court that would have gotten Sixth Amendment protection if it were in federal court).

homophobic or transphobic attitudes—prejudice toward LGBTQ people—you may have grounds to challenge your conviction.²¹⁸

Your right to a fair and impartial jury is supposed to be protected by a process called “voir dire.” Voir dire happens before the trial begins. During voir dire, potential jurors are asked questions so the judge and the lawyers can learn more about them. Usually the judge asks the questions, but in some jurisdictions the lawyers also ask questions, or are allowed to submit questions to the judge. Generally, the lawyers from each side are permitted to “strike,” or exclude, jurors based on their answers to the questions. If a lawyer believes a potential juror is biased against his client, the lawyer can ask the judge to exclude that person from the jury “for cause” (for a good reason). If the judge decides that there is evidence of bias based on the person’s answers, the judge can exclude them. Lawyers can request as many “for cause” removals of potential jurors as they want. The judge also has a separate obligation to exclude any potential juror he believes may be biased.²¹⁹

You might have a claim that your right to trial by an impartial jury was violated if:

- (1) The court failed or refused to question jurors during voir dire about their attitudes toward gay or transgender people, and your sexual orientation or gender identity was discussed at trial;²²⁰
- (2) The court selected a juror even though that juror had indicated that, due to his homophobia or transphobia, he would have trouble being impartial; or
- (3) The prosecutor conducting the voir dire excluded all the gay or transgender people from the pool of prospective jurors because they were gay or transgender.²²¹

A handful of incarcerated people have challenged their convictions by claiming anti-gay jury bias, but with little success. For example, in Owens v. Hanks, a gay incarcerated person whose sexual orientation was discussed during his murder trial argued that he was denied an impartial jury because

218. There is evidence that some prosecutors attempt to use jurors’ homophobia to influence their decision process. See, e.g., Joey L. Mogul, The Dykier, the Butcher, the Better: The State’s Use of Homophobia and Sexism to Execute Women in the United States, 8 N.Y. City L. Rev. 473, 474 (2005). Lesbians also serve longer sentences than heterosexual women. See Robert Leger, Lesbianism Among Women Prisoners: Participants and Nonparticipants, 14 Criminal Justice and Behavior 448, 463 (1987). See Batson created the standard to show when the prosecutor on a case has shown purposeful discrimination in selecting a jury. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 96, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1723, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 87 (1986) (“To establish such a case, the [incarcerated person] first must show that he is a member of a cognizable racial group, and that the prosecutor has exercised peremptory challenges to remove from the [jury] members of the defendant’s race.”).

219. See Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 189, 101 S. Ct. 1629, 1634, 68 L. Ed. 2d 22, 29 (1981) (“Because the obligation to impanel an impartial jury lies in the first instance with the trial judge, and because he must rely largely on his immediate perceptions, federal judges have been accorded ample discretion in determining how best to conduct the voir dire.”).

220. In conducting voir dire, the trial court judge is required to permit at least some questioning about any material issue that will or could arise at trial. See, e.g., Aldridge v. United States, 283 U.S. 308, 311–313, 51 S. Ct. 470, 472, 75 L. Ed. 1054, 1056–1057 (1931) (finding voir dire unfair where trial judge “failed to ask any question which could be deemed to cover the subject [of racial prejudice],” in order to uncover a “disqualifying state of mind”). In deciding what questions to ask potential jurors during voir dire, the trial court must exercise its discretion consistently with “the essential demands of fairness.” See Aldridge v. United States, 283 U.S. 308, 310, 51 S. Ct. 470, 471, 75 L. Ed. 1054, 1056 (1931). Nevertheless, the trial court is given great freedom to determine how best to conduct the voir dire, and failure to ask specific questions will be reversed on appeal only if the judge abuses that discretion. See Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 190–91, 101 S. Ct. 1629, 1635–1636, 68 L. Ed. 2d 22, 29–30 (1981).

221. See State v. Johnson, 706 So. 2d 468, 477–478 (La. Ct. App. 1998) (finding that it was proper for the trial judge to dismiss one juror for anti-gay bias but not a second juror, because the second juror was not sincere when he said he would “almost automatically” convict a defendant he knew was gay, but was instead attempting to avoid jury duty). Some courts have ruled that jurors cannot be removed “for cause” from a jury just for being gay. See, e.g., People v. Viggiani, 105 Misc. 2d 210, 214, 431 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1980) (“To say that [citizens] who may be otherwise qualified, would be unable to sit as impartial jurors in this case, merely because of their homosexuality is tantamount to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution.”); SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Abbott Laboratories, 740 F.3d 471, 479 (9th Cir. 2014) (finding lower court erred by not concluding that a juror was impermissibly dismissed on the basis of his sexual orientation because “it is clear that [defendant] ha[d] no further credible reasons” to dismiss juror).

the court chose several jurors who had expressed bias against gay people during jury selection.²²² The court decided that these expressions of bias did not make his trial unfair because witnesses for both the prosecution and the defense were gay, so any anti-gay prejudice in the jury would have affected both parties.²²³ A claim of juror bias might be more likely to succeed if the bias affects only one party.

On the other hand, a New Jersey court reversed the conviction of a defendant on appeal, finding that the trial court had deprived him of his fundamental right to be present when potential jurors were questioned individually. At the voir dire, questions were asked about potential jurors' attitudes toward LGBTQ people, and the defendant had directly requested to be present. The trial court, however, did not allow him into the voir dire.²²⁴ The appeals court held that "[s]ince. . .the evidence suggested that defendant was bisexual because he was a frequent patron [customer] of gay bars, it was important that defendant be present so that he could have formed his own impressions of the jurors' demeanor and visceral reactions when they responded to the questions about homosexuality."²²⁵ Because the defendant was not present when he specifically requested to be, his conviction was reversed. It is important to note that this ruling only guaranteed that the defendant had a right to be present at his case, it did not guarantee a right to trial by a fair jury.

Though there is very little case law, some cases indicate that you might be granted a retrial if LGBTQ people were purposefully excluded from the jury. In People v. Viggiani, a New York state case, the court decided that jurors could not be excluded from a jury "for cause" just because both they and the defendant are gay or lesbian.²²⁶ The California Court of Appeals ruled in People v. Garcia that the prosecution could not use its peremptory challenges (strikes) to exclude all lesbians from a jury. It found that gay men and lesbians constitute a "cognizable class" (meaning that these jurors share a common trait that makes them distinct) and that completely eliminating them from a jury violated the California constitution.²²⁷

If you believe homophobic or transphobic bias played a role in the selection of your jury, you can try to convince a court to vacate or reverse the judgment against you, or to set aside your sentence.

K. Conclusion

Being lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender can make the experience of incarceration especially hard, and the lack of consistent case law involving incarcerated people who are LGBTQ may make you

222. Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *3 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished). For example, one juror stated during voir dire that "she would unwittingly be influenced by a witness' homosexuality because she believe[d] it [was] morally wrong." Another stated that she did not approve of homosexuality and "would be less likely to believe a homosexual." Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *3 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished). Please note, however, that Owens v. Hanks is an unpublished opinion and therefore may not be an acceptable case to cite in some jurisdictions.

223. Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *5-6 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished); see also Lingar v. Bowersox, 176 F.3d 453, 457-558 (8th Cir. 1999) (finding the admission of testimony that defendant was gay during the penalty phase of his murder trial was harmless and did not contribute to the jury's decision, because it was brief and the State did not refer to it during closing argument); United States v. Click, 807 F.2d 847, 850 (9th Cir. 1987) (finding that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by refusing the defendant's request to ask potential jurors a question about "effeminate mannerisms" during the jury selection process, because it would draw attention to the defendant's mannerisms and was not necessary to assess whether the jurors could be impartial); State v. Lambert, 528 A.2d 890, 892 (Me. 1987) (finding that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by questioning potential jurors as a group or by limiting the questioning related to anti-gay bias, because potential jurors completed a confidential questionnaire where they could privately admit any bias, and because the judge asked the group of jurors directly whether the defendant being gay would prevent them from being impartial").

224. State v. Dishon, 687 A.2d 1074, 1082, 297 N.J. Super. 254, 269 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1997).

225. State v. Dishon, 687 A.2d 1074, 1082, 297 N.J. Super. 254, 269-270 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1997).

226. See People v. Viggiani, 105 Misc. 2d 210, 214, 431 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1980) ("To say that this entire group of citizens who may be otherwise qualified, would be unable to sit as impartial jurors in this case merely because of their homosexuality is tantamount to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution.") hesitant to bring a claim due to uncertainty about how a court will rule on it. Contact the legal organizations in the Appendix for help with your case and send information about the challenges you face in prison to the non-legal advocacy groups listed there. You are in a better position than anyone else to educate LGBTQ activists about the challenges LGBTQ incarcerated people face so that they can better advocate for laws and policies that will improve your situation.

227. People v. Garcia, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339, 343-344, 77 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1275-1277 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000).

Appendix A

LGBTQ RESOURCES

American Civil Liberties Union Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Project

125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004
(212) 549-2500

Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD)

18 Tremont, Suite 950
Boston, MA 02108
(617) 426-1350

Hotline: 1-800-455-GLAD (1-800-455-4523)

GLAD is a public interest legal organization working to defend and expand the rights of gay men, lesbians, bisexuals, transgender individuals and people with HIV. GLAD responds to over 3,000 requests for information and assistance each year and litigates impact cases.

Gay Men's Health Crisis

307 West 38th Street
New York, NY 10018
(212) 367-1000
Hotline: 1-800-AIDS-NYC (1-800-243-7692)
Legal Services and Advocacy: (212) 367-1326

Immigration Equality

40 Exchange Place, Suite 1300
New York, NY 10005
(212) 714-2904

Immigration Equality is a coalition of immigrants, lawyers, and other activists providing education, outreach, legal services, information, and referrals to combat discrimination in immigration law.

Lambda Legal Defense & Education FundNational Headquarters

120 Wall Street, 19th Floor
New York, NY 10005
(212) 809-8585

Western Regional Office

4221 Wilshire Boulevard, Suite 280
Los Angeles, CA 90010
(213) 382-7600

Midwest Regional Office

65 E. Wacker Place, Suite 2000
Chicago, IL 60601
(312) 663-4413

Southern Regional Office

730 Peachtree Street, NE, Suite 640
Atlanta, GA 30308
(404) 897-1880

South Central Regional Office

3500 Oak Lawn Avenue, Suite 500
Dallas, TX 75219
(214) 219-8585

Washington DC Office

1776 K Street, N.W., 8th Floor
Washington, DC 20006
(202) 804-6245

Lambda is a national organization committed to achieving full civil rights of lesbians, gay men, and people with HIV/AIDS through impact litigation, education, and public policy work.

National Center for Lesbian Rights

870 Market Street, Suite 370
San Francisco, CA 94102
(415) 392-6257

NCLR is a national legal organization committed to advancing the civil and human rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people and their families through litigation, legislation, policy, and public education.

National LGBTQ Task Force

National Headquarters

1325 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Suite 600
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 393-5177

New York Office

25 Broadway 12 Floor
New York, NY 10004
(212) 604-9830

National LGBTQ Task Force is a national progressive organization working for the civil rights of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people.

Sylvia Rivera Law Project

147 W. 24th St., 5th Floor
New York, NY 10011
(212) 337-8550

Sylvia Rivera Law Project fights discrimination against gender non-conforming people, particularly intersex and transgender people, and focuses on people of color and poor people.

Chapter 31

SECURITY CLASSIFICATION AND GANG VALIDATION*

A. Introduction

Upon entering the prison system, all incarcerated people are assigned a security classification. This classification is reevaluated regularly. Your security classification largely determines where you are incarcerated and what sort of treatment you receive while in prison. A lower security classification is better because it means that you have more freedoms and fewer restrictions. You can think of “gang validation” as a subset of security classification. Gang validation is the process that prison officials use to identify incarcerated people that they suspect of being members of gangs or “Security Threat Groups” (“STGs”). If prison officials validate you as a member of a gang, it means that they have classified you as someone who poses a particular security risk. As a result, you may be isolated from other incarcerated people.

Part B of this Chapter discusses general security classifications. It starts with a description of the guidelines for classification of incarcerated people in the Federal Bureau of Prisons (“BOP”) and in New York State, California, and Florida. It then explains some of the legal challenges that incarcerated people have raised to classification decisions in the past. Keep in mind that these challenges have been largely unsuccessful. Part B ends with a description of administrative options for challenging a particular security classification. Part C outlines gang validation and begins with a general discussion of the process. It follows with a summary of the ways that incarcerated people have used the Fourteenth Amendment, the Eighth Amendment, the Fifth Amendment, and Equal Protection claims to challenge their validation as gang members. Because these legal challenges have been largely unsuccessful, the Chapter concludes with some suggestions for challenging gang validation using administrative options.

B. General Security Classification

1. Introduction

In all states, you will be assigned a security classification shortly after entering the prison system. This Chapter focuses on the classification guidelines used in the Federal Bureau of Prisons (“BOP”), in New York’s Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”), in California’s Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (“CDCR”), and in Florida’s Department of Corrections (“FDOC”). It also focuses on court challenges that incarcerated people have made to their classification under these guidelines. Most other state prisons use similar classification systems to evaluate incarcerated people. Courts in most jurisdictions are reluctant to interfere in what they view as a prison’s internal administrative matters. However, you should investigate the details of your own state’s procedures.

You should be able to obtain a copy of the classification manual for the system in which you are incarcerated. The classification manual should allow you to verify that the standards used to evaluate you are accurate. However, in some states, such as New York, the classification manual is primarily a set of guidelines for entering data into a computer program. Without access to that computer program, the classification manual will not be very useful, although you may still find it helpful to examine the classification standards in greater detail.

* This Chapter was revised by Romie Barriere, based in part on previous versions by Ben Van Houten and Daniel Green. Thanks to John Boston for his valuable feedback.

2. Federal Bureau of Prisons Classification Guidelines¹

(a) Security Level Score

In the federal prison system, new incarcerated people are assigned a security level score by a Community Corrections Manager in the BOP. Regional and Central Office Designators use this score to assign new incarcerated people to an institution with a corresponding level of security. An institution's security level is determined by the security measures in place at the institution.²

An incarcerated person will have an initial program review about seven months after arriving at the institution, following initial classification. At this time, the incarcerated person will be given a custody classification score. This score refers to how much the staff must supervise the incarcerated person within and beyond the institution. It determines, among other things, the types of work assignments and activities that an incarcerated person may participate in, and the level of staff supervision required.³ Note that the custody classification score is different from the security classification score. The security classification score is used to match an incarcerated person with a specific type of institution based on the institution's security features.

An incarcerated person's custody classification must be reviewed at least every twelve months and is usually reviewed at the same time as program reviews.⁴ Additionally, an incarcerated person's security level and custody level will usually be reviewed when a new sentence is imposed, when a sentence is reduced, when a disciplinary action occurs, or when there is a change in external factors that might affect the security or custody level.⁵

The calculation of a new incarcerated person's security level score is based on the person's Pre-Sentence Investigation Report ("PSI"), a copy of the judgment from the person's case, and the Individual Custody and Detention Report provided by the U.S. Marshals Service. When there is no PSI, a Post-Sentence Investigation Report will be prepared. In some cases, a Magistrate Information Sheet may be used. The BOP considers several factors when determining the security level score:

- (1) The "level of security and supervision the inmate requires";
- (2) The "level of security and staff supervision the institution is able to provide";
- (3) The incarcerated person's program needs (including substance abuse, medical/mental health treatment, educational training, group counseling and other programs); and
- (4) Various administrative factors, including the level of overcrowding in an institution, its distance from the incarcerated person's release residence, and any recommendations that the judge may have offered.⁶

When considering these factors, the BOP uses a detailed scoring system that includes elements based on the severity of the current offense, any past offenses, and other relevant details. Scores in

1. The Federal Bureau of Prisons classification guidelines are documented in U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification (2006), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

2. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 3, at 3 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

3. U.S. Dep. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

4. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006) available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

5. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006) available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

6. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 1, at 1–2 (2006) available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

various elements are entered into a database known as SENTRY. This database then calculates an incarcerated person's security level score. For a detailed breakdown of this calculation, you should refer to the BOP Program Statement.

(b) Other Safety Factors

In addition to the scoring system, the BOP may also check if any of 11 “public safety factors” are present in the incarcerated person's case. These public safety factors are:

- (1) validated membership in a “disruptive group” identified in the Central Inmate Monitoring System (males only),
- (2) current term of confinement in the “Greatest Severity” range according to the Offense Severity Scale (males only),
- (3) sex offender status,
- (4) Central Inmate Monitoring assignment of threat to government official,
- (5) deportable alien status,
- (6) remaining sentence length (males only),
- (7) violent behavior (females only),
- (8) involvement in a serious escape,
- (9) prison disturbance,
- (10) juvenile violence, and
- (11) serious telephone abuse.⁷

If any of these factors are present, they will raise an incarcerated person's security classification despite a score that would, on its own, produce a lower classification.⁸ At maximum, three of these factors will be applied to an incarcerated person. If more than three of the factors apply, those that would provide the greatest public safety and security threat are considered.⁹ These factors may be waived at the discretion of the Regional Director.

In addition, the Regional Director may find that any of 11 “management variables” apply, which would result in an incarcerated person's placement at an institution that is not at the same security level as the incarcerated person's security level score.¹⁰ Examples of Management Variables include population management, medical or psychiatric history, and greater security concerns.¹¹ Thus, management variables generally relate to administrative considerations that might result in an incarcerated person's placement in a specific institution, while the public safety actors relate to the BOP's concern with the threat an incarcerated person poses to society.

Custody classification evaluations are calculated in a similar way. They use a scoring system based primarily upon an incarcerated person's criminal history and behavior within the institution. The warden has discretion to assign an incarcerated person a custody level different from the one indicated by the scoring system. If the warden does this, an explanation must be noted on the incarcerated person's custody classification form. The warden may use public safety factors and management variables in this determination.

7. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 7–10 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

8. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 2, at 4 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

9. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 7 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

10. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 1 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

11. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Change Notice 5100.08, CN-1 (2019) and Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 3–5 (2006), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008cn.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

There are different scoring systems for calculating the security levels of male and female incarcerated people. Persons under the age of 18 are not subject to this classification system. In addition, certain special cases have special designation procedures, including military incarcerated people and some medical or mental health cases. Please consult the Program Statement for a full list of descriptions of these special cases.

3. New York's Classification Guidelines

In New York, incarcerated people are assigned an initial classification score at a reception facility. Reclassification hearings occur periodically. In New York State, the initial reclassification screening occurs six months after an incarcerated person is taken into custody. Subsequent reclassifications take place every three months after that.¹² The counselor assigning the classification enters numerical factors into a computer program, which then calculates a score. The information used to determine the factor values comes from evidence in the Commitment Paper, the Presentence Report ("PSR"), warrants, the Division of Criminal Justice Services ("DCJS") Summary Case History ("Rap Sheet"), sentencing minutes (when available), your interview, and, if you have served a prior DOCCS term, any available Department records of that term.¹³ Counselors may rely on both official and unofficial documents, although evidence from unofficial documents "should be evaluated in relation to official documents and used where appropriate."¹⁴ If a counselor cannot resolve inconsistencies between documents, the counselor is supposed to use the "most cautious alternative."¹⁵

New York's Security Classification Guidelines identify two types of security risks: (1) public risk, which is the likelihood that an incarcerated person will escape and be a danger to the public; and (2) institutional risk, which is the likelihood that an incarcerated person will be dangerous to staff, other incarcerated people, or himself while incarcerated. The Guidelines use three main factors to determine public risk: (1) history of criminal violence; (2) history of escape and abscondence (hiding to avoid legal proceedings); and (3) time until earliest possible release.¹⁶ The Guidelines identify one main factor that determines institutional risk: institutional disciplinary history.¹⁷

These characteristics are all evaluated by point scores. The point scores are then combined to produce your security classification. More specific descriptions of each of the characteristics can be found in the State of New York DOCCS Classification Manual. The Classification Manual also describes the procedures used for assigning point values and the way in which a score is calculated from these values.¹⁸

12. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-85 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services). To acquire a copy of this manual, you may need to file a request under the New York State Freedom of Information Law. You can also email or write to the JLM to receive a copy received under this law. Please refer to Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for more information on Freedom of Information requests. Please note that, since the publication of the Classification Manual, the New York Department of Correctional Services has been reorganized as the New York Department of Corrections and Community Supervision. However, the Office of Classification and Movement still stands and may be contacted at: The Office of Classification and Movement, New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, The Harriman State Campus – Building #2, 1220 Washington Avenue, Albany, NY 12226-2050. Additionally, please note that some sections of the Classification Manual itself are outdated (for instance, the section on LGBTQ+ incarcerated people).

13. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

14. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

15. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

16. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

17. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services); see also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, app. 1-E (2020).

18. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1–2 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

In addition to these main characteristics, you should know that there are thirty-four additional characteristics that are difficult to assign point values to, or that are not used very often. These additional characteristics can affect the classification you receive and may qualify you for a higher classification level, even if you receive a point total that might alone produce a lower classification.¹⁹ For instance, a security characteristic that falls in the “other characteristics” category is an incarcerated person who has been involved in sexual violence against someone of the same gender.²⁰ This is labeled as a “high institutional risk”, but is normally not counted within the same point system.²¹ If there is discrepancy between the point number and the perceived security classification, the counselor responsible for determining the security classification must “us[e] his knowledge of the case material and of the [incarcerated person] to adjust the security classification and explain the adjustment.”²²

Some of these additional characteristics included in the Manual have been updated in other materials that the DOCCS uses to guide its actions. Characteristics of LGBTQ+ incarcerated people are one such subject area. Updating the information from the Classification Manual, a 2014 Respectful Classification Practices with LGBTI Inmates Trainer’s Manual outlines that “lesbian or gay,” “bisexual,” “transgender male,” and “transgender female” characteristics can be incorporated if an incarcerated person self-reports the information, but the characteristic of “gender-nonconforming” may be applied “based on [the] Offender Rehabilitation Coordinator’s observation.” Additionally, there is a new Gender Identity Interview Form, updated in 2020, that the New York DOCCS uses for LGBTQ+ incarcerated people regarding their classifications.²³

You should also be aware that the characteristics for male and female incarcerated people may have different elements.²⁴ Male and female incarcerated people’s scores are evaluated against different classification schemes. The elements for minor and adult incarcerated people may also differ. Finally, there are some cases in which the counselor will feel that the point score does not accurately represent your security risk. He is allowed to adjust the security classification in those cases, although he must provide an explanation for doing so.²⁵ Most other state prison systems have similar provisions that let a counselor or other official assign you a security classification that differs from the one produced from the scoring system.²⁶

19. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

20. Erica King and Maureen Baker, State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Respectful Classification Practices with LGBTI Inmates Trainer’s Manual, Handout 3:1, available at <https://www.prearesourcecenter.org/sites/default/files/library/nysdoccslgbtirespectfulclassificationtrainermanualfinal102914.pdf> (last visited Nov. 21, 2020).

21. Erica King and Maureen Baker, State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Respectful Classification Practices with LGBTI Inmates Trainer’s Manual, Handout 3:1, available at <https://www.prearesourcecenter.org/sites/default/files/library/nysdoccslgbtirespectfulclassificationtrainermanualfinal102914.pdf> (last visited Nov. 21, 2020).

22. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

23. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Form No. 115.41GI, Gender Identity Interview Form (last updated June 2020), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2020/06/115.41gi-06-20.pdf> (last visited Nov. 21, 2020).

24. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-3 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

25. State of New York, Dept. of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-3-4 (1996) (formerly Department of Correctional Services).

26. See, e.g., State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual §§ 61010.8, 61020.13 (2020), available at <http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020) (authorizing department officials to depart from the classification scoring system in individual cases); 103 MASS. CODE REGS. 420.07(3)(f) (1995) (authorizing override of scored classification level); N.J. ADMIN. CODE § 10A: 9-2.14(a) (West 2019) (providing for override of the initial classification or reclassification determination); OR. ADMIN R. 291-078-0020(5) (2011) (providing for either decreases or increases in the level of supervision from that

4. California's Classification Guidelines

In California, new incarcerated people are assigned a classification score when they are committed to state prison.²⁷ This classification determines the type of institution in which the incarcerated person is placed. In California, there are four levels of prisons. Level 1 houses the least dangerous incarcerated people, and Level 4 houses the most dangerous. In order to fill out an incarcerated person classification score sheet, a counselor will first review documents, such as probation reports, and then interview the incarcerated person.²⁸ A committee will then conduct a hearing to determine your classification.²⁹ The committee will review the counselor's score sheet and consider various factors during the hearing, including: 1) background information such as your age at first arrest, current prison term, street gang affiliation, mental illness, prior sentences, and prior incarcerations; and 2) your prior behavior while incarcerated.³⁰ These factors are assigned point scores. Your total score will determine your classification. Sometimes, the law requires a mandatory minimum score for certain sentences or crimes, which will replace your score if it is below the mandatory minimum.³¹ In other cases, prison officials can adjust your score if necessary for safety or other institutional needs, such as prison overcrowding.³² A score of 0–18 means placement in a Level 1 institution; a score of 19–27 means placement in a Level 2 institution; a score 28–51 means placement in a Level 3 institution; and a score higher than 51 means placement in a Level 4 institution.³³

The committee will reclassify you and recalculate your score at least once a year.³⁴ When possible, the committee should give you notice before any hearing so that you have time to prepare.³⁵ At the hearing, the committee will consider two things: 1) your favorable behavior since the last review, such as six month periods without any serious disciplinary actions and six month periods with average or above average performance in certain programs; and 2) any unfavorable behavior since the last review, such as serious misbehavior, assault, possession of a deadly weapon, drug distribution, or starting a riot.³⁶ Favorable behavior will reduce your score, and unfavorable behavior will increase your score. Remember, a lower score means a lower classification and placement in a less secure institution.

5. Florida's Classification Guidelines

In Florida, two groups make security classification decisions: the Institutional Classification Team ("ICT") and the State Classification Office ("SCO").³⁷ The ICT includes the warden or assistant warden, the classification supervisor, and the chief of security. It is responsible for making work, program, housing, and incarcerated person status decisions at a facility and for making other recommendations determined through the risk assessment score).

27. CAL. PENAL CODE § 5068 (2012).

28. State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.9 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020). To acquire a print copy, you may need to file a request under the Freedom of Information Act. Please refer to Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for more information on FOIA requests.

29. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, §§ 3375–79 (2019).

30. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3375.3 (2019).

31. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3375.3(d) (2019); see also State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.11.5 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

32. State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.8 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

33. State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.11.7 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

34. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3376(d)(2); see also State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61020.14 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

35. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3375(e) (2019).

36. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3375.4 (2019).

37. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.209 (2014).

to the SCO.³⁸ The SCO is responsible for reviewing recommendations made by the ICT.³⁹ When a new incarcerated person arrives, the ICT uses the Custody Assessment and Reclassification computer program (“CARS”) to prepare an automated custody classification questionnaire using all available sources to determine the appropriate degree of supervision. This includes information such as your criminal history and sentence.⁴⁰ When the questionnaire is completed, a computer generated numerical score is used to place you in one of five security classification levels: maximum, close, medium, minimum, and community. These are called “custody grades” by the Florida Department of Corrections.⁴¹ The most restrictive custody grade is maximum custody status, which usually refers to incarcerated people who are sentenced to death.⁴² The least restrictive custody grade is a community custody status, which makes an incarcerated person eligible for placement in a community residential facility.⁴³ Changes can be made to an incarcerated person’s custody grade for various reasons, including changes in charges due to plea bargaining, public interest concerns, family environment, military record, age, and health.⁴⁴ Other factors that may affect your custody status include sex offenses, alien status, escape, and gain time credits.⁴⁵ The SCO can also start a new custody assessment when they decide it is “necessary for the safety of the public or the needs of the department.”⁴⁶

The ICT will meet to review your custody status, assess your adjustment, and determine whether any changes may be necessary. You must appear at any review or assessment unless a documented permanent medical condition makes you unable to participate. You should receive notice at least forty-eight (48) hours in advance unless you have waived your right to notice in writing. Assessments will occur at least every twelve months.⁴⁷ Custody grades can be increased or decreased throughout your sentence. If your behavior is favorable, your custody grade should decrease as the time remaining on your sentence decreases.

6. Classification of Female Incarcerated People

While many state correctional agencies use the same classification guidelines for male and female prisons, some states, including Idaho, Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio, as well as the BOP, apply different guidelines or weigh factors differently. For example, as stated in Part B(2)(b) of this Chapter, the BOP only considers “violent behavior” as a public safety factor for female incarcerated people. Factors specific to male incarcerated people include the severity of the offense, membership in a disruptive group and the remaining length of the sentence. Because there are more men in prison than women, there are also more prisons built for male incarcerated people. Thus, in many states female incarcerated people with different classification levels are housed together. Female incarcerated people may also be over-classified or placed in a higher security level than necessary. The majority of 38. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.209(3) (2014). In private prisons (prisons that are not operated by the government), a Department of Corrections representative must also be on the ICT when the ICT is reviewing custody decisions.

39. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.209(2) (2014).

40. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(b)–(c) (2014).

41. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(a) (2014).

42. See Florida Dept. of Corr., Inmate Orientation Handbook: Reception Center Processing 8 (2016), available at <http://www.dc.state.fl.us/pub/files/InmateOrientationHandbook.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

43. See Florida Dept. of Corr., Inmate Orientation Handbook: Reception Center Processing 8 (2016), available at <http://www.dc.state.fl.us/pub/files/InmateOrientationHandbook.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

44. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(d)(1)–(9) (2014).

45. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(h) (2014) (listing the exceptions to the rule that incarcerated people convicted of crimes involving sex acts are not ordinarily eligible for community or minimum custody status); FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(k) (2014) (specifying certain conditions under which alien incarcerated people shall not be assigned to a custody status any lower than close custody); FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(4)(e) (2014) (stating that a prison may alter the regular schedule for assessments and reviews in cases of escape or other unusual occurrences); FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(4)(k) (2014) (“Additional gain time is to be considered at the time of any scheduled or unscheduled review.”).

46. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(2)(g) (2014).

47. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-601.210(4)(c) (2014).

classification systems were designed for male incarcerated people and fail to predict the needs of female incarcerated people.⁴⁸ In 2000, a group of female incarcerated people sued the Michigan Department of Corrections (“MDOC”) and reached a settlement concerning the classification of female incarcerated people. The MDOC agreed to make changes to the classification system as it was applied to female incarcerated people and to conduct research regarding the changes.⁴⁹ If you are considering bringing a similar lawsuit to challenge the use for females of a classification system designed for males, you should read this case closely. You should also consider contacting an advocacy organization such as the Women’s Prison Association or the California Coalition for Women Prisoners.⁵⁰

7. Legal Challenges to Classification Decisions

Generally, legal claims made to improve the conditions of imprisonment are filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (“Section 1983”). Because your security classification determines the conditions of your imprisonment, most incarcerated people who challenge their security classification file their claims under Section 1983. The U.S. Constitution and other federal statutes provide a broad range of individual rights. Section 1983 is a federal statute that protects you from violations of these rights by allowing you to sue the individuals responsible in federal court.⁵¹ It is important to note, however, that there is little federal law on the issue of classification. Instead, state law generally governs these matters. You should look to the law of your own state and individual prison regulations, and when it is possible you should always try to have the regulations enforced in state court. You can look to federal court if a state remedy does not exist, or if the federal remedy would override the state remedy.⁵²

For detailed instructions on how to file a claim under Section 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.” It is also important that you read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). The PLRA requires you to exhaust administrative remedies before filing suit and imposes substantial penalties if you fail to do so.⁵³

One possible legal challenge to classification decisions is a due process challenge. The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment protects individuals, including incarcerated people, from the loss of “life, liberty, or property” at the hands of the government without due process of law.⁵⁴ But the

48. See PATRICIA L. HARDYMAN & PATRICIA VAN VOORHIS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, THE NAT’L INST. OF CORR., DEVELOPING GENDER-SPECIFIC CLASSIFICATION SYSTEMS FOR WOMEN OFFENDERS viii (2004) available at <https://s3.amazonaws.com/static.nicic.gov/Library/018931.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

49. See State Bar of Michigan’s Prisons and Corrections Section, Litigation Update: Female Prisoners’ Portion of Cain Case Settled, PRISONS & CORR. FORUM, (State Bar of Michigan’s Prisons and Corr. Section), Spring/Summer 2000, at 6–7, available at <https://higherlogicdownload.s3.amazonaws.com/MICHBAR/61a5ea9f-95b2-431b-9931-cd1d84a2cff9/UploadedImages/pdfs/spring00.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020) (the Cain settlement agreement included provisions agreeing to: hire an expert to evaluate the type, quantity, or quality of misconducts issued to male and female incarcerated people; ensure that female incarcerated people have access to legal assistance; provide an unmonitored telephone to allow incarcerated people to participate in court ordered hearings; and settle outstanding claims).

50. Women’s Prison Association, available at <http://www.wpaonline.org/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020); California Coalition for Women Prisoners, available at <http://www.womenprisoners.org/> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020). For more information about the settlement, see the earlier class action suit, Cain v. Dept of Corr., 548 N.W.2d 210, 451 Mich. 470 (Mich. 1996).

51. See, e.g., Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 497 (1961) (applying § 1983 to illegal search of civilian home and detention of citizen by police), overruled in unrelated part by Monell v. Dep’t of Soc. Servs. of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978).

52. See, e.g., Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 174, 81 S. Ct. 473, 477, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 498 (1961) (explaining that one aim of § 1983 is “to provide a federal remedy where the state remedy, though adequate in theory, was not available in practice”), overruled in unrelated part by Monell v. Dep’t of Soc. Servs. of the City of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978).

53. Most importantly, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). For more information on the exhaustion requirement, see Part E of Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

54. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. For a more detailed discussion of liberty interests and the degree of due process rights owed to incarcerated people, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Constitution itself does not provide incarcerated people the right to be housed at any particular classification level. Therefore, an incarcerated person must rely on state law to create a liberty interest that receives protection under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.⁵⁵ In 1995, in Sandin v. Conner, the Supreme Court created a new standard for determining whether conditions of imprisonment violate due process.⁵⁶ The new standard emphasizes the nature of the deprivation suffered by the incarcerated person. You should be careful researching this issue, however, as much of the case law on incarcerated person classification was decided under an old standard. You must make sure that the cases you research use the current Sandin standard.

In Sandin, the Court held that state-created liberty interests “will be generally limited to freedom from restraint which . . . imposes atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life,”⁵⁷ and that the hardship imposed upon the incarcerated person must be of “real substance.”⁵⁸ Following Sandin, courts have been extremely reluctant to find that a particular security classification constitutes a deprivation of a constitutional liberty interest. Two key considerations are the conditions of segregation and the duration of segregation.⁵⁹ Incarcerated people have not been successful in convincing courts that the officials’ decision to classify them in a particular way constituted an “atypical and significant” deprivation of liberty. Incarcerated people have had more success, however, challenging long-term placement in administrative segregation.⁶⁰

Proceedings.”

55. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) (“States may under certain circumstances create liberty interests which are protected by the Due Process Clause.”).

56. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (finding no liberty interest in incarcerated person’s administrative segregation absent “atypical and significant hardship in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life.”).

57. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995).

58. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974). Generally, hardships of “real substance” involve some physical injury or other deprivation related to an incarcerated person’s person. Otherwise, the unfair treatment may not be recognized as a constitutional liberty interest. See, e.g., Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 719 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding due process claim meritless because incarcerated person had no protectable interest in custodial classification and did not allege physical injury in claim for damages); Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that under ordinary circumstances administrative segregation will never be grounds for a constitutional claim because it does not constitute deprivation of a constitutional liberty interest) (citing Pichardo v. Kinker, 73 F. 3d 612, 612–613)(5th Cir. 1996).

59. In recent years, a number of circuit courts have addressed the question of classification rights under Sandin and have found a violation of a protected liberty interest in only limited cases. See, e.g., Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 161 (2d Cir. 2007), (holding that an incarcerated person has a protected liberty interest “only if the deprivation . . . is atypical and significant and the state has created the liberty interest by statute or regulation”) (quoting Sealey v. Giltner, 116 F.3d 47, 52 (2d Cir. 1997)); rev’d on other grounds by Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1954 (2009); Morales v. Chertoff, No. 06-12752, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 31846, at *3–4 (11th Cir. Dec. 27, 2006) (unpublished) (finding that the issue of custodial classification does not implicate an atypical or significant deprivation); Portley-El v. Brill, 288 F.3d 1063, 1065 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that “administrative and disciplinary segregation are not atypical and significant hardships under Sandin”); Leamer v. Fauver, 288 F.3d 532, 546 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that, “[u]nder Sandin, the mere fact of placement in administrative segregation is not in itself enough to implicate a liberty interest”); Hatch v. District of Columbia, 184 F.3d 846, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (finding that, following Sandin, “a deprivation in prison implicates a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause only when it imposes an ‘atypical and significant hardship’ on an incarcerated person in relation to the most restrictive confinement conditions that prison officials, exercising their administrative authority to ensure institutional safety and good order, routinely impose on inmates serving similar sentences”); Freitas v. Ault, 109 F.3d 1335, 1337–1338 (8th Cir. 1997) (holding that administrative detention and prison transfer without a hearing do not meet the “atypical and significant hardship” required to implicate a liberty interest).

60. See Giano v. Selsky, 238 F.3d 223, 226 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 231 (2d Cir. 2000)) (finding that an aggregated period of confinement in administrative segregation of 762 days is a “sufficient departure from the ordinary incidents of prison life to require procedural due process protections under Sandin”). In New York, at least, when looking at whether placement in administrative segregation constitutes an “atypical and significant” hardship, federal courts will combine separate special housing unit (“SHU”) and disciplinary segregation sentences where they constitute a sustained period of confinement. Sims v. Artuz, 230 F.3d 14, 23–24 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that two 365-day placements in administrative segregation, combined with

One reason it is so difficult to succeed on a Fourteenth Amendment claim is that even where the court finds a liberty interest, an incarcerated person will still lose his case if the prison's policies satisfy due process (remember that the Fourteenth Amendment does not protect you from any deprivation of liberty, but only those undertaken without due process of law). In Wilkinson v. Austin, the Supreme Court found that incarcerated people had a protected liberty interest in avoiding placement in a Supermax facility which imposed "atypical and significant hardships" on the incarcerated people such as twenty three hours in their cells, non-contact visits, and indefinite placement.⁶¹ While the Court recognized the liberty interest for incarcerated people, it still held that the prison's procedural policies satisfied due process.⁶² The Court also clarified that the liberty interest protected—an interest in avoiding transfer to a higher level of confinement—is not created by the Constitution, but instead produced by state policies and regulations.⁶³

Classification that affects parole eligibility may also establish a liberty interest. For example, you may have an argument that you would be eligible for parole, were it not for your incorrect classification. In Wilkinson, the Court considered the fact that incarcerated people lost their eligibility for parole while incarcerated at the Supermax facility in addition to the factors listed above (duration of confinement and conditions of confinement). The Court found that together they resulted in atypical and significant hardships.⁶⁴

You may also be able to challenge your classification in state court on the grounds that prison officials gave you an unfair classification based on their evaluation of the information contained in the Commitment Paper, the Pre-Sentence Report ("PSR"), warrants, the DCJS Summary Case History ("Rap Sheet"), sentencing minutes, the interview, or any available Department records of a prior DOCS term. It may be possible to convince the court that some of the information contained in these documents was incorrect, or that a clerical error was made in transferring the information from these documents onto a classification worksheet or into a computer program. If an error like this was made, any security classification based on them was not only unfair, but also invalid, because it would be based on false information.⁶⁵ Be aware that you may face difficulties in obtaining these documents for review, and that you may be unsuccessful in doing so even if you bring the matter to court.⁶⁶ several other shorter sentences, could constitute "atypical and significant" hardship). This means they will consider time spent in administrative segregation, regardless of whether it was in a different facility, if the confinement is continuous. In Giano, for instance, the court combined the incarcerated person's 92-day confinement at one institution with his 670-day confinement at another. Giano v. Selsky, 238 F.3d 223, 226 (2d Cir. 2001). But see Smart v. Goord, No. 04 Civ. 8850 (RWS), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16053, at *7–8 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 3, 2008) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation and refusing to aggregate (combine) sentences because the two periods were not identical and not due to the same rationale, as one was for the plaintiff's own protection while the other for possession of contraband).

61. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 220, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2393, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 188 (2005).

62. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 230, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2398, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 193 (2005).

63. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 221–222, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2393, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 189 (2005).

64. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 224, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2395, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 190 (2005) (finding that each factor on its own may not be enough to constitute "atypical and significant hardship" but taken together they do); see also Neal v. Shimoda, 131 F.3d 818, 828–830 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that classification as a sex offender deprived incarcerated person of a liberty interest where refusing sex offender treatment made one ineligible for parole).

65. Udzinski v. Coughlin, 188 A.D.2d 716, 717, 592 N.Y.S.2d 801, 802 (3d Dept. 1992) (ordering that petitioner's crime and sentence report, upon which his security classification was based, be corrected because Department of Correctional Services employees inaccurately transcribed information from pre-sentence report into their own documents).

66. New York State's pre-sentence reports must be confidential (meaning that reports "may not be made available to any person or public or private agency"), except where disclosure is permitted or required by statute or "specific authorization of the court." N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.50 (McKinney 2018). Where there is no relevant statutory provision, an incarcerated person may obtain a copy of the report "upon a proper factual showing for the need thereof." Shader v. People, 233 A.D.2d 717, 717, 650 N.Y.S.2d 350, 351 (3d Dept. 1996). See, e.g., Kilgore v. People, 274 A.D.2d 636, 636, 710 N.Y.S.2d 690, 691 (3d Dept. 2000) (finding petitioner's "bare assertion" that he required the

Again, there is little federal law in this area, but state law may allow suits based on violations of state law and state-created liberty interests or prison regulations. Even in state courts, however, it may still be difficult to succeed on your claim. In California, courts have deferred to the classification decisions of prison officials, limiting judicial intervention to instances when “actions by prison officials are arbitrary, capricious, irrational, or an abuse of the discretion granted those given the responsibility for operating prisons.”⁶⁷

8. Administrative Options

Courts generally do not like to interfere with security classification. Therefore, the most realistic approach to lowering your classification may be through your prison’s internal appeals process. Keep in mind that an unsuccessful federal lawsuit could have consequences for you under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”).⁶⁸ Additionally, the PLRA requires that you exhaust administrative options before bringing a legal action under Section 1983.⁶⁹ Be sure to read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

No matter where you are incarcerated, your security classification should be periodically reviewed. You should notify your assigned counselor of any information that you think could impact your security classification, such as a change in your rap sheet. You should also give copies of any relevant documents to your counselor. You will need to research the administrative rules in your prison regarding appeals of security classification. For example, in California you are able to contest classification decisions resulting in adverse effects (such as an increased custody level) during your reclassification hearing, and are then able to appeal your score and hearing results to your prison’s Classification Committee.⁷⁰

Finally, if you are incarcerated in New York and you have exhausted all of the internal administrative options, you can begin an Article 78 court proceeding. Article 78 provides a way to challenge administrative decisions in court. Article 78 only applies to the state of New York, but if you are imprisoned elsewhere, you should research whether or not your state has a similar law.⁷¹ For detailed instructions on bringing an Article 78 proceeding, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.” There are very strict rules and time limits to remember when bringing an Article 78 proceeding, so it is important that you read Chapter 22 carefully.

pre-sentence report in order to properly prepare for an appearance before the Board of Parole insufficient to constitute a showing of need for the report); cf. Gutkaiss v. People, 49 A.D.3d 979, 979–980, 853 N.Y.S.2d 677, 678 (3d Dept. 2008) (finding that the petitioner had made a proper factual showing entitling him to a copy of the report where “petitioner had notice of an impending hearing before the Board and his presentence report was one of the factors to be considered by the Board in determining his application for release”). See also CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3375(j)(1)–(4) (requiring that incarcerated people in California, intending to challenge any information collected in their intake forms, provide necessary documentation to support their challenge).

67. In re Wilson, 202 Cal. App. 3d 661, 667, 249 Cal. Rptr. 36, 40 (1988) (finding basis for the incarcerated person’s classification as a sex offender, even when the related charges were dismissed and, therefore, that prison officials did not act arbitrarily or capriciously when they classified the incarcerated person as a sex offender).

68. For example, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information on PLRA.

69. The Prison Litigation Reform Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a).

70. State of California, Dept. of Corr. & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 62010.4.2.1 (2020), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/>. (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

71. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. §120.68 (2019); CAL. GOV’T CODE § 53069.4(b)(1) (Deering 2019). Similar to Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, most state statutes contain strict time limitations on when you can challenge administrative proceedings in court, so be sure to read your own state’s rules carefully.

C. Gang Validation

1. Definition and Discussion

Gang validation is the process by which prison officials determine that an incarcerated person is an associate or a member of a gang or Security Threat Group (“STG”). Once prison officials make that decision, the incarcerated person is often “administratively segregated,” meaning that he is housed separately from, and receives different treatment than incarcerated people who have not been validated as gang members or associates. Although the specific procedures vary from state to state, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin all segregate suspected gang members from the rest of the prison population.⁷² Please note that this is not an exclusive list of state procedures related to gangs and other associations. Some states’ administrative codes may be difficult to find, and some might follow practices that are not explicitly mentioned in the code but may be found in a policy directive. While a state prison system may use a standard written definition of what constitutes a gang member, the process for actually proving that someone is a gang member, and the amount of proof required, may vary by state.⁷³ Generally, the only way to be declassified as a gang member is to “debrief.” “Debriefing” is a process that may involve informing prison officials of the identities and activities of fellow gang members. Debriefing can place the suspected gang member’s well-being at risk and expose him to retaliation. This Section discusses the problems that individuals who have tried to challenge their gang validation in court have experienced, and it offers some suggestions for challenging gang validation through administrative proceedings rather than in court.

California’s system of gang validation is one of the most developed and punitive in the country. California has been segregating suspected gang members since at least 1984, and other states have studied California in developing gang validation procedures of their own.⁷⁴ In California, and states with similar procedures, you are validated as a gang member if you are found to meet three or more factors.⁷⁵ These factors include, among others, gang tattoos, correspondence to or from known gang members or correspondence that contains references to gang activity, wearing gang colors, association with known gang members, possession of gang-related literature, possession of a photograph of known gang members, and identification by a fellow incarcerated person as a gang member. Misconduct is not necessarily required to be labeled a gang member.

72. See State of Arizona, Department of Corrections, Department Order No. 806, Security Threat Groups (STGs) (2009), available at <https://corrections.az.gov/sites/default/files/0806.pdf> (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3335 (2020); State of Colorado, Department of Corrections, Policies Nos. 600-01 & 600-09 (2019), available at <https://www.colorado.gov/pacific/cdoc/policies-1> (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); State of Connecticut, Department of Correction, Administrative Directive No. 6.14, Security Risk Groups (2013), available at <https://portal.ct.gov/-/media/DOC/Pdf/Ad/ad0614pdf.pdf?la=en> (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); FLA. ADMIN. CODE, 33-601.800 (2)(a) (2016); ILL. ADMIN. CODE tit. 20, § 505.40 (2020); 103 MASS. CODE REGS. 421.09 (2020); State of Michigan, Department of Corrections, Policy Directive No. 04.04.113, Security Threat Groups (2015), available at http://www.michigan.gov/documents/corrections/04_04_113_482417_7.pdf (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); 72 NEB. ADMIN. CODE § 1-003.02(D) (2019); OR. ADMIN. R. 291-069-0270 (2019); State of Tennessee, Department of Correction, Administrative Policy No. 404.10, Administrative Segregation, Placement, Review, and Release (2017), available at <https://www.tn.gov/content/dam/tn/correction/documents/404-10.pdf> (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); State of Texas, Department of Criminal Justice, Offender Orientation Handbook 31 (2017), available at http://www.tdcj.state.tx.us/documents/Offender_Orientation_Handbook_English.pdf (last visited Feb. 19, 2020); WIS. ADMIN. CODE DOC § 308.04(2)(d) (2019).

73. Claire Johnson et al., Nat’l Crim. Just. Reference Serv., Prosecuting Gangs: A National Assessment, in NIJ RESEARCH IN BRIEF 1, 2–3 (NCJ Publication No. 151785, 1995), available at <https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/Digitization/151785NCJRS.pdf> (last visited Feb. 19, 2020).

74. Scott N. Tachiki, Indeterminate Sentences in Supermax Prisons Based Upon Alleged Gang Affiliations: A Reexamination of Procedural Protection and a Proposal for Greater Procedural Requirements, 83 CAL. L. REV. 1115, 1129 (1995).

75. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1242 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (quoting the California Department of Corrections Operations Manual § 55070.19.2, which requires at least three “original, independent source items of documentation indicative of actual membership” in a gang).

Florida uses the term Security Threat Group (“STG”) which includes “formal or informal ongoing groups, gangs, organization[sic] or associations consisting of three or more members who have a common name or common identifying signs, colors, or symbols; a group whose members/associates engage in a pattern of gang activity or department rule violation; or whose potential work together could pose a threat to the prison.”⁷⁶ Similar to California, Florida defines a “criminal gang member” as a person who meets two or more factors. These factors include, among others, self-identification as a criminal gang member, identification as a criminal gang member by a parent or guardian, identification by a documented reliable informant, adopting the style of dress of a criminal gang, adopting the use of a hand sign identified as used by a criminal gang, having a tattoo identified as used by a criminal gang, and associating with one or more known criminal gang members.⁷⁷

New York State uses the label “Security Risk Group” and defines a gang as “a group of individuals, having a common identifying name, sign, symbol or colors who have engaged in a pattern of lawlessness” such as violence, destruction of property, threats, intimidation, harm, or drug smuggling. Incarcerated people are prohibited from wearing, possessing, or distributing gang materials or insignia (identifying marks or symbols of the gang) or participating in gang-related activities or meetings.⁷⁸ In a recent New York case, an incarcerated person unsuccessfully challenged his classification as a member of a Security Risk Group (“SRG”) based on the observation of him greeting another incarcerated person with gang signs. In that case, the court found gang validation and classification as a member of a SRG to be “merely an observation tool” that does not result in a loss of liberty.⁷⁹

Most of the case law on gang validation comes from California, where incarcerated people have been most active in using the courts to challenge their classification as gang members. For that reason, the following discussion addresses claims regarding gang validation that have been filed in California, both in state and federal court. Federal courts have generally not been receptive to incarcerated person claims. They have not decided whether incarcerated people have a constitutionally protected “liberty interest” in being classified a particular way. Instead, federal courts have found that the due process afforded to incarcerated people by the California system would be sufficient even if such an interest was found to exist.⁸⁰ For this reason, courts have rejected Fourteenth Amendment claims that a gang member classification violates an incarcerated person’s right to due process.⁸¹ The courts have also rejected Eighth Amendment claims that the “debriefing” requirement subjects an incarcerated person to cruel or unusual punishment,⁸² and claims that classification as a gang member violates an incarcerated person’s Fifth Amendment protection from self-incrimination.⁸³ Courts have generally

76. FLA. ADMIN. CODE, 33-601.800 (1)(s) (2016).

77. FLA. STAT. § 874.03(2)-(3) (2019).

78. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 270.2(B)(6)(iv) (2020).

79. Arriaga v. City of New York, No. 06 Civ. 2362 (PKC) (HBP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41433, at *20–21 (S.D.N.Y. May 20, 2008) (unpublished), aff’d, No. 08-3410-pr, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 6168 (2d Cir. Mar. 25, 2010) (unpublished).

80. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation because the incarcerated person received notice of his classification and continuing placement in the security housing unit, and his placement there was based on reliable information), aff’d, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation because the incarcerated person had an opportunity to present his views to the Criminal Activities Coordinator, the incarcerated person’s status was based on sufficient and reliable evidence, and his status was given periodic review).

81. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished).

82. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *25–26 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished).

83. Griffin v. Gomez, No. C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *17–18 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff’d in part and remanded on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *23–24 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, found that prison officials should be granted broad discretion in such administrative matters, and courts in California have dismissed most gang validation complaints at the summary judgment stage (meaning that the incarcerated person was not able to reach the full trial stage).

Before you bring any action, you should consider the possibility that the court where you argue your case will follow the lead of the California courts. You should also consider the implications that dismissal of your case could have for you under the Prison Litigation Reform Act.⁸⁴ Finally, before taking any action, it is important that you also read Part B of this Chapter, which is devoted to general security classification and contains additional information that you may find relevant.

2. Fourteenth Amendment Claims

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment protects individuals, including incarcerated people, from loss of “life, liberty, or property” at the hands of government without due process of law.⁸⁵ However, courts in California have found that administrative segregation does not violate the Due Process Clause. They have generally determined that it is not necessary to decide whether an incarcerated person has a valid state-created liberty interest in being free from administrative confinement because the due process provided to incarcerated people by the California system would be sufficient even if this liberty interest were found to exist.⁸⁶

In California, courts consider adequate the due process provided in classification and administrative segregation proceedings. The courts have found that California procedures provide the incarcerated person with some notice of the charges against him. The procedures also provide him with an opportunity to present his views to the official charged with deciding whether or not to transfer him to administrative segregation. Due process requires that, following an incarcerated person’s administrative segregation, officials must engage in some sort of periodic review of his confinement.⁸⁷ Although prison officials are not required by due process to provide the names of their sources of information in validating a suspected gang member, if they fail to do so, the record must contain a prison official’s statement that safety considerations prevented the disclosure of the informant’s name.⁸⁸

The Ninth Circuit has found that the Due Process Clause does not require:

- (1) Detailed written notice of charges,
- (2) Representation by counsel or counsel-substitute,
- (3) An opportunity to present witnesses,
- (4) A written description of the reasons for placing the incarcerated person in administrative segregation, or at *15-16 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished).

84. For example, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information on the PLRA.

85. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. For a more detailed discussion of liberty interests and the degree of due process rights owed to incarcerated people, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings.”

86. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished).

87. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *11 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished); see also Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 477 n.9, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874 n.9, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 692 n.9 (1983) (noting that prison administrators must engage in some sort of periodic review of whether the incarcerated person remains a security threat), as modified by Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1995).

88. See Zimmerlee v. Keeney, 831 F.2d 183, 186 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding that due process requires the affirmative statement of a prison official where safety considerations prevent the disclosure of the informant’s name and additional facts to show that the information was reliable); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *16 n.6 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished) (finding that prison officials must include a statement that the informant’s name was not included for safety purposes).

- (5) The disclosure of the identity of any person providing information leading to the placement of the incarcerated person in administrative segregation.⁸⁹

Placement in segregation for an indeterminate period based upon gang membership does not require any procedures beyond those required in regular administrative segregation cases.⁹⁰ However, an incarcerated person may not be confined separately for gang affiliation unless the record contains at least some factual information from which prison officials can reasonably conclude that the information supporting segregation is reliable.⁹¹ In California, under statute, information is considered reliable if one or more of the following elements are met:

- (1) The confidential source has previously given information that has proven to be true,
- (2) Other confidential sources have independently provided the same information,
- (3) The information provided by the confidential informant is self-incriminating,
- (4) Part of the information provided is corroborated (confirmed) through investigation or information provided by non-confidential sources,
- (5) The confidential informant is the victim, or
- (6) This source successfully completed a polygraph examination.⁹²

Finally, a further due process claim that you might make is that your validation as a gang member has been made in retaliation for some other unrelated legal activity that you have engaged in, such as filing an appeal. To state the “prima facie case,”⁹³ you must show that retaliation for the exercise of protected conduct was the “substantial” or “motivating” factor behind the prison officials’ actions.⁹⁴ Additionally, you must show that the retaliatory action did not advance legitimate prison management or incarcerated person treatment goals (referred to as “penological goals”),⁹⁵ or was not “narrowly tailored” enough to achieve such goals. Targeting of incarcerated people for gang validation without a good reason is not an action that is narrowly tailored to achieve legitimate penological goals. For example, you might try to argue that gang validations without good cause actually misdirect prison resources away from other proceedings and compromise prison security.⁹⁶ Once you have established a prima facie case of retaliation and demonstrated that the retaliatory action does not advance a legitimate penological goal, the burden shifts to the prison officials. They must establish that they

89. Toussaint v. McCarthy, 801 F.2d 1080, 1100–1101 (9th Cir. 1986); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished).

90. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1274–1275 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding that, in order to satisfy due process, an incarcerated person cannot be segregated for gang affiliation unless the record contains “some factual information” sufficient to satisfy the reliability standard used in other administrative segregation proceedings); see Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *8–10 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished).

91. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1274 (N.D. Cal. 1995); see Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 965 (D. Ariz. 2000) (noting that there must be some reliable evidence of current gang/STG membership before the state may impose indefinite administrative segregation), vacated as moot, Koch v. Schriro, 399 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2005); accord, Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that there must be specific facts to support administrative segregation based on gang membership).

92. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3321(c) (2020).

93. To state a prima facie case is to state sufficient facts to allow the judge or jury to find in your favor if everything you said is true and undisputed.

94. Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 956 (D. Ariz. 2000). See Chapter 24 of the JLM, “Your Right To Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners,” for more information on your rights against retaliation.

95. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” and Chapter 27 of the JLM, “Religious Freedom in Prison,” for more information on the “legitimate penological goals” language and the Turner standard.

96. See Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 956 (D. Ariz. 2000) (“[I]nstituting STG proceedings without good cause would misdirect prison resources away from proceedings involving a legitimate compromise to prison security.”). While an argument of wasting prison resources was effective in Koch, many other courts have held that gang validation supports the goal of prison security. See, e.g., Stewart v. Alameida, 418 F. Supp.2d 1154, 1163 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (finding the prison’s regulations on gang validation did not violate the incarcerated person’s rights because the regulations were reasonably related to the valid penological interest of security).

would have validated you as a gang member even if you had not engaged in the legally protected conduct.

3. Eighth Amendment Claims

The Eighth Amendment of the Constitution prohibits “the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain”⁹⁷ and punishment that is grossly disproportionate (out of proportion) to the severity of the crime.⁹⁸ California courts have rejected that the debriefing process⁹⁹ constitutes an Eighth Amendment violation because it could subject an incarcerated person to retaliation from other gang members, thereby placing his life and well-being at risk. They have generally found this allegation to be speculative. Courts will not allow this argument to go forward without evidence of a particular threat to the incarcerated person bringing the case, or without evidence that prison officials are not concerned about the incarcerated person’s well-being.¹⁰⁰

4. Fifth Amendment Claims

The Fifth Amendment of the Constitution provides that no person “shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.”¹⁰¹ Debriefing generally requires an incarcerated person to disclose information regarding himself and other gang members and their gang-related activities. Prison administrators have argued, and courts have agreed, that debriefing is necessary to determine whether an incarcerated person is telling the truth about no longer being a part of the gang. Prison officials have also argued that debriefing helps to determine if a gang member’s information is reliable and helps to gather further information about the gang.¹⁰²

California courts have held that the debriefing requirement does not violate Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination because the information acquired in debriefing is not (under California’s policy) used in later criminal proceedings.¹⁰³ Courts have held that the right against self-incrimination “does not arise in the debriefing processing,” and therefore that prison officials are not required to provide incarcerated people with immunity.¹⁰⁴ Remember that the right against self-incrimination is a personal protection and may not be invoked to prevent the implication of others, such as other people involved in the gang.

Keep in mind, however, that if you are incarcerated in California, the policies surrounding debriefing provide you with only thin protection. Although the regulations state that debriefing is “not for the purpose of acquiring incriminating evidence against the subject,”¹⁰⁵ they do not explicitly forbid the evidence from being used in later legal proceedings. Partly as a result of incarcerated people

97. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981) (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976)).

98. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981) (citing Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592, 97 S. Ct. 2861, 2866, 53 L. Ed. 2d 982, 989 (1977) (plurality opinion)).

99. For more on debriefing, see Part C(4) of this Chapter.

100. Berg v. Kincheloe, 794 F.2d 457, 459 (9th Cir. 1986) (stating that an incarcerated person may bring a §1983 claim under the Eighth Amendment if it is shown that prison officials acted with “deliberate indifference” to a serious threat of harm to an incarcerated person by another incarcerated person); followed by Pollard v. GEO Group, Inc., 629 F.3d 843, 863 (9th Cir. 2010), rev’d on other grounds sub nom. Minnecci v. Pollard, 565 U.S. 118, 132 S. Ct. 617, 181 L. Ed. 2d 606 (2012).

101. U.S. Const. amend. V.

102. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1241 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (“Because prison gang members ‘join for life,’ the CDC considers debriefings necessary to prove the renunciations of gang memberships are genuine.”).

103. Griffin v. Gomez, No. C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *8–11 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff’d in part and remanded in part on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *23–24 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff’d, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *16 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished).

104. Griffin v. Gomez, No. C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *19 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished).

105. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3378.5(b) (2019).

challenging the debriefing process, the regulations also provide that if an incarcerated person “makes a statement that tends to incriminate [himself] in a crime,” he must waive his right against self-incrimination “prior to questioning . . . about the incriminating matter.”¹⁰⁶ However, the prison official or gang investigator conducting the debriefing determines when a statement “tends to incriminate,” and the debriefing incarcerated person has no attorney or representative present at the debriefing. If you are currently appealing your conviction or sentence and considering debriefing, you should talk to your appellate attorney about the possible implications debriefing may have on your appeal.

If you are not in California, it may be worth investigating whether or not the system in which you are incarcerated has a policy regarding the use of information gathered through gang debriefings in future criminal proceedings. If it does not have such a policy, then the debriefing requirement may present a valid Fifth Amendment issue.

5. Equal Protection and Free Exercise of Religion Claims

To win on an equal protection claim, an incarcerated person usually must prove: (1) that the government has intentionally treated similarly situated incarcerated people differently and (2) that there is no rational relationship between this dissimilar treatment and any legitimate penal interest.¹⁰⁷ This standard is frequently called “rational basis review.” Rational basis review is the lowest level of scrutiny, or review, applied by courts. Challenges that incarcerated people make to classifications usually fail because officials only need to show that the action is “rationally related” to a “legitimate government interest.” If, however, you are alleging that you were treated differently than other similarly situated incarcerated people because of your race, some courts, including California, will apply “strict scrutiny” to the government’s policy. “Strict scrutiny” is a significantly higher standard than “rational basis review,” and therefore more difficult for the government to meet (and more favorable to incarcerated people). To survive “strict scrutiny,” the government must prove that the treatment you are challenging both: (1) promotes a compelling state interest; and (2) is narrowly or suitably tailored to that interest.¹⁰⁸

An example of a policy that treated people differently based on race was found in Johnson v. California.¹⁰⁹ In Johnson, the court applied a strict scrutiny standard of review to the prison’s policy of placing new or transferred incarcerated people with cellmates of the same race during the initial sixty-day evaluation period. In Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, however, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held that a prison’s decision to designate an incarcerated person as a member of a Security Threat Group without a hearing did not involve different treatment based on race.¹¹⁰ Instead, the court in Harbin-Bey held that because incarcerated people are not a suspect class, the “rational basis” test applied, and the prison’s classification decision was constitutional.¹¹¹ For more information on Equal Protection claims you should see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

You may be able to argue that the debriefing policy makes it hard to practice your religion. However, these types of claims have failed because the policy does not “substantially burden” free

106. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3378.5(e) (2019).

107. Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005); see Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (establishing the “legitimate penological interests” test to validate prison regulations that may otherwise impinge an incarcerated person’s constitutional rights); see also Ashelman v. Wawrzaszek, 111 F.3d 674, 676 (9th Cir. 1997) (noting that the Turner “legitimate penological interests” test may not apply to certain religious discrimination cases under the “compelling government interest” test required by the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1).

108. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 505, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1146, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 958 (2005); see Parents Involved in Cmty. Sch. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 551 U.S. 701, 720, 127 S. Ct. 2746, 2752, 168 L. Ed. 2d 517, 523 (2007) (using the strict scrutiny standard in the context of race-conscious student assignment policies designed to eliminate racial imbalances in school enrollment); Jana-Rock Const., Inc. v. New York State Dept. of Econ. Dev., 438 F.3d 195, 205 (2d Cir. 2006) (clarifying that “extrinsic showing of discriminatory animus or effect is not necessary to trigger strict scrutiny”).

109. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 509, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1148, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 960 (2005).

110. Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005).

111. See Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005).

exercise of religion.¹¹² Using the substantial burden test, a district court in California rejected a challenge where a religious Catholic incarcerated person argued that the debriefing policy was unconstitutional because it forced him to confess to a person other than a priest. The court held that the policy did not substantially burden the incarcerated person's religion because the incarcerated person was not forced to commit any act forbidden by his religion, but instead could refrain from debriefing.¹¹³ For more information on your right to practice your religion see Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

6. Administrative Options

Given courts' general hostility toward gang validation claims, the most effective way to challenge classification is probably through administrative procedures within the prison. You should be granted periodic review of your status as an alleged gang member. When this happens, you should have the opportunity to express your views on your classification. This is your opportunity to ensure that officials are following the proper administrative procedures that the California courts have relied upon in dismissing incarcerated people's due process claims. For example, as discussed above, all anonymous testimony must be accompanied by an official statement that the identity of your accuser has been withheld for security reasons and that testimony should be as complete as it can possibly be without identifying the source. You should become familiar with the classification procedures so that you can monitor whether they are being followed. Deviations from the classification may provide grounds for challenging your classification.

Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," contains detailed instructions on how to pursue administrative remedies. The focus of Chapter 15 is on the state of New York's Internal Grievance Program ("IGP"), but you will also find information on locating the guidelines and procedures for filing grievances in other states. You may also find Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings," helpful in challenging your classification. Many states separate their disciplinary and classification systems and there may be separate provisions for appealing your classification. It is important that you read the grievance rules carefully so that you can use the correct administrative remedy. Finally, if you have exhausted all of the administrative options and you are imprisoned in the state of New York, you can file an Article 78 proceeding. Article 78 provides a procedure for challenging administrative decisions in court. For instructions on how to bring an Article 78 proceeding, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules."

D. Conclusion

Your security classification is important because it influences where you are incarcerated and what sort of freedoms you will receive. If you have undergone gang validation and been designated a member of a Security Threat Group it may be possible to challenge this designation, although such challenges are difficult to win. While you may have some room to raise a challenge on equal protection grounds if the prison used a race-based policy to classify you in a certain group, you are probably more likely to be successful challenging your security classification through your prison's administrative procedures.

112. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *23 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished).

113. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *22-23 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished).

Chapter 32

PAROLE*

A. Introduction

Parole is a system of discretionary release for prisoners who have not yet completed their maximum sentences. Parole also refers to the process of your supervised re-joining the community while you serve the remainder of your sentence outside of prison.¹ In this Chapter, Part B provides an overview of the parole system of New York State. Parts C through I examine New York's parole system in detail. Part C explains the calculation of the minimum imprisonment period; Part D discusses the Shock Incarceration Program; Part E discusses the sentence of parole supervision; Part F explains parole release hearings; Part G reviews release on parole; Part H covers parole revocation; Part I discusses release from parole supervision; Part J looks at the parole system of California; Part K examines the Florida state system; Part L examines the Illinois state system; Part M examines the Texas state system; and Part N examines the Michigan parole system. Prisoners in other states must research their own states' laws on parole, as parole laws tend to be very different from state to state and parole has been completely eliminated in many states. See Chapters 35 of the JLM, "Getting Out Early: Conditional and Early Release," for information on conditional and early release, and see Chapter 39 of the JLM, "Temporary Release Programs," for information on temporary release programs.

B. New York

In New York, the Division of Parole and the Department of Correctional Services recently merged and became the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS).² The parole law is found in the N.Y. Executive Law § 259 and in Title 9 of New York State Compilation of Codes, Rules and Regulations, Part 8000.³ The parole law requires the DOCCS to adopt written guidelines for use in making parole decisions.⁴ The DOCCS also publishes pamphlets, handbooks, and other materials that explain the parole process.⁵

For further information, check with your institution's parole officer, pre-release center, or law library. They should have the New York State Parole Handbook, "Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision."⁶ This pamphlet gives the DOCCS' answers to questions on issues

* This Chapter was revised by JoAnn Kintz, based in part on a previous version written by Mary Beth Myles. Special thanks to Professor Philip Genty of Columbia Law School for his valuable comments.

1. This supervised release can be as a result of a discretionary parole release or a mandatory supervised release ordered by the sentencing judge.

2. In New York, Parole, Conditional Release, Work Release and Temporary Release programs are run by the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 150, 151, 851, 852 (McKinney 2014); N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 10 (McKinney 2014); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40 (McKinney 2009). Probation is handled by the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 240 (McKinney 2018). Because the combining of the departments is so recent, the state laws may still describe the Division of Parole and the Department of Correctional Services as separate departments.

3. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000 (2020). The New York Official Compilation of Codes, Rules, and Regulations is in a green three-ring binder, and it should be in your prison library.

4. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-c(4) (McKinney 2018). Though the Guidelines are written and codified, the Parole Board is not absolutely bound to follow them.

5. These materials can be located online at <https://doccs.ny.gov/community-supervision-0> or by contacting the N.Y. State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision at (518) 473-9400.

6. COMMUNITY SUPERVISION HANDBOOK, QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING RELEASE AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF CORR. & CMTY. SUPERVISION (2019), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 10, 2020).

regarding time served, institutional parole and parole board activities in state correctional facilities, parole supervision, the revocation process, the Sentencing Reform Act of 1995, interstate parole, juvenile offenders, restoration of rights, executive clemency, appeals, and access to parole files. If available, you should also review other DOCCS publications, especially the Guidelines Applications Manual, and look at the laws and regulations themselves.⁷

This Chapter describes the practices and procedures of the Parole Board. Parole has five basic phases:

- (1) Determination of your minimum sentence;
- (2) Parole release considerations, preparing for your parole hearing, and the hearing itself;
- (3) Release on parole and supervision by parole officers;
- (4) Constitutional due process protections required in the parole revocation process; and
- (5) Release from parole and the restoration of full rights.

You can appeal a Parole Board decision in two ways. The first appeal is an administrative procedure conducted through the Appeals Unit of the Parole Board.⁸ You must first try the administrative process within the DOCCS. If that fails and you wish to continue, you may then appeal through an Article 78 proceeding in the New York courts.⁹ The courts have adopted an extremely tough test for review of any Parole Board decision. In order for courts to intervene in Parole Board decisions, you must show “irrationality bordering on impropriety on the part of the parole board.”¹⁰ In other words, you must show that the Parole Board’s decision did not make sense and was close to being improper in order for a court to step in. It is very unusual for a court to find that a Parole Board’s decision was wrong.

C. Minimum Term of Incarceration Under an Indeterminate Sentence & Conditional Release Under a Determinate Sentence

There are two types of sentences the sentencing court can give: indeterminate and determinate. An “indeterminate” sentence is when the court assigns a range of minimum and maximum time a prisoner must serve, rather than a specific number of days or years. A determinate (“flat”) sentence is a fixed period of time you must spend in prison. If you are serving a determinate sentence, you are not eligible for parole but may qualify for conditional release.

If you were given an indeterminate sentence, the sentencing court should have set the minimum amount of time you must serve in a state correctional facility before you become eligible for release.¹¹ Since 1995, New York has been moving away from indeterminate sentencing and discretionary parole release to the system of determinate sentences. Determinate sentences are required for persons

7. A copy of the Division of Parole’s Release Decision-Making Guidelines Application Manual should be available at the law library for each state prison or by contacting your Facility Parole Officer.

8. The appeals procedure is the same for Parole Board decisions regarding a minimum period of imprisonment (MPI), parole release, parole rescission, and final revocation. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(a).

9. For a discussion of Article 78 proceedings, see Chapter 22 and Part C(6) of Chapter 5 of the JLM.

10. In re Russo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 50 N.Y.2d 69, 77, 405 N.E.2d 225, 229, 427 N.Y.S.2d 982, 986 (1980) (holding that the Parole Board may impose an MPI for a longer period of time than the sentencing judge could have fixed). The Russo standard has been held to be a review of “whether the Board’s decision to deny parole was arbitrary or capricious.” Silmon v. Travis, 95 N.Y.2d 470, 477, 741 N.E.2d 501, 505, 718 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708 (2000) (holding it was not arbitrary or capricious for the Board to consider a lack of remorse and insight in denying parole). See Jorge v. Hammock, 84 A.D.2d 362, 364, 446 N.Y.S.2d 585, 587 (3d Dept. 1982) (holding complete disregard of a sentencing judge’s recommendation in setting a minimum incarceration period was inappropriate and entitled prisoner to a new hearing).

11. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.00(3) (McKinney 2009). If you were sentenced before September 1, 1980, the Parole Board—instead of the sentencing court—will fix your minimum term. See Schwimmer v. Hammock, 59 N.Y.2d 636, 637, 449 N.E.2d 1266, 1267, 463 N.Y.S.2d 188, 189 (1983) (holding the Parole Board had the authority to set prisoner’s minimum period of incarceration (MPI) because the law in existence at the time of sentencing did not give the sentencing court the power to set an MPI).

sentenced as second violent felony offenders after 1995, or first violent felony offenders after 1998.¹² Determinate sentences are also required for felony drug offenders sentenced after 2004.¹³ Persons sentenced to a determinate sentence as violent or second violent felony offenders are eligible for conditional release when they have served six-sevenths of their sentence.¹⁴ Persons serving determinate sentences for felony drug offenses are eligible for merit time/conditional release after serving five-sevenths of their sentence.¹⁵

But there are three exceptions. First, you may get early parole if you successfully complete a shock incarceration program¹⁶ (described in Part D of this Chapter). Second, you may appear before the Parole Board prior to the expiration of your minimum sentence if you are eligible for “merit time.”¹⁷ Most categories of non-violent felonies qualify for merit time.¹⁸ If you are serving a sentence that qualifies and you have earned merit time, you will appear before the Parole Board for release consideration after you have served five-sixths of your minimum sentence for a determinate sentence.¹⁹ If you are serving an indeterminate sentence for a felony drug offense, you may earn additional merit time and appear before the Parole Board for release consideration after serving two-thirds of your minimum sentence, and for all other indeterminate sentences, you may earn additional merit time and appear before the Parole Board for release consideration after serving five-sixths of your minimum sentence.²⁰ Third, certain categories of felony drug offenses are eligible for a sentence of parole supervision²¹ (described in Part E of this Chapter).

D. Shock Incarceration Program

Shock Incarceration is a Department of Correctional Services program in which selected eligible prisoners participate in a structured six-month program at a Shock Incarceration facility.²² Shock Incarceration is a highly structured program that requires daily exercise, a full work day, daily meetings, and substance abuse counseling. Participants are also required to participate in high school equivalency classes through the educational programs offered.²³ Generally, participants who successfully complete the program are issued a Certificate of Earned Eligibility and become eligible for parole release consideration before completing the court-imposed minimum sentence.²⁴ See Part F(5) of this Chapter for additional information on Certificates of Earned Eligibility.

A prisoner may submit an application to the Shock Incarceration screening committee for permission to participate in the shock incarceration program.²⁵ Eligible prisoners are also screened to insure that their participation in the program is “consistent with the safety of the community, the

12. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.02, 70.04 (McKinney 2009).

13. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.70, 70.71 (McKinney 2009).

14. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(c) (McKinney 2014).

15. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d) (McKinney 2014).

16. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 865-867 (McKinney 2014); N.Y. EXEC. LAW 259-i(2)(e) (McKinney 2018).

17. Merit time is time credit given for such actions as good behavior, efficient performance of duties, and success in a treatment program. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW. § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2014).

18. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2014).

19. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

20. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

21. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70(3)(d) (McKinney 2014).

22. If you complete a shock incarceration program, you are eligible to receive a Certificate of Earned Eligibility under Section 805 of N.Y. Corrections Law. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 805, 867(4) (McKinney 2014). See Part F(5) of this Chapter for additional information on Certificates of Earned Eligibility.

23. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §1800.6(b) (2020).

24. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

25. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 867(1) (McKinney 2014). To be eligible, you must be under the age of 40 and have been at least 16 years old when you committed the crime for which you are incarcerated. You must be eligible for parole within three years and not have been convicted of a felony with an indeterminate sentence. The commission of certain crimes will also make you ineligible, including but not limited to a violent felony offense, an A-1 felony offense, manslaughter in the second degree, or rape in the second or third degree. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §1800.4 (2020).

welfare of the applicant, and the selection criteria for the program.”²⁶ Therefore, even if you meet the eligibility criteria for the program, you still may not ultimately be chosen to participate.

E. Sentence of Parole Supervision

If you have a history of drug or alcohol addiction, and abuse of that substance has led you to commit illegal acts, you may be given a sentence of parole supervision (also known as a “Willard Sentence” after the Willard Drug Treatment Center). You are eligible for a sentence of parole supervision only if you satisfy the following three requirements:

- (1) You have a history of drug or alcohol addiction that has significantly contributed to your illegal acts,
- (2) A sentence of parole supervision would likely help you become or stay drug-free, and
- (3) A sentence of parole supervision would not risk “public safety or public confidence in the integrity of the criminal justice system.”²⁷

Furthermore, you can only be given a sentence of parole supervision for conviction of certain specified crimes.²⁸ When the court considers whether to give you a sentence of parole supervision, the prosecutor may either agree with or oppose the sentence, and the court is permitted, but not required, to consider the prosecutor’s view.

If you receive a sentence of parole supervision, you will be placed under the supervision of the state DOCCS and will be sent immediately to a reception center for no more than ten days.²⁹ Once you arrive at the reception center, the law requires that you be given a copy of the conditions of your parole. You will need to acknowledge in writing that you have received a copy of these conditions.³⁰ Sometime after you leave the reception center, you will be placed in a drug treatment campus for ninety days.³¹ While you are at the campus, the DOCCS will assess your needs and develop a personal drug treatment

26. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §1800.3(c) (2020).

27. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(3) (McKinney 2005); People v. Denue, 275 A.D.2d 863, 864, 713 N.Y.S.2d 783, 784 (3d Dept. 2000) (denying petitioner a sentence of parole supervision because he did not show that he had a history of substance dependence that significantly contributed to his criminal conduct or that he was not subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment).

28. The specified crimes are listed in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(5) (McKinney 2020) and include the following: burglary in the third degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 140.20 (McKinney 2010); criminal mischief in the third degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 145.05 (McKinney 2010); criminal mischief in the second degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 145.10 (McKinney 2010); grand larceny in the fourth degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 155.30(1)–(6), (8)–(10) (McKinney 2010); grand larceny in the third degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 155.35 (McKinney 2010) (except where the property consists of one or more firearms, rifles, or shotguns); unauthorized use of a vehicle in the second degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 165.06 (McKinney 2010); criminal possession of stolen property in the fourth degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 165.45(1)–(3), (5)–(6) (McKinney 2010); criminal possession of stolen property in the third degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 165.50 (McKinney 2010) (except where the property consists of one or more firearms, rifles, or shotguns); forgery in the second degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 170.10 (McKinney 2010); criminal possession of a forged instrument in the second degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 170.25 (McKinney 2010); unlawfully using slugs in the first degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 170.60 (McKinney 2010); criminal diversion of medical cannabis in the first degree as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 179.10 (McKinney 2010); an attempt to commit any of the aforementioned offenses if such attempt constitutes a felony offense; or a class B felony offense defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220 (McKinney 2008) where a determinate sentence is imposed pursuant to N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70(2)(a) (McKinney 2009); or any class C, class D or class E controlled substance or cannabis felony offense as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220 or § 221 (McKinney 2008). You are only eligible if (i) you are a second felony offender as defined in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(5) (McKinney 2020) who stands convicted of no other felony offense; (ii) you have not previously been convicted of either a violent felony offense as defined in N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02 or a class A or class B felony offense (other than a class B felony offense defined in article 220 of the penal law, which contains a variety of drug offenses); and (iii) you are not subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(2) (McKinney 2005).

29. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(1) (McKinney 2005).

30. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(6) (McKinney 2005).

31. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(1) (McKinney 2005).

program. In most cases, this program will include help from local community organizations that work with the DOCCS.³² After you have completed the drug treatment program at the campus, you will be given money, clothes, and transportation from the drug treatment campus to the county where your parole supervision and drug treatment plan will continue.³³

F. Parole Release Hearing and Appeals

1. Your Right to a Parole Release Hearing

The parole release hearing is an interview where the Parole Board determines whether you should be released from prison before you serve your maximum sentence. You are entitled to a parole release hearing at least one month before the end of your minimum period of incarceration.³⁴ There are some situations in which you may become eligible for parole before you complete your minimum sentence. You may get early parole if you complete a Shock Incarceration program, if you are eligible for and earn merit time, or if you serve and successfully complete a sentence of parole supervision.³⁵ (See Parts D and E of this Chapter for a description of the Shock Incarceration Program and the Sentence of Parole Supervision.) You do not have to file for a parole release hearing; one will be scheduled for you automatically. If you believe your scheduled parole release hearing is past due, you can contact the pre-release center or parole officer at your institution.

2. Steps to Take Before the Hearing

Only the Parole Board can decide to release you on parole; there is no statutory or constitutional right to parole release.³⁶ Nevertheless, there are ways you can improve your chances of being released on parole. While you are in prison, the more that you do to get ready for your re-entry into the community, the better your chances become of convincing the Board to release you on parole. However, in recent years, the Parole Board has placed a great deal of importance on the seriousness of the crime when making decisions about prisoners who are put in prison for violent felonies. In addition to the facts and circumstances of the underlying crime, the Parole Board is likely to consider five basic areas:

- (1) Education—Did you take any classes while in prison? Those classes might include a GED course, vocational training, or college;
- (2) Employment—Did you try to develop any job skills? These could range from making furniture to kitchen work, as long as it is a skill that relates to life and might help with employment outside of prison;
- (3) Issues That Led to Incarceration—Can you address the problems that led to your conviction? For example, if you are in on a drug use charge, did you participate in any treatment programs?;
- (4) Likelihood of Community Reintegration—Have you had any contact with your family or community? Even if you cannot show family ties like letters or visits, developing a contact with a halfway house or an ex-offender service group will help; and
- (5) Future Plans and Goals—You should be prepared to discuss your immediate plans and future goals for your life after release on parole.

In short, your activities while you are in prison affect your chances for parole.

32. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(6) (McKinney 2005).

33. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.91(7) (McKinney 2005).

34. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(a) (McKinney 2018).

35. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

36. See, e.g., Barna v. Travis, 239 F.3d 169, 171 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that a prisoner does not have a justifiable expectation of release on parole, and that it is up to the Parole Board to determine prisoner eligibility for parole); Boothe v. Hammock, 605 F.2d 661, 664 (2d Cir. 1979) (holding that New York state's statutory scheme of parole did not create a due process entitlement to parole). However, as discussed in Part F(5) of this Chapter, in 1987 New York adopted the Certificate of Earned Eligibility program, which created a presumption in favor of release on parole in certain situations.

As an eligible parole candidate, you must complete what is known as a parole or release plan before your parole release hearing. This plan will be part of your Parole Board Report.³⁷ The Guidelines describe “release plans” as including the “community resources, employment, education and training and support services” that are available to you in prison.³⁸ One of the most important parts of your parole plan is your plan for employment or education after release. If you are granted parole but have not created a satisfactory plan, your release date will be pushed back until you have made one.³⁹ Therefore, if you are finding it difficult to develop a parole plan, you must get some help as soon as possible. Otherwise, you risk delaying or losing your parole release.

For help in preparing your parole plan, contact the pre-release center or parole officer at your institution. The parole regulations state that the DOCCS should “assist inmates eligible for . . . parole . . . to secure employment, educational or vocational training.”⁴⁰ In addition to contacting the pre-release center and/or institutional parole officers, you should use any other contacts you have (like former employers, family, or friends) to get a job while still in prison. For information on employment in New York City, you can contact the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision at (518) 473-9400. The Fortune Society is another good source of support that may lead to possible employment. It offers one-on-one counseling and tutoring. You can write to the Fortune Society at 29-76 Northern Boulevard, Long Island City, NY 11101 or call (212) 691-7554.

Your institutional record is also an important part of your Inmate Status Report. It will list your program goals and accomplishments, academic achievements, vocational education, training or work assignments, therapy, and relationships with staff and other prisoners.⁴¹ It is important that this information present a favorable image to the Parole Board. However, while it may be helpful to maintain a good-standing prison record to make a good impression on the Parole Board, it is important to note that good conduct alone does not guarantee parole.⁴²

To obtain parole, your record and conduct must show the Parole Board that:

- (1) You “will live and remain at liberty without violating the law,”
- (2) Your release will not harm society, and
- (3) You will not “deprecate” the seriousness of the crime you committed (make the crime seem less serious) and undermine respect for the law.⁴³

If you have been issued a Certificate of Earned Eligibility, which is explained in Part F(5) of this Chapter, the Parole Board will apply a lesser standard of review in determining your parole.⁴⁴

37. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(iii) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.3 (2020). New York defines the Parole Board Report as follows: The Parole Board Report is prepared by an Institutional Parole Officer and will include information such as: (1) court information on the present offense, the judge’s sentence, etc.; (2) your age, place of birth, occupation, marital status, and other personal characteristics; (3) your legal history (prior offenses); (4) your institutional record, including any disciplinary record, your medical history and involvement in educational and recreational programs; (5) your inmate statement, which includes comments regarding the offense that resulted in your conviction, as well as your comments about your prior record; and (6) your Parole Plan. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 15, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

38. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.3.

39. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 13–15, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

40. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.1(a)(5).

41. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.2(d)(1) (2020).

42. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2018).

43. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2018).

44. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8010.2(a) (2020) (“[R]eceipt of a certificate of earned

Nevertheless, it is a good idea to build the strongest record of education, program participation, and work that you can since your activities while in prison directly affect this part of the Inmate Status Report.

If the Parole Board grants parole, some prisoners may be required to find acceptable housing before being released. The Parole Board's requirements for approved housing may be very challenging (for example, prisoners may be banned from living near a school or a school bus stop, may not be allowed to live alone, or may not be allowed to live in a shelter).⁴⁵

If you are serving a sentence for a non-violent felony, other than those involving manslaughter, homicide, or sexual misconduct, you may be eligible for presumptive release.⁴⁶ Presumptive release allows you to be released to parole supervision without appearing before the Parole Board as long as you have no serious disciplinary violations and have not brought a frivolous court proceeding while in prison.⁴⁷ You must submit an application in order to be considered for presumptive release and should talk with your Correction Counselor for more information on the program application.⁴⁸ Individuals who successfully complete the Shock Incarceration program are eligible for presumptive release.⁴⁹

3. The Parole Release Hearing

A two- or three-member panel of the Parole Board conducts the parole release hearing during visits to each facility.⁵⁰ Only one member of the panel will review your parole plan in detail. The other panel members will be present at the interview, but will generally defer to the judgment of the member who read the file. Instead of reading the full report, the other panel members will receive a summary of your parole report. The Parole Board members, the facility parole officer and staff, and a hearing reporter will be present at the release interview. You are not permitted to have an attorney with you at this interview.⁵¹

During the parole release interview, panel members will ask you questions about:

- (1) Your plans if you are released on parole;
- (2) Your conduct and activities while in prison;
- (3) Your criminal record, including past crimes and time served; and
- (4) The events surrounding the crime for which you are presently incarcerated.

It is important to note that the panel members will consider whether you understand why the crime happened, whether you feel any remorse for the crime, and what you would do differently in the future. You must answer all questions honestly, but be sure to present your side of the story in answering any difficult questions. Remember, if your parole is denied and you want to appeal, the basis for any appeal must appear in the hearing record. So, you must present all your information and reasons for parole at the interview.

eligibility...shall create a presumption in favor of parole release.”); see also N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

45. See People ex rel. Travis v. Coombe, 219 A.D.2d 881, 881–882, 632 N.Y.S.2d 340, 341–342 (4th Dept. 1995) (holding that parole grantee was not entitled to immediate release, since “[n]o residence was located for relator that was acceptable to the Division of Parole”).

46. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806 (McKinney 2014).

47. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 806(1)(i)–(iii) (McKinney 2014).

48. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(3) (McKinney 2014); see also State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4791, Presumptive Release (2017).

49. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1) (McKinney 2014).

50. COMMUNITY SUPERVISION HANDBOOK, QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING RELEASE AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF CORR. & CMTY. SUPERVISION 13 (2019), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 10, 2020); New York State law also says that the Board of Parole “shall consist of not more than nineteen members appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate.” N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-b(1) (McKinney 2018).

51. N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF CORR. & CMTY. SUPERVISION, COMMUNITY SUPERVISION HANDBOOK, QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING RELEASE AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION 13 (2019), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 10, 2020).

Be sure to bring to your release hearing any documents that would make a good impression on the panel members, such as program certificates, diplomas, or letters of recommendation. These should already be in your parole file, but sometimes institutional authorities file them incorrectly.

The Parole Law requires the Parole Board to take into consideration all of the following factors in determining early release on parole:

- (1) Your institutional record;
- (2) Your academic achievements;
- (3) Your training or work assignments;
- (4) Any therapy you have had;
- (5) Interpersonal relationships with staff and other prisoners;
- (6) Your performance, if any, in a release program;
- (7) Any release plans involving community resources, education, and training support services;
- (8) Any deportation orders;
- (9) Any written or oral statement of the crime victim;⁵²
- (10) The seriousness of the offense for which you are presently incarcerated;⁵³
- (11) Recommendations of the sentencing court and district attorney;
- (12) The recommendation of your attorney at trial;
- (13) The pre-sentence probation report;
- (14) Any mitigating and aggravating factors;⁵⁴
- (15) Activities following arrest and prior to conviction;⁵⁵ and
- (16) Any prior criminal record.⁵⁶

If the Board fails to consider relevant statutory factors in determining your parole, you may have grounds for appealing the parole decision.⁵⁷ However, the Board does not have to give each factor equal weight.⁵⁸

The Board decides whether or not to grant parole either on the day of the hearing or a few days later. Typically, the panel will make a decision immediately after you leave the room. The Parole Board has a large amount of decision-making power in deciding whether or not you are eligible for parole. Beyond the factors listed above, the Parole Board establishes its own guidelines to determine when a prisoner is eligible for parole,⁵⁹ and it currently sets a high standard. As the Second Circuit stated in Barna v. Travis, “the New York parole scheme is not one that creates in any prisoner a legitimate

52. The Parole Board will also consider any statements made on the victim’s behalf by a representative.

53. The Parole Board will consider both the type of sentence and the length of the sentence.

54. Mitigating factors are circumstances in your crime that do not excuse the criminal conduct but might make the Board view your crime less harshly—for example, if you had no prior criminal record. Aggravating circumstances are those that might make the Board view your crime more harshly—for example, if your crime affected a large number of people.

55. It is important to effectively use your pre-conviction time (that is, the time following your arrest but before conviction and sentencing), especially if you are out on bail. Seeking employment—or, if you already have a job, keeping a good record at that job—can sometimes help justify a lower sentence and early release on parole.

56. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2018).

57. See, e.g., King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 190 A.D.2d 423, 431, 598 N.Y.S.2d 245, 250 (1st Dept. 1993), aff’d, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 1278, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954, 955 (1994) (holding that the Parole Board has a duty “to give fair consideration” to each person who comes before it, and where the record “convincingly demonstrates” that the Board did not fairly consider the proper standards in reaching its decision, courts must intervene); but see, e.g., Valderrama v. Travis, 19 A.D.3d 904, 905, 796 N.Y.S.2d 758, 759 (3rd Dept. 2005) (holding that a parole decision made in accordance with the requirements of the statutory guidelines is not subject to further judicial review unless it is affected by irrationality bordering on impropriety).

58. See Geames v. Travis, 284 A.D.2d 843, 843, 726 N.Y.S.2d 506, 506 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding the Parole Board does not have to weigh each factor equally; the heavy weight put on crime severity and criminal history was acceptable in this situation); King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 190 A.D.2d 423, 431, 598 N.Y.S.2d 245, 250 (1st Dept. 1993), aff’d, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 1278, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954, 955 (1994) (holding that although it is not necessary for the Parole Board to refer to every factor or for the board to give each factor equal weight, the Board must consider each factor laid out in the law).

59. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-c(4) (McKinney 2018).

expectancy of release.”⁶⁰ Even though the Parole Board must consider the above factors, the list is only intended as a guide. In recent years the Board has given particular weight to the factors of the seriousness of the crime and past criminal history for individuals in prison for violent felonies.

4. Victim Impact Statement

A victim impact statement is a written statement to the Parole Board by the crime victim or the victim's family, describing the effect of the crime on the victim's life or on his or her family.⁶¹ The victim or the victim's family must submit the statement at least ten business days before your parole hearing.⁶² You usually cannot see the victim's (or the victim's family's) statement unless the victim or court authorizes you to do so.⁶³

Whether or not there is a victim impact statement in your file, you can ask as many people as possible from your family, your community, and your legal team to write letters to the Parole Board in support of your release. If the letters come to you directly, photocopy them (or ask someone to photocopy them for you) and ask the parole officer at your facility to add them to your file. You should also bring these letters to your pre-parole interview and to the parole hearing itself.

5. Certificate of Earned Eligibility

The “Earned Eligibility Program”⁶⁴ was enacted to address the problem of overcrowding in state prisons. Under the program, once you are in custody, you should be assigned a work and treatment program “as soon as practicable.”⁶⁵ Two months before your minimum term expires, the DOCCS will review your institutional record to determine whether you have complied with your program. If you have successfully participated in this program, DOCCS may issue you a “Certificate of Earned Eligibility.”⁶⁶ Prisoners serving an indeterminate sentence with a minimum term of eight years are not able to receive a Certificate of Earned Eligibility. It is also important to note that even if you successfully complete the program, you may still be denied a Certificate of Earned Eligibility since the decision to issue a Certificate of Earned Eligibility is discretionary.⁶⁷ This means that it is entirely up to DOCCS to determine whether to grant you a Certificate of Earned Eligibility and DOCCS is not required to give you one even if you complete the program. A court of law cannot force DOCCS to issue you a Certificate of Earned Eligibility, even if you have completed your treatment program; however, DOCCS cannot arbitrarily (randomly or unreasonably) deny a Certificate of Earned Eligibility. In such instances, a court may review the denial, although it is important to remember that courts often defer to the opinion of DOCCS, except in unusual or extreme circumstances.

If you have a Certificate of Earned Eligibility and have served your minimum period of incarceration, the standard for parole release is easier to meet.⁶⁸ The Parole Board will not consider 60. Barna v. Travis, 239 F.3d 169, 170–171 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that denial of parole did not violate the Due Process or Ex Post Facto clauses, since petitioners did not have “a legitimate expectancy of release that is grounded in the state's statutory scheme”); see also Graziano v. Pataki, 689 F.3d 110, 114–15 (2d Cir. 2012) (applying Barna).

61. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(v) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.4 (2020).

62. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.4(b) (2020).

63. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.4(e) (2020).

64. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

65. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

66. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014). See Klos v. Haskell, 835 F. Supp. 710, 723 (W.D.N.Y. 1993), aff'd, 48 F.3d 81, 89 (2d Cir. 1995) (stating the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision may exercise “their discretion, without restraint, to remove an inmate from participation in the [Certificate of Earned Eligibility] program”).

67. See Frett v. Coughlin, 156 A.D.2d 779, 781, 550 N.Y.S.2d 61, 63 (3d Dept. 1989) (“Successful participation in the program is merely a threshold requirement which activates the Commissioner’s discretionary power to issue a Certificate of Earned Eligibility. [S]tatute . . . does not create a liberty interest in receiving a Certificate of Earned Eligibility . . . even upon successful participation in the program, the Commissioner may deny the certificate.”).

68. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

your release if there is a reasonable probability that it will not “deprecate the seriousness of [the] crime.”⁶⁹ However, when you possess a Certificate of Earned Eligibility, the Board presumes you will probably live and remain at liberty without violating the law—which means unless the Board affirmatively finds otherwise, you should get parole.

One month prior to the expiration of your minimum period of incarceration (MPI), you will be interviewed by members of the Board for release consideration.⁷⁰ The Parole Board will review:

- (1) The institutional record, including program goals and accomplishments, academic achievements, vocational education training or work assignments, therapy and interactions with staff and inmates;
- (2) Performance, if any, as a participant in a temporary release program;
- (3) Release plans, including community resources, employment, education and training, and support services available to the inmate;
- (4) Any deportation order issued by the federal government against the inmate while in the custody of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision and any recommendation regarding deportation made by the Commissioner of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision pursuant to section 147 of the Correction Law;⁷¹
- (5) Any statement made or submitted to the Board by the crime victim or the victim's representative, where the crime victim is deceased or is mentally or physically incapacitated;
- (6) The length of the determinate sentence to which the inmate would be subject had he or she received a sentence pursuant to section 70.70 or section 70.71 of the Penal Law for a felony defined in article 220 or article 221 of the Penal Law;
- (7) The seriousness of the offense with due consideration to the type of sentence and length of sentence;
- (8) Recommendations of the sentencing court, the district attorney, and the attorney who represented the inmate in connection with the conviction for which the inmate is currently incarcerated;
- (9) The pre-sentence probation report, as well as consideration of any mitigating and aggravating factors and activities following arrest prior to the inmate's current confinement;
- (10) Prior criminal record, including the nature and pattern of the inmate's offenses, adjustment to any previous periods of probation, community supervision, and institutional confinement;
- (11) The most current risk and needs assessment that may have been prepared by the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision; and,
- (12) The most current case plan that may have been prepared by the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision pursuant to section 71-a of the Correction Law.⁷²

It is important to note that having a Certificate of Earned Eligibility does not automatically allow you to receive parole.⁷³ Rather, it “merely create[s] an expectation of parole ... that deserves due process protection.”⁷⁴ As in all cases, you have a right to be heard by the Parole Board, and if you are

69. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2018); see also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.2(a) (2020) (explaining that the Board may consider “other risk and need assessments or evaluations [that] are prepared to assist in determining the inmate's treatment, release plan, or risk of reoffending”).

70. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.1(a) (2020).

71. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 147 (McKinney 2014).

72. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.2(b) (2020). See, e.g., Pike v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 188 A.D.2d 602, 603, 591 N.Y.S.2d 495, 496 (2d Dept. 1992) (holding that despite the Department of Correctional Services issuing petitioner a Certificate of Earned Eligibility, “petitioner's release was incompatible with the welfare of society, and that the petitioner would not remain at liberty without violating the law”); Confoy v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 173 A.D.2d 1014, 1015, 569 N.Y.S.2d 846, 847 (3d Dept. 1991) (holding that Parole Board's denial of parole based on the findings that the “[prisoner] would not remain at liberty without violating the law and that his release would be incompatible with the welfare of society” was supported by the law and evidence).

73. See Howard v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 270 A.D.2d 539, 539–540, 704 N.Y.S.2d 326, 327 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that the fact that the prisoner received a Certificate of Earned Eligibility did not stop parole board from being able to deny him parole release).

74. People ex rel. Hunter v. Bara, 144 Misc. 2d 750, 752, 545 N.Y.S.2d 65, 66 (Sup. Ct. Richmond County denied parole, you have a right to be told why you were denied.⁷⁵ If a court determines that the Parole Board did not comply with these requirements, you may be entitled to a new hearing.⁷⁶

6. Denial of Parole Release

If you are denied parole, within two weeks of your first hearing, the Parole Board must provide you with a detailed written explanation stating the reasons you were denied parole.⁷⁷ Within two weeks of your first hearing, the Board will also set a date for reconsideration of your parole release, which must be scheduled within twenty-four months of your first hearing.⁷⁸ The twenty-four month notice period begins from the date of your last parole hearing.⁷⁹ Before the new hearing, you should (1) prepare a new parole plan; and (2) try to strengthen the parts of your record that the Board identified as reasons for denying parole. If you are denied parole more than once, you must continue to follow this procedure. If your parole is revoked (taken away), there is no time limit for rescheduling a parole release hearing. So, if your parole is revoked and you are returned to prison, the Parole Board may order that you be held for a period longer than twenty-four months before being given another parole hearing.⁸⁰ See Part H of this Chapter for more information on parole revocation.

7. Appealing Denial of Parole Release to Appeals Unit

You can appeal a denial of parole. This appeal is an administrative procedure conducted through the Appeals Unit of the Parole Board.⁸¹ You have the right to an attorney when you appeal to the Parole Board. If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be assigned to you.⁸² You can appeal a release proceeding on one or more of the following grounds:

- (1) The proceeding and/or determination violated lawful procedure, was influenced by an error of law, or was “arbitrary, capricious or otherwise unlawful;”⁸³
- (2) A Board member or members relied on mistaken or irrelevant information in making a decision, and this can be shown in the record of the hearing; or
- (3) The determination was excessive.⁸⁴

If you believe you have grounds for an appeal, immediately file a “notice of appeal,” which should be included in the notification of denial. Then request an attorney if you do not already have one. You 1989) (holding that the prisoner only has a liberty interest in the possibility of release on parole which required due process).

75. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018) (effective until Sept. 1, 2020).

76. See People ex rel. Hunter v. Bara, 144 Misc. 2d 750, 752, 545 N.Y.S.2d 65, 67 (Sup. Ct. Richmond County 1989) (“If the Parole Board fails to comply with the statutory due process protection, the parole candidate is entitled to a new hearing rather than a habeas corpus relief . . . It does not give the petitioner a vested right to release.”).

77. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018).

78. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018) (effective until Sept. 1, 2020); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.3(b) (2020). See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1 (2020).

79. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018).

80. See People ex rel. Matthews v. New York State Div. of Parole, 58 N.Y.2d 196, 205, 447 N.E.2d 689, 693, 460 N.Y.S.2d 746, 750 (1983) (holding that denial of adjournment (delay) of parole revocation hearing did not violate due process).

81. The appeals procedure is the same for Parole Board decisions regarding a minimum period of imprisonment (MPI), parole release, parole rescission, and final revocation. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(a) (2020).

82. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(4)(b) (McKinney 2018). You should write to the County Clerk for the county in which your prison is located and ask the Clerk to assign you a lawyer for the administrative appeal.

83. “Arbitrary, capricious or otherwise unlawful” means the Parole Board’s decision to deny parole was not reasonable and shows a clear error in judgment by the Board. West v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 41 Misc. 3d 1214(A), 980 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup. Ct. 2013) (explaining that while the Board need not discuss all the factors outright, they must give reasonable consideration to all the statutory factors when making a determination regarding parole).

84. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.3(a) (2020) (emphasis added).

must file a notice of appeal within thirty days of receiving the notification of denial; otherwise, you will have waived your right to an appeal.⁸⁵

You should begin to prepare for your appeal by obtaining the parole release hearing minutes from: New York State Division of Parole, 97 Central Avenue, Albany, NY 12206.⁸⁶

You will have to pay for the parole release hearing minutes (the record of the proceeding). If you have an attorney and cannot afford to pay for the minutes, your attorney can get them for you. You may also make a written request for “[a]ll other nonconfidential, discoverable documents relating to the appeal.”⁸⁷ So, if you believe there is important information in your parole records to support your appeal, you may request permission to access it. However, you will not be given unrestricted access. Access to your parole records will be limited in the following ways:

- (1) You can only gain access to your case record at certain times—just before a scheduled appearance before the Board or a hearing officer, or prior to making an administrative appeal;⁸⁸
- (2) You can only access parts of the case record that the Board or the hearing officer will consider;
- (3) You will not be given access to diagnostic opinions that could seriously disrupt your institutional program,⁸⁹ information obtained from a confidential source, or information that might harm another person;⁹⁰ and
- (4) The DOCCS will not grant access to reports or materials from other agencies.⁹¹ You will only be allowed to review the record at the prison or at the area parole office that serves the prison.⁹²

8. If Your Administrative Appeal is Denied

If you make an administrative appeal and are denied relief and want to seek a court to review the decision, you can begin an Article 78 proceeding.⁹³ Remember, as discussed in Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” you must serve (properly deliver) your Article 78 petition to each respondent and the New York Attorney General within four months of the date when the Appeals Unit decision becomes final.⁹⁴ This four-month limit is called the “statute of limitations.”

If you pursue an Article 78 review, it is important to note that it is difficult to get a court to reverse the Parole Board’s decision. The Parole Board’s decisions are discretionary (left to the Parole Board’s choice) and are not subject to review by courts if the decision is made in accordance with what the law requires.⁹⁵ There are two ways for a prisoner to get a reversal of the Board’s decision. A prisoner must

85. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(b) (2020).

86. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(6)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018) states that “[t]he board shall provide for the making of a verbatim record of each parole release interview, except where a decision is made to release the inmate to parole supervision, and . . . except when the decision of the presiding officer after such hearings result in a dismissal of all charged violations of parole, conditional release or post release supervision.”

87. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, §§ 8000.5(c)(3), 8006.1(e) (2020). Nonconfidential, discoverable documents are materials that you are not restricted from seeing.

88. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(1) (2020).

89. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i)(a)(1) (2020).

90. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i)(a)(3) (2020).

91. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i)(b) (2020).

92. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(6)(ii) (2020).

93. See Part C(6) of Chapter 5 of the JLM and Chapter 22 of the JLM for discussions of Article 78 proceedings.

94. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 217(1) (McKinney 2019).

95. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(5) (McKinney 2018). See Davis v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 114 A.D.2d 412, 412, 494 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (2d Dept. 1985) (“[T]he division of parole’s release decisions are discretionary, and if made in accordance with the statutory requirements, such determinations are not subject to judicial review.”); Ristau v. Hammock, 103 A.D.2d 944, 945, 479 N.Y.S.2d 760, 761 (3d Dept. 1984) (requiring a showing of “irrationality bordering on impropriety to warrant intervention by the courts” in a Parole Board’s release decision, which is discretionary).

make a “convincing showing” that either (1) the Board did not consider the required factors or considered erroneous information,⁹⁶ or (2) acted “irrationally bordering on impropriety” in reaching its decision such that it was arbitrary and capricious.⁹⁷ The Parole Board may not consider the following factors in deciding whether to grant parole: “penal philosophy, the historical treatment of individuals convicted of murder, the death penalty, life imprisonment without parole, and the consequences to society if those sentences are not in place.”⁹⁸ Thus, if you are denied parole on the basis of one of those factors, you may have a right to a new hearing.⁹⁹ In addition, the Parole Board may not consider “illegally seized evidence which has already been suppressed in a criminal action,” or “public pressure” in determining whether or not to grant a prisoner parole.¹⁰⁰ The Parole Board may not deny parole on the grounds that the “best kind of treatment” for your emotional and physical problems would be to remain in prison.¹⁰¹ Finally, the Parole Board is required to consider any recommendations made by the sentencing court, and a reviewing court may order reversal and reconsideration if the Board fails to do so.¹⁰²

Again, despite these limited examples of court reversals, it is important to remember that courts generally defer to Parole Board decisions. Even in cases where the Parole Board based its decision to deny parole on factors other than those specified by the legislature, courts have upheld the decision, 96. E.g., Plevy v. Travis, 17 A.D.3d 879, 880, 793 N.Y.S.2d 262, 263 (3d Dept. 2005) (reversing denial of parole and ordering a new parole hearing because the Parole Board improperly considered the petitioner's prior violation of parole, which had been dismissed at the time, when determining denial of parole); Lewis v. Travis, 9 A.D.3d 800, 801, 780 N.Y.S.2d 243, 245 (3d Dept. 2004) (reversing denial of parole and granting a new parole hearing due to the Parole Board's reliance on incorrect information about the petitioner's conviction when making its determination); Edge v. Hammock, 80 A.D.2d 953, 954, 438 N.Y.S.2d 38, 39 (3d Dept. 1981) (reversing Parole Board's determination of minimum period of imprisonment and ordering a new hearing because the Parole Board based its determination on crimes the petitioner had not been convicted of).

97. Silmon v. Travis, 95 N.Y.2d 470, 476, 741 N.E.2d 501, 504 (2000) (explaining when judges may intervene in decisions made by parole commissions); see also Monroe v. Thigpen, 932 F.2d 1437, 1442 (11th Cir. 1991) (noting that “[a] parole board may not engage in ‘flagrant or unauthorized action’ by knowingly relying on false information”); Russo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 50 N.Y.2d 69, 77, 405 N.E.2d 225, 229, 427 N.Y.S.2d 982, 986 (1980) (rejecting assertion that parole board acted arbitrarily in setting minimum period of imprisonment at maximum sentence).

98. King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 1278, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954, 955 (1994) (requiring a new hearing before a different panel after finding prisoner was not given a proper parole hearing because “one of the Commissioners considered factors outside the scope of the applicable statute”).

99. See King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 1278, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954, 955 (1994).

100. Quartararo v. Russi, No. 45734/92, 1994 WL 16858139 at *20 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 31, 1994). In Quartararo v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 224 A.D.2d 266, 637 N.Y.S.2d 721 (1st Dept. 1996), the court held that the Parole Board “improperly considered factors outside the scope of Executive Law § 259-i and in violation of a prior court order” and ordered a new hearing in front of a different panel. The court held that it was improper for the Parole Board to consider press accounts of the petitioner's crime, unchallenged ex parte allegations for removal from a work release program, and photographs of the victim in reviewing the petitioner's application for parole. Quartararo v. Russi, No. 45734/92, 1994 WL 16858139 at *25 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 31, 1994) (unpublished).

101. People ex rel. Smith v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 91 Misc. 2d 486, 487, 398 N.Y.S.2d 12, 12 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1976) (holding that petitioner's parole status be reinstated because the Parole Board does not have “the duty of determining what would be the best kind of treatment for petitioner's emotional and physical problems”).

102. E.g., Standley v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 34 A.D.3d 1169, 1170, 825 N.Y.S.2d 568, 569 (3d Dept. 2006) (reversing denial of parole because the Parole Board “repeatedly failed to consider sentencing minutes and recommendations of the sentencing court” and remanding for a reconsideration that includes these factors); McLaurin v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 27 A.D.3d 565, 565, 812 N.Y.S.2d 122, 123 (2d Dept. 2006) (affirming decision ordering Division of Parole to obtain prisoner's resentencing minutes and have a new hearing); Edwards v. Travis, 304 A.D.2d 576, 576, 758 N.Y.S.2d 121, 122 (2d Dept. 2003) (Parole Division's failure to consider sentencing judge's recommendation warranted judicial intervention). But see Porter v. Alexander, 63 A.D.3d 945, 947, 881 N.Y.S.2d 157, 159 (2d Dept. 2009) (holding that although the sentencing court's minutes were missing from the court file, this did not require a new hearing because there was no indication that the sentencing court made a positive recommendation regarding parole).

since the Parole Board may deny parole where “it is incompatible with the welfare of society.”¹⁰³ Thus, the Parole Board may consider additional factors (such as lack of remorse or insight and acceptance of responsibility) to determine whether your release is compatible with the welfare of society.

9. Rescission (Reconsideration of Grant of Parole)

Even if your parole release interview goes well and you receive a parole release date, the Parole Board may be able to reconsider and change its decision before your release date. The New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision has established procedures for reconsideration of parole.¹⁰⁴

The senior parole officer, or the parole officer in charge of a facility, may temporarily suspend a release date if he realizes that there may be a basis for Board reconsideration.¹⁰⁵ There are two general categories of events that might cause temporary suspension. The first is the discovery of “significant information which existed” or “significant misbehavior which occurred” before the parole release decision that was not known by the Board.¹⁰⁶ The second is an event that occurred after the Board’s decision to grant release.¹⁰⁷ The basis for Board reconsideration may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following circumstances:

- (1) Significant misbehavior or a major violation of facility rules,
- (2) An escape or removal from temporary release,
- (3) A prisoner’s commitment to a psychiatric treatment center,
- (4) Imposition of an additional definite sentence,
- (5) Imposition of an additional indeterminate sentence, and
- (6) Any major changes to the sixteen factors listed in Part F(3) of this Chapter.¹⁰⁸

This list is not exclusive. For example, in a 2005 case, Pugh v. Parole, parole was rescinded (taken back) because the victims’ statements were not considered before granting parole. Once the victims complained, the Board considered their statements.¹⁰⁹ The parole officer should notify you in writing of the suspension “as soon as practicable,” investigate the circumstances leading to the suspension, and prepare a “rescission report” for a Board member.¹¹⁰ The Board member will then review the report and decide either to reinstate your release date or to hold a rescission hearing. A rescission hearing is a hearing held to determine if after being granted but before parole release officially occurs, parole will be taken back or not. If a rescission hearing is ordered, you will receive a copy of the rescission report and a notice of the rescission hearing at least seven days before the hearing.¹¹¹ The notice must state:

- (1) The date and place of the hearing;
- (2) The specific allegations that will be considered at the hearing; and
- (3) A description of your rights at the final hearing, like your right to counsel, to testify, to present witnesses and introduce evidence, and to cross-examine most of the government’s witnesses.¹¹²

103. Silmon v. Travis, 95 N.Y.2d 470, 477–478, 741 N.E.2d 501, 505–506, 718 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708–709 (2000) (holding that a decision by the Parole Board to deny parole for a prisoner who pleaded guilty to murdering his wife but denied culpability was not arbitrary or capricious).

104. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5 (2020).

105. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(1) (2020).

106. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(i) (2020).

107. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(ii) (2020).

108. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(ii)(a)–(7) (2020).

109. Pugh v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 19 A.D.3d 991, 993, 798 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that victim impact statements, which had not been available before, were substantial enough evidence to justify rescinding petitioner’s parole).

110. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(3) (2020).

111. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5) (2020).

112. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(i)–(iii) (2020).

There is no specific time limit, but the rescission hearing must be scheduled to take place within a “reasonable time after the board orders a hearing.”¹¹³ You have the right to be represented by a lawyer at a rescission hearing, but there is no requirement that a lawyer be appointed to you.¹¹⁴ You have the right “to appear and speak on [your] own behalf; to present witnesses and introduce documentary evidence; and to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses.”¹¹⁵ But you cannot force witnesses to appear if the members of the Board of Parole conducting the hearing find good cause in the record for a witness not to appear.¹¹⁶

A majority of the Board members at the hearing (that is, at least two of the three members) must find there is substantial evidence presented at the hearing to support a decision to rescind parole.¹¹⁷ In general, if there was enough evidence to find you guilty of a violation of facility rules at the Superintendent’s Hearing, there is probably enough evidence to uphold parole rescission.¹¹⁸ The Parole Board will then rescind the release date. The Board will then set a new date for release consideration for not more than twenty-four months from the date of the original release interview, or it will set a new release date.¹¹⁹ If the majority of the Parole Board does not believe that there is enough evidence to support taking back parole, it will cancel the temporary suspension and restore the original release date. If that date has passed, the Board will set a new one for as soon as practicable.¹²⁰ The appeal process for rescission is the same as the process for appealing parole denial.¹²¹

It is not clear whether the rescission of parole creates a protected “liberty interest” that invokes due process protection.¹²² The Supreme Court held in Jago v. Van Curen that an incarcerated person whose parole date was revoked before his release did not have a liberty interest requiring due process protection.¹²³ The Court made this decision even though the incarcerated person did not receive notice or a hearing about the rescission of his parole. In Lanier v. Fair,¹²⁴ the First Circuit noted that Van Curen involved a state law that gave the Parole Board complete power in determining its parole policies. Thus, in that particular case, the law did not create a liberty interest. But other courts have found that you have a liberty interest when your parole is rescinded, and that you deserve due process protection in those cases.¹²⁵ For example, when a state law uses language that requires the consideration of parole, some courts have found that this language creates an “expectation of parole”. Exceptions of parole constitute a liberty interest protected by the U.S. Constitution.¹²⁶ Also, some

113. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(c)(1) (2020).

114. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(iii)(a) (2020).

115. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(iii)(b)–(c) (2020).

116. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(iii)(c) (2020).

117. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(1) (2020).

118. Brooks v. Travis, 19 A.D.3d 901, 901–902, 797 N.Y.S.2d 183, 184 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that petitioner’s guilty plea to an offense in a misbehavior report was enough evidence to show a significant misbehavior for the purpose of rescinding parole).

119. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(1)(i)–(ii) (2020).

120. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(2) (2020).

121. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1 (2020).

122. For a discussion of due process and “liberty interest,” see Parts B and C of Chapter 18 of the JLM.

123. Jago v. Van Curen, 454 U.S. 14, 17, 102 S. Ct. 31, 34, 70 L. Ed. 2d 13, 17 (1981).

124. Lanier v. Fair, 876 F.2d 243, 251 (1st Cir. 1989).

125. See, e.g., Watson v. DiSabato, 933 F. Supp. 390, 392 (D.N.J. 1996) (holding that New Jersey’s parole statute creates a sufficient expectation of parole eligibility to give rise to a liberty interest); Harper v. Young, 64 F.3d 563, 564–565 (10th Cir. 1995) (“[P]rogram participation is sufficiently similar to parole or probation to merit protection by the Due Process Clause itself.”).

126. See, e.g., Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1040 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that there is a state-created limited protected liberty interest in New York parole proceedings, extending as far as a prisoner’s rights to be heard and to know reasons for parole denial); Wilson v. Kelkhoff, 86 F.3d 1438, 1446 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that Illinois’s parole statute provides for protectable liberty interest in release for most prisoners). But see Allison v. Kyle, 66 F.3d 71, 73–74 (5th Cir. 1995) (holding that Texas’ parole statute does not create a liberty interest in parole that is entitled to due process protection); Hamm v. Latessa, 72 F.3d 947, 955 (1st Cir. 1995) (finding no state-created liberty interest in parole for a parole proceeding governed by Massachusetts state law).

courts have decided that when a parole board narrows its rescission authority in its own regulations, it creates a liberty interest that requires due process protection.¹²⁷ Therefore, it is possible that since the New York State DOCCS has established a process for the reconsideration of parole, it has also created a liberty interest in parole that deserves due process protection. This issue has not yet been brought before a court of law.

G. Release on Parole

1. Release Procedures

If you are granted parole release, the first step is to complete your parole plan and have it approved. Upon the completion and approval of your parole plan, you will be given a “Conditions of Release” form to sign, and will have to report to a parole officer.¹²⁸ If you are approved for parole release prior to having an approved employment and residence program, you will be placed on “open date” status. This means that the Board will determine your release date when they receive your approved supervision plan.¹²⁹

If you were sentenced for a felony sex offense, a violent felony or a felony drug offense, the law requires that you serve post-release supervision for a period of time after your release.¹³⁰ Post-release supervision for a felony sex offense may be up to twenty-five years. For a violent felony or a felony drug offense, post-release supervision may last up to five years, depending on the type of offense for which you were imprisoned.¹³¹ The sentencing court has the power to choose a shorter term of post-release supervision within the ranges defined by law. Their decision to do so is depends on the nature of the crime that resulted in your conviction.¹³² If your sentence requires post-release supervision, do further research at your facility’s library or online. This Section of the JLM provides only a general overview of the law and its effects.

2. Supervision of Parole

After you are placed on parole, you will remain under the supervision of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision. Supervision will end either at the end of your maximum sentence, at the end of your parole supervision (which may be granted early by the Parole Board if you have been on unrevoked community supervision for at least three consecutive years), or upon a return to prison.¹³³ Be sure you completely understand the conditions of your release. This includes any special conditions set by the parole officer or the Parole Board. The failure to follow any parole release requirement could result in a violation. Violations might result in the start of parole revocation proceedings. If you have any questions about the terms of your release or what type of activity is prohibited, ask your parole officer to explain.¹³⁴

127. See Green v. McCall, 822 F.2d 284, 287 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding that where a parole commission has limited rescission authority, parole grantees whose early release date was set but were not released had protectable liberty interest entitling them due process); Ellard v. Ala. Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 824 F.2d 937, 943–944 (11th Cir. 1987) (“In view of the statutory restrictions on the authority of the Parole Board to revoke a parole, we conclude that [parole grantee] had a constitutionally protected liberty interest.”).

128. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.2 (2020).

129. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 12–13, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

130. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

131. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.45(2), 70.45(2-a)(i) (McKinney 2009).

132. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.45(2), 70.45(2-a) (McKinney 2009).

133. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.1(a) (2020); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-j(1) (McKinney 2018).

134. See generally N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 19, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

It is very important to create a good working relationship with your parole officer. Your parole officer will be responsible for deciding whether you are able to serve the remainder of your sentence outside of prison. In addition, your parole officer can serve as an important resource to help you in many ways. For example, your parole officer may inform you of social service programs or emergency hotlines. Cooperate with your parole officer, but you should also know that the conversations you have with your parole officer are not confidential. *Statements that you make about your activities that might be considered parole violations could be deemed confessions or admissions, and these statements could be used against you in parole revocation proceedings.*¹³⁵ However, if your parole officer wrongly collects evidence, this evidence may not be used against you in a criminal prosecution. Even if the same evidence is admissible at your parole revocation hearing, it will not be allowed at your criminal proceeding.¹³⁶

There are several important conditions of release you must follow carefully. Failure to do so might result in a violation of your parole, which could result in parole revocation proceedings. The conditions of release are:

- (1) Within twenty-four hours of your release, you must report to your designated area of release immediately and file an arrival report with the office of the DOCCS;
- (2) You must not leave the state or any area defined in your “Conditions of Release” plan without permission;
- (3) You must not intentionally avoid supervision by avoiding your parole officer or avoiding the designated place of residence;
- (4) You must let your parole officer visit your home and work to inspect your property. You must immediately tell your parole officer of any change of address or change in employment status;
- (5) You must reply “promptly, fully, and truthfully” to any communication from your parole officer or a representative of the DOCCS;
- (6) You must tell your parole officer of any contact with police or any new arrest immediately. Even if the charges in the new arrest are dropped, failure to report an arrest can be a violation of your parole;
- (7) You may not associate with people who have criminal records;
- (8) You may not violate a law that has prison time as a possible penalty, and you may not threaten the safety of yourself or others;
- (9) You may not own, possess, or purchase any kind of firearm or dangerous knife without written permission from your parole officer. Other prohibited items include razors, stilettos, or imitation pistols, or any instrument that could easily cause physical injury without an acceptable explanation for having the item;
- (10) If you do leave the state of New York, you waive the right to challenge extradition to New York from another state or another country.
- (11) You may not use or possess any controlled substance or drug paraphernalia without medical authorization;
- (12) You must follow all instructions given by your parole officer; and
- (13) You will follow any special conditions set by your parole officer or a member of the DOCCS.¹³⁷

Other special conditions of parole may be set based on the nature of the underlying criminal conviction. Parole conditions may be set by a member of the Board of Parole, the DOCCS, or a parole

135. See, e.g., People ex rel. King v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 65 A.D.2d 465, 468–469, 412 N.Y.S.2d 138, 140–141 (1st Dept. 1979) (holding that admission to parole officer of possession of heroin was admissible in a parole revocation hearing, even though evidence of heroin was suppressed in court proceeding because it had been illegally seized).

136. See, e.g., People ex rel. King v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 65 A.D.2d 465, 468, 412 N.Y.S.2d 138 (1979) (1st Dept. 1979) (“We note at this juncture that a parole revocation hearing is not a stage of a criminal prosecution, and the standards applied to the former do not carry over to the latter.”).

137. The preceding release conditions are listed in N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.2(1)–(13) (2020).

officer as long as they are made in accordance with law.¹³⁸ Furthermore, the DOCCS has special guidelines for sex offenders, which may include residency restrictions and curfews.¹³⁹ This means it may be very difficult to qualify for the conditions of parole, as you may be required to live in a place not near a school or a school bus stop. Those with a sex offense may also be prohibited from living with a minor. For a discussion of special conditions that are often imposed on parolees convicted of sex offenses, see Chapter 36 of the JLM, “Special Considerations for Sex Offenders.”

If you are having any trouble with your parole officer, contact the parole officer’s supervisor.

3. Your Rights While on Parole

Your parole officer has a fair amount of discretion in supervising you and evaluating possible parole violations. When you sign your “Conditions of Release” form, you give “advance consent” to certain parole officer conduct that might be unconstitutional in other contexts. For example, your parole officer may search you and seize property without a warrant and without probable cause. He or she may visit your home frequently to make sure you still live there.¹⁴⁰ Your parole officer may also visit your place of employment.¹⁴¹

Since you are still considered to be in the constructive custody of the state, you—unlike an ordinary citizen—may not receive full constitutional protection against violations of your rights. There has been some litigation on the extent of privacy and other rights that you keep as a parolee. From this litigation, courts have decided that any search must be knowing and voluntary, and reasonably related to the rehabilitation goal. Any search must also be performed by a parole officer in his or her duty to monitor your rehabilitation.¹⁴² Since you usually must consent to home visits from your parole officer and searches at the time of parole, a court will likely find that the knowing and voluntary requirement is met. This is likely if you state that you understand and agree to abide by all the conditions your parole.¹⁴³ Furthermore, it is unlikely that a court will find that the other two requirements have not been met unless there is no foundation for the search or it has nothing to do with you.¹⁴⁴ For example, 138. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.3 (2020); Dickman v. Trietley, 268 A.D.2d 914, 916, 702 N.Y.S.2d 449, 451 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that a parolee’s field parole officer was authorized to impose the parole condition prohibiting the parolee from residing with a woman the parolee had never met, since restriction was rational and violated no statutory requirement).

139. See, e.g., Monroe v. Travis, 280 A.D.2d 675, 675–676, 721 N.Y.S.2d 377, 378 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that Parole Division could require sex offender to secure approved housing before granting his request of conditional release); Billups v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 18 A.D.3d 1085, 1085–1086, 795 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that Parole Board’s requirement that prisoner find suitable residence as a condition of prisoner’s parole release was rational, because prisoner had a history of violent conduct and sexual offenses).

140. See N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 23, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

141. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.2(d). If you are worried that your parole officer visiting your job might be a problem, advise your parole officer about this. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2020), at 23, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

142. People v. Hale, 93 N.Y.2d 454, 464, 714 N.E.2d 861, 866, 692 N.Y.S.2d 649, 654–655 (1999) (holding that a parole officer’s search of the home of a parolee suspected of dealing drugs did not violate his constitutional rights when parolee had agreed to searches for illegal drugs as a condition of parole).

143. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8003.2(4) (2020). See also United States v. Yearly, 740 F.3d 569, 581–582 (11th Cir. 2014) (finding that an incarcerated person who understood and accepted the terms of his release, which included unwarranted searches, knowingly and voluntarily consented to such searches).

144. People v. Tony, 30 Misc. 3d 867, 874–875, 914 N.Y.S.2d 585, 592 (Sup. Ct. Bx. County 2010) (holding that where a parole officer had no reason to suspect petitioner of a parole violation and searched his residence, the firearm located at the residence during the search would not be admissible in evidence because the search was not “rationally and reasonably related” to the parole officer’s duties).

courts have held that you may be required to give blood and have your DNA kept on file in a data bank as part of a legal search.¹⁴⁵

4. Special Parole

Special parole is different from regular parole. Special parole was created especially for drug offenses. It was repealed in 1984 but still covers crimes committed before November 1, 1987.¹⁴⁶ Special parole follows a prison term and is set by the sentencing judge. Regular or traditional parole allows for release before the end of a prison term and is set by the Parole Board. However, if you violate the conditions of special parole you must serve the remainder of the special parole term in prison. After serving the remainder of your special parole term, the Parole Commission may set a new term of imprisonment. Following your imprisonment, the Parole Commission also has the right to set a term of traditional parole.¹⁴⁷ The Parole Commission may also re-set another term of special parole after revoking a term of special parole.¹⁴⁸

H. Revocation of Your Parole (Taking Away Your Parole)

1. How and Why Parole Revocation Begins

If you do not follow the terms of your parole release, you may have to return to prison to serve the rest of your sentence. In order for the Parole Board to revoke (take away) your parole, you must have violated a condition of parole “in an important respect.”¹⁴⁹ This standard, however, is often met by a direct violation of one of the explicit conditions of parole. These conditions may include not making curfew¹⁵⁰ or being in an explicitly prohibited area.¹⁵¹ Decisions by the Parole Division to revoke parole may only be reviewed by a court. A court will decide whether the Parole Board followed the proper

145. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 995-c(3) (McKinney 2020); Kellogg v. Travis, 188 Misc. 2d 164, 169, 728 N.Y.S.2d 645, 649 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2001) (holding N.Y. Exec. Law § 995-c is constitutional and withdrawal of a parolee’s blood does not constitute an illegal search and seizure, even though less invasive means of getting a DNA sample exist).

146. 21 U.S.C. § 841(c) (repealed 1984). See also, Strong v. U.S. Parole Comm’n, 141 F.3d 429, 431 (2d Cir. 1998) (“Although [21 U.S.C. § 841(c)] was repealed by the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, it still governs convictions for offenses committed before November 1, 1987”), abrogated on other grounds by Rich v. Maranville, 369 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2004).

147. United States v. Caraballo, No. 96 Civ. 6915 (KTD), 86 Cr. 336 (KTD), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 499, at *8–9 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that the Parole Commission can re-impose a term of regular parole on a prisoner who violated special parole and was imprisoned for the remaining period of his special parole).

148. Rich v. Maranville, 369 F.3d 83, 90 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that “when special parole is revoked that term is suspended and continues to exist. The Commission thus creates nothing when it re-imposes that court-created term of special parole after the revocation and incarceration”); Billis v. United States, 83 F.3d 209, 211 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding that district courts have the authority to impose a subsequent term of supervised release after revocation of an initial term of supervised release); U.S. Parole Comm’n v. Williams, 311 U.S. App. D.C. 416, 54 F.3d 820, 823 (1995) (finding that the Parole Commission may place the incarcerated person back on special parole). But see Strong v. U.S. Parole Comm’n, 141 F.3d 429, 432 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that the Parole Commission lacks the authority to impose a second term of special parole after revoking the original term); Artuso v. Hall, 74 F.3d 68, 71 (5th Cir. 1996) (finding that the Parole Commission lacked statutory authority to impose a second period of special parole after it had revoked a first special parole term); Fowler v. U.S. Parole Comm’n, 94 F.3d 835, 837 (3d Cir. 1996) (finding that only traditional parole, not special parole, could be granted after special parole had been revoked).

149. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2018); People ex rel. Korn v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 439, 440, 710 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 2000) (stating that a violation of a “substantial condition” of parole is sufficient to have parole revoked and that a curfew violation meets this standard).

150. See People ex rel. Korn v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 439, 440, 710 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 2000) (holding that a prisoner violated a “substantial condition” of his parole by missing his curfew without adequately explaining this violation, and this was a reasonable ground to support revoking prisoner’s parole).

151. Bellamy v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 871, 872, 711 N.Y.S.2d 596, 597 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that revocation of parole was justified where parolee was found on a street that he was twice told not to enter as a special condition of his parole).

procedural rules. The court cannot decide about the truthfulness of your reasons for violating parole.¹⁵² Courts usually uphold the Parole Commission's decisions. If your parole officer has "reasonable cause to believe that [you have] lapsed into criminal ways, company, or [have] violated one or more of the conditions of [your] release in an important respect,"¹⁵³ he or she may report such conduct to a member of the Parole Board or a designated officer. That individual may then secure a warrant for retaking and temporary detention.¹⁵⁴ A parole violation is called a "delinquency." If it is later proven that you violated your parole, your parole will be revoked from the date of this delinquency.¹⁵⁵ So it is important to know exactly when you allegedly violated your parole because if your parole is revoked, you must serve the prison time dating back to the delinquency date. You will, however, be credited for time spent on parole prior to the delinquency date.¹⁵⁶ If your parole is being revoked, you may contact the Legal Aid Society's Parole Revocation Defense Unit at 199 Water Street, 5th Floor, New York, NY 10038 (phone (212) 577-3300).

If you are being held on a parole warrant, you may not receive bail or release until the parole warrant is lifted.¹⁵⁷ If you are being detained on other charges (which may serve later as the basis for parole revocation), and bail is set on those charges, you cannot be released while the parole warrant is pending.

In Morrissey v. Brewer, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a paroled convict has a liberty interest protected by due process. This means that the revocation of parole release and re-incarceration must be decided under due process.¹⁵⁸ New York State's parole law provides for two due process hearings: preliminary and final. Within three days of the issuance of a warrant for your retaking, you must receive written notice of what conditions you have violated. The notice must also inform you of the date and location of the preliminary parole revocation hearing.¹⁵⁹ The notice shall be given within three days after the execution of a warrant for retaking and temporary detention. It cannot be given less than forty-eight hours before to the preliminary hearing.¹⁶⁰ If you are out of state, you should be given written notice of the time, place, and purpose of the hearing within five days of the issuance of the warrant for your retaking.¹⁶¹

2. Preliminary Hearing

The purpose of the preliminary hearing is to decide whether there is "probable cause" that you violated one or more of the conditions of your parole release.¹⁶² The Parole Board needs to show

152. People ex rel. Bayham v. Meloni, 182 Misc. 2d 831, 832, 700 N.Y.S.2d 649, 650 (County Ct. Monroe County 1999) (quoting Zientek v. Herbert, 606 N.Y.S.2d 479, 480, 199 A.D. 2d 1075, 1076 (4th Dept. 1993)) ("A court, when reviewing a determination by the Parole Board to revoke parole, may only 'examine the record to determine if the required procedural rules were followed and if there is any evidence which, if believed, would support the Parole Board's determination, but the court may not make its own determinations based on its assessment of the credibility of the witnesses.'").

153. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8004.2(a) (2020).

154. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8004.2(c) (2020) ("Reasonable cause exists when evidence or information which appears reliable discloses facts or circumstances that would convince a person of ordinary intelligence, judgment and experience that it is reasonably likely that a releasee has committed the acts in question or has lapsed into criminal ways or company. Such apparently reliable evidence may include hearsay.").

155. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(3)(a)–(b) (McKinney 2009).

156. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(3)(c) (McKinney 2009).

157. See, e.g., People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 33–34, 300 N.E.2d 716, 720, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 184 (1973) (holding right to bail is statutory, and without statutory direction, prisoners are not entitled to either bail or release pending hearing before the Parole Board).

158. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 482, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2601, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 495 (1972) (discussing the nature of a parolee's liberty interest and finding that due process is required).

159. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3 (2020).

160. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(a) (2020).

161. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(a) (2020).

162. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(c)(iv) (McKinney 2018). "Probable cause" means a reasonable ground to believe that a person has committed, is committing a crime, or that a place is connected with a crime. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

evidence of your alleged violation.¹⁶³ The hearing must be held within fifteen days of the issuance of the warrant of retaking. It also must be conducted by a hearing officer who has not had any prior supervisory involvement over you.¹⁶⁴

At the preliminary hearing, you are entitled to the following rights:

- (1) To speak on your own behalf or to have a lawyer represent you;¹⁶⁵
- (2) To introduce letters and documents;¹⁶⁶
- (3) To present witnesses who may provide relevant information in support of your case;¹⁶⁷ and
- (4) To confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you, unless the hearing officer finds good cause for their non-attendance.¹⁶⁸

The rules state that you may be represented by counsel at your preliminary hearing, but it is important to note that you do not have an absolute right to be represented by counsel. You also do not have an absolute right to have an attorney appointed if you cannot afford to hire one.¹⁶⁹ If you believe that you need the assistance of counsel at the preliminary hearing, try to get an attorney through the county or supreme court in the district where you are being held. You may also seek an attorney through the Legal Aid Society if you are in New York City. Unless you have a very complicated case, it may be hard to get an attorney assigned at this stage. You do not have to testify at this hearing or at the final hearing. You also do not have to make a statement to your parole officer while he or she is preparing the Parole Violation Report. Any statement you do make may be used as evidence at the final hearing.¹⁷⁰

An important difference between the preliminary hearing and the final hearing is that not all of the charges need to be heard at the preliminary hearing. If the hearing officer decides that probable cause exists after hearing one or more of the charges, the judge may decide that there is enough probable cause to end the preliminary hearing. The judge may then take appropriate action to make a final decision regarding the alleged violation.¹⁷¹ Probable cause means that there are reasonable grounds for the judge to believe that a parole violation occurred. If there is proof of conviction for a crime that was committed after release on parole (for example, a certificate of conviction), the judge will consider that enough to show probable cause.¹⁷² Unlike the final hearing, there is no opportunity

163. This means the Parole Board must create a sufficient case of a violation, which you have to explain or prove wrong. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(c)(v) (McKinney 2018).

164. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(i) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.4(a) (2020).

165. The attorney must file a notice of appearance. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(1) (2020); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.5(a)–(b)(2020).

166. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(2) (2020).

167. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(3) (2020).

168. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(4) (2020). You may force witnesses against you to attend the hearing through subpoenas, unless you have been convicted of a new crime while under parole supervision, or the hearing officer finds good cause for the witnesses' non-attendance. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(4). If you are proceeding pro se (without an attorney) at this stage, you may apply to the hearing officer or Board member presiding at the hearing for the subpoenas. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2302(a) (McKinney 2010). You may also apply to the local supreme court for subpoenas for necessary witnesses or documents. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2302(b) (McKinney 2010).

169. See, e.g., People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 32, 300 N.E.2d 716, 719, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 182–183 (1973) (noting that the New York State and Federal Constitutions confer only a conditional or discretionary right to counsel at a preliminary parole revocation hearing).

170. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8004.3(c) (2020); see, e.g., People ex rel. King v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 65 A.D.2d 465, 468–469, 412 N.Y.S.2d 138, 140–141 (1st Dept. 1979) (holding that admission to parole officer of possession of heroin was admissible in a parole revocation hearing, even though evidence of heroin was suppressed in court proceeding because it had been illegally seized).

171. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(viii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(d) (McKinney 2018).

172. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.2(c)–(d) (2020).

at the preliminary hearing to present evidence of mitigating factors or suggestions for alternatives to incarceration.

3. Final Hearing

The preliminary hearing is like an arraignment (if you have not yet gone to trial) where the court will decide if there is probable cause to continue to hold you for a suspected parole violation. The final hearing is like a trial to decide whether you violated parole. Thus, if the hearing officer finds probable cause at the preliminary hearing (or if you have waived the preliminary hearing), a member of the Parole Board will review your case and decide whether to declare you delinquent.¹⁷³ Depending on the decision of the Board member, a final hearing will be set or you will be returned to supervision. If you are declared delinquent, a final hearing will be less no more than ninety days after the probable cause determination.¹⁷⁴ The final hearing date may only be set for a later date if you request and are granted an adjournment (delay). A final hearing may also be set for a later date if you agree to a postponement of the hearing.¹⁷⁵

Both you and your attorney can receive written notice of the date, time, and place of the hearing at least fourteen days before the hearing.¹⁷⁶ But if the hearing is adjourned or delayed for some reason, there is no additional fourteen-day notice requirement.¹⁷⁷ If the Parole Board does not obey the statutory time requirements, your parole violation warrant will be removed. In addition, your parole status will be restored.¹⁷⁸ Notice of final revocation proceedings will tell you the rights that you have at the hearing.

In a revocation hearing you have the following rights:

- (1) To have a lawyer represent you (if you have pending criminal charges, the attorney representing you in the criminal case is allowed to also represent you at your revocation hearing. If not, a different attorney will be assigned to you);¹⁷⁹
- (2) To appear and speak on your own behalf;
- (3) To confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you, unless the presiding officer finds good cause for the witnesses not to attend;
- (4) To present witnesses and documents in defense of the charges against you;
- (5) To present witnesses and documents about whether placing you back in prison is the appropriate action;¹⁸⁰ and

173. Waived means to voluntarily give up a claim or right. In this case, it would be to voluntarily give up your right to a preliminary hearing.

174. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(i) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.17(a) (2020).

175. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(i) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.17(c) (2020).

176. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(iii) (McKinney 2014); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9 § 8005.17(b) (2020).

177. See, e.g., People ex rel. Wentsley v. Hammock, 89 A.D.2d 1058, 1058, 454 N.Y.S.2d 761, 762 (4th Dept. 1982) (holding that “[t]here is no requirement that an additional 14 days’ notice be given for a rescheduled or adjourned final parole revocation hearing.”).

178. See, e.g., People ex rel. Levy v. Dalsheim, 66 A.D.2d 827, 828, 411 N.Y.S.2d 343, 344 (2d Dept. 1978), aff’d, 48 N.Y.2d 1019, 402 N.E.2d 141, 425 N.Y.S.2d 802 (1980) (“[The] statute . . . makes clear that a delay beyond 90 days after the probable cause determination is unreasonable per se.”).

179. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.16(a) (2020). See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 482, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2601, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972) (holding a paroled convict has a liberty interest that falls under the 14th Amendment, and its termination requires some due process). See Chapter 4 of the JLM for information on how to find a lawyer, and Appendix IV for information on how to contact the Legal Aid Society.

180. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.18(b)(1)–(4) (2020).

- (6) To present mitigating evidence relevant to the restoration of parole.¹⁸¹ That is, you can present evidence that might justify or excuse the conduct that is alleged to be a parole violation.

Your rights at the revocation proceeding are almost the same as those in the preliminary hearing. The only exceptions are your right to an attorney and your right to present mitigating factors. The standard for revoking parole at the final hearing is a decision made by a “preponderance of the evidence” (meaning that it is more likely than not) that you violated one or more conditions of release in an important respect.¹⁸²

If you have pending criminal charges, the conduct that resulted in those charges can be considered by the Parole Board when deciding whether you violated your parole. If the parole revocation hearing takes place after any criminal case against you has gone to trial, several rules may apply. For example, if you were convicted or acquitted of those charges by any defense other than an affirmative defense, the Parole Board can consider the conduct underlying the charges.¹⁸³ Affirmative defenses are those explanations that you presented at trial that lessened or defeated the legal consequences of your trial. Examples of these defenses are insanity or self-defense. If you were acquitted through an affirmative defense, then the Parole Board probably cannot consider those charges in its parole revocation decision.¹⁸⁴ Courts have held that there is no denial of due process if the Board refuses to delay the final revocation hearing until after the pending criminal case is handled.¹⁸⁵ This is the case even if there is a lower standard of proof in parole revocation decisions

181. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(vi) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.18(b)(5) (2020)..

182. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(viii) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8005.19(e) (2020). “Preponderance of the evidence” is a legal standard meaning “more likely than not.” It is a lesser standard than “beyond a reasonable doubt,” the legal standard for conviction of a crime.

183. See, e.g., People ex rel. Froats v. Hammock, 83 A.D.2d 745, 745, 443 N.Y.S.2d 500, 501 (4th Dept. 1981) (holding that acquittal of criminal charges does not bar subsequent parole revocation based on underlying charges). As noted, an affirmative defense is an explanation that you provide as evidence to support that mitigates (lessens) or defeats the legal consequences that result from your trial. Examples of affirmative defenses include insanity, self-defense, and statute of limitations (most criminal prosecutions must be brought within a certain number of years after the crime was committed, and, if the prosecutor charges you after that time period, you would have the statute of limitations as a defense).

184. The Parole Board is prevented from considering the criminal charges in affirmative defense cases because of the doctrine of collateral estoppel, which means that issues brought before a court and decided in one case cannot be re-litigated by the same parties in another case. See People ex rel. Matthews by Greenberg v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 58 N.Y.2d 196, 201–203, 447 N.E.2d 689, 691–692, 460 N.Y.S.2d 746, 748–749 (1983) (explaining that while underlying conduct from a new criminal trial can be considered for revocation purposes even with an acquittal, collateral estoppel principles mean it cannot be considered when the acquittal is based on an affirmative defense). Whether the Board can use evidence that has been suppressed in a criminal proceeding against you in a parole revocation hearing is unsettled (that is, not certain). In People ex rel. Piccarillo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, the Court held that evidence that could not be used in a criminal trial because it resulted from an illegal search or seizure also could not be used in a parole revocation hearing. People ex rel. Piccarillo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 48 N.Y.2d 76, 83, 397 N.E.2d 354, 358, 421 N.Y.S.2d 842, 846 (1979) (stating that the exclusionary rule applies to parole revocation hearings). However, Pa. Bd. of Probation v. Scott reached the opposite conclusion, holding that the federal exclusionary rule does not apply to parole proceedings. Pa. Bd. of Probation v. Scott, 524 U.S. 357, 364, 118 S. Ct. 2014, 2020, 141 L. Ed. 2d 344, 352 (1998). Some New York courts have interpreted Scott as overruling Piccarillo, while others have refused to do so. See People ex rel. Gordon v. O’Flynn, 3 Misc. 3d 963, 965, 775 N.Y.S.2d 507, 509 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 2004) (holding that Scott overruled Piccarillo and that the federal exclusionary rule does not apply to parole proceedings); but see State ex rel. Thompson v. Harder, 8 Misc. 3d 764, 766 n.2, 799 N.Y.S.2d 353, 355 n.2 (Sup. Ct. Broome County 2005) (holding that the court will continue to apply the exclusionary rule to parole proceedings).

185. See, e.g., People ex rel. Matthews v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 58 N.Y.2d 196, 201, 447 N.E.2d 689, 460 N.Y.S.2d 746 (1983) (holding that refusal to adjourn a revocation hearing until criminal charges were tried did not constitute a violation of due process). The Board only needs to find it is more likely than not that you violated your parole; you can only be convicted of the crime if the court finds beyond a reasonable doubt that you committed the unlawful act.

Thus, the Parole Board can find that you violated your parole even if you are not later convicted of the criminal charges.

I. Appeals

You may appeal the revocation of your parole by filing a “Notice of Appeal” within thirty days of the date of the written notice of the Parole Board’s decision.¹⁸⁶ It is important to file your appeal within thirty days of the Board’s decision. If you do not, you will waive, or give up your right to appeal the decision.¹⁸⁷ You may be represented by an attorney during your appeal.¹⁸⁸ Within four months of the date that the notice of appeal was filed, you or your attorney must file the original and two copies of the appeal letter or brief with the Appeals Unit in Albany.¹⁸⁹ Your appeal letter or brief must state the rulings that you are challenging and explain the basis for your appeal.¹⁹⁰ The appeal must be based on the written record. You may get an extension “for good cause” if you request one in writing within the four months after the notice of appeal.¹⁹¹

Among the questions that may be raised on appeal are:

- (1) Whether the proceeding and/or decision was in violation of lawful procedure, was affected by an error of law, was arbitrary and capricious, or was otherwise unlawful;
- (2) Whether the Board member or members making the decision relied on erroneous information as shown in the record of the proceeding, or relevant information was not made available for consideration;
- (3) Whether the determination made was excessive;¹⁹² and
- (4) Whether the decision was supported by a preponderance of the evidence.¹⁹³

In a revocation appeal, you cannot raise an allegation for newly discovered evidence. Such an issue must be raised in an application to the Board for a rehearing.¹⁹⁴ You should prepare for your appeal by first obtaining the minutes of the parole release hearing. You can get these minutes from the New York State Division of Parole at 1220 Washington Avenue, Building 2, Albany, NY 12226-2050.¹⁹⁵ Because the minutes can be expensive to acquire, an attorney may obtain them for you. You also may make a written request for “[a]ll other non-confidential, discoverable documents relating to the appeal.”¹⁹⁶ So, if you believe there is important information in your parole case record that support your appeal, you may ask for permission to access it. However, you will not receive unlimited access.¹⁹⁷

186. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(b) (2020).

187. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(b) (2020).

188. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(4)(b) (McKinney 2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.2(d) (2020). If an attorney entered a notice of appearance, the Parole Board appeals unit will not act on any correspondence from a prisoner until receiving notice that the attorney is relieved. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.2(e) (2020). A notice of appearance is a document that tells the Parole Board that an attorney will appear on your behalf. Thus, this regulation means that if you have an attorney and the attorney enters a notice of appearance, the Parole Board will not answer mail, calls, or other communication from you unless you decide to not have that attorney represent you and you notify the Parole Board of your decision to relieve the attorney. The Parole Board will only answer contact from your attorney unless you notify them that you are no longer using that attorney.

189. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2020).

190. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2020).

191. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2020).

192. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.3(a)(1)–(3) (2020).

193. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.3(b)(1) (2020). This subsection also notes that “evidentiary or procedural challenges will be considered only if a timely objection was made at the hearing.” N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.3(b) (2020). This means that raising an objection about something like the evidence not meeting the preponderance standard is only allowed if you object on that ground at the revocation hearing itself.

194. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.3(c) (2020).

195. See N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(6)(a) (McKinney 2018) (“The board shall provide for the making of a verbatim record of each parole release interview ... and each preliminary and final revocation hearing. . .”).

196. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.1(e) (2020).

197. Restrictions to access parole records are set forth in this Chapter in Part F(7), “Appealing Denial of Parole Release.” See also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8000.5 (2020).

The appeal will be decided by three members of the Parole Board. None of these members will have participated in the decision that you are appealing.¹⁹⁸ The Board will send its written decision, including its findings of fact and law, to you or your attorney.¹⁹⁹

If your appeal is unsuccessful, you have several other options. After you have tried all possible administrative remedies with no success, you can file an Article 78 petition in New York state court.²⁰⁰ You only have four months from the date the appeal decision is mailed to you to file a petition in state court.²⁰¹ If you do not file the petition within this time, the court will not hear your case.²⁰² If you are being held only on parole violation charges, and you seek to challenge the legality of your detention, you may file a petition for habeas corpus in the state supreme court.²⁰³ See Chapters 21 and 22 of the JLM for more information on New York State habeas corpus and Article 78 petitions.

J. Parole Violator Reappearances

If your parole is revoked and you have been returned to prison, you will be eligible for release on the date your time assessment expires.²⁰⁴ A time assessment is the period of re-imprisonment set by the Parole Board after a final revocation hearing. The Parole Board may also determine that an interview is necessary before release. However, an interview is only necessary if an incarcerated person:

- (1) Has committed a violation of facility rules;
- (2) Has shown a significant change in his mental or emotional condition (such as being transferred to a psychiatric ward or placed on suicide watch);
- (3) Has been arrested or convicted of a new felony after the final parole revocation hearing; or
- (4) Is not fit for release based on other information (such as information about self-destructive or threatening behavior).²⁰⁵

K. Release from Parole Supervision

After your original maximum sentence expires, and you have served your time on parole supervision without interruption, you will be released from parole. The parole statute also allows for discharge from parole only after you have served at least five years of post-release supervision. This statute also requires that you must have served three consecutive years of unrevoked parole.²⁰⁶ You should talk to your parole officer if you believe you might be eligible for a three-year discharge. He or she may apply to the Parole Board for you. The Board will not accept requests for early discharge from a parolee.²⁰⁷

If you have a felony conviction, you may have lost certain rights or privileges. This includes the right to vote, the ability to obtain a driver's license, and the opportunity to be employed in a bank or an establishment that serves liquor. It also includes the ability to get a job, and other rights important to your life.²⁰⁸ You can regain those rights after you serve your parole term. However, you may be able

198. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.4(d) (2020).

199. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.4(a)(2) (2020).

200. See Chapters 5 and 22 of the JLM for information on Article 78 proceedings.

201. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 217(1) (McKinney 2019).

202. See Carter v. State, 95 N.Y.2d 267, 272, 739 N.E.2d 730, 733, 716 N.Y.S. 2d 364, 367 (2000) (dismissing a claim by a prisoner who brought an Article 78 claim six months after the decision was mailed to him as untimely because the claim violated the statute of limitations).

203. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7001–7012 (2013). See Chapter 13 and Chapter 21 of the JLM for a more detailed discussion of federal and New York state habeas corpus.

204. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.6(a)–(b) (2020). The Parole Board makes the time assessment after the revocation hearing, and it begins running from the date the parole violation warrant was lodged.

205. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8002.6(c) (2020).

206. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-j(3)(a) (McKinney 2018).

207. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8007.1 (2020).

208. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook, Questions and to gain back the rights you have lost by applying for a certificate. If you only have one felony conviction, apply for a “Certificate of Relief from Disabilities” before or after your parole supervision ends.²⁰⁹ If you have more than one felony conviction, but you have completed parole and have shown five years of good conduct in the community, you should apply for a “Certificate of Good Conduct.”²¹⁰ If you have not yet completed your sentence, applications for Certificates of Relief are submitted by parole officers to the Board of Parole. If you have completed your sentence, apply directly to the Executive Clemency Bureau of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision.

If you are harassed or discriminated against for being an ex-offender after your release from parole, you can seek help. You may contact the Fortune Society at 29-76 Northern Boulevard, Long Island City, NY 11101, or by phone at (phone (212) 691-7554).²¹¹ You may also contact the Legal Action Center at 225 Varick Street, New York, NY 10014, or by phone at (212) 243-1313. The Legal Action Center can also be contacted toll free at (800) 223-4044.²¹² These agencies help ex-offenders with their reentry into society. The New York Public Library publishes a practical handbook for pre-release and recently released incarcerated people called Corrections III. It gives information and addresses on topics including jobs, education, housing, finances, health, counseling, addiction, women’s issues, homosexuality, and disability issues. Corrections III is free for New York State residents and incarcerated people. You can get Corrections III from Institutional Library Services, The New York Public Library, 455 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10016, or at (212) 340-0863.

L. Parole in California

If you are given a life sentence in California, you must serve at least seven years before you may be eligible for parole.²¹³ However, if you were sentenced under a law that has a minimum period of incarceration for a life sentence, you will not be eligible for parole release until you have served that minimum period.²¹⁴

One year prior to your minimum eligible parole release date, a panel of at least two Commissioners or Deputy Commissioners of the Board of Prison Terms will meet with you to set a parole release date. The Board considers aggravating and mitigating circumstances in its decision of your parole release date. Aggravating circumstances are those that might make the Board view your crime more harshly. For example, if your crime affected a large number of people that is an aggravating circumstance. Mitigating circumstances are those that might make the Board view your crime less harshly. For example, having no prior criminal record is a mitigating circumstance. The Board may choose not to set a parole release date if it finds that the seriousness of the offense presents a danger to public safety. The Board may also choose not to set a parole date if any past offenses are those where the interests of public safety require you to remain in prison longer.²¹⁵

Answers Concerning Release and Community Supervision (2019), at 33–35, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 9, 2020).

209. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook, Questions and Answers Concerning Release and Community Supervision (2019), at 33, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 9, 2020).

210. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. & Cmty. Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook, Questions and Answers Concerning Release and Community Supervision (2019), at 34, available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Mar. 9, 2020).

211. More information about Fortune Society can be located online, available at <http://fortunesociety.org/> (last visited Mar. 9, 2020).

212. More information about Legal Action Center can be located online, available at <http://www.lac.org/> (last visited Mar. 9, 2020).

213. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3046(a)(1) (West 2018).

214. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3046 (West 2018).

215. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041 (West 2018).

At the parole hearing, you may present evidence and speak on your own behalf. Only incarcerated people serving life sentences may have a lawyer at parole hearings.²¹⁶ In addition, victims have the right to make statements at parole hearings. These statements include “comments . . . to the effect of the enumerated crimes on the victim . . . and the suitability of the prisoner for parole.”²¹⁷

If you are granted parole, you will be notified of the parole release date within ten days after the hearing. You will also be notified of the conditions that you must meet to be released by that date, and the consequences if you do not meet those conditions.²¹⁸ A decision that you are fit for parole will become final within 120 days after the date of the hearing. During this time, the Parole Board may review the panel's decision. The Parole Board may reject the panel's decision and order a new hearing by majority vote. The Parole Board's decision to reject must be based on an error of the law, an error of facts, or new information that is presented to the Board.²¹⁹

If the Board decides not to set a parole date, you will be notified within twenty days.²²⁰ The Board will send you a written statement explaining why a parole date was not set. In addition, it will recommend activities that you may participate in to improve your chances of receiving a parole date at a future hearing.²²¹ The Board will usually rehear cases every fifteen years after it has declined to set a parole date but the Board has the power to rehear cases sooner. For example, the Board can rehear the case after only three or five years. The Board may choose to rehear the case sooner if it finds by clear and convincing evidence that consideration of the public and victim's safety does not require a longer period of incarceration.²²²

If you have been convicted of a violent felony in California, the state Department of Corrections will notify law enforcement agencies and the state attorney in the county that you were convicted of your scheduled release on parole. The Department of Corrections will also notify the county where you are scheduled to be released.²²³ The victim may also be notified of your release.²²⁴ If you have not been convicted of a violent felony, notice of your release on parole will be given only if the county of release requests it.²²⁵

You will usually be returned to the county of your last legal residence, but the Parole Board may send you to another county if that is found to be in the public interest. In making this decision, the Parole Board will consider:

- (1) The need to protect the life or safety of a victim, you (the parolee), a witness, or any other person;
- (2) Public concern that would decrease the chance that your parole would be successfully completed;
- (3) The verified existence of a work offer, or an educational or vocational training program;
- (4) The existence of family in another county with whom you have maintained strong ties and whose support would increase the chance of successful completion of your parole; and
- (5) The lack of necessary outpatient treatment programs for parolees receiving substance abuse treatment pursuant to Section 2960.²²⁶

If you were convicted of a violent felony, you may not go within thirty-five miles of the actual residence of the victim or a witness to the crime during your parole. This is the rule if the victim or

216. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041.7 (West 2018).

217. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3043(b) (West 2018).

218. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041.5(b)(1) (West 2018).

219. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041(b) (West 2018).

220. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041.5(b)(2) (West 2018).

221. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041.5(b)(2) (West 2018).

222. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3041.5(b)(3) (West 2018).

223. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3058.6(a) (West 2011).

224. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3058.8(a) (West 2011); CAL. PENAL CODE § 679.03(a) (West 2010).

225. CAL. PENAL CODE §§ 3058.5, 3058.6, 3058.8(a) (West 2011).

226. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3003(a)–(b) (West 2011). Section 2960 is referring to prisoners who have a severe but treatable mental health disorder that was one of the causes of, or was an aggravating factor in, the commission of the crime for which they were incarcerated. CAL. PENAL CODE § 2960 (West 2011).

witness has requested additional distance. You may also not go to a location within thirty-five miles of their actual residence if the Board of Parole Hearings or the Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation finds a need to protect the victim or witness.²²⁷

If you violate your parole and there is a long delay between your parole revocation hearing and your placement back in prison, you may request to be restored to parole status. To do so, you must establish that you were prejudiced by the denial of a timely revocation hearing.²²⁸ If the Board decides to revoke your parole, you must receive a written record of the Board's decision. You must also be given the opportunity to pursue an administrative appeal.²²⁹ If your parole is revoked but you do not have a new conviction for a crime committed while you were on parole release, the time you are sent back to prison should not exceed twelve months.²³⁰ However, if you commit acts of misconduct during your time back in prison, you may be held for an additional twelve months.²³¹

M. Parole in Florida

Parole has been abolished in the state of Florida.²³² However, it is still available for certain incarcerated people who committed crimes that occurred prior to the dates provided in the list below. If you are currently in prison for one of the following crimes, you are still eligible for parole, and this Section applies to you:

- (1) First degree murder, a felony murder, or the crime of making, possessing, throwing, projecting, placing, or discharging a destructive device (or the attempt of) before May 25, 1994;
- (2) All other capital felonies before October 1, 1995;
- (3) A continuing criminal enterprise before June 17, 1993;
- (4) Murder of a law enforcement officer (and other specified officers) before January 1, 1990;
- (5) Murder of a judge before October 1, 1990;
- (6) Any felony before October 1, 1983, or you elected to be sentenced “outside the guidelines” for a felony committed prior to July 1, 1984.²³³

You will be given an initial interview with a hearing examiner to set a presumptive parole release date between eight months and five years after you begin your prison term.²³⁴ Within ninety days of your initial interview, the Parole Commission will notify you of the set presumptive parole release date.²³⁵ If your presumptive parole release date is more than two years after the initial interview, a hearing examiner will schedule an interview for review of the presumptive parole release date. This review will normally occur within two years of the initial interview and every two years thereafter.²³⁶ However, if you were convicted of a more serious offense, including murder, attempted murder, sexual battery, or attempted sexual battery, this review will only occur every seven years. It will also occur every seven years if you were sentenced to a minimum twenty-five-year mandatory sentence, and your presumptive release date is more than seven years away.²³⁷ Within ninety days before the presumptive

227. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3003(f) (West 2011).

228. See In re Shapiro, 537 P.2d 888, 893, 14 Cal. 3d 711, 720, 122 Cal. Rptr. 768, 773 (Cal. 1975) (“[A] prompt revocation hearing is essential because delay may result in the loss of essential witnesses or ... evidence and the continuation of unnecessary incarceration or other limitations on personal liberty”).

229. See In re Ruzicka, 281 Cal. Rptr. 435, 436–439, 230 Cal. App. 3d 595, 597–601 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991) (holding that parolee was entitled to a written record of the Board's parole revocation decision and to pursue an administrative appeal where the parolee filed petition for writ of habeas corpus to challenge parole revocation).

230. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3057(a) (West 2011).

231. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3057(c) (West 2011).

232. See FLA. STAT. §§ 3.701(b)(5), (d)(12) (2019).

233. FLORIDA COMMISSION ON OFFENDER REVIEW, RELEASE TYPES (2014), available at <https://www.fcor.state.fl.us/release-types.shtml> (last visited March 8, 2020).

234. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.16(1) (West 2010).

235. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.172(2) (West 2010); see also FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.16(1) (West 2010).

236. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.174(1)(a) (West 2010).

237. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.174(1)(b) (West 2010).

parole release date, a hearing examiner will have a final interview with you to set an effective parole release date and a parole release plan.

If you want to ask for judicial review of the Parole Commission's calculation of your presumptive parole release date, you should file a writ of mandamus in circuit court, rather than in district court.²³⁸ A writ of mandamus is a document commanding a public official to perform his or her duty.²³⁹ To file a petition for mandamus, go to your facility's law library and ask to see a sample petition. Once you have prepared the petition to include the information in your case, send it to the local circuit court.

If your conduct while in prison has been unsatisfactory, or if you do not have a verified parole release plan, the Parole Commission may extend the presumptive parole release date. It will not be for more than one year.²⁴⁰ Otherwise, the presumptive parole release date will become the effective parole release date. But you will not be released on that date until a satisfactory plan for parole supervision has been completed.²⁴¹

If you have been convicted of certain serious felonies, you may remain under the authority of the trial judge for up to one-third of the maximum sentence set. When you are otherwise eligible for parole, the parole decision will be reviewed by the judge. The judge's decision whether or not to approve the release is not something that you can appeal.²⁴² If the judge refuses to release you on parole, you will be re-interviewed by the Parole Commission at intervals of no longer than two years. However, if you were convicted of a more serious offense, including murder, attempted murder, sexual battery, or attempted sexual battery, this review will only occur every seven years if your presumptive release date is more than seven years away. This is also true if you were sentenced to a minimum twenty-five-year mandatory sentence.²⁴³

You can be released on parole only if:

- (1) The Parole Commission finds with reasonable probability that if you are placed on parole, you will live and conduct yourself as a respectable and law-abiding person; and
- (2) Your release would be compatible with your welfare and the welfare of society.

You must also show the Parole Commission that if you are released on parole, you will be suitably employed, or at least that you will not become a public charge (collect public assistance of any kind).²⁴⁴

You may be eligible for conditional medical release if:

- (1) You are not sentenced to death and are permanently physically incapacitated by an illness, disease or injury, and are therefore no longer a danger to yourself or society; or
- (2) You are terminally ill and your death is imminent.²⁴⁵

If you are given conditional medical release, you will remain under supervision for the remainder of your sentence. This will not reduce your sentence, and nor will sentence will not be reduced by any credit for good behavior. During that period of supervision, you must undergo periodic physical examinations. If it is found that your medical condition no longer incapacitates you, you will be returned to prison. But, reductions for time spent on conditional medical release will be applied.²⁴⁶

Ordinarily, a condition of parole will be restitution to the victim of your offense. Restitution means to reimburse the victim for damages. Failure to make restitution is a violation of parole and may

238. See Johnson v. Fla. Parole & Prob. Comm'n, 543 So. 2d 875, 876 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1989) (holding that writ of mandamus to challenge suspension of prisoners' presumptive parole release dates should be filed in the circuit court, rather than the district court of appeal), overruled on other grounds by Sheley v. Fla. Parole Comm'n, 720 So. 2d 216 (Fla. 1998).

239. See Parole & Prob. Comm'n v. Fuller, 491 So. 2d 275, 275 (Fla. 1986) (holding that judicial review of presumptive parole release dates is available only through writs of mandamus, not through writs of habeas corpus).

240. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.1745(2) (West 2010).

241. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.1745(4) (West 2010).

242. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.16(4)(g) (West 2010).

243. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.174(1)(b) (West 2010).

244. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.18 (West 2010).

245. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 947.149(1)–(2) (West 2010).

246. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 947.149(4)–(5) (West 2010).

result in revocation of parole.²⁴⁷ A violation of the terms of parole may also cause you to be arrested and returned to prison to serve out the term of your sentence. However, if your parole is revoked, the Parole Commission has the option to give you credit for any portion of time served while you were on parole release.²⁴⁸

If you are arrested for a suspected parole violation, a preliminary hearing will be held within thirty days of your arrest. You may be represented by a lawyer. At the preliminary hearing, if it is found that under reasonable grounds you have committed a parole violation, a final parole revocation hearing will be held. You may also be represented by a lawyer at the final hearing.²⁴⁹

The parole period of supervision may not exceed the maximum period of your sentence. If you are being paroled from a single or concurrent sentence, the Parole Commission must give reasons for extending the period of supervision beyond two years.²⁵⁰ These reasons must be in writing.

N. Parole in Illinois

Parole has been eliminated in the state of Illinois.²⁵¹ If you were sentenced after February 2, 1978, you will have received a determinate sentence, and this Chapter no longer applies to you. This Chapter only applies to you if you were sentenced prior to February 2, 1978.

The Prison Review Board (Board) sets a fixed release date for all incarcerated people sentenced after 1977. No fixed release date is set if you were given an indeterminate sentence prior to 1977.²⁵² When deciding on a fixed release date, the Board considers the sentencing court's intent, and any aggravating and mitigating factors. The Board will also consider good conduct credit, and your behavior since incarceration.²⁵³ If you accept a release date given by the Board, you are no longer eligible for parole. If you do not accept a fixed release date from the Board, you will be eligible for parole when you have served one of the following:

- (1) The minimum term of an indeterminate sentence minus time credit for good behavior, or twenty years minus time credit for good behavior, whichever is less; or
- (2) Twenty years of a life sentence minus credit for good behavior; or
- (3) Twenty years or one-third of a determinate sentence, whichever is less, minus credit for good behavior.²⁵⁴

In making its determination of parole, the Board considers reports prepared by corrections staff. The Board also considers materials submitted by you, the State's Attorney, and the victim.²⁵⁵ Even if you are eligible for parole, the Board will not parole you if it determines that:

- (1) There is a substantial risk that you will not follow reasonable conditions of parole,
- (2) Your release would minimize the seriousness of the offense or promote disrespect for the law, or
- (3) Your release would have a negative effect on the institution's ability to discipline others.²⁵⁶

If parole is denied, a re-hearing is usually scheduled one year later or up to a maximum of five years after the parole denial (with an exception for certain sexual crimes).

The Board will clearly mention whatever conditions of parole it thinks are necessary to assist you in leading a law-abiding life. However, parole will always put certain requirements on you. And if you were convicted of a sex offense, the Board will assign you more requirements.

As conditions of parole, you may not do any of the following:

- (1) Violate a criminal statute in any jurisdiction;

247. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.181(2) (West 2010).

248. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.21 (West 2010).

249. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 947.23(1)–(2) (West 2010).

250. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 947.24(1)(a) (West 2010).

251. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-2 (West 2016).

252. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-2.1(b) (West 2016).

253. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-2.1(e) (West 2016).

254. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-3(a) (West 2016).

255. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-4(d) (West 2016).

256. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-5(c) (West 2016).

- (2) Possess a firearm or other dangerous weapon;
- (3) Use or possess narcotics or any other controlled substance or instruments to use such substances;
- (4) Go to places where controlled substances are sold, used, or distributed;
- (5) Spend time with other people who you know are on parole or mandatory supervised release without permission from your parole agent, or with people who are in an organized gang.²⁵⁷

In addition, you must do all of the following:

- (1) Report to an agent of the Department of Corrections;
- (2) Allow the agent to visit you at your house, place of employment, or other places when necessary;
- (3) Attend or live at a facility for the instruction or residence of people on parole;
- (4) Obtain permission before writing or visiting a person who is incarcerated in an Illinois prison;
- (5) Report arrests to an agent within twenty-four hours of release from custody;
- (6) Obtain permission from an agent before leaving Illinois;
- (7) Obtain permission from an agent before changing your address or job;
- (8) Consent to a search of your body, property, and place where you live;
- (9) Agree to drug tests when instructed by a parole agent; and
- (10) Provide truthful information to parole agents in response to their questions.²⁵⁸

If you are released on parole and then suspected of having violated a requirement of your parole, you will have a preliminary hearing before an officer to determine whether there is a reason to hold you for a revocation (cancellation of your parole) hearing. A preliminary hearing is not required when the possible revocation is based on new criminal charges.²⁵⁹ You may appear at a revocation hearing before at least one member of the Board to respond to the charge brought against you and bring witnesses on your behalf. If you are found to have violated a condition of your parole, the Board may either (1) order your return to prison for any portion of the maximum term of imprisonment that you were previously sentenced to, or (2) it may take lesser actions that do not involve putting you back in prison, such as allowing you to remain on parole with different requirements or releasing you to a halfway house.²⁶⁰ Even if the Board orders your return to prison, you may still be eligible for future release on parole.²⁶¹

Every felony sentence, except a life sentence, includes a “parole term” which is a mandatory supervised release period that ranges from one to four years (with the exception of certain sex crimes, which have longer release periods).²⁶² The Board may remove your parole requirements when it determines that you are likely to remain a free person without committing another crime.²⁶³ If you have been released on parole, and you believe you are entitled to a final discharge (release) from your sentence, you may file a habeas corpus petition seeking to be fully released while you are on parole release.²⁶⁴ For a discussion on habeas corpus, see Chapter 21 of the JLM, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan.”

O. Parole in Texas

Unless you have been convicted of certain serious felonies, including murder, indecency with a child, aggravated kidnapping, or sexual assault, you will be eligible for release on parole. You become

257. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-7 (West 2016).

258. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-7 (West 2016).

259. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-9(c) (West 2016).

260. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-9 (West 2016).

261. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-10 (West 2016).

262. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/5-8-1(d) (West 2007).

263. 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/3-3-8(b) (West 2016).

264. See Collins v. Sielaff, 357 N.E.2d 1213, 1214 – 1215, 43 Ill. App. 3d 1022, 1023–1024, 2 Ill. Dec. 770, 771–772 (Ill. App. Ct. 1976) (allowing parolee to maintain a habeas corpus action claiming entitlement to final discharge).

eligible for release on parole when your time served, plus good conduct time, equals one-fourth of the maximum sentence imposed or fifteen years, whichever is less.²⁶⁵ If you are serving a life sentence for a capital felony in Texas, you will not be eligible for release on parole until the actual time that you have served is equal to forty calendar years, not including good conduct time.²⁶⁶ There are exceptions to this if you are serving a life sentence, considered to be a repeat or habitual offender, or convicted of more serious felonies listed in the statute. If these conditions apply, you may be released on parole only after a parole panel establishes that your release will not increase the likelihood of harm to the public.²⁶⁷ A lawyer may represent you at your parole hearing when you appear before the parole panel.

You may be placed on parole only when plans have been made for your employment or maintenance and care, and when the parole panel believes you are able and willing to fulfill the obligations of a law-abiding citizen. If you are released on parole, you may be subject to certain requirements, such as attendance at substance abuse or sex offender treatment programs, electronic monitoring, requirements for the place that you live, and payment towards the cost of parole supervision. Parole may be granted early to elderly, intellectually or physically disabled, mentally ill, or terminally ill prisoners.²⁶⁸

If you are released on parole and are then accused of or arrested for violating parole, you are usually entitled to a hearing within forty days after the arrest or within a reasonable time if you are arrested in another state.²⁶⁹ Proof that you were convicted and sentenced for another crime while out on parole is enough to justify parole revocation. However, you may request a hearing where you can present information in your favor for the later conviction. If your parole is revoked (cancelled), you may not get credit for the time that you were out on parole. If you want to challenge a revocation of parole, you should file a state habeas corpus petition with the court that convicted you of the original offense from which you were paroled.²⁷⁰

To complete the parole period, you must serve out the whole term for which you were sentenced.²⁷¹ Depending on your specific situation, the Paroles and Pardons Division may allow you to serve the remainder of your term without supervision.

P. Parole in Michigan

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence (when a judge did not decide the total time that you are ordered to spend in prison) in a Michigan state prison, and you have served your minimum sentence minus any allowances (such as good time or a disciplinary credit), the Michigan state Parole

265. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.145(f) (West 2012).

266. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.145(b) (West 2012).

267. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.145(b)–(d) (West 2012). Prisoners serving time for any offense listed in Article 42A.054(a) of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure (except for capital murder), an offense for which the judgment had an affirmative finding of a use of a deadly weapon or firearm, an offense of continuous human trafficking, or an offense of engaging in or directing organized criminal (gang) activity will not be eligible for release on parole until “the inmate’s actual calendar time served, without consideration of good conduct time, equals one-half of the sentence or 30 calendar years, whichever is less, but in no event is the inmate eligible for release on parole in less than two calendar years.” TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.145(d) (West 2012).

268. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.146 (West 2017).

269. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. §§ 508.281–508.282 (West 2012).

270. See Bd. of Pardons & Paroles ex rel. Keene v. Court of Appeals for the Eighth District, 910 S.W.2d 481, 483 (Tex. Crim. App. 1995) (noting that when parolee sought state habeas corpus relief following the revocation of his parole, such a claim should be brought before the original convicting court).

271. TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 508.155 (West 2012).

Board may decide to grant you parole.²⁷² You may be granted “special parole” before you finish serving your minimum term, if your sentencing judge gives written approval.²⁷³

If you are serving a sentence for a drug offense, you may be eligible for parole before your minimum term is over—after half your minimum sentence, after five years, after ten years, or after seventeen and a half years—depending on the severity of your offense.²⁷⁴

If you are serving a life sentence, you may still be eligible for parole, unless you were convicted of first degree murder, adulterating medicine/drugs or selling adulterated medicine/drugs, explosives-related offenses, or criminal sexual conduct.²⁷⁵ Depending on the crime for which you were convicted, you may become eligible for parole from a life sentence within as early as ten years.²⁷⁶ See Section 791.234(8) of the Michigan Compiled Laws for additional conditions that will apply.

If you have been sentenced for consecutive (back to back) terms, you become eligible for parole when you have served the total time of the added minimum terms, minus any good time and disciplinary credits, if you are not subject to added disciplinary time.²⁷⁷ If you have remaining consecutive terms to serve and have not received added disciplinary time while in prison, the Parole Board is allowed to end the time left in the sentence you are currently serving once you have served the minimum term of your present sentence.²⁷⁸

The Michigan Parole Board will not give you parole until you have made plans for employment, education, and any necessary mental health or medical care.²⁷⁹ Unless you were sentenced before December 15, 1998 or your minimum sentence was less than two years, you must have earned your high school diploma or GED if you were not employed when you committed the crime.²⁸⁰

The Parole Board must interview you at least one month before your minimum sentence has ended, minus applicable good time and disciplinary credits and as long as you are not subject to disciplinary time.²⁸¹ However, the Parole Board does not have to interview an incarcerated person in order to grant parole if it “determines that the prisoner has a high probability of being paroled and the parole board therefore intends to parole the prisoner.”²⁸² You may also waive your right to (decide not to do) an interview, but the waiver must be in writing and no later than thirty days after the notice of intent to conduct an interview is issued.²⁸³

If the Parole Board decides to interview you, you should receive a notice from the Parole Board at least one month before the interview date.²⁸⁴ The notice must state the specific issues and concerns that will be discussed at the interview and that may cause them to deny you parole. The board cannot deny your parole for a reason that is not stated in the notice, except for good cause as stated to you at or before your interview, and as listed in the required written explanation.²⁸⁵ Read the interview notice

272. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.234(1) (West 2007). Michigan does not require that every prisoner be eligible for parole. See, e.g., People v. Merriweather, 447 Mich. 799, 809, 527 N.W.2d 460, 464 (Mich. 1994) (“We find no basis, however, to conclude . . . the Legislature intended . . . all defendants, or even simply this defendant, must be eligible for parole”).

273. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.233(1)(b) (West 2007).

274. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.234(7)(b)–(c), (8), (12) (West 2007).

275. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.234(6)–(7) (West 2007).

276. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.234(7) (West 2007).

277. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.234(3)–(4) (West 2007).

278. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.234(5) (West 2007).

279. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.233(1)(e) (West 2007).

280. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.233(1)(f) (West 2007). You are exempt from this requirement if you are over 65, have a learning disability, are not proficient (very capable) in English, or some other reason outside your control.

281. See MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(1) (West 2007).

282. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(1) (West 2007).

283. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(6) (West 2007).

284. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(4) (West 2007).

285. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(4) (West 2007).

carefully, and be prepared to challenge and present evidence on any incorrect issues stated in the notice.

During the interview, you may be represented by an individual of your choice, but your representative cannot be a fellow prisoner or an attorney.²⁸⁶ You or your representative can present relevant evidence to support your release and challenge any inaccurate information in the notice. When making a parole determination, the Parole Board cannot consider an expunged (erased) juvenile record or any information it determines is incorrect.²⁸⁷ The Parole Board can consider—but cannot base a parole denial solely on—your marital history, or prior arrests that did not result in conviction or adjudication of delinquency.²⁸⁸ The Parole Board must consider any statements made by a victim.²⁸⁹ In addition, the Parole Board member conducting your interview must review information relevant to the notice of intent to conduct an interview, such as the parole eligibility report prepared by the institutional staff. The parole eligibility report includes information such as all the major misconduct of which you have been found guilty, your work and education record during confinement, and the results of any physical, mental, or psychiatric examinations performed on you during your time in prison.²⁹⁰

If the Michigan Parole Board decides not to release you, you will receive a written explanation of the reason for the denial, which may include specific recommendations for action that you may take to improve your future chances of release.²⁹¹ Only the prosecutor or crime victim can appeal a decision made by a Parole Board; your ability to appeal the Parole Board's decision has been eliminated.²⁹² The appropriate standard of review for the Parole Board's determination is an abuse of discretion standard.²⁹³ Habeas corpus is available only under extreme circumstances, such as where parole has been denied based on your race, religion, or national origin.²⁹⁴ The law does not require that you be re-interviewed within the next twelve months—the Court of Appeals of Michigan has held that there is “no statutory impediment” (restriction imposed by the law) to a Parole Board's decision not to reconsider a prisoner's eligibility for parole for two years.”²⁹⁵

Q. Conclusion

This Chapter provides a detailed summary of New York State parole procedures, from the release hearing to the revocation process. It also includes a brief overview of parole procedures and practices in these states: California, Florida, Illinois, Texas, and Michigan. Additionally, we hope that incarcerated people in states not specifically covered in this Chapter will get a better understanding of parole policies. In general, this Chapter may serve as a model for ideas on how to research and whom to contact when learning about the parole system in your own state. Note, however, many states

286. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(6) (West 2007).

287. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.235(1)(a)–(b) (West 2007).

288. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.235(3)(a)–(b) (West 2007).

289. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(1) (West 2007).

290. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.235(5), (7)(a)–(g) (West 2007).

291. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 791.235(20) (West 2007).

292. Morales v. Mich. Parole Bd., 260 Mich. App. 29, 36, 676 N.W.2d 221, 227–228 (Mich. 2003) (noting that, “[b]y eliminating the phrase, ‘shall be appealable by the prisoner’ . . . the Legislature clearly intended” to eliminate the prisoner's right to appeal a parole board's decision).

293. Wayne County Prosecutor v. Parole Board, 210 Mich. App. 148, 153, 532 N.W.2d 899, 901 (Mich. 1995) (holding that the appropriate standard of review when a court reviews a Parole Board's decision to grant parole is abuse of discretion). This discretion is restricted by MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 791.233(1), 791.235(1), (3), (4), (7)–(9) (West 2012). The abuse of discretion is a difficult standard to meet because in order for the Parole Board's decision to be overturned, you must show that the Board's decision was unsupported by the evidence, unlawful, or clearly incorrect.

294. Morales v. Mich. Parole Bd., 260 Mich. App. 29, 40, 676 N.W.2d 221, 230 (Mich. 2003) (“[T]he writ of habeas corpus deals only with radical defects which render a judgment or proceeding absolutely void”). A radical defect would be if the Parole Board did something that was clearly against what is required by law.

295. In re Parole of Roberts, 232 Mich. App. 253, 256, 591 N.W.2d 259, 260 (Mich. 1998).

have eliminated parole and now impose determinate (fixed) sentences. All incarcerated people, even where the information is clear, should refer directly to the applicable statutes and regulations of their state to see if there have been changes made following the JLM's publication.

CHAPTER 33

RIGHTS OF INCARCERATED PARENTS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter discusses the childcare and custody rights of incarcerated parents. Roughly 1,200,000 state and federally incarcerated people were parents to children under the age of eighteen in 2010.¹ There are approximately 2,700,000 children under the age of eighteen who have a parent in prison.²

As a parent in prison, you may fear that your child will not be cared for, that you will lose your child, or that your relationship with your child will suffer while you are incarcerated. This Chapter focuses on New York state law and describes how the law provides parents in prison with various tools to prevent these things from happening.

First, however, you should be aware that federal laws regulate the rights of incarcerated parents whose children are in the child welfare system (but not incarcerated parents whose children are under private custody or guardianship). In 1997, Congress passed the Adoption and Safe Families Act (ASFA),³ a series of laws that make it much harder for incarcerated parents to keep their parental rights. Different states have passed laws applying ASFA in different ways, so it is important for you to know the ASFA laws that apply in your state.

Some of the significant changes that were made to New York law following the passage of ASFA include:

- (1) In some cases, the state no longer has to try to reunite children in foster care with parents who are incarcerated;⁴
- (2) Unless certain exceptions apply, the State must file to “terminate” (get rid of) parental rights⁵ for: (1) children who have been in foster care for fifteen out of the last twenty-two months, (2) children who have been abandoned, or (3) children with parents who have been convicted of certain violent crimes;⁶

* This Chapter was written by Angélica Cházaro based in part on previous versions by Valentina Morales, Kai-lin Hsu, and Lisa Rios. Special thanks to Prof. Philip M. Genty, Clinical Professor of Law and Director, Prisoners and Families Clinic, Columbia University School of Law.

1. THE PEW CHARITABLE TRUSTS, COLLATERAL COSTS: INCARCERATION’S EFFECT ON ECONOMIC MOBILITY 4 (2010), available at https://www.pewtrusts.org/-/media/legacy/uploadedfiles/pes_assets/2010/collateralcosts1pdf.pdf (last visited Mar. 10, 2020).

2. THE PEW CHARITABLE TRUSTS, COLLATERAL COSTS: INCARCERATION’S EFFECT ON ECONOMIC MOBILITY 4 (2010), available at https://www.pewtrusts.org/-/media/legacy/uploadedfiles/pes_assets/2010/collateralcosts1pdf.pdf (last visited Mar. 10, 2020).

3. The full text of ASFA can be found at 42 U.S.C. §§ 670–679(c). Several provisions of the Act have been amended in part or repealed in part since 1997. For further information on the history of AFSA and other federal child welfare laws, please see U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Servs., Major Federal Legislation Concerned with Child Protection, Child Welfare, and Adoption, CHILD WELFARE INFO. GATEWAY (current through May 2019), available at <http://www.childwelfare.gov/pubs/otherpubs/majorfedlegis.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

4. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

5. Termination of parental rights is when the state permanently ends your rights as a parent and either takes on those rights itself or grants them to another person through adoption.

6. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i) (McKinney 2010). The formula used to determine how long your child has been placed in foster care may depend on where you and your child are located. In New York, the Department will start counting from sixty days after either the date of a family court judge determined that the child was “abused or neglected” or the date the child was removed from the home, whichever comes earlier. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(iii) (McKinney 2010). This means that the amount of time counted for ASFA purposes may be different than the amount of time your child has actually spent under the custody of the Department. For example, if your child was placed under custody of the Department upon your incarceration, the State will not start counting your child as “entered into foster care” until sixty days after that. So starting from the date of your incarceration,

- (3) People with certain criminal convictions or who live with an adult who has a criminal record cannot be foster parents.⁷

All of these provisions will be discussed more fully below. As a parent in prison, you may find yourself in one of three situations:

- (1) Your child is living with friends or family members who receive no state supervision or funding other than welfare.
 - a. This practice is known as “private placement” and will be discussed in Part B of this Chapter. ASFA does not apply to these placements.
- (2) You chose to place your child in foster care.
 - a. Again, your child may be living with foster parents who are relatives or persons unrelated to you. The state will supervise and provide funding to these foster parents for the care of your child. This practice is known as “voluntary placement” and will be discussed in Part C of this Chapter. If your child is in foster care and you would like to put him or her up for adoption, your options are discussed in Part F of this Chapter.
- (3) Your child was taken from your home by either the Office of Children & Family Services (a New York State agency) or by the Administration for Children’s Services (a New York City agency)⁸ and placed in foster care.
 - a. Your child may be living with foster parents who are relatives or persons unrelated to you. Again, the state will supervise and provide funding to these foster parents for your child’s care. This practice is known as “involuntary foster care” and will be discussed in Part C below.

New York law generally supports parents who want to take custody of their children after being in jail. The law states that it is desirable for a child to “be returned to the birth parent because the child’s need for a normal family life will usually best be met in the [natural] home, and . . . parents are entitled to bring up their own children unless the best interests of the child would be thereby endangered.”⁹ However, the law will only prioritize your parental rights if you show interest and involvement in your child’s welfare and a commitment to parenting upon your release.¹⁰ Evidence of you may have up to seventeen months before the State will begin proceedings. Note that other states may calculate the time period that a child has been in foster care somewhat differently, so you should always be sure to determine what the law says in your state. For more information on legal research, see JLM Chapter 2, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

7. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e) (McKinney 2010).

8. The Office of Children and Family Services (OCFS) is the state agency responsible for supervising and managing foster care in New York State. The Administration for Children’s Services (ACS) handles these duties in New York City, while county departments of social services manage foster care for areas outside of New York City. For simplicity, this Chapter uses “DSS” (Department of Social Services) to refer to all local child protective agencies that are responsible for foster care placement. Each county in New York has a social services department. See County Departments of Social Services, OFF. OF CHILD. & FAM. SERVS., available at <http://www.ocfs.state.ny.us/main/localdss.asp> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019); About ACS, N.Y.C. ADMIN. FOR CHILDREN’S SERVS., available at <http://www.nyc.gov/html/acs/html/about/about.shtml> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

For questions about foster care generally, you can call (800) 345-KIDS, a free phone number for OCFS. Also refer to the end of this Chapter for more contact information for OCFS and county-specific DSS offices.

9. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(1)(a)(ii) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Natasha RR, 42 A.D.3d 762, 763, 839 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (3d Dept. 2007) (stating that this law seeks to return child to natural parent “if at all possible and responsible”).

10. The law exempts prolonged stays in foster care from mandatory termination of parental rights if “the parent or parents are incarcerated, or participating in a residential substance abuse treatment program, or the prior incarceration or participation of a parent or parents in a residential substance abuse treatment program is a significant factor in why the child has been in foster care for fifteen of the last twenty-two months, provided that the parent maintains a meaningful role in the child’s life.” N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Lindsey B., 16 A.D.3d 1078, 1078, 791 N.Y.S.2d 261, 262 (4th Dept. 2005) (finding that a father’s incarceration was not a defense to an abandonment petition where father made no effort to communicate involvement in your child's life may include letter writing, telephone calls, visits with your child, and efforts to communicate and cooperate with your caseworker.¹¹

The beginning of this Chapter discusses how your child will be cared for while you are in prison, both under private placement (Part B) and under foster care (Part C). Part C further explains placement in both voluntary and involuntary foster care. It describes the procedures for voluntary and involuntary placement, including court hearings and reviews. Part C then discusses placement and planning for your child, which are the same under both foster care plans. Part C also describes your rights and obligations, and the obligations of the Department of Social Services (DSS)¹² while your child is in foster care. Finally, Part C explains how your child will be returned to you after your release.

Part D explains involuntary termination of your parental rights, a process that allows another person to adopt your child when he is in foster care. It details the ways you can defend yourself against involuntary termination and lists the steps you should take while your child is in foster care to make sure that your parental rights are not terminated. The end of Part D discusses the difficulties long-term incarcerated people face in preventing involuntary termination.

Part E discusses the procedure for voluntarily terminating your parental rights and putting your child up for adoption. Part F discusses challenges that are unique to incarcerated fathers, explaining the extra steps fathers in prison must take in order to protect their rights. Finally, Parts G and H explain your right to an attorney for different proceedings.

B. Private Placement with a Relative or Friend

Many incarcerated parents try to place their child in the home of a relative or friend without involving the foster care system. This practice is called "private placement." Private placement is the best way for parents in prison to keep their parental rights because the strict ASFA rules only apply to children in foster care, not those in private placements. The main advantage to private placement is that your child will be cared for by someone you know and trust. It also allows your child to live in familiar surroundings, which can decrease the trauma that a child may feel from being separated from his parent.

If you want a relative or friend (sometimes called a "caretaker") to care for your child, you should, if possible, write up an agreement that you and your relative or friend sign. The agreement should include three important points:

- (1) You are agreeing to give temporary custody of your child to that person while you are in prison;
- (2) Your child will be returned to you when you are released; and
- (3) The caretaker (the relative or friend) will bring your child to visit you in prison.

This agreement will allow your child's caretaker (relative or friend) to register the child for school, get public assistance, and receive medical care for the child. It will also help make sure you get custody of your child back when you are released from prison. Note that you may have to fill out paperwork or releases in order to legally allow the caretaker to register your child for school and other public services.

If you know someone who is willing to care for your child but does not have the money to do so, he may be eligible to receive public assistance, food stamps, and Medicaid if he assumes custody or guardianship of your child. Your child can also be placed with a close relative through the Department of Social Services (DSS), a practice called "kinship foster care." Under this arrangement, your child with daughter or learn of her whereabouts despite contacting others by mail and phone during his incarceration); In re Elizabeth Susanna R., 11 A.D.3d 619, 620, 783 N.Y.S.2d 641, 642 (2d Dept. 2004) (quoting Matter of Jose Andres M., 8 A.D.3d 385, 385, 777 N.Y.S.2d 700, 701 (2d Dept. 2004)) (stating that "a parent's incarcerated status does not excuse him or her from establishing or maintaining contact with his or her child").

11. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(l)(v) (McKinney 2010).

12. According to the State of New York, the 58 Departments of Social Services throughout the state are responsible for all publicly funded social services and cash assistance programs. Families qualify for DSS assistance based on income and other criteria. DSS assistance includes subsidies for childcare costs. About ACS, N.Y.C. ADMIN. FOR CHILDREN'S SERVS., available at <http://www.nyc.gov/html/acs/html/about/about.shtml> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

will be considered in foster care even though he is living with a relative. This arrangement, which is different from a private placement, is discussed in Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter.

Granting custody or guardianship to someone through private placement does not mean that you are permanently giving up your parental rights. It only means that you are giving permission for someone else to care and be responsible for your child for a temporary period until you can care for him yourself. It is worth checking with each agency that provides public benefits to find out what paperwork you must fill out in order for the caretaker to receive assistance both for himself and for your child.

C. Foster Care

If private placement with your relatives or friends is not possible, you may choose to apply through DSS to have your child placed in foster care. You must make sure that someone will be caring for your child while you are in prison. If you do not arrange for the care of your child during your incarceration, “permanent neglect proceedings” (which is a case about your custody rights) can be initiated against you, and you might lose the right to have custody, visit your child, and even to parent your child.¹³ Foster care is a way of providing for children whose parents cannot care for them. The state has legal custody of children in foster care, which means that the state takes responsibility for the children. The state may hire a private foster care agency that will work with you and your child to find a placement in foster care. Foster care is not supposed to be a permanent solution; it is meant to help families through difficult times and to make sure that children are living in safe and healthy environments.

There are several different ways children can be placed in foster care. When the parent or parents themselves choose to place their children in foster care, it is called “voluntary placement.” When a judge orders the child to be placed in foster care because the child’s previous caretakers were abusive or neglectful, it is called “involuntary placement.” Children may be placed with relatives (“kinship foster care”), with an agency-approved foster family, in a group home, or in a residential facility. All foster care parents receive funding and supervision either directly from DSS or from any separate foster care agency involved in their case.

1. Voluntary Placement

If you cannot arrange for your child to be cared for by family or friends or if you are not satisfied with the care your child is receiving, you may choose to place your child in foster care. Furthermore, under New York law, your child may have to be placed in foster care if you become “unavailable” due to “arrest, detainment, or imprisonment.”¹⁴

You do not permanently give up your parental rights by placing your child in foster care. You are still legally your child’s parent. It does not mean that you are giving up or abandoning your child, and it does not show that you are unfit as a parent. It only means that you are temporarily unable to provide your child with the care you think he needs. If you fulfill your foster care obligations and if you are released within a relatively short time, you will have a good chance of getting your child back after your release.

However, if you are going to be in prison for more than twelve months, then placing your child in foster care may create a risk of involuntary termination of your parental rights. You should seriously consider your decision to place your child in foster care because ASFA generally requires the state to file for termination of parental rights for children who have been in foster care for fifteen out of the last twenty-two months.

13. See Part D(1)(b) of this Chapter for a discussion of permanent neglect.

14. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.10(c). This section states that children must be removed from their homes and placed in foster care when removal is essential for securing proper care, nurturance, or treatment. It explains that one circumstance where foster care placement may be essential to ensuring proper care, nurturance, or treatment is when the parents of the child are arrested, detained, or imprisoned.

In summary, if you are able to privately place your child with a friend or relative, this may be the best way for you to protect your parental rights. It is important to consider all of your options carefully before placing your child in foster care for fifteen months or longer.

(a) Initial Placement Process

To arrange for your child's placement in foster care, you should first contact the Department of Social Services (DSS).¹⁵ Either you or someone you have entrusted with the care of your child can transfer your child to a foster care arrangement.¹⁶ However, if possible, you should be the one to contact DSS, because if a relative or friend places your child in foster care for you, the agency might only communicate with that person. Remember, a foster care arrangement made by someone else does not affect your rights and obligations as a parent.¹⁷ DSS must consult with you regarding your child. If you are not being contacted, inform DSS and/or the foster care agency that you are the parent and tell them that you wish to make the decisions about your child's care.

When you make contact with DSS, a caseworker will arrange to meet with you to explain the process of placing your child in the custody of DSS and the available foster care options. He will also ask you to sign a Voluntary Placement Agreement,¹⁸ which is a contract between you and DSS that places your child in foster care.¹⁹ By signing the Agreement, you agree to temporarily transfer the custody and care of your child to the Commissioner of DSS. Read the form carefully because it will state what DSS must do for your child while he or she is in foster care. The Agreement should list the responsibilities of DSS, as well as your obligations while your child is in foster care.²⁰ The Agreement must say that the agency may be required to file for termination of parental rights if your child remains in foster care for fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months.²¹

The Agreement is a standard form, which means it is the same for everyone. If you want to add something to the agreement that you feel is important, you have the right to suggest changes.²² For instance, you may wish to add any or all of the following:

- (1) The date your child will be released from foster care (perhaps the date of your release from prison);
- (2) A request that your children, if you have more than one, be kept together;
- (3) A request that your child remain in his current school;
- (4) A request that your child be kept near the home neighborhood; and/or
- (5) The minimum number of hours per month that you wish to visit with your child.

You should strongly consider adding these items to the Agreement form because DSS is obligated to try to provide your child with the care established in the form.²³ You should be aware that DSS might resist making changes to the standard form. If you want the Agreement changed to fit your child's needs, you need to speak with your caseworker about it.

15. Contact the Department of Social Services (DSS) for the county in which your child is living, or the Administration for Children's Services (ACS) if your child lives in New York City. See the end of this Chapter for contact information for ACS and all other New York counties.

16. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1) (McKinney 2010).

17. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1) (McKinney 2010).

18. You can obtain a New York City Voluntary Placement Agreement Form by writing to the Administration for Children's Services (ACS), 150 Williams Street, 18th Floor, New York, New York 10038, or by calling ACS at (212) 619-1309. The website for ACS is www.nyc.gov/html/acs/home.html (last visited Oct. 22, 2019).

19. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2) (McKinney 2010).

20. These obligations are described in Part C(4) of this Chapter.

21. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(ix) (McKinney 2010).

22. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

23. If you believe that the care your child is receiving in foster care does not satisfy the requirements set forth in the Voluntary Placement Agreement, you should first tell your caseworker. Then you or your lawyer, if you have one, should petition the family court judge who signed your child's placement order to review the care the agency is providing for your child and to order the agency to follow the Agreement. See N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010) (requiring adherence to the placement order).

It is very important to ask for a copy of the final Agreement that you sign so you can look back at it when necessary. You should keep your own personal file, which should include a copy of the Agreement as well as any other letters between you and DSS.

During your first visit with your caseworker, you may also be asked to sign a Designation of Religious Preference for Children.²⁴ On this form, you may state whether you want your child to be placed with an independent foster care agency affiliated with a particular religion. You can state whether you want your child to receive religious training while in foster care. If you write down a religious preference and say that you want your child to be cared for by a family of that religion, DSS must either:

- (1) place your child with a family practicing that religion;
- (2) show that your child's faith will be protected in the family in which he is placed; or
- (3) show why finding a placement with such a family was not "practicable" or "in the best interests of the child."²⁵ This means that if DSS does not place your child with a family practicing your chosen religion, DSS must be able to prove that it was practically impossible to find such a family or they must be able to give a good reason why it would be better for your child not to be in such a family. If DSS does not place your child in such a family and fails to give a good reason, you can demand that they place your child with a family that practices your religion.

Your caseworker may ask you to sign a form in which you agree that you will be legally responsible for some of the costs of maintaining your child.²⁶ You must write down on this form whether or not you can contribute to your child's expenses while he or she is in foster care. Even though you are in prison, you still have a duty to financially support your child. However, DSS may take your situation into consideration and decide not to require you to contribute to your child's expenses because you are in prison and probably have little or no income.²⁷

You and the caseworker will develop a plan to help keep a close relationship between you and your child. This plan, which includes the rights and obligations of both you and the agency, is discussed in Part C(4) of this Chapter.

Finally, DSS should provide you with a list of lawyers or legal services groups to help you in placing your child. One source of help may be Prisoners' Legal Services.²⁸ Unfortunately, it is extremely unlikely that you will be able to find a free lawyer to help you with a voluntary placement before the 358a Hearing stage of your case (discussed in section (b) below). Because of this, do not be afraid to take as much time and ask as many questions as you need to in order to understand the forms that DSS will make you fill out. You will probably be the person making the decisions for the voluntary placement of your child.

(b) Court Approval of the Placement—358a Hearing

The next step in voluntary placement is court approval. New York state law requires a family court judge to review and approve every voluntary placement of a child in foster care lasting longer than thirty days.²⁹ This proceeding is called a "358a hearing" because it is required by Section 358a of the Social Services Law. DSS is responsible for filing a petition with the court asking for approval of the placement.³⁰ The petition will include a notice "in conspicuous print"—which means it must be clear,

24. The New York City Designation of Religious Preference for Children (Form CM-309) is similar to forms used throughout the state. You can get the appropriate form from the agency handling your case.

25. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.11(c)(2)(iii).

26. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(viii) (McKinney 2010).

27. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v)(D) (McKinney 2010).

28. See Appendix IV of the JLM for addresses of legal services organizations.

29. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(1)(a) (McKinney 2003).

30. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(1)(a) (McKinney 2003).

obvious, and not in very small print—stating that if a child remains in foster care for fifteen of twenty-two months, the agency may be required to file for a termination of parental rights.³¹

The judge must give you notice of the hearing.³² In order to be present at the hearing, you should write a letter, similar to the one shown in Appendix A of this Chapter, asking the court to instruct the prison to bring you to the hearing.³³

Your caseworker may ask you to sign a waiver of your right to attend.³⁴ A waiver means that you formally agree to give up a particular right.³⁵ You do not have to waive your rights.³⁶ Sometimes people choose to waive rights as part of a deal with the state, because they get something from the state in return for signing the waiver. If you do choose to sign a waiver of your right to attend the hearing, the court does not have to make sure that you can attend the hearing.³⁷ Generally, signing a waiver is not a good idea because you give up the valuable opportunity to inform the judge of your problems or ask questions during the voluntary placement process.³⁸ However, you should discuss this with your caseworker.

You have a right to a lawyer for the hearing. If you cannot afford your own lawyer, the judge will assign you a free lawyer when you are brought to court for the hearing.³⁹ If you are using your own lawyer, make sure to contact him in advance about the proceeding. A lawyer is meant to be your voice during these proceedings, so if you have any questions or requests or if you are concerned about something, be sure to ask your lawyer.

At the hearing, the court is supposed to ensure that your child will be put in foster care only if the “best interest and welfare of the child will be promoted by the removal of such child from such home.”⁴⁰ This means that foster care is appropriate only when a child would not otherwise receive proper care, nurturing, or treatment.⁴¹ DSS must try to find relatives who can take care of your child.⁴² This arrangement, called “kinship foster care,” is not the same as the private placement discussed in Part B. Kinship foster care is explained in Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter. Apart from trying to find relatives who can care for your child, DSS must try to find and record information about your child’s other parent, any person to whom you had been married at the time of the conception or birth of your child, and any other person who would be entitled to a notice of a proceeding to terminate parental rights if such a hearing were to take place.⁴³

The judge must also verify that you knowingly and voluntarily signed the Voluntary Placement Agreement.⁴⁴ If you have any questions or problems regarding the placement process or the Agreement, you should make them known at this hearing.

If you have had any problems with the foster care agency, you should talk with the judge about that at the hearing. Such problems might include the following situations:

- (1) the agency refuses to add your requests to the Voluntary Placement Agreement;
- (2) there have not been enough (or any) visits between you and your child;

31. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2003).

32. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(4)(a) (McKinney 2003).

33. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(e)(ii) (McKinney 2003) (stating that a parent has a right to be physically present at his child’s 358-a hearing).

34. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).

35. Waiver, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

36. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).

37. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).

38. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).

39. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 262(a)(iv) (McKinney 2008). Please note that the Family Court Act is contained in the Judiciary Court Acts volume of McKinney’s. See Part H of this Chapter for more on your right to counsel.

40. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003); N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(1)(a) (McKinney 2003).

41. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.8(a)(2) ; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.10(c).

42. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1-a) (McKinney 2010).

43. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1-b) (McKinney 2010).

44. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(a) (McKinney 2003).

- (3) the agency has broken many of its promises; or
- (4) it is difficult for you to communicate with the agency (for example, the caseworker does not return your calls, the prison will not allow you to make calls, etc.).

If you signed a waiver and do not attend a 358a hearing, the judge will review the papers submitted by DSS, including the Voluntary Placement Agreement, and will generally approve the Agreement as you signed it.⁴⁵

(c) Court Review of Placement—Permanency Hearings

(i) Automatic Review

Once a placement has been approved in the 358a hearing described above, the agency is required to check in with the family court from time to time in order to review your child's situation in foster care. The agency must report to the family court within eight months of the date your child was removed from his or her home and then every six months after that.⁴⁶ The court may order a review at any time.⁴⁷ Also, you can ask the court for a review at any time.⁴⁸ If a court decides for any of the reasons listed in the statute⁴⁹ that the agency does not have to make "reasonable efforts" to reunite your family, then it will order a review called a "permanency hearing" within thirty days.⁵⁰ See Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter for a discussion of "reasonable efforts."

These reviews are called permanency hearings because they decide a permanent plan for your child.⁵¹ A permanent plan considers

- (1) whether your child will be returned to you, placed with a relative, or released for adoption;
- (2) the health, well-being, and status of the child;
- (3) the status of the parent; and
- (4) what services have been provided to reunite the family, where appropriate.⁵²

The state is authorized to seek an alternative permanent placement if you are unable to provide a normal family home for your child, and continued foster care is not appropriate.⁵³

The court must notify you at least fourteen days before each of these hearings, and you have a right to attend.⁵⁴ As with the 358a hearing, you must ask the judge to order the prison to take you to the permanency hearing. You or your lawyer, if you have one, should write to the judge as soon as you know when your hearing is scheduled in order to request such an order. Information on getting to court is included in Part G of this Chapter. Also, see the sample letter included in Appendix A of this Chapter.

At the hearing, explain to the judge any problems you have with the foster care your child is receiving.⁵⁵ By law, the judge has to look at what is in the "best interests" of the child, so if there is a problem, you should try to explain how your child's "best interests" are not being provided for.⁵⁶ The

45. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).

46. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(a)(2)–(3) (McKinney 2010).

47. See N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1088 (McKinney 2010) (providing the family court with the express power to rehear the case whenever it deems rehearing necessary or desirable).

48. See N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1088 (McKinney 2010) (providing the family court with the power to rehear the case when any party to the case makes a motion to do so).

49. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

50. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

51. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1012(k) (McKinney 2010).

52. See N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(c) (McKinney 2010) for a full description of what needs to be included in the permanency plan.

53. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(1)(a)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

54. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney Supp. 2013).

55. Although you may wait until your court appearance to voice your complaints, you should try to write out any problems you have with your child's foster care ahead of time. You can discuss your concerns with your lawyer, if you have one. You may mail the concerns to the judge, DSS, or the child's attorney. You should also take a copy of the list of complaints you have made to court. You or your lawyer should mention your complaints in court so that they are not overlooked.

56. The court must determine how to protect the best interests of the children placed in the state's care by judge can order DSS to provide a variety of services for you and your child, including arranging additional visits.⁵⁷

(ii) Requested Review

After the initial permanency hearing, you may request a permanency hearing to address problems that arise between scheduled hearings and that cannot be resolved with your caseworker.⁵⁸ You do not need to wait for another scheduled hearing to complain about your child's foster care.

In order to request a permanency hearing, you must explain, in a motion to the court: (1) why you need a new hearing, (2) the type of problem you are having, (3) the steps you have taken to resolve the problem, and (4) what changes you believe are necessary.⁵⁹ You may also file a motion to force the agency to obey court orders or to live up to agreements it has made with you.⁶⁰

2. Kinship Foster Care

DSS will sometimes approve close relatives for kinship guardianship.⁶¹ The technical name for this arrangement is "approved emergency relative foster home."⁶² If you have a relative who would like to care for your child, you may be able to arrange for kinship foster care. Under this program, your child will live with your relative. However, unlike in the private placement described above in Part B, DSS has legal custody of children in kinship foster care, just as it does in any other foster care arrangement.

ASFA has made it more difficult for people with certain kinds of criminal records to be approved as foster parents. The ASFA restrictions may affect your decision to place your child in kinship foster care because they may prevent the relatives you choose from becoming foster parents. In New York, a criminal history check must be performed on potential foster parents and on anyone over eighteen who is living in the home before the home can be certified as a foster home.⁶³ The criminal history check will also be repeated every time the foster parents apply for re-certification.⁶⁴

A prospective foster parent can be denied for several reasons, including:

- (1) A felony conviction at any time involving child abuse or neglect, spousal abuse, a crime against a child including child pornography, a violent crime including rape, sexual assault, or homicide;⁶⁵ or
- (2) A felony conviction within the past five years for physical assault, battery, or a drug-related offense.⁶⁶

A prospective foster parent's application can be put on hold while the agency waits to receive additional information for the following reasons:

- (1) The foster parent has a charge for an above-listed crime that has not been resolved yet;⁶⁷ or a voluntary placement agreement. See, e.g., Nicholson v. Scopetta, 3 N.Y.3d 357, 376–381, 820 N.E.2d 840, 850–854, 787 N.Y.S.2d 196, 206–210 (2004) (determining whether the removal of the child was in the child's "best interests," according to the legislative requirement).

57. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney 2010).

58. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1088 (McKinney 2010).

59. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(c) (McKinney 2010).

60. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 255 (McKinney 2008).

61. A relative may be approved as a foster parent if DSS believes that living with him is the best way to maintain continuity in the child's environment. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089-a(a)(i) (McKinney 2010).

62. This arrangement is approved by N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 375 (McKinney 2010). "Approved emergency relative foster home" is defined in N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 443.1(g).

63. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

64. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010); see also Requirements to Become a Foster Parent, OFFICE OF CHILDREN AND FAMILY SERVICES, <https://ocfs.ny.gov/main/fostercare/requirements.asp> (last visited Mar. 22, 2020).

65. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A) (McKinney 2010).

66. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(B) (McKinney 2010).

67. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(2)(A) (McKinney 2010).

- (2) The foster parent has a felony conviction that may be for an above-listed crime, but it is unclear whether such a crime was involved.⁶⁸

If a prospective foster parent has been convicted of one or more of the crimes listed above, the foster care agency will remove any foster child living with the foster parent.⁶⁹ Requests to become a foster parent can also be denied if:

- (1) the prospective foster parent has a criminal history consisting of crimes other than those specified above;⁷⁰ or
- (2) any other person over eighteen living in the proposed foster home has a criminal history (including a criminal charge or conviction).⁷¹

If either of these factors are found, the agency will check the safety of the home. When checking the safety of the home, the agency will consider whether the person who committed the crime lives there, the amount of contact that person has with the child, and the nature of the charge.⁷² Removing the child may be required to protect the child's health and safety.⁷³

A disadvantage of kinship foster care in comparison with private placement is that DSS will be involved in your relationship with your child. For example, DSS could decide to have your child removed from your relative's home to another foster home. It also means that you will not be able to simply ask your relative to return your child when you are released from prison, but must instead petition DSS to get custody of your child again.⁷⁴ Also, DSS may attempt to terminate your parental rights so that your relative or another person can adopt the child.⁷⁵

One advantage of kinship foster care is that your child's caretaker is eligible for the same foster care payments available to unrelated foster care parents.⁷⁶ You and the potential kinship foster parent should consult DSS together about the available funds. Another advantage is that the court can order DSS to support you with services, including providing regular visitation, parenting training, counseling for you or your child, and other services.⁷⁷ If you are an incarcerated parent, DSS's duty to you is generally limited to services offered by your facility, although your child is entitled to any services offered by the agency.⁷⁸

DSS should support your wishes for your child to be in kinship foster care because it is obligated to search for a relative to take care of your child.⁷⁹ If you disapprove of a particular relative that DSS is considering, you can tell the judge your concerns and ask that your child be placed with a different family member. At the hearing, you will have to convince the judge that the placement DSS wishes to make is not in the best interests of your child or that the individual being considered is unfit to care for your child. If you can arrange for the relative of your choice to attend the court hearing, the judge may have an opportunity to meet him.

3. Involuntary Placement

68. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(2)(B) (McKinney 2010).

69. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).

70. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(A) (McKinney 2010).

71. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(B) (McKinney 2010).

72. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).

73. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).

74. Petitioning for return of your child is discussed in Part C(5) of this Chapter.

75. Involuntary termination of parental rights is discussed in Part D of this Chapter.

76. Before relatives can get such payments, the DSS Commissioner must complete a foster care certification study of the relative's home. But, in an emergency, a relative can receive funds immediately. The caretaker can also receive Medicaid for the child but cannot get other forms of public assistance because foster care payments would replace them. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 458-b, 458-c, 458-d (McKinney 2003).

77. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney 2010).

78. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b (McKinney 2010).

79. New York state law requires that the state attempt to locate adequate living arrangements with a relative or friend of yours before it places your child with strangers. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1-a) (McKinney 2010) (in the context of voluntary placement); N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1017 (McKinney 2010) (in the context of involuntary placement); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.10(b)(2) (2019).

In some circumstances, your child may be placed in foster care without your consent. This is known as “involuntary placement.” Involuntary placement can occur before you are incarcerated or as a result of your incarceration. If you do not consent in writing to the removal of your child and a preliminary hearing has not yet been held, your child can be removed only if there is an immediate danger to his health or life. In such an emergency, the court may order removal without a hearing, or DSS may remove your child before receiving a court order.⁸⁰

Involuntary placement does not mean that your child has been permanently taken from you. However, in order to avoid termination of your parental rights, you must fulfill certain obligations and demonstrate that you have taken some responsibility for your child. The state also has a duty to make “diligent efforts”⁸¹ to foster a close relationship between you and your child and to help you fulfill your duties as a parent so that you can get custody of your child back. ASFA has created some exceptions to the state’s duty to show “diligent efforts.” These obligations, rights, and exceptions are discussed below in Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter.

(a) Preliminary Hearing

DSS must petition the family court to hold a “preliminary hearing” where the judge will decide whether your child must be temporarily removed from your home. The judge will look to see if there is an immediate risk to your child’s health or life.⁸² This hearing must be held the day after the petition is filed.⁸³ If your child has already been removed, the judge will determine whether the child should remain in care outside of the home by looking to see if there is an immediate risk to your child’s health or life.⁸⁴ As in voluntary foster care placements, the state must search for a suitable relative to take your child into his or her care.⁸⁵ The court can order DSS to locate your child’s other parent and any relatives and to inform them of the procedure for seeking custody or becoming foster parents of your child.⁸⁶

DSS must try to notify you of the petition and proceedings, and you are allowed to attend them.⁸⁷ However, the judge may proceed with the hearing even if you are not present.⁸⁸ If your child is removed, a date will be set for a “permanency hearing.”⁸⁹ It is important for you to note this date, which will be included in the court’s order removing your child.

(b) Fact-Finding Hearing

After the preliminary hearing, the court will hold a full hearing to decide whether or not your child was neglected or abused, or is at risk of being neglected or abused.⁹⁰ This part of the case is called the “fact-finding hearing.”⁹¹ Since you will not be in the home while you are in prison, the state can easily

80. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT §§ 1022(a), 1024(a) (McKinney 2010).

81. See Section 4(a) of this Part for examples of what DSS must do in order to meet the “diligent efforts” standard.

82. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1027(b)(i) (McKinney 2010).

83. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1027(a)(i) (McKinney 2010).

84. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1027(b)(i) (McKinney 2010).

85. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1017 (McKinney 2010).

86. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1017 (McKinney 2010).

87. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT §§ 1023, 1027(a)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

88. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1027(b) (McKinney 2010).

89. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1027(h) (McKinney 2010 &); see also Subsection (d) of this Section, “Permanency Hearings.”

90. A child is “neglected” if he has suffered or is in danger of suffering physical, mental, or emotional harm because the parent cannot or will not provide the proper care. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1012(f)(i) (McKinney 2010). A child is “abused” when the parent causes, allows, or creates a risk of serious emotional or physical injury that is likely to cause death or serious physical harm, and the parent does not do so accidentally. A child is also considered abused when a parent commits or allows to be committed a sex offense against the child. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1012(e) (McKinney 2010).

91. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1044 (McKinney 2010).

show that your child is at risk of neglect, unless you have arranged for a relative or a friend to take care of your child in your absence.

The judge must make sure that you are present at the hearing or that every reasonable effort has been made to notify you of it.⁹² If you choose not to appear, the court will proceed without you.⁹³ If you do not have money to retain a lawyer, the judge must appoint a free lawyer to represent you at this hearing (and the later dispositional and permanency hearings)⁹⁴ and must also appoint a lawyer to represent your child.⁹⁵

To ensure you will be at the hearing, you or your lawyer should ask the judge to order the prison, using an Order to Produce, to bring you to court that day. Appendix A has a sample letter requesting that the judge submit an Order to Produce to your prison. If, because of your incarceration, you cannot be at the hearing on the day it is scheduled, you or your lawyer should explain that to the judge. The judge should change the date to make sure you can be there.

(c) Dispositional Hearing

If the court makes a finding of abuse or neglect, it will hold another hearing, called the “dispositional hearing.” This hearing may take place directly after the fact-finding hearing,⁹⁶ but it usually happens after an adjournment (when the court postpones the hearing until a later date). You and your lawyer have the right to participate in the dispositional hearing, and the judge cannot proceed without proof that the agency actually notified you of the hearing. After hearing the case, the judge can make one of several rulings: return your child to you, adjourn the case for several months with the intention of dismissing the case later, or order placement of your child in foster care.⁹⁷

The judge should inform you that if you fail either to maintain contact with your child or plan for your child's future, your parental rights may be terminated. Your duties as the natural parent are discussed in Part (C)(5)(b), and termination of parental rights is discussed in Part D of this Chapter.

Also, at the dispositional hearing or at the permanency hearing, (discussed in Subsection (d) of this Section), the court can order the foster care agency to make “diligent efforts” to “encourage and strengthen the parental relationship.”⁹⁸ For example, the judge can order the agency to arrange visits between you and your child by bringing your child to visit you. You or your lawyer should ask the judge to order this visitation because visiting with your child will strengthen your relationship and will help your case when you ask that your child be returned to you. The judge can also order the agency to assist you with housing, employment, counseling, medical care, psychiatric treatment, and any other appropriate services that your prison facility can provide.

The judge will make a dispositional order, which must include:

- (1) a description of the visitation plan;⁹⁹
- (2) a statement that you have the right to attend planning conferences (with a lawyer) about your child's foster care and that you should be told when those meetings will occur;¹⁰⁰ and
- (3) a notice that if your child remains in foster care for fifteen of the most recent twenty-two months, the agency may be required to file a termination of your parental rights.¹⁰¹

92. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1041 (McKinney 2010).

93. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1042 (McKinney 2010). If you did not willfully refuse to appear at the hearing, you may, within one year, petition the court for a rehearing, which the court should grant.

94. Dispositional hearings are discussed in Subsection (c) of this Section. Permanency hearings are discussed in Subsection (d) of this Section.

95. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT §§ 249, 262 (McKinney 2010).

96. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1047(a) (McKinney 2010).

97. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1052(a) (McKinney 2010).

98. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney 2010).

99. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(vii)(A) (McKinney 2010).

100. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(vii)(B) (McKinney 2010).

101. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(d)(2)(vii)(D) (McKinney 2010).

You have a right to a copy of this order, so remember to ask for a copy if one is not provided to you.¹⁰²

(d) Permanency Hearings

The agency that has custody of your child must conduct a permanency hearing within eight months of your child's removal.¹⁰³

The purpose of a permanency hearing is to determine the long-term plans for your child.¹⁰⁴ The court will also examine whether you and the agency have been following the plan for your child and whether the plan should be adjusted because of changed circumstances.¹⁰⁵ In considering whether extension of placement is in the best interest of your child, the court will look at the permanency goal.¹⁰⁶ As a result of the ASFA, the statute was changed to allow alternative permanent plans to be made for the child, like discharge to a "fit and willing relative."¹⁰⁷

As the natural parent, you are a necessary party to the hearing, and you have a right to be present and to have the court appoint a lawyer to represent you.¹⁰⁸ It is very important to attend the permanency hearing. The permanency hearing should be scheduled during the original hearing when your child was ordered removed,¹⁰⁹ but you must be re-notified of the date of the permanency hearing at least fourteen days in advance.¹¹⁰ You should also receive a copy of the agency's permanency hearing report,¹¹¹ a document that includes an update on your child's well-being and on the agency's recommendation for your child's future placement.¹¹²

If you are released from prison and want your child back immediately, or before the next permanency hearing, you should request that the agency return your child. If the agency does not fulfill your request within thirty days, you can ask the court to terminate your child's placement.¹¹³ However, this motion does not mean that the court will return your child immediately. The court may first have a hearing to determine whether your child should be returned.¹¹⁴

102. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(e) (McKinney 2010).

103. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(a)(2) (McKinney 2010). The statute states that the permanency hearing must take place "no later than six months from the date which is sixty days after the child was removed from his or her home . . . [and] shall be completed within thirty days of the scheduled date certain." Adding the six months and 60 days means that the hearing must happen within eight months from the day your child was removed from your home.

104. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(a) (McKinney 2010).

105. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(c)(5)(i) (McKinney 2010).

106. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(c)(1) (McKinney 2010).

107. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(c)(1)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

108. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1090(b) (McKinney 2010).

109. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(a)(2) (McKinney 2010).

110. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Frederick W., 120 Misc. 2d 335, 342, 465 N.Y.S.2d 828, 833 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 1983) (requiring dismissal of agency's petition to extend the placement of the child where the agency failed to give notice to parent).

111. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Three Children Free for Adoption, 138 Misc. 2d 584, 586, 525 N.Y.S.2d 135, 137 (Fam. Ct. Delaware County 1988) (dismissing petition for a permanency hearing as it would require the notice of parents even for children freed from adoption); In re Frederick W., 120 Misc. 2d 335, 342, 465 N.Y.S.2d 828, 833 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 1983) (dismissing petition to extend placement of child for failure to serve parent with petition).

112. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1087(e) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Three Children Free for Adoption, 138 Misc. 2d 584, 585, 525 N.Y.S.2d 135, 136 (Fam. Ct. Delaware County 1988) (stating that an argument that parents are not entitled to notice "flies directly in the face of case law and of the plain and unambiguous language of the statute.").

113. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1062 (McKinney 2010). You or your lawyer should go to the Petition Room at the family court. Someone there will help you put your case on the court calendar, which will schedule a hearing to determine whether your child will be returned to you.

114. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1064 (McKinney 2010).

4. Working with Foster Care Agencies

(a) Placement with an Agency

Soon after your child enters the foster care system, DSS may transfer the responsibility for the case to an authorized private foster care agency. This transfer is often done in New York City cases, but is not usually done in the rest of New York state. The transfer does not mean your child will be physically moved but only that an agency other than DSS will supervise the placement.

If your child is placed with a private agency, you should be told the name of that agency as well as the agency caseworker assigned to your child. Until you receive this notice, you should maintain contact with the caseworker from DSS so you can take care of the responsibilities you have.¹¹⁵ If you do not hear from the new caseworker, write to DSS and the new agency to let them know. You should show them that you are concerned about your child's well-being and that you want to be kept informed about your child's whereabouts. The more interest and concern you show for your child, the less likely it is that DSS will seek, or that the court will approve, termination of your parental rights. It may also make the foster care agency more open to using one of the ASFA exceptions to the requirements for terminating parental rights. Termination of parental rights is discussed fully in Part D of this Chapter.

(b) Development of a Service Plan

When you are assigned a caseworker from DSS or a private agency, the caseworker should contact you to arrange a meeting to discuss your child's service plan. However, this is not usually done while you are incarcerated, so you should request a meeting in writing. It may be possible to arrange a conference by telephone. You should also try to keep the agency caseworker informed about programs you are participating in while you are incarcerated, such as drug treatment or parenting skills classes.

If you and the caseworker are able to meet, you will develop a plan for your child's time in foster care.¹¹⁶ It is more likely, though, that the agency will develop the plan in your absence. If you voluntarily placed your child in foster care, the Voluntary Agreement Form might be the basis for this plan. The plan:

- (1) will include guidelines for the treatment your child will receive;
- (2) will state that a termination of parental rights proceeding may be filed against you by the agency if your child remains in foster care for fifteen out of the last twenty-two months;¹¹⁷
- (3) will outline the agency's program for helping to reunite you and your child;
- (4) should describe the care and services your child will receive while in foster care;
- (5) should state how often you will receive visits from your child;¹¹⁸
- (6) will state what you need to do to get your child back; and
- (7) will list your obligations for working to achieve a permanent home for your child.¹¹⁹

It is not always easy to get a copy of the plan. You should request it in writing. If the agency still does not provide you with the service plan for your family, you should inform the DSS case manager immediately in writing, as well as the judge at the next permanency hearing. When you get a copy of the plan, be sure to keep it for your records.

5. Rights and Obligations under Voluntary or Involuntary Foster Care

Both you and the agency have obligations (things you must do) towards each other and towards your child. If you do not fulfill your obligations, the agency may go to court to try to terminate your parental rights, which means that someone else could adopt your child without your consent. In a termination of parental rights proceeding where the agency accuses you of permanent neglect, the 115. See N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v) (McKinney 2010) (describing parents' obligations when they have a child in foster care).

116. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 428.6 (2019).

117. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(ix) (McKinney 2010).

118. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

119. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v) (McKinney 2010).

agency will first have to prove that it fulfilled its own obligations before the judge will consider ending your parental rights.

(a) The Department of Social Services' ("DSS") Obligations

DSS has certain responsibilities when it takes custody of your child. As previously discussed, its first obligation is to try to find a home for your child with a relative.¹²⁰ Again, if you know someone who can take good care of your child that your child likes, you can suggest this person or family member to DSS.

If DSS cannot find family members with whom your child might be able to live, it must do the following:

- (1) Place your child in a setting that allows for the least disruption of the child's life as possible.¹²¹
- (2) Keep a record of your child's progress;¹²²
- (3) Provide a caseworker who will regularly meet with you, your child, and your child's foster parents and who, with your help, will write a plan for the care of your child;¹²³
- (4) Demonstrate compliance with the plan;¹²⁴ and
- (5) Provide reasonable care for and supervision of the child during the course of the placement.¹²⁵

More importantly, in most cases, DSS has a general legal obligation to make what the law calls "diligent efforts" to encourage a relationship between you and your child,¹²⁶ although there are some exceptions created by ASFA. "Diligent efforts" include:

- (1) Keeping you informed of your child's progress;¹²⁷
- (2) Making arrangements with your correctional facility for your child to visit you regularly in the facility;¹²⁸ and

120. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(1-a)(a) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.10(b)(2) (2019) (describing standards for necessary activities prior to placement including search for a relative or family friend); N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1017(1) (McKinney 2010) (describing DSS obligations for placing children and locating relatives).

121. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.11(c)(1)(i) (2019) (suggesting that the child be able to stay in touch with the "persons, groups and institutions" with which the child was involved before, where possible). Similarly, the child's setting should be the "least restrictive and most homelike" as possible. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.11(d)(1) (2019).

122. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 428.3(b)(1)(vi) (2019).

123. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 428.6 (2019).

124. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, §§ 428.1, 430.12(c)(1)(ii)(c) (2019).

125. See Andrews v. Cnty. of Otsego, 112 Misc.2d 37, 39, 446 N.Y.S.2d 169, 171 (Sup. Ct. Otsego County 1982) (holding that a county with custody of a foster care child has a continuing obligation to protect the child's health, safety, and welfare and can be held liable for negligent placement or supervision of a child).

126. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 385, 389, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1148, 1150, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 430, 432 (1984) (explaining that the agency must make "affirmative, repeated, and meaningful efforts to assist" a parent before initiating a parental rights termination proceeding and approving dismissal of permanent neglect petition filed by foster care agency where father had made visits regularly, established paternity, and developed a plan to take custody of the child, but the agency did not fulfill its "diligent efforts" requirement); In re Ericka M., 285 A.D.2d 986, 986-987, 727 N.Y.S.2d 234, 235 (4th Dept 2001) (dismissing petition for termination of parental rights because agency did not show, by clear and convincing evidence, that it made "diligent efforts" to strengthen the parent-child bond); In re Jamie M., 96 A.D.2d 737, 737, 465 N.Y.S.2d 339, 340 (4th Dept 1983) (finding that the agency failed to make "diligent efforts" to help parents solve the very problems requiring removal of the children and causing the termination proceedings), aff'd, 63 N.Y.2d 388, 472 N.E.2d 311, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461 (N.Y. 1984).

127. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(4) (McKinney 2010); see also Matter of Gerald BB. v. Sheila CC., 51 A.D.3d 1081, 1084, 857 N.Y.S.2d 314, 318 (3d Dept 2008) (holding that DSS satisfied the requirement to keep parents informed as to child's progress as "written reports" were "routinely sent to the mother charting her children's progress while they were in foster care," and finding "that efforts were repeatedly made by members of DSS to involve the mother in discussions regarding plans for the children's future").

128. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010). The agency is also responsible for making

- (3) Providing or suggesting counseling or other services to resolve problems that may prevent your child's eventual return to you.¹²⁹

The exact meaning of "diligent efforts" will depend on the individual case. The agency may be required to maintain regular contact with you and inform you that failure to contact and plan for your child may result in a termination of your parental rights.¹³⁰ In one case, the court found that an agency did not make diligent efforts when it did not help parents satisfy agency requirements for the return of their child. Although the parents did not fulfill the agency's plan, which included finding a suitable home, having the means to support the child, and going to family counseling, the court held the agency should have made efforts to address problems, such as poverty, that kept the parents from fulfilling the agency requirements.¹³¹ In another case, an agency did not satisfy its statutory requirement when it failed to offer counseling to a child's incarcerated father, made no effort to help the father get visitation rights, and made no attempt to involve the father in his child's life.¹³²

In defining "diligent efforts" the highest court of New York has said that the foster care agency must make "meaningful efforts" to:

- (1) provide you with counseling for any problem, such as drug or alcohol abuse, that might be an obstacle to your child's eventual return to you;
- (2) help you find housing or employment;
- (3) help you plan for your child's future; and
- (4) provide opportunities for you and your child to have regular, meaningful visits.¹³³

Until the agency has demonstrated "some attempt" to assist you in these ways, a termination of parental rights should not be granted.¹³⁴

However, ASFA has changed the Department of Social Services' obligation to make reasonable attempts to preserve the family in some circumstances. In New York, the law states that if an incarcerated parent has failed more than once while incarcerated to cooperate with the agency's efforts to assist the parent to plan for the future of the child or with the agency's efforts to plan and arrange visits, then the agency will not have to present evidence that it made "diligent efforts."¹³⁵

Additionally, the law states that in making determinations involving reasonable or diligent efforts, "the health and safety of children" is the most important concern.¹³⁶ Efforts should be made to prevent removal of the child or to make it possible for the child to return home safely.¹³⁷ arrangements to transport your child to and from the facility to visit with you. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010); see also Matter of Gerald BB. v. Sheila CC., 51 A.D.3d 1081, 1084, 857 N.Y.S.2d 314, 318 (3d Dept 2008) (finding that DSS met its burden as they "arranged for [the mother], while incarcerated, to have visits with the children").

129. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010) (requiring the agency to coordinate with the prison to provide "rehabilitative services to resolve or correct the problems other than incarceration itself which impair the incarcerated parent's ability to maintain contact with the child").

130. See In re Shannon U., 210 A.D.2d 752, 753–754, 620 N.Y.S.2d 851, 852 (3d Dept 1994) (holding that agency was found to satisfy its duty because it had maintained regular contact with parents by phone, mail, home visits, and meetings and had arranged visits, counseling, and parenting classes).

131. See In re Jamie M., 63 N.Y.2d 388, 394–395, 472 N.E.2d 311, 314, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1984) (dismissing petition for termination of parental rights because the agency failed to show diligent efforts in addressing the unemployment and financial instability of parents).

132. See In re Jennifer Ann W., 198 A.D.2d 881, 882, 605 N.Y.S.2d 698, 699 (4th Dept 1993).

133. In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 384–385, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1147–1148, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 429–430 (1984).

134. In re Jamie M., 63 N.Y.2d 388, 394–395, 472 N.E.2d 311, 314, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (N.Y. 1984).

135. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(e)(ii) (McKinney 2010); see also Matter of Heart Share Human Servs. of N.Y., 28 Misc. 3d 1107, 1124, 906 N.Y.S.2d 472, 486 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 2010), reversed in part on other grounds, Matter of Charle Chiedu E., 2011 NY Slip Op 6842, 87 A.D.3d 1140, 930 N.Y.S.2d 456 (App. Div.) (recognizing three statutory exceptions to the diligent efforts requirements).

136. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(1) (McKinney 2010).

137. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(2) (McKinney 2003).

Reasonable efforts to prevent the removal of a child or to reunite a child with the birth family are not required in the following situations:¹³⁸

- (1) when a court has determined that the parent has subjected the child to aggravated circumstances, defined in New York as severe or repeated abuse;¹³⁹
- (2) when a court has determined that a parent has committed a serious act of violence, including murder or voluntary manslaughter, against one of the parent's children;¹⁴⁰ attempted, conspired, or solicited to commit such murder or voluntary manslaughter;¹⁴¹ or committed assault or aggravated assault on a child under eleven years old, resulting in serious bodily harm to the child or another child of the parent;¹⁴² or
- (3) when the parent's rights to one of the child's siblings (including half-siblings) have been terminated involuntarily.¹⁴³

If the agency decides not to make reasonable efforts to reunite your family, it must file a motion in court and the judge will decide if the agency can avoid making such efforts.¹⁴⁴ You should be notified of and given a copy of the motion.

(b) Your Obligations as a Parent

Like DSS, you must meet certain obligations while your child is in foster care. If you fail to satisfy these requirements, DSS may claim that you have abandoned or permanently neglected your child and may ask a court to terminate your parental rights.¹⁴⁵ New York law states that a parent who wishes to be reunited with a child in foster care has the following obligations:

- (1) To visit with the child;¹⁴⁶
- (2) To plan for the future of the child;¹⁴⁷
- (3) To consult with the foster agency about the child's foster care plan;¹⁴⁸
- (4) To contribute financially to the support of the child, if the parent is able;¹⁴⁹

138. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

139. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(12) (McKinney 2010). Severe abuse is defined to include conviction for (1) committing or soliciting murder or manslaughter of another child of the parent or another child for whom the parent is legally responsible; (2) assault against a child less than eleven years old; and (3) conviction for an above crime in any other jurisdiction. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(a)(iii) (McKinney 2010). Repeated abuse is defined to include (1) a finding of abuse of the child; (2) a finding of abuse, within the past five years, of that child or any other child for whom the parent is or was legally responsible; and (3) a finding that diligent efforts by the agency to encourage the parental relationship and to rehabilitate the parent have been unsuccessful and are "unlikely to be successful in the foreseeable future." N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(b) (McKinney 2010).

140. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(2) (McKinney 2010). Convictions for these offenses can occur in jurisdictions other than New York as long as (1) the offense includes all the essential elements of the New York crime, and (2) the victim of such offense was the child or another child of the parent. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(5) (McKinney 2010).

141. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(3) (McKinney 2003). Convictions for these offenses can occur in jurisdictions other than New York as long as (1) the offense includes all the essential elements of the New York crime, and (2) the victim of such offense was the child or another child of the parent. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(5) (McKinney 2003).

142. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(4) (McKinney 2003). Convictions for these offenses can occur in jurisdictions other than New York as long as (1) the offense includes all the essential elements of the New York crime, and (2) the victim of such offense was the child or another child of the parent. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(5) (McKinney 2003).

143. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(b)(6) (McKinney 2003); N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(3)(d) (McKinney 2003).

144. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(1) (McKinney 2003).

145. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-a(2)(c)(vi), 384-b(4)(b), 384-b(4)(d) (McKinney 2010).

146. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-a(2)(c)(v)(A), 384-b(5), 384-b(7)(a), 384-b(7)(b) (McKinney 2010).

147. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v)(B), 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010). For a definition of planning for the future of the child, see N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(c) (McKinney 2010) and the discussion in Part C(4)(b)(ii) below.

148. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v)(C) (McKinney 2010).

149. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(v)(D) (McKinney 2010).

- (5) To inform the agency of the parent's address every six months, even if it remains the same, and to inform the agency immediately of any change of name or address;¹⁵⁰ and
- (6) To cooperate with the agency.¹⁵¹

The courts interpret these requirements look at both “the particular facts and [the] totality of circumstances.”¹⁵² This means the court will look at the facts of your particular case as a whole when deciding whether to terminate your parental rights. Because the judge is supposed to look at the “totality of the circumstances” of your situation, he might decide not to terminate your parental rights even if you have not met all the obligations listed above. Also, the law says that, at the very least, an incarcerated parent has to “cooperate with [the agency] in its efforts to ... plan for the future of the child.”¹⁵³ If an incarcerated parent on more than one occasion fails to cooperate or has failed to inform the agency of his address for six months, the agency does not have to continue making diligent efforts to preserve the family, including providing for visitation.¹⁵⁴

If you want to retain your parental rights, you should make every effort to fulfill your obligations. In a termination proceeding, DSS has the burden of proof to show, by clear and convincing evidence, that you failed to fulfill your obligations.

(i) Visiting with Your Child

The law recognizes that incarcerated parents may have a difficult time arranging to visit with their children and planning for their children's futures. It will not be held against you if you cannot visit with your child as often as you would like or if the agency does not provide you with visits.¹⁵⁵ Remember, though, that visiting regularly is one of the most effective ways to maintain a healthy relationship with your child and to avoid termination of your parental rights. Visitation and other parental contacts, such as letters and phone calls, are generally seen as being in the best interests of the child.

Not visiting with your child can be proof of abandonment or permanent neglect and can lead to termination of your parental rights.¹⁵⁶ For example, one court held that a parent who failed to substantially maintain contact with her children during a period of over one year had not lived up to her foster care obligations.¹⁵⁷ You should try very hard to maintain contact with your child. Whether your child is in the custody of a relative, a friend, your ex-spouse, or in foster care, that person should bring your child to visit you.¹⁵⁸ Your parental rights are at stake, so make sure that you continuously try to visit with your child even if the foster parents or agency are making it difficult for you to see your child. If the judge sees that you did all that you could to try and maintain contact with your child, it will help you to regain custody of your child when you are released. Some prisons have programs to 150. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-a(2)(c)(v)(E), 384-b(7)(e)(i) (McKinney 2010).

151. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-a(2)(c)(v), 384-b(5), 384-b(7) (McKinney 2010).

152. In re Orlando F., 40 N.Y.2d 103, 111, 351 N.E.2d 711, 716, 386 N.Y.S.2d 64, 68 (N.Y. 1976) (holding that finding of permanent neglect and termination of parental rights was appropriate where mother maintained contact with son but failed to plan for his future by not getting stable housing for three years).

153. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(e)(ii) (McKinney 2010).

154. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(e) (McKinney 2010).

155. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-b(7)(e)(i), 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010).

156. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 384-b(5), 384-b(7)(a), 384-b(7)(b) (McKinney 2010).

157. See In re Comm'r. of Soc. Serv., 84 Misc. 2d 253, 258–259, 376 N.Y.S.2d 387, 393 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. 1975) (explaining that a parent's failure to maintain continuous contact with the child can result in the termination of parental rights); see also In re I.R., 153 A.D.2d 559, 561, 544 N.Y.S.2d 216, 217–218 (N.Y. App. Div. 1989) (explaining that incarceration alone does not excuse a parent from maintaining contact with his child).

158. See Wise v. Del Toro, 122 A.D.2d 714, 714–715, 505 N.Y.S.2d 880, 881 (N.Y. App. Div. 1986) (reversing denial of visitation to an incarcerated father because he did not have the opportunity to present evidence and because incarceration alone does not make visitation inappropriate); R.J. v. D.J., 133 Misc. 2d 883, 887, 508 N.Y.S.2d 838, 841 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. 1986) (holding that while incarceration alone does not prevent visitation with parent's child, frequent visits were unnecessary because of the stress to the mother who had to take the child to visits).

help incarcerated people keep in contact with their children.¹⁵⁹ You should look into any such programs available at your facility and tell your caseworker that you and your child wish to participate in the programs.

The foster care agency is required by law to make “diligent efforts” to encourage frequent and regular visits between you and your child.¹⁶⁰ The agency usually has to provide visits every other week if the permanency plan for the child is returning the child to you (or “reunification”).¹⁶¹ The agency must do whatever it can to help make sure you get to meet with your child, including providing you with financial assistance or help arranging transportation.¹⁶² A court may even order that you be allowed to visit with your child in a different facility if that will make it easier for your child to visit you, but this will usually be a day trip with a guard and not a permanent transfer.¹⁶³ Prison officials do not have to set up visits between you and your child outside of your correctional facility unless it is “reasonably feasible” (not very difficult or inconvenient) and is in the best interests of your child.¹⁶⁴

Because prisons generally restrict visitation hours, it may be difficult for a caseworker to arrange for your child to meet with you in prison. However, logistical difficulties are not an excuse for caseworkers to stop arranging visits. The law requires the caseworker to set up visits. It also requires jail officials to cooperate with the caseworker to arrange the visits.¹⁶⁵

In very specific cases, the court might prevent you from being able to visit with your child. A court can also determine that visitation is harmful to the child’s welfare and order that no visits occur. In New York, “[t]he denial of visitation to a natural parent is a drastic remedy and should be done only where there are compelling reasons and substantial evidence that such visitation is detrimental to the children’s welfare.”¹⁶⁶ This means there has to be an extremely important reason why visits would be harmful to your child, and the agency must be able to prove that such a reason actually exists and that it is truly harmful. Also, if visitation is not permitted, then the lack of visits cannot be used against you as the basis for a permanent neglect or abandonment proceeding.¹⁶⁷

(ii) Planning for Your Child

Courts recognize that your ability to participate in your child’s upbringing is limited because you are incarcerated. Nevertheless, they still require that you think ahead and have a plan to care for your child. This may include finding a home for your child among friends or relatives or preparing yourself for reunification. Planning ahead will demonstrate that you care about your child and have an interest in being a parent.

According to one parental rights specialist, your plan should include the following:

- (1) How you will support yourself and your child after your release (for example, by getting public assistance or finding a job);
- (2) Where you and your child will live;
- (3) Where your child will go to school;

159. You may, for example, be eligible to apply for the Family Reunion Program (“FRP”) if it is offered by your correctional facility. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2 (1998).

160. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010).

161. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.12(d)(1)(i) (2006).

162. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.12(d)(1) (2006).

163. See In re Gadson, 124 Misc. 2d 1024, 1026–1027, 478 N.Y.S.2d 498, 500 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. 1984) (permitting visitation at a facility different from the one where parent was incarcerated because it was in the best interests of the children, the alternate facility allowed for meaningful visitation, and transportation was feasible).

164. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(2) (McKinney 2010).

165. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 619 (McKinney 2014).

166. Parker v. Ford, 89 A.D.2d 806, 807, 453 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466 (N.Y. App. Div. 1982) (holding that petitioner father, despite alcohol abuse, was improperly denied supervised visitation, where there was no evidence that supervised visitation would be detrimental to the child’s welfare). But see Sullivan Cnty. Dep’t. of Soc. Serv. v. Richard C., 260 A.D.2d 680, 682–683, 687 N.Y.S.2d 470, 472 (N.Y. App. Div. 1999) (denying visitation between father and child where psychologist and child’s therapist recommended that visits be suspended until child developed the strength to deal with family problems, since child consistently showed regression after contact with father).

167. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010).

- (4) How you will provide for your child's medical needs (for example, with Medicaid);
- (5) What kind of religious upbringing, if any, you want for your child;
- (6) Who will watch your child if you are out of the house; and
- (7) How you will provide for any special needs your child may have.¹⁶⁸

To prepare yourself as a parent, you should take part in any parenting courses available at your institution, attend vocational training classes to improve your chances of getting a job, and join drug or alcohol rehabilitation classes if necessary or ordered by a court. In general, you should do your best to participate in any programs that your caseworker suggests.

If you are incarcerated for an extended period of time, the court may not think arranging long-term foster care (as opposed to adoption) is an acceptable plan for your child's future. Courts have terminated parental rights of incarcerated people who made long-term foster care arrangements for their children when the parent would not get out of prison until the children were over 18.¹⁶⁹ If you are in this situation, the government has the authority to terminate your parental rights. See Section D below for a longer discussion of what happens when the government tries to permanently terminate your parental rights.

(iii) Contact with Your Child and the Foster Care Agency

In addition to visiting with your child whenever you can, you should stay in touch by sending letters, birthday and holiday cards, and gifts to your child. If your child is too young to read, draw a picture or send a note that someone else can read aloud to them. These actions will show the court that you are interested in and planning for your child's future and that you have made an effort to fulfill your parental obligations.

You should also contact your caseworker regularly, both to inform him of your progress in prison and to ask about your child. If you do not tell the agency about your current address for six months or more, the agency is no longer required to try as hard to facilitate the relationship between you and your child.¹⁷⁰ Keep track of all your communication with your child and with your caseworker, including making copies of letters and cards and keeping a list of phone calls you make. Keeping accurate records is very important because if the agency ever petitions to terminate your parental rights, you will have proof that you were, in fact, fulfilling your obligations.

4. Assuming Care of Your Child after Release

If you voluntarily place your child in foster care, your Voluntary Placement Form may include a specific release date for your child. In that case, the agency must return the child to you on that date.¹⁷¹ If you will still be incarcerated on the release date specified in the Voluntary Placement Form, you should inform your caseworker. A new release date can be chosen, and your child can remain in foster care until then.¹⁷²

If you wish to have your child returned earlier than the date listed on the Voluntary Placement Form, you must send a written request to the agency stating the new requested date of return and 168. Philip M. Genty, Memorandum for Incarcerated Parents with Children in Foster Care 3 (1988) (on file with the Columbia Human Rights Law Review).

169. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (upholding termination of parental rights for incarcerated parents who made arrangements for long-term foster care until children were no longer minors); In re "Female" V., 21 A.D.3d 1118, 1119, 803 N.Y.S.2d 636, 637–638 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) (upholding termination of parental rights for an incarcerated father who, among other things, "was unable to provide any 'realistic and feasible' alternative" to having his children remain in foster care until they became adults or he was released from prison) (quoting N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(c) (McKinney 2010)).

170. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(e)(i) (McKinney 2010).

171. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

172. See N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(3) (McKinney 2010) (describing how to amend a Voluntary Placement Form).

your reasons for wanting to change the date.¹⁷³ The agency may return your child, or they have ten days to deny your request.¹⁷⁴ If your request is denied, you can challenge the denial in court.¹⁷⁵

If the Placement Form does not say a specific release date, you can request the return of your child at any time by writing a letter to the agency. The agency must return your child to you within twenty days or get a court order to keep them in foster care. If the agency does get this court order, it will probably bring neglect proceedings against you.¹⁷⁶ Generally, the agency will have to prove that you would not be able to provide for your child—meaning that your child would be at risk of neglect or abuse—before it can get an order extending your child’s foster care.

If you did not voluntarily place your child in foster care, but were forced to do so by the state (meaning you did it “involuntarily”), you may file a motion with the court to end the involuntary placement.¹⁷⁷ However, cannot go straight to the court to ask for your child back. You must first apply to the agency asking them to terminate the foster care placement. Once they deny your request, then you can file the motion with the court.

Regardless of whether your child was placed in foster care voluntarily or involuntarily, you may be eligible for assistance from DSS once you are released from prison and have regained custody of your child. After your release, DSS must provide supportive and rehabilitative services, called “preventive services,” to you and your family if there is a serious risk that you will not be able to care for your child and that the child will be put in foster care again.¹⁷⁸ You should discuss getting additional assistance with your DSS caseworker before your release from prison. If you fail to do this and realize that you need additional assistance after returning home, you can still discuss it with your caseworker because your caseworker must meet with you at least three times after your child is released from foster care.¹⁷⁹

If you need housing after your release from prison, you may be eligible for a housing subsidy from DSS of up to $300 every month for up to three years. DSS gives this subsidy to parents when the main reason their child is being kept in foster care is that the parent cannot find adequate housing.¹⁸⁰ If you need help paying for housing, ask your caseworker about the subsidy and explain that you want to apply for it.

D. Involuntary Termination of Parental Rights

There are a few different people who can start court proceedings to convince a court that terminating your parental rights and placing your child up for adoption is the best solution for your child. These people include DSS, foster parents, a relative with care or custody of your child, or your child’s legal guardian.¹⁸¹ New York state law says that the state cannot terminate your parental rights just because you are in prison.¹⁸² The law also recognizes that incarcerated parents have special

173. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010). Reasons for changing the date of your child’s release from foster care might include, for example, a shorter prison sentence than originally anticipated or your decision to place your child with a relative or friend.

174. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

175. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010); see also N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 358-a(8) (McKinney 2010) (pointing out that any order by a family court can be appealed pursuant to Article 11 of the Family Court Act).

176. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

177. See N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 1062 (McKinney 2010).

178. You may be eligible for any of the services described in N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.2 (2014), which include daycare, housekeeper/chore services, psychiatric counseling, and parent training services. See also N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 409 (McKinney 2010) (defining preventive services); N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 409-a (McKinney 2010) (detailing the duties of social services officials to provide preventative services); N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-a(2)(c)(iv)–(vii) (McKinney 2010) (describing the terms for transfer of care and custody of children).

179. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.4(h) (2014).

180. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 409-a(5)(c) (McKinney 2010).

181. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(b) (McKinney 2010).

182. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(2)(b) (McKinney 2010) (stating that the term parent “shall include an incarcerated parent unless otherwise qualified”). But see In re Love Russell J., 7 A.D.3d 799, 800, 776 N.Y.S.2d 859, 859 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) (finding that termination of parental rights due to permanent neglect was proper circumstances that judges should consider when looking at a parent's efforts to maintain contact with and plan for their children.¹⁸³ However, ASFA has made it easier for the state to terminate your rights as a parent.

If you do not consent to giving your child up for adoption, a court may terminate your parental rights only if it finds that at least one of the following things is true:

- (1) You have abandoned your child for a period of at least six months immediately prior to the date on which the termination petition was filed,¹⁸⁴
- (2) You permanently neglected your child,¹⁸⁵
- (3) You cannot and will not be able to provide proper care because of mental illness or intellectual disability (which used to be called mental retardation),¹⁸⁶ or
- (4) You have severely or repeatedly abused your child.¹⁸⁷

Under ASFA in New York, if any of the following are true, the foster care agency must file for termination of parental rights:

- (1) Your child has been in foster care for fifteen of the most recent twenty-two months;¹⁸⁸
- (2) The child has been determined by a court to be abandoned;¹⁸⁹
- (3) You have been convicted of certain crimes, such as conspiring, soliciting, attempting, or committing murder or manslaughter of another of your children for whom you are legally responsible,¹⁹⁰ or attempting or committing assault on a child under eleven years of age who is a child of the parent (you) or a child for whom you are legally responsible;¹⁹¹ or
- (4) You have been convicted of any of the above crimes in another jurisdiction.¹⁹²

The State is still required to prove its case in order to actually terminate your rights. But even if any of the four conditions above apply to you (where the agency is required to file under ASFA), the agency does not need to file for termination proceedings if any of the following things are also true:

- (1) Your child is being cared for by a relative;¹⁹³
- (2) The agency has documented in the plan a compelling reason that filing a petition to terminate parental rights would not be in the best interest of the child;¹⁹⁴ or against an incarcerated father whose only plan for his children's welfare was extended placement in foster care, especially when he had been warned by the agency that this plan was insufficient).

183. See N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Custody & Guardianship of Sasha R., 246 A.D.2d 1, 7, 675 N.Y.S.2d 605, 609 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998) (discussing how the New York legislature acknowledged that incarcerated parents have "special circumstances" that should be taken into account when evaluating the parent's efforts to meet the statutory contact and planning requirements) (citing In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1057, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 540–541 (N.Y. 1989)).

184. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(4)(b) (McKinney 2010). Under New York state law, a parent abandons a child when he shows "an intent to forego his or her parental rights and obligations ... by his or her failure to visit the child and communicate with the child or agency, although able to do so and not prevented or discouraged from doing so by the agency." N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(5)(a) (McKinney 2010).

185. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(4)(d) (McKinney 2010). A parent permanently neglects a child when he "continuously or repeatedly" fails for a period of either one year, or fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months, "to maintain contact with or plan for the future of the child, although physically and financially able to do so" N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010).

186. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(4)(c) (McKinney 2010).

187. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(4)(e) (McKinney 2010). See Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter for a definition of severe and repeated abuse. Under N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(b)(ii)(A) (McKinney 2010), repeated abuse that will lead to the termination of parental rights also includes a parent committing or "knowingly" allowing a felony sex offense to be committed against his child.

188. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i) (McKinney 2010).

189. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i) (McKinney 2010).

190. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(A)–(B) (McKinney 2010).

191. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(C) (McKinney 2010).

192. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(D) (McKinney 2010).

193. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i)(A) (McKinney 2010).

194. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(i)(B) (McKinney 2010). Compelling reasons are defined in N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(i)(ii) (McKinney 2010).

- (3) The agency has not provided you) with adequate reunification services in cases where those services are part of the reasonable efforts requirement.¹⁹⁵

When the foster care agency alleges in a petition that your case falls into one of the four categories listed above and files for termination of parental rights (where the agency is required to file under ASFA), the court will first hold a fact-finding hearing to see if the agency's allegation is true. Then, in all cases involving permanent neglect or severe or repeated abuse, it will hold a "dispositional hearing."¹⁹⁶ In the dispositional hearing, the judge will decide whether terminating your parental rights is in your child's best interest. In cases of abandonment or mental illness, dispositional hearings are not required, and your parental rights may be terminated automatically if the court finds there is abandonment or mental illness in the fact-finding hearing. However, the court may still choose to hold a dispositional hearing in those instances.

One possible compromise in a proceeding to terminate parental rights is a "suspended judgment" for one year.¹⁹⁷ A suspended judgment means that the court will monitor the situation for a year and then determine what to do before entering the actual judgment. That year is similar to being on probation. The court will require you to satisfy certain conditions. For example, the court may require you to communicate and visit with your child regularly, enroll in counseling programs, and cooperate with the agency in planning for your child's future. If you do not comply with the conditions of the order, the court may take back the suspended order and terminate your parental rights.

1. DSS-Initiated Termination Proceedings

Most termination proceedings against incarcerated parents charge the parent with abandonment or permanent neglect. These terms have specific legal meanings which are explained below.

(a) Abandonment

"Abandonment" means that that for a period of six months before the termination petition was filed, you failed to communicate and visit with your child¹⁹⁸ even though you were able to do so and the agency never told you not to visit or communicate.¹⁹⁹ If the agency wants to terminate your parental rights for abandonment, they will have to show that you did these things. However, in order to prove abandonment, the agency does not have to show that it attempted to help you meet with your child.²⁰⁰ So, it is good to keep your own records of your attempts to communicate with the child and with the agency. This way you will have evidence to support you if the agency says things that are not true, such as that you never tried to see your child.

(b) Permanent Neglect

Under New York law, a parent "permanently neglects" his child who is in the care of an agency when the parent fails to maintain contact with the child or plan for his future for a period of either one year, or fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months, even though he was capable to do so (both physically and financially).²⁰¹ During that period of time, the agency must make diligent efforts to

195. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(l)(i)(C) (McKinney 2010).

196. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(e) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 623 (McKinney 2009). See Part C(2)(c) of this Chapter for information on dispositional hearings.

197. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 633 (McKinney 2009); see also Comm'r. of Soc. Serv. v. Rufelle C., 156 Misc. 2d 410, 416, 593 N.Y.S.2d 401, 405 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. 1992) (granting respondent parent a rehearing to determine whether parent had fulfilled the conditions of the suspended judgment).

198. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(4)(b) (McKinney 2010).

199. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(5)(a) (McKinney 2010).

200. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(5)(b) (McKinney 2010).

201. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010).

strengthen the parental relationship.²⁰² The agency does not have to make diligent efforts where a court has previously decided that those efforts are not necessary.²⁰³

When the agency charges permanent neglect, the court must first look at the actions that DSS took in your case before they look at your behavior. DSS must prove that, where required, DSS or the foster care agency involved made diligent efforts (as discussed in Part C(4)(a)) to strengthen the relationship between you and your child, and to reunite your family.²⁰⁴ If you believe that the agency has not made diligent efforts, you or your lawyer needs to explain this to the judge and show that the agency did not actually make proper efforts. For example, if the agency never brought your child to prison for a visit, even though you repeatedly requested that they do so, or if the agency did not help you with a problem related to your parenting, you could bring that up to show the agency did not make diligent efforts to strengthen your relationship. Use telephone logs and copies of bills to establish that you made these efforts. Ask your lawyer to subpoena people from the prison to testify on your behalf.

Once a court has found permanent neglect, it will hold a dispositional hearing to consider the best interests of the child. A child's best interests (legally speaking) involve his physical and emotional well-being, including a permanent home and a normal, stable family atmosphere.²⁰⁵

2. Defending Yourself Against Termination of Parental Rights

It is very important that you attend the termination hearing. The agency must serve you with notice (meaning they must tell you the time and location) of the hearing,²⁰⁶ and inform you that you have a right to attend.²⁰⁷ At the hearing, DSS will challenge your capabilities as a parent, and you

202. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010). Compare In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 380, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1145, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 427 (1984) (finding that the foster care agency did not exercise diligent efforts in fostering the relationship between a biological father and his child), with In re Demetrius F., 176 A.D.2d 940, 941, 575 N.Y.S.2d 552, 552 (2d Dept. 1991) (finding that it is unnecessary for the agency to show that it exercised diligent efforts to foster the relationship between a parent and child where the ground for termination of parental rights is mental illness).

203. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2010).

204. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(7)(f) (McKinney 2010) (defining diligent efforts).

205. In re Michael B., 80 N.Y.2d 299, 311–312, 314–315, 604 N.E.2d 122, 129–131, 590 N.Y.S.2d 60, 67, 69 (1992) (concluding that the Appellate Division had used an incorrect test to decide what was in the child's best interests; the Appellate Division relied on the child's length of stay and his bonding with foster parents instead of considering the fitness of the biological parent, the agency's plan for the child, and the child's emotional well-being); In re Suzanne N.Y., 77 A.D.2d 433, 434, 433 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581–582 (1st Dept. 1980) (granting termination of parental rights where an eight-year-old child had lived with her foster parents since the age of four months and her mother was a schizophrenic who required medication to remain minimally functional), rev'd on other grounds, 54 N.Y.2d 824, 427 N.E.2d 1187, 443 N.Y.S.2d 722 (1981).

206. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(3)(e) (McKinney 2010).

207. New York courts have recognized the right to attend termination proceedings. See In re Daniel Aaron D., 49 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 403 N.E.2d 451, 452, 426 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730 (1980) (ruling that the mother should have been present at the hearing during the testimony of the court-appointed psychiatrist since mother had not waived her right to be present); see also In re Tyrell M., 283 A.D.2d 500, 501, 724 N.Y.S.2d 874, 875 (2d Dept. 2001) (finding that the family court erred in not allowing the mother to testify on her own behalf at the next court date prior to finding that she had neglected her children); In re Cleveland W., 256 A.D.2d 1151, 1151–1152, 684 N.Y.S.2d 121, 121 (4th Dept. 1998) (finding family court abused its discretion by proceeding with termination hearing even though respondent mother had called the court to inform them that she was too ill to attend; her attorney appeared and also told the court about the mother's illness, and the mother supplied a doctor's note documenting her illness); In re Kendra M., 175 A.D.2d 657, 658, 572 N.Y.S.2d 583, 585 (4th Dept. 1991) (finding that the family court erred in conducting the fact-finding hearing on a date when the incarcerated parent could not attend; also finding that the court should have made arrangements to have the parent brought from jail to be present at the hearing); In re Guardianship of Victory, 78 A.D.2d 843, 844, 433 N.Y.S.2d 445, 446 (1st Dept. 1980), aff'd, 52 N.Y.2d 1071 (N.Y. 1981) (affirming the right that a father of a child born out of wedlock has to participate and be heard at all stages of the proceeding regarding the child's foster care status). The only other states that have found such a right are Arizona, California, and Florida. Texas has held specifically that an incarcerated person has no right to be at the termination hearing. See Philip M. Genty, Procedural Due Process Rights of Incarcerated Parents in Termination of Parental Rights Proceedings: A Fifty State Analysis, 30 J. Fam. L. 757, should be there to respond to any issues they raise. If you are not at the hearing, you will not be able to defend yourself, and it might look like you are not interested in protecting your parental rights.

Although you have a right to attend the hearing, if you are in a facility outside of the state where the hearing will be held, the officials at your correctional facility probably will not bring you to the hearing. In one such case, a court held that a hearing could proceed without the presence of the incarcerated parent because the interests of the state and the child outweighed the parent's interest in being at the hearing.²⁰⁸ In other words, the court found that it was less important to wait for the incarcerated parent than for the state and the child to have the hearing.

If you are unable to attend the hearing, other ways to participate include testifying through a telephone conference call during the hearing, aggressive representation by your attorney (having your lawyer argue strongly for you), and testifying by deposition. A deposition is a special legal tool where you answer questions or make statements in another place and it is brought before the court in writing instead of you being there in person to testify.

To decide that you have not "abandoned" or "permanently neglected" your child, the court must find that you: (1) made an effort to keep in contact with your child (which includes contact that you have with the agency), and (2) planned for your child's future during your incarceration. These two conditions were discussed above.

In New York, you have a right to a lawyer for the termination hearing.²⁰⁹ The lawyer will help you argue your case for keeping your parental rights. You can either hire a lawyer yourself or ask the judge to assign one to you. Unfortunately, the family court is unlikely to appoint an attorney if you do not appear at the hearing. You may try to write to the court and respond to the allegations (accusations against you) in the petition or ask to have an attorney appointed.

(a) Maintaining Contact with Your Child

The best way to show that you have maintained contact with your child is to give the judge copies of all letters and proof of other communications that you have had with DSS, the caseworker, your child, the family court, the foster parent, and anyone else involved in your child's foster care. You should keep a file with photocopies or carbon copies of all of these documents. If you cannot photocopy the letters, keep a written record of each letter and a brief summary of what you wrote in the letter. You should also keep a telephone log of all of the calls you make. If you get charged for and pay for phone calls that you make, make sure to get receipts to show the judge.

The court will not accept being in jail or prison as an excuse for losing contact with your child. An incarcerated parent who does not make an effort to keep in touch with the child may be charged with permanent neglect or abandonment.²¹⁰ You must personally make contact and cannot rely on a relative 774–775 (1991/92).

208. See In re A.O., 157 Misc.2d 177, 179, 596 N.Y.S.2d 971, 973 (Fam. Ct. Bronx County 1993) (finding that a hearing could proceed because the incarcerated father's correctional facility in Connecticut refused to produce him and the father refused alternate methods for out-of-court participation, such as telephone conference and written sworn testimony); see also In re James Carton K., 245 A.D.2d 374, 376–77, 665 N.Y.S.2d 426, 428–29 (2d Dept. 1997) (affirming termination of parental rights despite parent's absence, and holding that a parent's right to be present for fact-finding and dispositional hearings in termination cases must be balanced with the child's right to a prompt and permanent adjudication), appeal denied, 91 N.Y.2d 809, 693 N.E.2d 750, 670 N.Y.S.2d 403 (1998). All the states that have decided this issue have ruled that a person incarcerated out of state does not have a right to be produced for the termination hearing. See Philip M. Genty, Procedural Due Process Rights of Incarcerated Parents in Termination of Parental Rights Proceedings: A Fifty State Analysis, 30 J. Fam. L. 757, 775–76 (1991/92).

209. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 262(a)(iv) (McKinney 2008). See Part H of Chapter 33 for more information on your right to counsel.

210. See In re Antia Siami D., 192 A.D.2d 389, 389, 596 N.Y.S.2d 64, 64 (1st Dept. 1993) (terminating incarcerated the parent's rights because the parent had failed to contact the child for more than six months, even though the parent could have sent a letter or communicated through another person); see also In re Ravon Paul H., 161 A.D.2d 257, 257–258, 555 N.Y.S.2d 49, 49 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding termination of parental rights to be in the best interests of the child where the incarcerated parent did not write, send gifts, telephone, or otherwise try to keep a relationship with the child or the agency; also stating that "sporadic and minimal attempts to maintain to make contact.²¹¹ Also, visitation and contact may not be enough if the court finds the quality of the visits or contacts poor or too infrequent.²¹²

The court may decide not to terminate your parental rights if you can show that you had a good reason for not communicating with your child and the agency. Usually, this means you must show that it was impossible for you to communicate with either the child or the agency.²¹³ However, in one case, an incarcerated father who had not communicated with his child or the agency for six months won against the agency in an abandonment proceeding by arguing that his child would be upset by visiting him in a prison setting, and explained that he could not communicate through letters or telephone calls because the child was an infant.²¹⁴ He also explained that he was scared to contact the agency because he was incarcerated, although he had attempted unsuccessfully to contact them once. In addition, this father had made plans for the child's future and he had asked his girlfriend to seek visitation with the child. The court concluded that the father's conduct demonstrated that he did not intend to give up his parental rights and responsibilities.²¹⁵

(b) Planning for Your Child

The second requirement you must satisfy to maintain your parental rights involves planning for your child. Planning for your child is discussed above in Part C(4)(b)(ii). Your plan must be reasonable and achievable.²¹⁶

To show that you are planning for your child's future, you can participate in whatever programs your facility offers for parents, such as parenting courses and drug and alcohol abuse counseling. It is very important that you have evidence of participating in those programs, so you should try to get a certificate that shows that you participated in or completed the program. Otherwise, you can ask your lawyer to subpoena a supervisor or counselor who can testify at the hearing about your progress and participation in a program. (A subpoena is an official court document that requires a person to appear in court at a specific time and place.)

3. Termination Proceedings Against Prisoners with Long-Term Sentences

Incarcerated people with long-term sentences will have a harder time keeping their parental rights. A plan for long-term foster care, even with adequate visitations and contacts, is not enough to a parental relationship are insufficient to prevent a finding of abandonment"); In re Shannon Q., 262 A.D.2d 679, 680, 690 N.Y.S.2d 788, 789 (3d Dept. 1999) (stating that "incarceration alone does not excuse respondent's failure to contact his child" where the parent did not try to contact Social Services to find out the location of his daughter).

211. See In re Thomas G., 165 A.D.2d 729, 729, 564 N.Y.S.2d 32, 33 (1st Dept. 1990) (holding that communication between a paternal grandmother and an agency did not satisfy the incarcerated father's obligation to make contact with his child); see also In re Christopher MM., 210 A.D.2d 767, 767, 620 N.Y.S.2d 853, 854 (3d Dept. 1994) (finding father's contacts to be "minimal and insubstantial" for the purposes of an abandonment proceeding when the only attempts to contact the child were three phone calls placed to child's grandparents), appeal denied, 85 N.Y.2d 807, 651 N.E.2d 918, 628 N.Y.S.2d 50 (1995).

212. See In re Cecelia A., 199 A.D.2d 582, 583, 604 N.Y.S.2d 327, 329 (3d Dept. 1993) (finding "sporadic and unsubstantial contacts" insufficient to defeat an abandonment petition supported by "clear and convincing evidence"); In re Tasha Monica B., 156 A.D.2d 247, 247, 548 N.Y.S.2d 508, 509 (1st Dept. 1989) (finding that visitation alone was insufficient to show parent was fulfilling obligations where the quality of visitation was poor).

213. See In re Trudell J.W., 119 A.D.2d 828, 828, 501 N.Y.S.2d 453, 453 (2d Dept. 1986) (finding that the termination of parental rights was appropriate where the mother did not produce evidence that her failure to contact the child or agency was a result of circumstances that made it impossible for her to do so).

214. See In re Baby Girl I., 210 A.D.2d 601, 602–603, 619 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (3d Dept. 1994).

215. See In re Baby Girl I., 210 A.D.2d 601, 602–03, 619 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (3d Dept. 1994).

216. See In re Leon RR, 48 N.Y.2d 117, 125–26, 397 N.E.2d 374, 379, 421 N.Y.S.2d 863, 868–69 (1979) (finding that the parents' plans for child's future were adequate where the parent solved personal problems that had led to the child's initial removal, found employment, found suitable housing, and sought psychological counseling).

fulfill the obligation of planning for an alternative living arrangement for your child.²¹⁷ ASFA's time limits make protecting your parental rights especially difficult in this situation.

New York's highest court has held that parents who will be in prison for a long time (ten to twenty years or twenty-five years to life), and who have no plan for their children other than to have the children remain in long-term foster care, should lose their parental rights.²¹⁸ The court decided that the law was not meant to allow children to stay in long-term foster care when their incarcerated parent could not find another place for the child to live.²¹⁹ In other words, foster care cannot be used to preserve your parental rights if it is clear that you will never be able to care for your children, and that you have not arranged for another person to care for them while you are in prison. The court acknowledges the importance of the rights of incarcerated parents but decided that the laws were meant to prioritize putting children in permanent homes.²²⁰

In another case, an incarcerated father planned for his child to stay in foster care until the father was eligible for parole, in seven years. The court did not believe this plan was good enough and terminated the father's parental rights.²²¹ A father in a similar situation also had his parental rights terminated for permanent neglect. The court said that his plan for his child to remain in foster care for six or more years until the father was released was not a good enough plan and that the father should have made other efforts to be involved in his child's life.²²²

A plan for long-term foster care is not enough to make sure you keep your parental rights even when you have maintained contact and a close relationship with your child. If you are serving a long sentence and your child is in foster care, it is very important that you try to remove your child from foster care by privately placing him with a relative or another person. If the court sees that your child will be cared for by a relative while you are in prison, it is less likely to terminate your parental rights.²²³ Otherwise, you risk losing your parental rights.

4. Practical Tips for Preventing Termination of Parental Rights

- (1) Know the Legal Status of Your Child's Placement. Is your child in foster care or private custody? If your child is in foster care, what type is it? Was your child voluntarily or involuntarily placed there? Gather all documents relating to your child's placement in one place, and keep safe and precise records.
- (2) Maintain Contact with Your Child. Write letters and cards. If possible, call your child. Try to arrange for visitation as often as possible. Keep copies of everything you send and a log of your phone calls.

217. See In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (1989) (finding that leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan for the purposes of planning an alternate living arrangement for a child).

218. See In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (1989) (finding that leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan for the purposes of planning an alternate living arrangement for a child).

219. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (finding that leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan for the purposes of planning an alternate living arrangement for a child).

220. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (quoting In re Joyce T., 65 N.Y.2d 39, 47, 478 N.E.2d 1306, 1311–12, 489 N.Y.S.2d 705, 711 (N.Y. 1985)) (emphasis added); see also N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384-b(1)(a) (McKinney 2010) (describing legislative intent behind guardianship and custody statutes).

221. See In re Omar Garry G., 198 A.D.2d 149, 149, 603 N.Y.S.2d 860, 861 (1st Dept. 1993) (finding that the termination of parental rights was appropriate where the incarcerated parent's only plan for his child was to have the child remain in foster care until his release; the court said that the termination of parental rights was especially appropriate since there were relatives who appeared to be "ready, willing, and able" to care for the child during the parent's incarceration), appeal denied, 83 N.Y.2d 753, 634 N.E.2d 603, 612 N.Y.S.2d 107 (1994).

222. See In re Latasha C., 196 A.D.2d 756, 756, 602 N.Y.S.2d 11, 12 (1st Dept. 1993).

223. See In re Omar Garry G., 198 A.D.2d 149, 149, 603 N.Y.S.2d 860, 861 (1st Dept. 1993); see also In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 88, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1057, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 540 (1989).

- (3) Maintain Contact with Your Caseworker or Your Child's Guardian. Write or call your caseworker or child's guardian often. Ask about your child: their interests, physical and mental health, progress in school, and any problems. Also ask to establish a regular schedule for visitation. Again, keep accurate records of your contact with caseworkers and guardians.
- (4) If Your Child Is in Foster Care, Maintain Contact with the Social Services Agency. At least once every six months, notify the agency of your current address in writing. Cooperate with the foster care agency if it asks you to attend classes or complete programs at your facility or if the agency attempts to arrange visits in order to help you plan your child's future.
- (5) Attend Court Hearings. Make sure that the judge knows you are involved and are concerned about your child. If you learn that a court hearing has been scheduled, send a letter to the family court clerk asking that you be produced in court and asking to have legal representation assigned to you. Once your lawyer is assigned, make sure you know his or her name, address, and telephone number.
- (6) Most Importantly, Keep Records. Make a record of every phone call you make to your child, your caseworker, a court, or foster care agency. If possible, make copies of every letter you send. This is very important and might mean the difference between keeping and losing your child after you are released.

E. Voluntary Adoption

You might decide that adoption is the best choice for your child. To do this, you must “surrender” your child, which generally means that you give up all your parental rights to your child. Generally, you give up the right to visit your child, call your child, and even learn how your child is doing.²²⁴ This is called a “total surrender.” However, it may be possible to negotiate some conditions to the surrender of your child, such as naming the person who adopts your child or preserving your right to see your child after adoption.²²⁵ This option is called a “conditional surrender.” If you negotiate these conditions and the person who adopts your child prevents you from seeing your child, you may petition a court for visitation. The court would then conduct a hearing to determine if visitation is in the best interests of the child.²²⁶

Whether you choose a total or conditional surrender, you are making a serious decision and you should get all the advice and help that you think you need. You have the right to talk with a lawyer before you sign the form you sign to give up your child, which is called a “Surrender Instrument.” If your child is in foster care, you have the right to supportive counseling before you sign the surrender instrument.²²⁷ Make sure you have read and fully understand any and all documents that you are asked to sign. If you do not understand something in a document, ask your lawyer to explain it. Do not sign anything until you are sure that you understand what the consequences of signing will be, and you are sure that this is what you want to do and what you think is best for your child.

The adoption process is different depending on whether your child is in foster care or has been placed privately with friends or relatives.

224. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 383-c(3)(b) (McKinney 2010). However, a surrender of a child in foster care may include a provision for visitation with the child after adoption.

225. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 383-c(2)(b) (McKinney 2010).

226. See In re Sabrina H., 245 A.D.2d 1134, 1135, 666 N.Y.S.2d 531, 531 (4th Dept. 1997) (finding that a biological mother can petition the court for enforcement of conditions in the surrender agreement). However, an adoptive parent's refusal to let a biological parent see the child would not allow the biological parent to automatically revoke the surrender.

227. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW §§ 383-c(3)(b), (5)(b)(i) (McKinney 2010).

1. If Your Child Is in Private Placement

If your child is living with a friend or relative through a private arrangement, you can surrender your child either by giving him to a foster care agency or adoption agency or by making a private adoption agreement.²²⁸ You make the surrender by signing the form in or out of court.

After you have surrendered your child to the agency, you have thirty days to change your mind.²²⁹ If you change your mind after thirty days, you may regain your parental rights only if your child has not yet been placed in an adoptive home.²³⁰ If you change your mind about the surrender and your child is already in an adoptive home, the judge will decide who has legal custody based solely on the “best interests of the child.”²³¹

2. If Your Child Is in Foster Care

If your child is in foster care, contact your child’s caseworker and explain that you are interested in giving up your child for adoption. When the child is already in foster care, the surrender can take place in one of two ways. The first is to “execute and acknowledge” the surrender instrument in court before a judge.²³² If the surrender takes place in court, your parental rights are irrevocably terminated.²³³ This means you cannot change your mind and regain parental rights to your child.

The second type of surrender takes place outside of court and is called an “extra-judicial surrender.” If you sign the surrender instrument outside of court, you have forty-five days after signing the surrender to change your mind.²³⁴

As with foster parents, ASFA requires that the agency check the criminal records of prospective adoptive parents. The requirements for approval or denial of an adoptive parent are the same as for a foster parent.²³⁵

F. Incarcerated Fathers with Children in Foster Care

Incarcerated fathers with children in foster care face unique challenges. As a father, your biological link to your child is not enough to protect your rights as a parent.²³⁶ You must take affirmative actions to protect your rights, such as maintaining contact with your child while he or she is in foster care. Without these actions, you risk losing your child to adoption without the court seeking your consent or even notifying you of its actions.

1. Establishing Paternity—Becoming a “Legal Father”

If you are a man, in order to exercise the parental rights described in this Chapter, you must establish paternity by proving to a court that you are the legal father of your child. Apart from giving you rights, establishing paternity also gives you responsibilities. One of the major responsibilities that goes along with a court finding that you are a child’s father is a possible obligation to pay child support.²³⁷

228. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW §§ 115–16 (McKinney 2010). A private adoption involves a contract between the birth parents and adoptive parents without agency involvement.

229. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384(5) (McKinney 2010).

230. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384(5) (McKinney 2010).

231. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 384(6) (McKinney 2010).

232. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 383-c(3)(a) (McKinney 2010).

233. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 383-c(3)(b) (McKinney 2010).

234. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 383-c(5)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2010).

235. See N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010); see also Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter.

236. Robert O., 80 N.Y.2d 254, 265, 604 N.E.2d 99, 104, 590 N.Y.S.2d 37, 42 (1992) (holding that the biological link of the father is insufficient to create a constitutionally protected interest and that the unwed biological father must demonstrate some action for him to enjoy protection of his parental rights); see also Caban v. Mohammad, 441 U.S. 380, 392, 99 S. Ct. 1760, 1768, 60 L. Ed. 2d 297, 307 (1979) (finding that where the father has not taken action to “participate in the rearing of his child, nothing in the Equal Protection Clause precludes the State from withholding from him the privilege of vetoing the adoption of that child”).

237. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 413 (McKinney 2008).

Establishing paternity is only necessary if your child was born out of wedlock. If you were or are married to the mother of your child, you are automatically considered to be the father of all children conceived or born to the mother during the marriage, and you do not have to establish paternity. However, if you are unmarried, you are not the child's legal father even if you lived with the mother of your children for a number of years. Additionally, having your name on your child's birth certificate does not automatically make you the child's legal father.²³⁸ Therefore, if you were not married to the mother of your child when your child was conceived or born, you will have to prove your paternity. Fathers who married their child's mother after the child was born must also prove paternity.

To prove your paternity, you should file a petition for an order of "filiation"²³⁹ (another word for paternity) in family court in the county where either the child or the child's mother lives.

Your paternity petition must:

- (1) be in writing, either handwritten or typed;
- (2) state that you ("petitioner") are the father of the child. You must say you are the father of the child and why. This is done by alleging that you had sexual intercourse with the child's mother during a time about nine months prior to the child's birth;
- (3) be verified. You must have a notarized statement saying that the reasons you give in the petition and the claims you make about paternity are true; and
- (4) be served on the respondent. This means you must have someone over the age of eighteen deliver a copy of the petition to your child's mother. This will inform the mother of the paternity proceedings in family court so that she can be present during the proceedings.²⁴⁰

If on the court date the mother agrees that you are the child's father, the judge may find that paternity has been proven. If the mother disputes that you are the father, the judge may order DNA testing to prove paternity, which you may be required to pay for. Once your paternity is established, you have the right to request visits with your child and to be involved in planning for your child's future (called permanency planning) while he is in foster care. If paternity is not proven, you do not have a legal right to visits or to a say in permanency planning.

Even if you prove paternity, you may not necessarily have the right to stop your child's adoption proceedings. The following Section outlines the steps you can take to become a "consent" father (one who has the right to consent to adoption). It also explains the requirements for being considered a "notice" father (one who has a right to be notified of termination of parental rights and subsequent adoption).

2. Types of Fathers

As explained in Part D, while your child is in foster care, proceedings may begin to convince the court that terminating parental rights and placing your child for adoption is the best option for your child. Your permission, or consent, may or may not be required for these proceedings to go forward.

238. See In re Strong's Estate, 168 Misc. 716, 723, 6 N.Y.S.2d 300, 306 (Sur. Ct. N.Y. County 1938) ("The fact of birth may be established by a birth certificate, although such certificate is not admissible to establish parentage."), aff'd, 256 A.D. 971, 11 N.Y.S. 2d 225 (1st Dep't 1939); see also Stanford v. Union Labor Life Ins. Co., 74 Misc. 2d 781, 786, 345 N.Y.S.2d 928, 934 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 1973) ("It is the rule in New York that a birth ... certificate is admissible as a public document only to show the fact of birth ... , and not as evidence of the additional facts recited therein pursuant to law.").

239. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 542 (McKinney 2009).

240. This step may be both difficult and expensive, but it is required. If you do not do this, the court will dismiss your petition and you will have to start all over again. However, if reasonable and numerous attempts are made to serve the mother and these are documented with affidavits of attempted service, the court can authorize "service by alternative means," which can include sending a letter to her last known address, putting an advertisement in a local paper, or posting a legal notice in the local post office. See New York City, Administration for Children's Services, Out of Sight, Not out of Mind: Important Information for Incarcerated Parents Whose Children Are in Foster Care (February 5, 2005). You can obtain a copy of this pamphlet by writing to the Administration for Children's Services, 150 William Street, 18th Floor, New York, New York 10038, or by calling ACS at (212) 341-4883.

Your right to consent to adoption or even to be notified about the adoption depends on how the law classifies you as a father.

(a) Married Fathers

Married fathers have all the rights and obligations that a biological mother would have.²⁴¹ If you are a married father, your consent will be needed before any adoption takes place, and you have the right to be present at all hearings, as well as to initiate hearings, as described generally in Part D of this Chapter.

(b) Consent Fathers

If your child was born out of wedlock, you will retain your right to withhold consent for your child's adoption only if you fulfill the obligations of a "consent father." As a consent father, you will have the right to be present at all proceedings concerning your child, and, unless your parental rights have been terminated, you must give consent for your child to be adopted.²⁴² To be considered a consent father, you must maintain "substantial and continuous" contact with your child.²⁴³ Substantial and continuous contact is demonstrated by paying a reasonable sum to support the child, based on your means.²⁴⁴ Additionally, you must demonstrate that you have either:

- (1) Visited the child at least monthly when physically and financially able to do so, unless you were prevented from visiting by the person or agency with custody of your child;²⁴⁵ or
- (2) Had regular communication with your child (or the person or agency with custody) when you are unable to visit.²⁴⁶

Even if you are a consent father, if the court rules that you have abandoned your child (see Part D(1)(a) of this Chapter), the court will say that you have lost your right to consent to the adoption and will not require your consent for the adoption to proceed.²⁴⁷

(c) Notice Fathers

Being a "notice father" means that the court must inform you if proceedings to terminate parental rights of your child and/or free him for adoption are initiated. As a notice father, your consent will not be required before your child is adopted, but you will be able to present evidence to the court about what you believe is in the best interest of your child. If you do not satisfy the requirements to be considered a consent father, but you meet one of the following requirements, you may be considered a notice father:

- (1) If a court has officially declared that you are the child's father;²⁴⁸

241. See N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 417 (McKinney 2008) ("A child born of parents who at any time prior or subsequent to the birth of said child shall have entered into a ceremonial marriage shall be deemed the legitimate child of both parents for all purposes of this article regardless of the validity of such marriage."); N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(1)(b) (McKinney 2010) ("[C]onsent to adoption shall be required ... of the parents or surviving parent, whether adult or infant, of a child conceived or born in wedlock.").

242. Note that until your child is six months old, if you are not married to the mother of your child, she can place the child for adoption without your consent. If this happens, you can attempt to block the adoption only by seeking full custody of the child. See In re Raquel Marie X, 76 N.Y.2d 387, 408, 559 N.E.2d 418, 428, 559 N.Y.S.2d 855, 865 (N.Y. 1990).

243. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(1)(d) (McKinney 2010).

244. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(1)(d) (McKinney 2010).

245. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(1)(d) (McKinney 2010).

246. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(1)(d) (McKinney 2010).

247. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111(2)(a) (McKinney 2010) (failing to visit or communicate with your child for over six months is considered an abandonment of your parental rights); see In re Eugene MM, 132 A.D.2d 780, 781, 517 N.Y.S. 2d 326, 328 (3d Dept. 1987) (holding that father who had minimal contact with mother and child, had failed to pay any child support, and had never requested visitation while incarcerated, failed to meet the threshold criteria needed to require his consent to the adoption); In re Joshua II, 296 A.D.2d 646, 647–648, 745 N.Y.S.2d 112, 113 (3d Dept. 2002) (holding that incarcerated father's consent to adoption was not required because father abandoned child).

248. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

- (2) If you have filed an unrevoked notice to claim paternity of your child on time;²⁴⁹
- (3) If you are on the child's birth certificate;²⁵⁰
- (4) If you were openly living with your child and your child's mother when the proceedings started, and you presented yourself as your child's father;²⁵¹
- (5) If the mother has identified you as the child's father in a written sworn statement;²⁵²
- (6) If you were married to the child's mother within six months after the birth;²⁵³ or
- (7) If you have filed an Acknowledgement of Paternity (a sworn statement on a prescribed form) with the Putative Father Registry.²⁵⁴

Note that these categories include persons who are listed on the child's birth certificate and persons who have been found to be "legal fathers" by the court. Therefore, even if you are the legal father or the father on the birth certificate, your consent may not be required before your child is adopted, unless you meet the additional requirements listed above for consent fathers. Your status as a notice father or consent father is not permanent. You can move from the notice category to the consent category by maintaining substantial and continuous contact with your child. Likewise, if you do not continue to maintain contact with your child, the court will consider you a notice father, even if at one point you may have qualified as a consent father.

If you have had minimal to no contact with your child and you do not fall under any of the above categories (married, notice, consent, or legal father), you have no rights or duties with regard to your child. The court will not need to notify you or ask for your consent before placing your child up for adoption.

G. Getting to Court

Parents have a right to attend all court proceedings involving the foster care and adoption of their child. For parents who are incarcerated people, you will have to arrange to be brought to court. You should request permission to attend such proceedings from your correctional facility as far in advance of the court date as possible. You should also contact your caseworker and tell him or her you wish to attend. You have to write to the judge well in advance of the hearing date and explain why your presence at the hearing is essential and request that the judge order the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision to produce you in court. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a sample letter asking the judge to order you to be produced for the hearing.

H. The Right to Counsel

Even though the U.S. Supreme Court has held that there is no constitutional guarantee of a right to a lawyer in proceedings for termination of parental rights or foster care, New York state law does guarantee this right.²⁵⁵ In most other states, the right to a lawyer in such proceedings has been granted either by the state constitution or by state law. Usually, if you cannot afford to hire your own attorney, the court will appoint what in New York is called an "18-b attorney" when you get to court.²⁵⁶ You can also try to contact a legal services organization for help, but attorneys at these organizations are generally unavailable for these kinds of cases. See Appendix B of this Chapter, as well as Appendix IV of the JLM, for a list of legal service organizations.

249. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(c) (McKinney 2010).

250. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a (2)(d) (McKinney 2010).

251. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(e) (McKinney 2010).

252. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(f) (McKinney 2010).

253. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(g) (McKinney 2010). Note that marriage within six months of the child's birth makes you a notice father, but not necessarily a consent father. You can become a consent father by maintaining substantial and continuous contact with your child.

254. N.Y. DOM. REL. LAW § 111-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).

255. N.Y. FAM. CT. ACT § 262 (McKinney 2008).

256. "18-b" refers to a free attorney assigned by the court under Article 18-b of the County Law. N.Y. COUNTY LAW § 722 (McKinney 2017).

I. Conclusion

If you are incarcerated and have a child, it is important for you to know the options you have in order to maintain your relationship with your child. First, you should decide whether you want your child in private placement (meaning with a family or friend) or in foster care. There are different benefits and drawbacks for each situation, so it is important to weigh all of your options. To have the best opportunity possible to retain custody of your child when you are outside of prison, you should maintain contact with your child and with your caseworker. You should also keep records of all of the contact you have with both your child and caseworker in case you need to prove your efforts. You should also maintain contact with your child's custodian and keep records of all contact.

Appendix A

SAMPLE REQUEST FOR AN ORDER TO PRODUCE

This is a sample form. DO NOT TEAR IT OUT OF THE JLM Instead, you may copy the form by handwriting or on a typewriter, filling in and editing the language to fit your circumstances.

Date: _____, 20__

ATTENTION: Court Clerk
Family Court
State of New York
County of [Name of County]
[Street Address]
[City or Town], New York, [Zip Code]

RE: [Child's Name], [Child's Birth Date]

Dear Sir or Madam:

I respectfully request to be present for the hearing that is to be held on the [##] day of [month], 20[##], for my child/children, [Name of Children]. I am presently incarcerated at [name of facility], located at the below address. Please submit an "Order to Produce" upon this institution, so that I may be available for this pending hearing.

I am also requesting that the court assign an attorney to represent me in the above proceeding and that all court proceedings be adjourned until I am able to be physically present.

[If applicable: I have not been informed of the date that my child/children will be appearing before your court. Would you kindly notify me of the date and enter this into the record as a Notice of Appearance and request to be produced?]

NOTIFY: [Warden's Name]
[Your Name and Address]

Sworn to me on the [##] day of [month] of 20[##].

Name of Parent (Print): _____

NYSID #: _____

Signature of Parent: _____

Notary Public Signature: _____

APPENDIX B

SERVICES FOR INCARCERATED PARENTS

Edwin Gould Services for Children and Families

Incarcerated Mothers Program

413 East 120th Street

New York, NY 10035

Phone: (646) 315-7600

<https://egscf.org/programs/preventive-services/>

Area Served: New York City

The purpose of this organization is to prevent placement of children in foster care. This organization provides counseling for mothers incarcerated in New York City or New York State, makes monthly visits to your children, and encourages visits between mothers and children. To be eligible for these services, your child or children must be under 18 years old and must not already be in foster care.

Correctional Association of New York

2090 Adam Clayton Powell Blvd., Suite 200

New York, NY 10027

Phone: (212) 254-5700

<https://www.correctionalassociation.org/>

Area Served: New York State

Legal Action Center

225 Varick Street, Fourth Floor

New York, NY 10014

Phone: (212) 243-1313

Toll-free: (800) 223-4044

www.lac.org

Area Served: New York State

Provides legal information for people with criminal records.

Administration for Children's Services ("ACS")

Office of Advocacy/Parents' and Children's Rights Unit

150 William Street, First Floor

New York, NY 10038

Collect Call Number for Incarcerated Parents:
(212) 619-1309

Phone: (212) 676-9421

You can contact this branch of ACS if your child is in foster care in New York City and your child's foster care agency is refusing to bring your child to visit you in prison.

The Osborne Association, "Family Resource Center" and "Family Works"

175 Remsen Street, Eighth Floor

Brooklyn, NY 11201

Toll-Free Hotline: (800) 344-3314

Phone: (718) 637-6560

www.osborneny.org

Area Served: New York State

The Family Resource Center runs a toll free hotline and a support group. Family Works manages a parent education program for incarcerated fathers and a children's center in the visiting areas at Sing Sing, Woodbourne, and Shawangunk Correctional Facilities.

Hour Children

36-11 12th Street

Long Island City, NY 11106

Phone: (718) 433-4724

www.hourchildren.org

Area Served: New York State

Provides five community residential programs for female ex-offenders and their children.

Provides parent education, enhanced visiting, and transportation assistance for women incarcerated in two New York State prisons.

Women's Prison Association

110 Second Avenue

New York, NY 10003

Phone: (646) 292-7740

www.wpaonline.org

Area served: New York City

Provides comprehensive services to incarcerated and formerly incarcerated women. Services include parent education, self-help support group, information, referrals, case management, mentoring, group activities, gifts for children, nursery family reunification support, family therapy, community residential services, and legal services and information.

The following organizations provide free legal services. Contact them if you need to take some action for your child and you cannot afford a lawyer. For a more extensive list of legal services organizations throughout New York State, turn to Appendix IV of the JLM.

Legal Services for New York City

40 Worth Street, Suite 606
New York, NY 10013
Phone: (646) 442-3600

Prisoners' Legal Services of NY (PLSNY)

Please note that the PLSNY does not accept phone calls from incarcerated people or their families.

Ithaca Office

114 Prospect Street Ithaca, NY 14850
Phone: (607) 273-2283
Prisons Served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Monterey Shock, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard.

Albany Office

41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY, 12207
Phone: (518) 438-8046
Prisons Served: Arthurkill, Bayview, Beacon, Bedford Hills, Mt. McGregor, Summit Shock, CNYPC, Cossackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Lincoln, Marcy, Midstate, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne.

Buffalo Office

14 Lafayette Square, Suite 510
Buffalo, NY 14203
Phone: (716) 854-1007
Prisons Served: Albion, Attica, Buffalo, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming.

Plattsburgh Office

24 Margaret Street, Suite 9
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
Phone: (518) 561-3088
Prisons served: Adirondack, Altona, Bare Hill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensburg, Riverview, Upstate.

REGIONAL OCFS OFFICES

WEBSITE: HTTPS://OCFS.NY.GOV/DIRECTORIES/REGIONAL-OFFICES.PHP

Monroe, Ontario, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben,
Wayne, Yates

ALBANY REGIONAL OFFICE

Capital View Office Park, Room 234N
52 Washington Street
Rensselaer, NY 12144-2796
Phone: (518) 486-7078
Counties served: Albany, Clinton, Columbia,
Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene,
Hamilton, Montgomery, Otsego, Rensselaer,
Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Warren,
Washington

BUFFALO REGIONAL OFFICE

Ellicott Square Building
295 Main Street, Room 545
Buffalo, NY 14203
Phone: (716) 847-3828
Counties served: Allegany, Cattaraugus,
Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Niagara, Orleans,
Wyoming

LONG ISLAND REGIONAL OFFICE

Courthouse Corporate Center
320 Carelton Avenue, Suite 4000
Central Islip, NY 11722
Phone: (631) 342-7100
Counties served: Nassau, Suffolk

NEW YORK CITY REGIONAL OFFICE

163 West 125th Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10027
Phone: (212) 383-1788
Counties served: 5 Boroughs of New York City
—Manhattan, Brooklyn, Bronx, Staten Island,
Queens

ROCHESTER REGIONAL OFFICE

259 Monroe Avenue, Room 307
Rochester, NY 14607
Phone: (585) 238-8531
Counties served: Chemung, Livingston,

LONG ISLAND REGIONAL OFFICE

11 Perlman Drive, Pascack Plaza
Spring Valley, NY 10977
Phone: (845) 708-2498
Counties served: Dutchess, Orange, Putnam,
Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster, Westchester

SYRACUSE REGIONAL OFFICE

The Atrium
100 S. Salina Street, Suite 350
Syracuse, NY 13202
Phone: (315) 423-1202
Counties served: Broome, Cayuga, Chenango,
Cortland, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis,
Madison, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, St.
Lawrence, Tioga, Tompkin

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR COUNTY DEPARTMENTS OF SOCIAL SERVICES

Website: HTTP://WWW.OCFS.STATE.NY.US/MAIN/LOCALDSS.ASP

Albany County DSS

162 Washington Avenue
Albany, NY 12210
Phone: (518) 447-7300

Albany County Department for Children, Youth & Families

112 State Street, Room 300
Albany, NY 12207
Phone: (518) 447-7324

Allegany County DSS

County Office Building
7 Court Street
Belmont, NY 14813-1077
Phone: (585) 268-9622

Broome County DSS

Thomas P. Hoke Human Services Center
36-42 Main Street
Binghamton, NY 13905-3199
Phone: (607) 778-8850

Cattaraugus County DSS

One Leo Moss Drive, Suite 6010
Olean, NY 14760-1158
Phone: (716) 373-8065

Cayuga County DSS

County Office Building
160 Genesee Street, 2nd Floor
Auburn, NY 13021-3433
Phone: (315) 253-1204

Chautauqua County DSS

Hall R. Clothier Building
7 North Erie Street
Mayville, NY 14757
Phone: (716) 753-4421

Chemung County DSS

Human Resource Center
425 Pennsylvania Avenue
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
Phone: (607) 737-5309

Chenango County DSS

5 Court Street, P.O. Box 590
Norwich, NY 13815
Phone: (607) 337-1500
Toll Free: (877) 337-1501

Clinton County DSS

13 Durkee Street
Plattsburgh, NY 12901-2911
Phone: (518) 565-3222

Columbia County DSS

25 Railroad Avenue
P.O. Box 458
Hudson, NY 12534
Phone: (518) 828-9411

Cortland County DSS

County Office Building
60 Central Avenue
Cortland, NY 13045-5590
Phone: (607) 753-5248

Delaware County DSS

111 Main Street, P.O. Box 469
Delhi, NY 13753
Phone: (607) 832-5300

Dutchess County DSS

60 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601-3299
Phone: (845) 486-3000

Erie County DSS

Rath County Office Building
95 Franklin Street, 8th Floor
Buffalo, NY 14202-3959
Phone: (716) 858-8000

Essex County DSS

7551 Court Street
P.O. Box 217
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
Phone: (518) 873-3441

Franklin County DSS

355 West Main Street
Malone, NY 12953
Phone: (518) 481-1808

Fulton County DSS

4 Daisy Lane
P.O. Box 549
Johnstown, NY 12095
Phone: (518) 736-5600

Genesee County DSS

5130 East Main Street, Suite #3
Batavia, NY 14020-3397
Phone: (585) 344-2580

Greene County DSS

411 Main Street, P.O. Box 528
Catskill, NY 12414-1716
Phone: (518) 719-3700
Toll-Free: (877) 794-9268

Hamilton County DSS

White Birch Lane
P.O. Box 725
Indian Lake, NY 12842-0725
Phone: (518) 648-6131

Herkimer County DSS

301 North Washington Street, Suite 2110
Herkimer, NY 13350
Phone: (315) 867-1291

Jefferson County DSS

Human Services Building
250 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
Phone: (315) 782-9030

Lewis County DSS

5274 Outer Stowe Street
P.O. Box 193
Lowville, NY 13367
Phone: (315) 376-5400

Livingston County DSS

1 Murray Hill Drive
Mt. Morris, NY 14510-1699
Phone: (585) 243-7300

Madison County DSS

Madison County Complex, Building 1
133 North Court Street
P.O. Box 637
Wampsville, NY 13163
Phone: (315) 366-2211

Monroe County DSS

111 Westfall Road
Rochester, NY 14620-4686
Phone: (585) 753-6298

Montgomery County DSS

County Office Building
P.O. Box 745
Fonda, NY 12068
Phone: (518) 853-4646

Nassau County DSS

60 Charles Lindbergh Blvd.
Uniondale, NY 11553-3656
Phone: (516) 227-8519

New York City Administration for Children's Services

150 William Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10038-0900
Phone: (212) 341-0900 or 311

New York City Department of Social Services

150 Greenwich Street
Commissioner – 42nd Floor / Legal – 38th Floor
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (718) 557-1399

Niagara County DSS

20 East Avenue
P.O. Box 506
Lockport, NY 14095-0506
Phone: (716) 439-7600

Oneida County DSS

County Office Building
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501-2981
Phone: (315) 798-5700

Onondaga County DSS

John H. Mulroy Civic Center, 12th Floor
421 Montgomery Street
Syracuse, NY 13202-2923
Phone: (315) 435-2985

Ontario County DSS

3010 County Complex Drive
Canandaigua, NY 14424-1296
Phone: (585) 396-4060
Toll-free: (877) 814-6907

Orange County DSS

11 Quarry Road, Box Z
Goshen, NY 10924-0678
Phone: (845) 291-4000

Orleans County DSS

14016 Route 31 West
Albion, NY 14411-9365
Phone: (585) 589-7000

Oswego County DSS

100 Spring Street
P.O. Box 1320
Mexico, NY 13114
Phone: (315) 963-5000

Otsego County DSS

County Office Building
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326-1196
Phone: (607) 547-4355

Putnam County DSS

110 Old Route 6
Carmel, NY 10512
Phone: (845) 808-1500-2110

Rensselaer County DSS

127 Bloomingrove Drive
Troy, NY 12180-8403
Phone: (518) 833-6000

Rockland County DSS

Robert L. Yeager Health Center
Sanatorium Road, Building L
Pomona, NY 10970
Phone: (845) 364-3100

St. Lawrence County DSS

Harold B. Smith Country Office Building
6 Judson Street
Canton, NY 13617
Phone: (315) 379-2111

Saratoga County DSS

152 West High Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
Phone: (518) 884-4140

Schenectady County DSS

797 Broadway
Schenectady, NY 12305
Phone: (518) 388-4470

Schoharie County DSS

County Office Building
P.O. Box 687
Schoharie, NY 12157
Phone: (518) 295-8334

Schuyler County DSS

323 Owego Street, Unit 3
Montour Falls, NY 14865
Phone: (607) 535-8303

Seneca County DSS

1 DiPronio Drive
P.O. Box 690
Waterloo, NY 13165-0690
Phone: (315) 539-1800

Steuben County DSS

3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
Phone: (607) 776-7611

Suffolk County DSS

Mary Gordon Building
3085 Veterans Memorial Highway
Ronkonkama, NY 11779
Phone: (631) 854-9935

Sullivan County DSS

16 Community Lane
P.O. Box 231
Liberty, NY 12754
Phone: (845) 292-0100

Tioga County DSS1062 State Route 38

P.O. Box 240

Owego, NY 13827

Phone: (607) 687-8300

Tompkins County DSSHuman Services Building

320 West State Street

Ithaca, NY. 14850

Phone: (607) 274-5252

Ulster County DSS

1061 Development Court

Kingston, NY 12401-1959

Phone: (845) 334-5000

Warren County DSS

Warren County Municipal Center

1340 State Route 9

Lake George, NY 12845-9803

Phone: (518) 761-6300

Washington County DSS

Municipal Center, Building B

383 Broadway

Fort Edward, NY 12828

Phone: (518) 746-2300

Wayne County DSS

77 Water Street

P.O. Box 10

Lyons, NY 14489-0010

Phone: (315) 946-4881

Westchester County DSS

112 East Post Road

White Plains, NY 10601

Phone: (914) 995-6521

Wyoming County DSS

466 North Main Street

Warsaw, NY 14569-1080

Phone: (716) 786-8900

Yates County DSS

County Office Building

417 Liberty Street, Suite 2122

Penn Yan, NY 14527-1118

Phone: (315) 536-5183

CHAPTER 34

THE RIGHTS OF PRETRIAL DETAINEES*

A. Introduction

“Pretrial detention” refers to the time period during which you are incarcerated after being arrested but before your trial. Pretrial detention is only supposed to be used to make sure that you will not flee before trial. It is not supposed to be used to punish or rehabilitate you because, under the U.S. Constitution, a person accused of a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty. As a pretrial detainee, you have not been convicted of a crime and cannot legally be punished.

This Chapter discusses what rights you have when interacting with police and prosecutors while your case is pending (before you are found guilty or not guilty, through a trial, plea, or dismissed case). Any time the government accuses you of a crime in court, they must provide you with a lawyer if you cannot afford one. This Chapter does not replace the advice of your lawyer. Instead, this Chapter can help you and your family understand your rights at different stages of the criminal process and figure out what questions you want to ask your lawyer. You should always discuss anything you do and any questions you have with your lawyer.

Part B of this Chapter talks about your rights under the Fifth and Sixth Amendments before you are formally charged with a crime but may be interacting with law enforcement, such as through an investigation. It also discusses your rights at the time of arrest. It explains what happens if you do make a statement to the police, how that statement may be used, and ways the police might try to get you to make a statement. Part C deals with your rights under the Sixth Amendment once you have been formally charged with a crime in court. These rights include your right to have a lawyer assigned to you if you cannot afford one and what happens if you make any statements to law enforcement after you have been charged. Part D discusses the different legal mechanisms that affect whether you stay in jail or not while your case is pending, focusing on bail and speedy trial. Part E talks about your rights with respect to the conditions of your pre-trial confinement. This Chapter mainly focuses on federal and New York State law. Be sure to check the footnotes for information on researching claims in other states.

If you are not a U.S. citizen, you also have a treaty right to communicate with consular officers from your home government.¹ Consular access means that you have the right to contact your local consulate or embassy, as well as the right to have regular communications with consular officers from your native country. If you have citizenship from another country, you should read Chapter II of the JLM Immigration and Consular Access Supplement (“ICA”). It explains your right to consular access as well as the reasons you may want to contact your consulate and reasons why you may not want to do so. Consular officers may be able to help you in criminal cases. For example, they can gather “mitigating evidence” (evidence showing that there are reasons why you should receive a less severe sentence) in death penalty cases. Your consular officers may also help you if your rights have been violated, and they may assist you in deportation proceedings. Chapter II of the JLM Immigration and Consular Access Supplement (ICA) will give you some practical advice on when and how to contact your consulate.

* This Chapter was revised by Hannah Rosner, based in part on previous versions by Julian Perez, Jared Pittman, Sarah Abramowicz, Kai-lin Hsu, Christian Parker, Elif Uras, Erica Bazzell, and Julie Caskey. Special thanks to Professor Colleen Shanahan for her guidance, and to John Boston and Steven Wasserman of the Legal Aid Society for their valuable comments.

1. See JLM ICA Supplement, Chapter II “The Right to Consular Access”; see also Vienna Convention on Consular Relations art. 36, Apr. 24, 1963, 21 U.S.T. 77, 596 U.N.T.S. 261 (entered into force with respect to the United States of America Dec. 24, 1969) (stating that a national may inform his consulate of his arrest or pretrial detention, and consular officers have the right to visit the national in custody, to speak with him and arrange his legal representation).

This Chapter does not cover most “search and seizure” law under the Fourth Amendment, which determines when the police can legally arrest you or search you or your possessions. This area of law is complicated and beyond the scope of this Chapter.²

B. Your Rights Before You Are Charged

Even before you are officially charged with a crime in court, you have rights when interacting with law enforcement. Sometimes, people are arrested at the scene of the crime and charges are filed right away based on what the police know about a crime. For example, if the police see you shoot and kill someone, the police will arrest you on the spot and charge you with murder. Other times, the police will conduct an investigation before deciding who they want to arrest and charge for a crime. For example, if a person is found dead, the police may question a number of people they believe are connected to the crime before choosing who to arrest and charge. In either of these scenarios, you have rights under the Fifth Amendment if the police start asking you questions.³

1. Your rights if the police are investigating you for a crime⁴

If a crime takes place and the police are not immediately sure who did it or who they suspect did it, they will conduct an investigation to decide who to arrest and charge. As part of the investigation, the police will usually question people they believe may have been involved. You may become a suspect if, for example, someone else named you to the police as someone who was involved, if you look like someone caught on a security camera, if you knew the victim or if you were nearby when a crime took place. During this process, the police may also get copies of surveillance footage, phone records, photographs and medical records, depending on what type of crime they are investigating.

If you are approached by the police or other law enforcement officials who want to ask you about a crime that has taken place, you have rights. If you are not being detained, the police do not have to read you those rights.⁵ However, just because the police have not read you your rights does not mean you do not have them. You always have the right to tell the police you do not want to talk to them or that you want to speak to a lawyer. You can ask police officers if you are free to leave. If they say yes, you may leave. If you are not free to leave, you are detained or arrested and the police must read you your rights before asking you any more questions.

2. If you want to learn more about search and seizure law, a good overview is found in 1 JOSHUA DRESSLER & ALAN C. MICHAELS, UNDERSTANDING CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (5th ed. 2010). You should also read the cases regarding search and seizure law in your own state. See also 2 Search & Seizure § 40.09 (LexisNexis), part of a compilation of sources on the topic on Lexis.

3. U.S. CONST. amend. V; see also Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964) (holding that the states cannot take away or limit your 5th Amendment right against self-incrimination because the 14th Amendment makes the 5th Amendment applicable to states); Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 607, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2607, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 652 (2004) (noting that the 5th and 14th Amendment voluntariness tests are identical (citing Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964))).

4. The term “police” here may include state agents such as jailhouse informants, i.e., fellow incarcerated people that are cooperating closely with and acting for the police. See United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 273–275, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2188–2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 124–125 (1980) (finding that an incarcerated person’s 6th Amendment right to counsel was violated when a court admitted statements made by the incarcerated person to a jailhouse informant deliberately trying to solicit damaging information). The term “police” also refers to federal agents from any of the different federal law enforcement agencies, and any other law enforcement or prosecution official. See Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 273–275, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 2616–2617, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209, 226–227 (1993) (holding that where prosecutors allegedly fabricated evidence during investigations, they performed “investigative functions normally performed by a detective or police officer,” and were only entitled to the same amount of immunity from liability as a police officer would).

5. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706 (1966) (stating that the holding of this case only applies to custodial interrogations, which means “questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way.”).

2. Your rights once you have been detained or arrested

If the police detain you anywhere, or arrest you, you still have rights if they try to ask you questions. You have likely heard about your Miranda rights. Your Miranda rights include the right to tell police you do not want to speak to them or that you want to speak to a lawyer before speaking with them. The Supreme Court decided that law enforcement has to tell you what your rights are before they interrogate you. This requirement exists because you have a right to counsel under the Fifth Amendment, which protects you from making statements that are self-incriminating (statements that could be used to show you are guilty in court).⁶ Your Miranda rights are: (1) the right to remain silent, since anything you say may be used against you in court; (2) the right to counsel, both before and during interrogation; and (3) the right to a lawyer throughout your case, including a free lawyer if you cannot afford one.⁷

Most people have seen crime shows on TV where the police inform someone of their rights while they are arresting him. In reality, your Miranda rights apply specifically to custodial interrogations, so police are only required to give them to you before they ask you questions. Miranda does not apply to an arrest where you are not interrogated.⁸ It also does not apply to non-custodial interactions.⁹ The word “custodial” refers to either: (1) after you have been taken into police custody (so handcuffed, put into a police car, taken to the precinct, etc.),¹⁰ or (2) when you have been deprived of your freedom of movement (if you ask the police if you can leave and they say no, you have been deprived of your freedom of movement even if you are not yet handcuffed).¹¹ “Interrogation” can mean either: (1) direct questioning by the police; or (2) the “functional equivalent” of direct questioning.¹² The functional equivalent of direct questioning usually means when the police say or do something to you that they should know is likely to cause you to confess or say something incriminating.¹³ In summary, when you are approached by the police and they do not allow you to leave, they must read you your Miranda rights before asking you any questions. Even if you are not in custody, you can still choose not to answer any questions the police ask you.

6. The right to counsel under the Fifth Amendment is different from the Sixth Amendment right to counsel discussed in Part C of this Chapter. The Sixth Amendment right ensures that you have good representation once formal criminal proceedings have been initiated against you. “Self-incriminating” describes statements that could make you legally responsible for a crime that has taken place. Self-Incriminating, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

7. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706–707 (1966).

8. Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 300–302, 100 S. Ct. 1682, 1689–1690, 64 L. Ed. 2d 297, 307–308 (1980).

9. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706 (1966) (stating that the holding of this case only applies to custodial interrogations, which means “questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way”).

10. Whether you are considered “in custody” depends on “how a reasonable man in the suspect's position would have understood his situation.” Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 442, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3151, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 336 (1984).

11. For example, in Berkemer v. McCarty, the Court held that an ordinary traffic stop, where the officer had decided that the suspect would be taken into custody as soon as he exited his car but did not tell the defendant of that decision, was not custody for Miranda purposes. In other words, the Court looked at whether or not a reasonable person in the suspect's position would have thought they were in custody. The only thing that mattered was what the suspect reasonably thought at the time he made the statement. Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 440, 441–442, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3150–3151, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 334–336 (1984). The courts apply this reasoning because they are concerned about people being forced to make statements, and courts believe that people decide whether to speak based on how they perceive (or view) the situation they are in.

12. Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 300–301, 100 S. Ct. 1682, 1689, 64 L. Ed. 2d 297, 307–308 (1980) (“[T]he Miranda safeguards come into play whenever a person in custody is subjected to either express questioning or its functional equivalent.”).

13. See Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 302–303, 100 S. Ct. 1682, 1690–1691, 64 L. Ed. 2d 297, 309 (1980) (holding that a short conversation between policemen in front of a suspect was not the “functional equivalent” of interrogation, as a reasonable police officer would not think that the conversation would lead to an incriminating statement from the suspect).

Once a police officer or law enforcement agent reads you your Miranda rights, you get to decide if you want to invoke (use) or waive (give up) those rights. If you invoke your rights, it means you want to use them and you will not speak to the officer without a lawyer present. If you waive your rights, you are telling the officer that you understand your right not to speak but wish to do so anyway. If you assert your right to remain silent after having your Miranda rights read to you, the interrogation must stop.¹⁴

Something that may be confusing is that to make the police stop asking you questions, you have to say out loud that you want to remain silent and that you want to speak with an attorney. Simply remaining silent will not be considered enough to demonstrate that you have chosen to exercise your rights, and officers may continue interrogating you despite your silence until you clearly communicate your choice to remain silent and stop cooperating with the interrogation.¹⁵ Similarly, if you ask for a lawyer during the interrogation, the interrogation must stop until you have had time to talk to a lawyer or until you yourself restart the interrogation.¹⁶ However, you must be clear that you are asking for an attorney to represent you in this circumstance.¹⁷ In addition, you are entitled to an attorney whenever the interrogation begins again.¹⁸ If you do not invoke your rights out loud, the police can keep asking questions (although you can still decide not to answer them). After a break in custody of at least two weeks, police can start questioning you again unless you reinvoke your right to counsel (ask for a lawyer again).¹⁹

3. What happens if you do make a statement to the police?

Let's say that the police do read you your rights, you say that you are waiving them and then make an incriminating statement to the police. Just because the police read you your Miranda rights does not mean that any statements you have made are automatically admissible (usable in court). In some 14. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 473–474, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1627, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 723 (1966). Note that the police can continue to question you about unrelated crimes. See Michigan v. Mosley, 423 U.S. 96, 104–106, 96 S. Ct. 321, 326–328, 46 L. Ed. 2d 313, 321–323 (1975) (holding that although the suspect invoked the right to remain silent on robbery charges, several hours later another police officer could permissibly question the suspect about an unrelated homicide upon providing the Miranda warnings and securing a waiver from the suspect). But see People v. Boyer, 768 P.2d 610, 623, 48 Cal. 3d 247, 273, 256 Cal. Rptr. 96, 109 (Cal. 1989) (finding that under California state law, police can no longer attempt to question a suspect in custody once the suspect has invoked both a right to remain silent and a right to an attorney, unless the suspect initiates further communication), overruled on other grounds by People v. Stansbury, 889 P.2d 588 (Cal. 1995).

15. See United States v. Ramirez, 79 F.3d 298, 305 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that a suspect can selectively assert his right to remain silent, but simply failing to answer certain questions “does not constitute invocation of the right to remain silent.”).

16. See Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 484–485, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 1884–1885, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378, 386 (1981) (holding that once the suspect asks for an attorney, interrogation cannot resume until counsel has been made available, or the accused himself initiates further conversations with the police). But see Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 437, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3148–3149, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 333 (1984) (holding that Miranda must be enforced strictly, but only in those situations where “the concerns that powered the decision are implicated.”). This has been interpreted by lower courts as allowing police to ask clarifying questions to suspects who have volunteered information after asserting their rights to remain silent and to counsel. See, e.g., United States v. Rommy, 506 F.3d 108, 133 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that “simple clarifying questions do not necessarily constitute interrogation”).

17. See Davis v. United States, 512 U.S. 452, 462, 114 S. Ct. 2350, 2356–2357, 129 L. Ed. 2d 362, 373 (1994) (holding that a suspect must be clear in his desire for counsel; it is not enough for the suspect to state, “Maybe I should talk to a lawyer”). But see Downey v. State, 144 So. 3d 146, 151 (Miss. 2014) (holding Mississippi exceeds this minimum standard by its state constitution).

18. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 474, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1628, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 723 (1966) (“[T]he individual must have an opportunity to confer with the attorney and to have him present during any subsequent questioning.”).

19. Maryland v. Shatzer, 559 U.S. 98, 110–111, 130 S. Ct. 1213, 1223, 175 L. Ed. 2d 1045, 1056–1057 (2010) (finding that the Edwards rule does not extend indefinitely, but rather expires after a suspect has been out of investigative custody for 14 days). After two weeks, police may again initiate an interrogation, unless the suspect reasserts his Miranda rights. Note that here “custody” means in the custody of police for the purpose of investigating this specific offense, not just in prison more generally.

cases, the police may try to force you to waive your Miranda rights or try to pressure you to say something self-incriminating after you have waived your Miranda rights. If they do that, your statement may not be admissible. Even if the police read you your Miranda rights (commonly referred to as “mirandizing” you), a statement or confession you make to the police must still be voluntary if the prosecution wants to use it at your trial to show you are guilty of your charges.²⁰ The word “voluntary” may be confusing, however, because it means something like “not coerced” in this context.²¹ To coerce someone means to pressure that person into doing something by the use of force or threats. For example, if the police mirandize you and then threaten to hurt you if you do not confess, your confession is not voluntary and the prosecution cannot use it in court to convince a jury you committed the crime.

Several things can make a court decide that your confession was not voluntary. The police cannot use or threaten to use physical violence in order to get you to confess.²² If the police threaten to administer a painful medical procedure in an attempt to get you to confess, even though they may be legally entitled to order this procedure, the court may consider the statements you make after this threat to be involuntary.²³ In addition, the use of deception or promises of leniency in sentencing can sometimes make the confession involuntary.²⁴ Your confession is not likely to be considered involuntary simply because it occurred after the police interrogated you for a long period of time, but if you were subject to a long interrogation and were deprived of food or sleep, your confession may be deemed involuntary.²⁵ Likewise, if you were held in very bad conditions for your interrogation, courts may find your confession to be involuntary.²⁶ If your confession is involuntary (that is, if it has been improperly compelled), it cannot be used at trial for any purpose.²⁷

20. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 462, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1621, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 716 (1966) (holding that a confession must be excluded where the accused was “involuntarily impelled to make a statement, when but for the improper influences he would have remained silent”). In other words, if the police: (1) use incorrect methods, such as using force or threats; and 2) these methods cause a person to confess when he would have otherwise remained silent, then the confession is invalid.

21. See Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 165, 107 S. Ct. 515, 521, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 483 (1986) (holding that there must be an “essential link between coercive activity of the State...and a resulting confession by a defendant” if the evidence is to be excluded).

22. See Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278, 287, 56 S. Ct. 461, 465–466, 80 L. Ed. 682, 687–688 (1936) (holding that the defendant could not be convicted on the basis of a confession obtained during a physical beating by a police officer); United States v. Abu Ali, 395 F. Supp. 2d 338, 380 (E.D. Va. 2005), aff’d, 528 F.3d 210 (4th Cir. 2008) (holding that evidence obtained by extreme physical coercion “ha[s] no place in the American system of justice”); see also Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 287, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1252–1253, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 316 (1991) (noting that “a finding of coercion need not depend upon actual violence by a government agent,” and a “credible threat of physical violence” is enough to find coercion); Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 170, 107 S. Ct. 515, 523, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 486 (1986) (“The voluntariness of a waiver of this privilege has always depended on the absence of police overreaching....”).

23. See, e.g., State v. Phelps, 456 N.W.2d 290, 294, 235 Neb. 569, 574–575 (1990) (holding that a rape suspect’s confession, made after police described a painful penile swab procedure that would be unnecessary if suspect confessed, was involuntary).

24. See Lynumn v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528, 531–534, 83 S. Ct. 917, 919–920, 9 L. Ed. 2d 922, 925–927 (1963) (finding confession to be involuntary where police told defendant that state financial aid to her child would be cut off and her children taken from her if she failed to cooperate); United States v. Tingle, 658 F.2d 1332, 1336 (9th Cir. 1981) (holding that intentionally causing the suspect to fear that she would not see her children for a “long time” was “patently coercive”).

25. See Spano v. New York, 360 U.S. 315, 322, 79 S. Ct. 1202, 1207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1265, 1271 (1959) (finding a confession involuntary, in part, because the suspect was subjected to prolonged interrogation of almost eight hours); Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143, 154, 64 S. Ct. 921, 926, 88 L. Ed. 1192, 1199 (1944) (finding a confession to be coerced where suspect was questioned for 36 hours without sleep or rest); see also Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 398–402, 98 S. Ct. 2408, 2416–2418, 57 L. Ed. 2d 290, 304–306 (1978) (holding that the statements of a suspect were involuntary where an interrogation lasted for four hours while the suspect was severely injured).

26. See Stidham v. Swenson, 506 F.2d 478, 481 (8th Cir. 1974) (holding a prisoner’s confession to be coerced in part because the condition of his cell was “subhuman”).

27. See Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 398, 98 S. Ct. 2408, 2416, 57 L. Ed. 2d 290, 303 (1978) (noting that

If the police do not mirandize you but you make a voluntary statement, that statement may be used to impeach you if you testify at your own trial.²⁸ To “impeach” you means the prosecution can use the statement to say that you are not believable or that your testimony is inconsistent, even though they technically cannot use it to prove that you are guilty.²⁹ Again, a statement that a court decides was involuntary cannot be used for anything.³⁰

If you waive your Miranda rights and make a statement to law enforcement that the prosecution wants to use at trial to show you are guilty, the prosecutor has the burden to first show that you waived your rights “voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently.”³¹ They have to show that the officers who questioned you read you your Miranda rights and did not do anything to force you to speak to them.

4. A final note about police tactics

Sometimes police will try to get around the Miranda requirements. A common tactic is the use of two-step interrogations. In this scenario, the police would start questioning you without giving you the Miranda warnings until you confess to committing the crime (this statement cannot be admitted in court except for impeachment purposes, to challenge your credibility). After you confessed, the officer would then give you your Miranda warnings and the police would ask similar questions to try to get you to give up the same information.³² People in this situation often confess again, believing that since they have already confessed once, there is no harm in doing so again.

In fact, whether or not that second statement can be used to prove you are guilty at trial depends on a few different things. One factor is simply what jurisdiction you are in. Another major factor is what exactly happened during the interrogation. Courts will ask whether or not the two-step interrogation process was done intentionally or accidentally, and if anything happened between the two interrogations that leads the court to believe the second statement was given voluntarily. If the police did this on purpose to get you to confess, the statement you made will probably be excluded (kept out of your trial) unless the police did anything to fix their mistake (took curative measures).³³ If the two-step interrogation was accidental (if, for example, the officer simply forgot to mirandize you before beginning questioning and then stopped to fix his mistake), the court will probably analyze your any use at trial of an involuntary statement violates the defendant’s due process rights).

28. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 478, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1630, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 726 (1966) (“Any statement given freely and voluntarily without any compelling influences is, of course, admissible in evidence.”); United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 186–187, 97 S. Ct. 1814, 1818, 52 L. Ed. 2d 238, 244–245 (1977) (“[F]ar from being prohibited by the Constitution, admissions of guilt by wrongdoers, if not coerced, are inherently desirable. . . . Absent some officially coerced self-accusation, the Fifth Amendment privilege is not violated by even the most damning admissions.”).

29. Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222, 226, 91 S. Ct. 643, 646, 28 L. Ed. 2d 1, 5 (1971) (holding that Miranda does not prohibit the police from using a defendant’s statement to challenge his credibility and consequently impeach him).

30. See Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 540, 81 S. Ct. 735, 739, 5 L. Ed. 2d 760, 766 (1961) (“Our decisions under [the 14th] Amendment have made clear that convictions following the admission into evidence of confessions which are involuntary, i.e., the product of coercion, either physical or psychological, cannot stand”). But see Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 285, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1251, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 315 (1991) (extending the harmless-error rule adopted in Chapman v. California to the admission of involuntary confession). The admission of an involuntary confession may be permitted if the defendant fails to establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that such admission was a harmless error. Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 295, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1257, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 322 (1991).

31. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 707 (1966). However, the prosecution does not need to prove this beyond a reasonable doubt. Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 168, 107 S. Ct. 515, 522, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 485 (1986) (“[T]he State need prove waiver only by a preponderance of the evidence.”). See also People v. Seymour, 14 A.D.3d 799, 801, 788 N.Y.S.2d 260, 261 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that a valid waiver of Miranda rights is established if defendant “understood the immediate meaning of the warnings”).

32. See Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 604–606, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2605–2606, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 650–651 (2004) (plurality opinion) for a full discussion of the two-step interrogation and an example of this technique.

33. Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 621, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2615, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 661 (2004).

statement to decide if it was voluntary or not. If it was not voluntary, it cannot be used against you at trial.³⁴

C. Your Rights After You Are Charged

When the prosecution is ready to begin your case, they will file a charging document in court saying what they think you did and what laws they believe you broke.³⁵ At this point, the Sixth Amendment guarantees your right to the assistance of counsel, among other things.³⁶ The Sixth Amendment starts protecting you the moment formal criminal proceedings are started against you and continues through trial preparation, the trial itself, the sentencing phase, and beyond.³⁷

1. Right to Assigned Counsel

You may have been assigned a public defender at your arraignment (your first court appearance where the judge reads your charges). If you cannot afford a lawyer, the government must provide one for you if: (1) you are being prosecuted in a federal court; or (2) you are prosecuted for any crime in state court for which you are sentenced to a term of imprisonment.³⁸ Let's say, for example, that you are charged with a misdemeanor for which you could be sentenced to a fine or a short term of imprisonment. The state does not have to provide you with a free lawyer, but if they do not then you cannot be sentenced to prison time. If they do provide you with a free lawyer, the judge may sentence you to prison time (although they do not have to).³⁹

34. See Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 540–541, 81 S. Ct. 735, 739–740, 5 L. Ed. 2d 760, 766 (1961) (confirming that confessions must be voluntary to be admissible); Chambers v. Florida, 309 U.S. 227, 240, 60 S. Ct. 472, 479, 84 L. Ed. 716, 724 (1940) (same); Lisenba v. California, 314 U.S. 219, 236, 62 S. Ct. 280, 289–290, 86 L. Ed. 166, 179–180 (1941) (same); Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 172–174, 72 S. Ct. 205, 209–210, 96 L. Ed. 183, 190–191 (1952) (same); Spano v. New York, 360 U.S. 315, 320–321, 79 S. Ct. 1202, 1205–1206, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1265, 1270 (1959) (same); Blackburn v. Alabama, 361 U.S. 199, 206–207, 80 S. Ct. 274, 279–280, 4 L. Ed. 2d 242, 247–248 (1960) (same).

35. The prosecutor/prosecution is the lawyer for the government that is trying to prove the charges against you. In state court, the prosecutor is the Assistant District Attorney (ADA or DA). In federal court, the prosecutor is the Assistant U.S. Attorney (AUSA). Throughout this Chapter and in court, you may see or hear the prosecutor referred to as the ADA, DA, AUSA, state's attorney, and the government, depending on whether you are in state or federal court, and customs in your region. All these terms mean pretty much the same thing. You may hear the charging document referred to as an information, a complaint or an indictment. They have differences you can ask your attorney about, but all begin the process of charging you in court with a crime.

36. U.S. CONST. amend. VI (“In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right... to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense.”). Note that the 6th Amendment does not apply to civil proceedings. For example, if you were to bring a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights claim against the state, you would not have 6th Amendment protections during that case. The 6th Amendment also guarantees your right to a speedy trial. See Part D(2) of this Chapter for more information. Other rights under the 6th Amendment not covered in this Chapter include trial by jury and the right to cross-examine witnesses against you.

37. See Fellers v. United States, 540 U.S. 519, 523, 124 S. Ct. 1019, 1022, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 1022 (2004) (holding that the right to counsel under the 6th Amendment “is triggered ‘at or after the time that judicial proceedings have been initiated ... whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment’” (quoting Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 398, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1239, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424, 436 (1977))); Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 134–137, 88 S. Ct. 254, 257–258, 19 L. Ed. 2d 336, 340–342 (1967) (holding that the right to counsel extends to every stage of criminal proceedings where the defendant's substantive rights might be affected).

38. See Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 339–343, 83 S. Ct. 792, 794–797, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 802–807 (1963) (holding that the 6th Amendment should be interpreted to mean that defendants in criminal cases must be provided with counsel in federal courts, unless the right is waived, and that this right is extended to state court matters through the 14th Amendment).

39. See Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25, 40, 92 S. Ct. 2006, 2014, 32 L. Ed. 2d 530, 540 (1972) (holding that although local law may permit it, a judge may not impose prison time unless the defendant is represented by counsel); Scott v. Illinois, 440 U.S. 367, 373–374, 99 S. Ct. 1158, 1162, 59 L. Ed. 2d 383, 389 (1979) (limiting the constitutional right to appointed counsel, as adopted in Argersinger, to matters in which imprisonment upon conviction is actually imposed, not merely authorized).

In the beginning of this Chapter you learned that when you are being questioned by the police you have the right to a lawyer but you must ask for one. Once you are charged, you are supposed to get one automatically; you do not need to ask for one (although you should ask if you have not been given one).⁴⁰

2. Post-charge interrogations

Once you have been charged in court, the prosecution and law enforcement can no longer try to talk to you about your case.⁴¹ If anyone from the government (the ADA, AUSA, police officer, agent, or anyone working with them) tries to ask you about your case, you do not have to answer. If you do answer, the prosecutor cannot use what you say in court to prove you are guilty because they have violated your Sixth Amendment rights. If you do not have a lawyer or your lawyer is not present with you, the government still cannot ask you about your case. If they do, they cannot use what you say against you at trial.⁴²

However, the Sixth Amendment is “offense-specific.”⁴³ It only applies to crimes you have been officially accused of in court, and not things the police may think you have done. If law enforcement wants to question you formally, they must read you your Miranda rights and you can ask for your lawyer. But, if you choose to speak to law enforcement anyway, those statements can later be used against you to prove you are guilty of this new charge.

For example: let’s say you are formally charged with murder and the police suspect (for reasons not related to the murder case) that you may have also committed an unsolved robbery that happened six months ago, unconnected to the murder. The police can ask you questions about the robbery. You do not have to answer and you can ask for a lawyer, but if you do not ask for a lawyer and instead answer the question, the government can use your statement to charge you with the robbery and to try to show you are guilty of it in court (as long as they do not violate the Fifth Amendment). In other words, the rules that apply to the police when they are questioning you about the un-charged robbery are the ones discussed in Part B of this Chapter.

If you are detained pretrial, your lawyer will probably have told you not to discuss your case with anyone in the jail or on any recorded phone calls. This advice is important because statements you casually make to other inmates or to your family over the phone can often be used against you in 40. See Carnley v. Cochran, 369 U.S. 506, 513, 82 S. Ct. 884, 889, 8 L. Ed. 2d 70, 76 (1962) (holding that “it is settled that where the assistance of counsel is a constitutional [requirement], the right to be [appointed] counsel does not depend on a request.”).

41. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 171, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) (“The Sixth Amendment also imposes on the State an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused’s choice to seek this assistance.”).

42. See Fellers v. United States, 540 U.S. 519, 524–525, 124 S. Ct. 1019, 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 1023 (2004) (holding that evidence obtained from a discussion that took place after the defendant’s indictment was inadmissible because it was obtained “outside the presence of counsel, and in the absence of any waiver of petitioner’s Sixth Amendment rights”); Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (holding that petitioner’s 6th Amendment protections had been violated where evidence of his own incriminating words were used against him at his trial and agents had intentionally drawn out those words after he had been indicted without his counsel present).

43. See Texas v. Cobb, 532 U.S. 162, 174, 121 S. Ct. 1335, 1344, 149 L. Ed. 2d 321, 332 (2001) (holding that where a pretrial detainee had been indicted for one crime but had not yet been charged with a closely related crime, his “Sixth Amendment right to counsel did not bar police from interrogating” him regarding the related crime); McNeil v. Wisconsin, 501 U.S. 171, 175, 111 S. Ct. 2204, 2207, 115 L. Ed. 2d 158, 166 (1991) (“The Sixth Amendment right... is offense specific. It cannot be invoked once for all future prosecutions, for it does not attach until a prosecution is commenced...”); Rothgery v. Gillespie County, 554 U.S. 191, 213, 128 S. Ct. 2578, 2592, 171 L. Ed. 2d 366, 383 (2008) (holding that the 6th Amendment right to counsel attaches when a defendant first appears before a judicial officer and learns the charges against him). Some states treat the question of crime relatedness slightly differently, and depending on where you have been charged, this may be to your advantage. See, e.g., People v. Bing, 76 N.Y.2d 331, 349–350, 558 N.E.2d 1011, 1022, 559 N.Y.S.2d 474, 485 (1990) (“[P]ermitting questioning on unrelated crimes violates neither the State Constitution nor...our prior right to counsel cases.”).

court.⁴⁴ Because the Sixth Amendment only applies to crimes you have been charged with, the police could plant an informant in the jail to talk to you about crimes you have not yet been charged with. If you do not know the person is law enforcement, they do not have to read you your Miranda rights.⁴⁵ The same rule applies if you are on the street—the police may pay someone to pretend to be someone else and try to talk to you about a crime the suspect you of. If you have any questions about what your lawyer has told you and why, you should always ask them.

3. Right to Counsel in New York State

This Sixth Amendment right and the Supreme Court cases explaining it apply in both federal and state court trials.⁴⁶ If you are facing state court proceedings, that state where you are being tried may also have a similar “right to counsel” provision in its state constitution. This provision would provide you with additional protection. In New York, for example, the right to counsel is guaranteed under the New York State Constitution, Article 1 § 6.⁴⁷ If you are charged with a crime in the federal system or the state system, the Sixth Amendment right to counsel goes into effect automatically. However, the police may still ask you about crimes you have not been charged with yet without your lawyer being present. There are two exceptions to this rule in New York: if the uncharged and charged crimes are related to each other or the police know you are represented by a lawyer on the other crime they believe you committed, they are not allowed to question you about it.⁴⁸

44. Under the 6th Amendment, at trial, the state also may not use incriminating remarks that were “deliberately elicited” from you after you were charged with a crime. A remark is “deliberately elicited” if the government purposefully caused you to make statements against yourself. These incriminating remarks may not be used at trial if: (1) the statements are about the crime you are charged with, and (2) you have not waived your right to counsel. See Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (finding a 6th Amendment violation where prosecutors relied on remarks deliberately elicited from defendant after he was indicted and in the absence of his counsel); see also Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 171, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) (“The Sixth Amendment also imposes on the State an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused’s choice to seek [the assistance of counsel.]”); Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 415, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1248, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424, 447 (1977) (“[T]he lawyer is the essential medium through which the demands and commitments of the sovereign are communicated to the [suspect]. If...we are seriously concerned about the individual’s effective representation by counsel, the State cannot be permitted to dishonor its promise to this lawyer.”) (Stevens, J., concurring). In practice, this means the government cannot plant an informant in the jail with you and have the informant ask you questions. They can, however, ask someone in the jail to report back to them if the person happens to overhear you say something incriminating. This is because then they have not forced or coerced you in any way to incriminate yourself. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 176, 106 S. Ct. 477, 487, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 496 (1985). This loophole is why your lawyer will probably tell you not to talk to anyone in the jail about your case or anything criminal you may have done. For further discussion of paid informants in the jail, see United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 265, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2184, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 119 (1980). The same rules apply if you are out on bail pretrial. The government cannot set you up with a paid informant to ask you questions. See Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964).

45. Compare Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292, 299–300, 110 S. Ct. 2394, 2399, 110 L. Ed. 2d 243, 253 (1990) (holding that an undercover agent, while in jail posing as a fellow incarcerated person, may question an incarcerated person about a crime without giving a Miranda warning if the incarcerated person has not yet been charged with that crime), with Mathis v. United States, 391 U.S. 1, 4–5, 88 S. Ct. 1503, 1505, 20 L. Ed. 2d 381, 384–385, (1968) (holding that questioning of an incarcerated person by a person known to be an Internal Revenue Service (IRS) official about tax violations, without the giving of a Miranda warning, violated the incarcerated person’s 5th Amendment rights, when the incarcerated person was in prison for an entirely different offense). See Part B of this Chapter for more information on your 5th Amendment rights.

46. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 342–345, 83 S. Ct. 792, 796–797, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 804–807 (1963) (holding that the right to counsel applies in state proceedings).

47. “In any trial in any court whatever the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel as in civil actions and shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation and be confronted with the witnesses against him or her. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he or she be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself or herself.. .” N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 6.

48. People v. Henry, 31 N.Y.3d 364, 368, 102 N.E.3d 1056, 1058–1059, 78 N.Y.S.3d 275, 277–278 (2018).

You also have the right to have your lawyer present during any swabbing for DNA.⁴⁹ Ask your lawyer about whether or not you will be required to give a DNA sample.

D. What Determines Whether You Stay in Jail or Are Released Pretrial

Two important court mechanisms determine whether or not you stay in jail while your case is going on: bail and speedy trial rights. While reading this Part, it is important to remember that these particular areas of law are currently undergoing major changes in New York State and also vary greatly between states and between the state and federal systems. The words used or the law may be different in your state. This Part is meant to give you a broad overview of how these two mechanisms work. You should ask your lawyer to explain the specific laws in your jurisdiction.

1. Bail

At your arraignment (your first court appearance after you are arrested), your lawyer will probably ask the judge to release you while your case is pending. There are a few different options for conditions under which you might be released. One is Release on your Own Recognizance (ROR). ROR means you are released without having to pay any money. In other situations, the judge may require you to wear an ankle monitor, enroll in programs, or report to supervision, similar to probation. The judge may also require that someone pay money or post bond (a debt you promise to the court) in an amount set by the judge to have you released.⁵⁰

The purpose of bail is to make sure you appear before the court at the assigned time.⁵¹ The judge is supposed to set the combination of money and other conditions that they believe will make sure you come back to court. If the judge believes that the risk you will run away to avoid prosecution is too high, they may “remand” you, meaning they will order that you stay in jail while your case is in progress. If the judge does set bail but no one can pay it, then you will also stay in jail unless someone comes up with the money. In some cases, the court may allow someone to sign a bond saying that if you do not come back to court, the signer will have to pay a lot of money. The next two Sections discuss the bail/bond process in the federal system and some recent changes to the New York bail law.

(a) Bail in the federal system

If you are charged in federal court, the judge deciding if you stay in jail or not during your case will follow the rules set in the Federal Bail Reform Act. This Act explains the federal government’s authority to detain or release you before trial, rules for appeals of a release or detention order, what happens if you fail to appear or get rearrested while on release, and what factors the judge should consider when ruling on your request for bond.⁵² The two main questions the judge will consider are:

- (1) Whether you are likely to return to court as required;
- (2) Whether you will be a danger to the community if you are released.⁵³

To answer these two questions, the court will consider a number of factors, including:

- (1) The offense you are charged with.
- (2) The weight of the evidence against you (the likelihood that you will actually be convicted of the thing you are charged with).

49. People v. Smith, 30 N.Y.3d 626, 629 92 N.E.3d 789, 790, 69 N.Y.S.3d 566, 567 (2017) (holding that a DNA test counts as a “critical stage of the proceedings” for which defendants have a constitutional right to counsel).

50. A cash bail is an amount of money that someone pays to get you released from jail. There are a few different kinds of bonds, but a bond is generally an enforceable promise to pay if the defendant does not show up to court. Bond, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

51. Bail, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

52. Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3141–3156, available at <https://www.justice.gov/jm/criminal-resource-manual-26-release-and-detention-pending-judicial-proceedings-18-usc-3141-et> (last visited Aug. 26, 2020).

53. Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3142(f)–(g); see also United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 747–748, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 2101–2102, 95 L. Ed. 2d 697, 708–709 (1987) (holding that prevention of danger to the community is a legitimate goal of pretrial detention).

- (3) Your history and characteristics, such as your character, health, family and community ties, employment, any substance abuse history, any criminal history, and any record of returning or not returning to court.
- (4) Whether you were on probation or parole when you were charged with the current offense.
- (5) Anything that the judge thinks would make you a danger to other people if you were released.⁵⁴

In theory, the judge is supposed to consider your ability to pay bond,⁵⁵ but what the judge thinks you can pay and what you can actually pay might be different. If the judge finds that no condition or combination of conditions will make you likely to return to court, and keep you from being a danger to your community when you are released, the judge must order detention before trial (remand).⁵⁶

(b) Bail in New York State

In New York, whether you are detained pre-trial is governed by Articles 510 and 530 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. If you were charged in a state other than New York, you should check the bail statutes of the state you were charged in.

Under Section 510.10, at your first court appearance, the judge will issue what is called a “securing order” that either releases you on your own recognizance, fixes bail or other non-monetary conditions, or sends you back to jail.⁵⁷ Under Section 510.20, you can then apply for bail or recognizance, as opposed to waiting in jail, and present arguments and evidence in support of your application in court. Technically, your request for bail can be made at the time of the original securing order or any time afterward.⁵⁸ In practice, bail applications usually happen at either your post-arrest arraignment or the arraignment on your indictment unless there is a later change in the circumstances of your detention. You are entitled to have a lawyer during this part of your case, and if you cannot afford one, the court must appoint one for you.⁵⁹

(i) How does New York’s new bail statute apply to you?

The decision on your bail application is not left entirely up to the judge’s discretion. As of January 1, 2020, New York is operating under a revised bail statute with some important changes. Because the law is so new, there are not a lot of cases explaining how it should be applied. You will have to do a bit of research to see if there are any new cases by the time you are reading this, and you should speak with your lawyer.

The new statute says that for less serious charges, called “non-qualifying offenses,” the judge must release you on your own recognizance (ROR) unless they find that you are a flight risk. If they find that you are a flight risk, they must explain why they believe so. If you are charged with a non-qualifying offense and are not a flight risk, the judge is required to set the least restrictive non-monetary conditions that will ensure that you return to court to be prosecuted for the crime you are charged with (meaning they may not set cash bail).⁶⁰ If the court releases you on your own

54. Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3142(g).

55. See Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3142(g) (mentioning both financial resources and possible inquiries into property designated as collateral for bond as factors to be considered).

56. Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3142(e)(1).

57. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.10 (McKinney 2009). In the statute, you will see that it says “commit...to the custody of the sheriff,” which means send you back to jail. In court, the judge may say you are being remanded or you are remaining in pretrial detention/custody, all of which also mean being sent back to jail.

58. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.20 (McKinney 2009); see, e.g., People ex rel. Rosenthal v. Wolfson, 48 N.Y.2d 230, 233, 397 N.E.2d 745, 746, 422 N.Y.S.2d 55, 56 (N.Y. 1979) (holding that when pertinent new evidence becomes available the trial court may reconsider their initial decision to grant or withhold bail).

59. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.10(2) (McKinney 2009).

60. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.10(3) (McKinney 2009).

recognizance, you will be released from custody with the understanding that you will later appear in court.⁶¹

If you are charged with a more serious charge, called a “qualifying offense,” the judge can put monetary conditions on your release, but he is not required to so. If the judge finds that no combination of money bail and conditions will ensure your return to court, the judge may remand you.⁶² The following is a list of the qualifying offenses the bail statute says allow the judge to set money bail. You can look up each statute in the New York Penal Law:

- (1) most violent felonies (§ 70.02) except burglary in the second degree (§ 140.25) or robbery in the second degree (§160.10 of the penal law);
- (2) witness intimidation (§ 215.15);
- (3) witness tampering (§§ 215.11, 215.12 or 215.13);
- (4) any class A felony (except controlled substance offense (art. 220) unless you are a major trafficker (§ 220.77));
- (5) a felony sex offense (§ 70.80) or incest (§§ 255.25, 255.26 or 255.27), or a misdemeanor sex offense (parts of art. 130);
- (6) conspiracy in the second degree (§ 105.15 of the penal law) where the underlying allegation is that you conspired to commit a class A felony related to homicide (art. 125)
- (7) money laundering in support of terrorism in the first degree (§ 470.24); money laundering in support of terrorism in the second degree (§ 470.23); or a felony crime of terrorism (art. 490 with exception of § 490.20);
- (8) criminal contempt in the second degree (§ 215.50(3)), criminal contempt in the first degree (§ 215.51(b), (c), or (d)) or aggravated criminal contempt (§ 215.52), where the underlying allegation of the contempt charge is that the you violated an order of protection that had been served on you where the protected party is a member of your family or household (§ 530.11); or
- (9) facilitating a sexual performance by a child with a controlled substance or alcohol (§ 263.30), use of a child in a sexual performance (§ 263.05) or luring a child (§ 120.70(1)).⁶³

To decide if you are a flight risk, the judge will consider a few different factors about you. The prosecutor may tell the judge they consent to your release, or they may say that they think you should have a high bail or be remanded. Your defense lawyer will make arguments about why you should be released. Your lawyer, the prosecutor and the judge will discuss the factors that are listed as subsections (a) through (h) of Section 510.30(1). These factors include:

- (a) Your “activities and history” (such as community involvement and family ties to New York);
- (b) The charges you are facing;
- (c) Any past criminal convictions you may have;
- (d) Certain cases you had as a juvenile;
- (e) Whether or not you have failed to show up to court in the past when required;
- (f) If the judge is allowed to set monetary bail, they must consider your ability pay and the hardship that paying will impose on you, as well as your ability to get a secured, unsecured, or partially secured bond;
- (g) If you are charged with a crime against a member of your family or household, the court will also consider:
 - i. If you have every violated a protective order towards anyone in your family or household;
 - ii. If you have ever used or possessed a firearm.

61. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 500.10(2) (McKinney 2009). Most of the terms used in this Section, including different kinds of bail, bond, and conditions of release, are defined in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 500.10 (McKinney 2020).

62. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

63. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

(h) If you are requesting a securing order while you have a pending appeal, the court will consider the likelihood that your appeal will actually be successful.⁶⁴

Subsection (h) only applies if you have already been convicted but have appealed your conviction and want to request that you be released on bail while your appeal is pending. If the judge believes that there is only a small chance you will win your appeal, the judge can deny your request for bail even if you are not a flight risk.⁶⁵

If you are charged with a felony and are released on bail or RORed, the court must explain to you that your release is conditional. If you commit another felony while released on bail or your own recognizance, you can be remanded while your case is pending.⁶⁶

(c) Procedure for Bail Decisions Made in Local Criminal and Town Courts

If you are in New York State but outside of New York City, you may be charged in a local justice court (sometimes referred to as a village or town court). These local courts can hear low-level criminal cases that occur within the borders of the town or village. They can also handle arraignments and preliminary hearings for felony cases.⁶⁷

For most charges, the same bail rules apply as the ones described above.⁶⁸ However, these lower courts cannot release you on recognizance or bail if you are charged with certain types of felonies (class A felonies) or if you have been convicted of two prior felonies.⁶⁹ A town court also may not order recognizance or bail if you are charged with a felony until the district attorney has had an opportunity to express their opinion in court and both the court and your lawyer have received a report of your prior criminal record. However, if a report on your past criminal behavior is unavailable, the district attorney may consent to recognizance or bail without it.⁷⁰

If you are denied bail or recognizance in a town court because of your prior felonies or current felony charge, you can still ask a superior court judge to grant recognizance or bail anyway.⁷¹ You can also appeal to a higher court when the town court has 1) denied your application for recognizance or bail, 2) ordered excessive bail, or 3) released you under non-monetary conditions that are more restrictive than necessary to make sure you come back to court.⁷² The court must apply the least restrictive conditions rule and explain its reasoning. The reasoning can be explained either on the record (verbally at the hearing) or in writing.⁷³ If you have been charged with a felony, the district attorney must have the opportunity to be heard in court before a decision is made and the higher court judge must be provided with a copy of your criminal record.⁷⁴ You may appeal your bail to the higher court only once.⁷⁵

The higher court will review your bail determination from the lower court de novo, meaning they will review it as though they were seeing it for the first time and will not take the decision of the lower court into account when making their own decision.⁷⁶ Even though only one application to a higher court is allowed, you can still apply for habeas corpus to appeal the denial of bail from the higher court.⁷⁷ In that case, however, the court will review the custody determination for error – this means they will only look for violations of law or the constitution, or abuse of discretion of the court. Unlike

64. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(1)(a)–(h) (McKinney 2009).

65. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(2) (McKinney 2009).

66. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(3) (McKinney 2009).

67. City, Town & Village Courts, NYCOURTS.GOV, available at <https://www.nycourts.gov/courts/townandvillage/introduction.shtml> (last visited Aug. 27, 2020).

68. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.20(1) (McKinney 2009).

69. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.20(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

70. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.20(2)(b)(i)–(ii) (McKinney 2009).

71. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.30(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

72. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.30(1)(b)–(d) (McKinney 2009).

73. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.30(1) (McKinney 2009).

74. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.30(2) (McKinney 2009).

75. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.30(3) (McKinney 2009).

76. Preiser, Practice Commentaries, Book 11A, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.20 (McKinney 2009).

77. Preiser, Practice Commentaries, Book 11A, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.20 (McKinney 2009).

in de novo review, they will not start from scratch and review all the evidence that was originally presented to the court.

2. Speedy Trial

Once you are arrested and brought to court for the first time, the government has deadlines for completing certain tasks that move your case forward. Your right to have your case proceed without too much delay is called your right to a speedy trial. The right is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. It applies to trials in both federal and state courts.⁷⁸ You have a right to a speedy trial even if you are released on bail.⁷⁹ This right does not apply until you have been formally charged or are arrested.⁸⁰ The remedy, or solution, for a violation of the right to a speedy trial is release from detention if you are in jail and eventually the dismissal of the case if the government does not meet the deadline.⁸¹

Because the Constitution does not give a specific number of days, the federal government and many states have speedy trial statutes that say how much time the government gets for different parts of your case. Even if your state does not have a speedy trial statute, your right is still protected by the Sixth Amendment. You will just have to read cases about speedy trial in your state to see how much time the government has typically gotten.

However, the government is only responsible for the time the government uses up. Delays that you cause or request do not count toward your speedy trial time. The days that do count are often referred to as days that are “chargeable to the prosecution.” There are a few different situations in which certain amounts of time will not count towards the government’s deadline. The parts of the speedy trial statutes that explain this are generally called “Stop-the-Clock” Provisions and are explained below.

Even if your state does have a speedy trial statute, you still have a constitutional speedy trial right. So, if you are in a situation where a small number of days have been charged to the prosecution but your case has dragged on for a long time, you may be able to make a constitutional speedy trial claim even though the prosecution has not violated the state’s speedy trial statute. Success on this type of claim is difficult but not impossible.

The following sections give a brief overview of these mechanisms in federal court and New York State court as well as the constitutional standards underlying these laws. You can look up your own state’s speedy trial statute using Appendix A to this Chapter.

(a) Federal Constitutional Right to a Speedy Trial

Outside of the speedy trial statutes explained below, your right to a speedy trial is protected by the Sixth Amendment. This right may apply even if the state’s speedy trial statute has not been violated or if you are in a state that doesn’t have a speedy trial statute.

The Supreme Court has created a balancing test for courts to use in speedy trial cases. When the court uses a balancing test, it considers a few specific factors and then weighs them against each other to decide if the delay in your trial reached the level of a constitutional violation.

The four factors the court will consider in determining whether there has been a violation of your constitutional right to a speedy trial are:

78. U.S. CONST. amend. VI; U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1; see Klopfer v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 222–223, 87 S. Ct. 988, 993, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1, 7–8 (1967) (holding that the 6th Amendment is enforceable in state as well as federal actions).

79. United States v. MacDonald, 456 U.S. 1, 8, 102 S. Ct. 1497, 1502, 71 L. Ed. 2d 696, 704 (1982) (stating that the speedy trial guarantee is designed in part to “reduce the lesser, but nevertheless substantial, impairment of liberty imposed on an accused while released on bail”).

80. See United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 320, 92 S. Ct. 455, 463, 30 L. Ed. 2d 468, 479 (1971) (“[I]t is either a formal indictment or information or else the actual restraints imposed by arrest and holding to answer a criminal charge that engage the particular protections of the speedy trial provision . . .”).

81. See Strunk v. United States, 412 U.S. 434, 440, 93 S. Ct. 2260, 2264, 37 L. Ed. 2d 56, 62 (1973) (holding that the only remedy available for a violation of the right to a speedy trial is reversing the conviction, vacating the sentence, and dismissing the indictment); see also United States v. Ray, 578 F.3d 184, 191, 198–199 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that, although the remedy for a 6th Amendment violation is dismissal, the 6th Amendment does not apply to sentencing proceedings).

- (1) the length of the delay;
- (2) the reason for the delay (for example, whose fault was it? What happened?);
- (3) the defendant's assertion of his right (did you make a claim in court that your speedy trial right was being violated?); and
- (4) prejudice to the defendant (were you hurt by this delay? Did it actually affect your case?).⁸²

The first factor the court will consider is prejudice. Unless there is some delay that is “presumptively prejudicial”—meaning, a delay that most likely damaged your case—the court will not consider the three other factors (length, reason, and your assertion).⁸³ In considering the reason the government gives for the delay (factor 2) the court is more likely to decide that there was a constitutional violation when the government did something the court thinks is bad, like try to delay your trial on purpose. The court will probably be more lenient when the delay is caused by an accident on the part of the government, or just by overcrowding of the court system. The court will still consider these reasons since they are not your fault, but they weigh less heavily in favor of dismissal than something the government did on purpose with bad intentions.⁸⁴

In some cases, if the delay is long enough, the court will automatically look at all four factors to see if your constitutional rights have been violated.⁸⁵ This full inquiry happens because the court may find that a very long delay is “presumptively prejudicial.” As a general guideline, note that the Supreme Court has previously decided that delays of about one year or longer usually require a full, four-part analysis.⁸⁶

Finally, if you believe your speedy trial rights are being violated, you must file a complaint in court saying so. Otherwise, it will be hard to prove that your rights were actually violated.⁸⁷

(b) The Federal Speedy Trial Act⁸⁸

If you are charged with a crime in federal court, your right to a speedy trial is protected by the Federal Speedy Trial Act. Congress passed this Act to provide some guidelines for how courts can comply with the Sixth Amendment speedy trial right. The Act gives specific numbers of days the government has to complete different parts of your case.

The different time limits are:

- (1) The prosecution has thirty days to file an indictment against you, starting from the date you were arrested or served with a summons for the charges.⁸⁹

82. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 116–117 (1972) (holding that courts must conduct a balancing test when considering speedy trial cases and listing some of the factors that courts should weigh).

83. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 116–117 (1972) (“Until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance.”).

84. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972) (stating that a “deliberate attempt to delay the trial” should be weighed more heavily than a more neutral reason).

85. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972) (“To take but one example, the delay that can be tolerated for an ordinary street crime is considerably less than for a serious, complex conspiracy charge.”).

86. Doggett v. United States, 505 U.S. 647, 652 n.1, 112 S. Ct. 2686, 2691 n.1, 120 L. Ed. 2d 520, 528 n.1 (1992).

87. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531–532, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192–2193, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117–118 (1972) (“We emphasize that failure to assert the right will make it difficult for a defendant to prove that he was denied a speedy trial.”).

88. Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3161–3174. The most important sections are § 3161, which deals with time limits, and § 3162, which specifies the sanctions imposed when the time limits are violated.

89. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(b). However, the section also states that if you are charged with a felony in a district where no grand jury has been in session during this 30-day period, the period of time for filing the indictment will be extended by an additional 30 days.

- a. If the prosecution misses this deadline, the charges in your complaint that they were going to indict must be dismissed.⁹⁰
- (2) The prosecution has seventy days to start your trial, starting from either the date you first appeared in court or the date they filed an indictment against you, whichever date is later.⁹¹
 - a. If the prosecution fails to bring your case to trial within seventy days of filing an indictment,⁹² the indictment will be dismissed if you make a motion, meaning formally ask the court, to have it dismissed for a violation of your speedy trial rights.⁹³ If you don't file a motion for dismissal before going to trial or entering a plea of guilty or nolo contendere (no contest), you will lose the right to have the charges dismissed under the statute.⁹⁴
- (3) Your trial can't begin less than thirty days from when you first get a lawyer in court (or from when you specifically waive your right to counsel and decide to represent yourself pro se).⁹⁵

(c) Federal “Stop the Clock” Provisions

The time periods in the speedy trial statutes are not as straightforward as they seem because not every single day counts towards the number of days listed in the statute. For example, if you request a delay to allow your attorney to do additional investigation, those days will not count towards your speedy trial time. Otherwise, defendants would all just delay their cases until they were dismissed. Instead, the speedy trial rules look at unexplained and unjustified delay, mainly caused by the government. To know whether or not your right to a speedy trial has been violated, you would have to add up all the days of unjustified delay and compare the number of unjustified days to the statutory deadlines.

The parts of the speedy trial statute that explain which days do and do not count are called “stop the clock” provisions because they tell you when the speedy trial “clock” starts and stops. Subsection 3161(h) of the Speedy Trial Act allows the clock to stop in certain circumstances.⁹⁶ When the clock stops, the days between when it stops and starts again are excluded from the speedy trial calculation (do not count towards the deadlines explained above). Delay because of general business of the court, 90. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(1). See United States v. Cortinas, 785 F. Supp. 357, 362 (E.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd mem., 999 F.2d 537 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that a violation of the Speedy Trial Act requires dismissal only of charges alleged in the complaint; prosecution for other conduct arising out of the same criminal incident, even though it was known or reasonably should have been known at the time of the complaint, is not barred).

91. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1).

92. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1).

93. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2).

94. No Contest, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) (stating that a plea of no contest means that the defendant, “while not admitting guilt...will not dispute the charge” and that “[t]his plea is often preferable to a guilty plea, which can be used against the defendant in a later civil lawsuit”). As for losing your right to dismiss the charges, see 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2); see also United States v. Brown, 498 F.3d 523, 532 (6th Cir. 2007) (observing that the defendant had not asserted his right to a speedy trial before this appeal and stating that this fact “weighs heavily toward a conclusion that no Sixth Amendment violation occurred”); United States v. Morgan, 384 F.3d 439, 442–443 (7th Cir. 2004) (dismissing defendant’s appeal based on speedy trial grounds because he did not file a pretrial motion on the issue); United States v. Jackson, 30 F.3d 572, 575 (5th Cir. 1994) (holding that defendant waived right to dismissal by conditionally pleading guilty to one count before moving for dismissal).

95. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(2).

96. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(1)–(8). The following are some examples of the periods of delay that are included in this subsection: (1) delay resulting from “other proceedings,” including, but not limited to, from any proceeding, including any examinations, to determine the mental competency or physical capacity of the defendant, from a trial with respect to other charges against the defendant, from any pretrial motion, or from the removal of the case to another district, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3161(h)(1)(A)–(B), 3161(h)(1)(D)–(E); (2) any period of delay during which the prosecution is deferred pursuant to written agreement with the defendant, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to demonstrate his good conduct, 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(2); (3) any period of delay resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant or an essential witness, 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(3)(A).

lack of preparation, or the prosecution's failure to obtain witnesses will not be excluded.⁹⁷ Still, there are a lot of different provisions that "stop the clock" and your case will often take a long time without violating your statutory right to a speedy trial.

The Supreme Court has previously decided that, when scheduling the trial, the prosecutor may not rely on the defendant's promise not to raise a speedy trial claim.⁹⁸ In other words, even if you believe that you intentionally opted out of your speedy trial rights before the trial, you are not prevented from raising these rights during trial.⁹⁹

(d) Constitutional Speedy Trial In New York

If you are in state court in New York, you can still make a constitutional speedy trial claim even if the speedy trial statute has not been violated. Although the New York Constitution does not have a clause specifically about your right to a speedy trial, you still have a state constitutional right to a speedy trial under the guarantee of due process clause in article 6 of the New York Constitution.¹⁰⁰ When the court is deciding if your right to a speedy trial has been violated according to the state constitution, they will apply a test similar to the one used in federal court. This means they will ask a series of questions about the case and then weigh the answers against each other to decide if your case should be dismissed for a speedy trial violation. The questions, or factors, that the court will consider are:

- (1) the extent of the delay;
- (2) the reason for the delay;
- (3) the nature of the underlying charge;
- (4) whether there has been an extended period of pretrial incarceration;
- (5) whether there is any indication that your defense has been hurt by the delay (prejudice, as described in the federal section).¹⁰¹

To bring a constitutional speedy trial claim in state court, you would apply the above test and also cite to New York Criminal Procedure Law § 30.20.¹⁰²

(e) The New York Speedy Trial Statute

The New York State speedy trial statute is usually better for defendants. Your right to a speedy trial under New York law is governed by Section 30.30 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.¹⁰³ If you are making a claim in court that your speedy trial rights have been violated, you should talk about both the statute and the state constitution in order to keep your right to a speedy trial.

Under the New York speedy trial statute, you can be released or your charges can get dismissed, depending on the amount of time the government is taking to be ready for trial. How much time the government gets depends on your charges.

97. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(7)(C).

98. Zedner v. United States, 547 U.S. 489, 503, 126 S. Ct. 1976, 1986–1987, 164 L. Ed. 2d 749, 765 (2006).

99. Zedner v. United States, 547 U.S. 489, 501, 126 S. Ct. 1976, 1985, 164 L. Ed. 2d 749, 764 (2006) (holding that the "public interest cannot be served ... if defendants may opt out of the Act").

100. N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 6; People v. Singer, 44 N.Y.2d 241, 253, 376 N.E.2d 179, 186, 405 N.Y.S.2d 17, 25 (1978) (holding that unreasonable delay in prosecution violates the defendant's state constitutional right to due process of law and noting that "the State due process requirement of a prompt prosecution is broader than the right to a speedy trial guaranteed by statute ... and the Sixth Amendment" (citation omitted)). But see People v. Vernace, 96 N.Y.2d 886, 888, 756 N.E.2d 66, 68, 730 N.Y.S.2d 778, 780 (2001) (holding that good faith determinations to delay prosecution with cause, "will not deprive defendant of due process even though there may be some prejudice to defendant").

101. People v. Taranovich, 37 N.Y.2d 442, 445, 335 N.E.2d 303, 306, 373 N.Y.S.2d 79, 81–82 (1975) (explaining that the court must balance these factors to determine if the defendant was deprived of his constitutional right to a speedy trial); People v. Vernace, 96 N.Y.2d 886, 887–888, 756 N.E.2d 66, 67, 730 N.Y.S.2d 778, 779 (2001) (weighing the factors and deciding that defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated by 14 year delay, when there was virtually no harm to defendant and his case).

102 N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.20(1) (McKinney 2018) ("After a criminal action is commenced, the defendant is entitled to a speedy trial.").

103. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30 (McKinney 2018).

The chart below shows the amount of time for the two speedy trial deadlines for the four different categories of charges.

Type of Offense	Deadline 1 (Release) ¹⁰⁴	Deadline 2 (Dismissal) ¹⁰⁵
Felony	Ninety days	Six months
Misdemeanor punishable by more than three months	Thirty days	Ninety days
Misdemeanor punishable by three months or less	Fifteen days	Sixty days
Violation	Five days	Thirty days

If you are released at your arraignment, the first deadline does not apply to you, since all that happens if the prosecution violates it is that you are released.¹⁰⁶ If you are in custody, the clock starts running when you are put into custody.¹⁰⁷ If you reach the second deadline and the prosecution is still not ready for trial, your charges must be dismissed.¹⁰⁸ The clock for the second deadline begins to run on the day following the commencement of the criminal action, meaning the day the prosecution files a document in court accusing you of a crime.¹⁰⁹ If new accusations have been filed to replace the original charges, the amount of time the state has to be ready for trial will be determined by the new offense. The state's time will start from the time the new charges are filed. However, if the government takes too long to file the new charging document, a new clock will not start. Your case and any motion to dismiss for speedy trial violations that you make will be judged under the old speedy trial clock from your first charging document, subtracting any time that cannot count under section 30.30(4), discussed below.

(f) New York “Stop-the-Clock” Provisions

Just like under the federal statute, there are certain event that can stop the speedy trial clock, meaning the days between that event and when the clock starts again do not count towards the two deadlines. The list of things that stop the clock can be found in section 30.30(4). They include a delay that you request or consent to,¹¹⁰ delay resulting from the unavailability of the defendant,¹¹¹ and certain delays requested by the district attorney for purposes of preparing the case.¹¹² Importantly, if are released and you do not show up to court as required, the clock will stop.¹¹³

If you believe that you have been denied access to a speedy trial, you must raise this issue before the trial begins or before you plead guilty.¹¹⁴ The claim will not be preserved for appeal if it is not properly raised in the trial court, meaning you will not be able to bring it up later.¹¹⁵ Unlike statutory

104. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 30.30(2)(a)–(d) (McKinney 2018).

105. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 30.30(1)(a)–(d) (McKinney 2018).

106. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(2) (McKinney 2018).

107. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(2) (McKinney 2018).

108. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(1) (McKinney 2018). You may hear this dismissal date referred to as a “30.30 date” and the amount of time the government has used up as “30.30 time.”

109. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(1) (McKinney 2018).

110. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(4)(b) (McKinney 2018).

111. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(4)(c) (McKinney 2018).

112. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(4)(g) (McKinney 2018).

113. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(4)(c)(i) (McKinney 2018).

114. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 170.30(2), 210.20(2) (McKinney 2007); see People v. Cintron, 7 A.D.3d 827, 828, 776 N.Y.S.2d 919, 919 (3d Dept. 2004) (holding defendant's guilty plea waived appellate review of his statutory right to speedy trial).

115. See People v. Bancroft, 23 A.D.3d 850, 850–851, 803 N.Y.S.2d 824, 825–826 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that the right to a speedy trial may be waived where a defendant fails to raise the claim in either a pretrial motion “or otherwise register an appropriate objection on this ground throughout the course of his prosecution”).

speedy trial claims, properly asserted constitutional speedy trial claims are not waived by a guilty plea or by making a plea bargain agreement.¹¹⁶ Most speedy trial claims are raised in pretrial motions (such as a motion to dismiss) or state habeas corpus petitions.¹¹⁷ If you are represented by a lawyer, ask them which procedure best fits your case.

E. Conditions of Confinement

If you stay in jail while your case is pending, you will likely have some concerns about the living conditions at the jail. In theory, the jail has legal obligations to not subject you to certain conditions. In practice, it can be difficult to get a jail to make improvements. This Part will explain why that is and give some examples of conditions you may be able to challenge because they violate the constitution. This Part will also give you a basic overview of the laws that may help you if you have issues with the conditions of your pretrial detention.¹¹⁸

Your rights as a pretrial detainee are protected under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment due process clauses. Because you have not been convicted of anything and are simply being held to assure your return to court, you cannot be punished. So, if a guard does something to you that is intended as punishment and was unnecessary to maintain security at the jail, your rights have been violated because you are being punished without due process. Your rights have also been violated if a measure taken by the jail is excessive in relation to the jail's legitimate security concerns. Finally, as a pretrial detainee you have the right to communicate privately with your defense attorney and you have the right to vote.

If you do want to file a claim, refer to Chapter 16 of the JLM to learn about the procedure for filing a § 1983 civil rights claim, including who specifically you should name as a defendant. You must also read Chapter 14 of the JLM to learn about the Prison Litigation Reform Act and how to make sure you are properly preserving your claim. If you do not follow these procedures, the court will not consider your claim. The rest of this Part will explain the substantive law you would cite in your claim: the constitutional status of pretrial detainees and how that status applies to a series of different jail conditions.¹¹⁹ This Part will begin with a bit of background history on the law about conditions of 116. See People v. Savage, 54 N.Y.2d 697, 698, 426 N.E.2d 468, 468, 442 N.Y.S.2d 974, 975 (1981) (noting that a guilty plea does not waive the constitutional speedy trial right, just the statutory right under § 30.30); People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 313, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 460–461 (1974) (dismissing defendant's indictment because plea bargain should not have been made in exchange for withdrawal of claim of speedy trial violation); People v. Thorpe, 160 Misc. 2d 558, 559, 613 N.Y.S. 2d 795, 796 (App. Term 2d Dept. 1994) (holding that “a constitutional speedy trial claim is not waived by a guilty plea”).

117. For more information on state habeas corpus petitions, see JLM, Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan.” Note that the New York Court of Appeals has held that habeas corpus petitions asserting a denial of the defendant's right to speedy trial cannot be brought during a pending criminal proceeding. People ex rel. McDonald v. Warden, 34 N.Y.2d 554, 555, 310 N.E.2d 537, 537, 354 N.Y.S.2d 939, 939 (1974).

118. This area of law can be very confusing because courts have said different things about what exactly your rights are when you are a pretrial detainee. The law may be very different depending on whether you are in state or federal custody and your jurisdiction. So, while you always have the right not to be punished, courts in different places may have very different ideas about what counts as punishment. This Chapter gives a basic overview of your rights as a pretrial detainee. You must research how courts in the jurisdiction where you are incarcerated have handled these questions. Refer to Chapter 2 of the JLM for information on how to conduct legal research.

119. You may have heard of the 8th Amendment rule against cruel and unusual punishment. The reason pretrial cases are analyzed under the 5th and 14th Amendment and not the 8th Amendment is because the 8th Amendment applies to your sentence, or punishment, for a crime. In the pretrial stage, you have not been convicted of anything and are not being punished for a crime. However, because a lot of the same jail problems affect people incarcerated both pre- and post-trial, courts are often influenced by cases that talk about conditions that violate the 8th Amendment. Generally, if a jail condition is too harsh for someone who has been convicted of a crime (as in, the condition violates the 8th Amendment) it is almost definitely too harsh for someone who has not been convicted of anything. So, you can use cases that talk about the 8th Amendment and say that they still apply to you because you are being punished without due process, which you are entitled to under the 14th Amendment.

pretrial confinement so that when you come across these cases in your research, you know how to use them correctly.

1. The Reasoning of Pretrial Conditions of Confinement Law: Right Not to be Punished

As a pretrial detainee, you must be presumed innocent because you have not been convicted of a crime. Without a conviction, you cannot be punished. When courts are deciding if a condition of pretrial confinement is unconstitutional, one major question they will ask is if the condition is so bad that it amounts to punishment. At the same times, the court will also consider the need of the jail to maintain security. So, to decide if a particular condition is equal to punishment the court will ask two questions:

- (1) is the goal of the jail's action legitimate and non-punitive. In other words, is the goal of the jail something it makes sense for the jail to want to do, like maintain order, and is the goal something besides punishment. If the jail passes this first test, the court will turn to the second question:
- (2) are the conditions an excessive way to achieve that goal? In other words, could the jail have reached the same goal without doing something so extreme?¹²⁰

This test was established in Bell v. Wolfish. If the goal of the conditions is to punish or otherwise not legitimate, then the conditions amount to punishment. Likewise, if the goal is legitimate but the conditions are an excessive way to achieve that goal, then the conditions amount to punishment. Keeping order and security in the jail is usually treated by courts as a legitimate, non-punitive government goal.¹²¹ Jail officials will generally claim that whatever they did to you was for legitimate purposes of maintaining order and security—not for punishment. But a court can still decide that the conditions you were subjected to were not justified or lawful despite what the officer says.¹²²

120. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873–1874, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468 (1979) (holding that without a showing of an expressed intent to punish, whether conditions or restrictions amount to punishment “generally will turn on ‘whether an alternative purpose to which [the restriction] may rationally be connected is assignable for it, and whether it appears excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned [to it]’” (alterations in original) (quoting Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168–169, 83 S. Ct. 554, 567–568, 9 L. Ed. 2d 644, 661 (1963))).

121. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 540, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1875, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 469 (1979) (“The effective management of the detention facility once the individual is confined is a valid objective that may justify imposition of conditions and restrictions of pretrial detention and dispel any inference that such restrictions are intended as punishment.”).

122. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538–539, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873–1874, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468–469 (1979) (allowing courts to decide on their own whether jail conditions amount to “punishment” under the Constitution); see, e.g., Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 188 (2d Cir. 2001) (upholding the lower court’s ruling that restraints that were characterized as non-punitive by the city’s corrections department caused so much pain to detainees that they had the same effect as punishment).

How to apply the Bell v. Wolfish steps

To give an extreme example, let's say that at a certain jail the inmates keep having food fights which cause chaos and mess. The jail wants to stop this from happening, so they stop serving food.

1) Is the goal of the jail's actions legitimate and non-punitive?

a. Yes. The jail understandably does not want constant food fights in their facility because it is messy, wasteful and chaotic. The jail's desire not to have constant food fights has nothing to do with punishing you for the thing you are charged with in court.

2) But, are the conditions an excessive way to achieve that goal?

a. Yes. The jail cannot deprive you of food to prevent food fights or for any other reason.

So, even though the goal of the jail in not serving food is legitimate and non-punitive, the condition they imposed is excessive and not proportional to the problem. Because they cannot satisfy both parts of the test, they violated the constitution when they imposed the no-food condition.

(Note: If there was no food fight problem in the jail and the jail started severely restricting your meals anyway, they would probably fail the first step. There would be no legitimate reason to restrict your food and they might just be trying to punish you. In that case, the court would not have to ask the second question.)

(a) The Legal Standard for Conditions of Pretrial Confinement Claims:
Deliberate Indifference

In your research, you will read a case called Farmer v. Brennan. Farmer dealt with a failure to protect claim. In the case, an incarcerated person said that the jail officials were responsible for an attack he suffered at the hands of other incarcerated people. Because the incarcerated person in this case was already convicted of a crime, the claim was evaluated under the Eighth Amendment ban on cruel and unusual punishment. The court said that a "prison official's 'deliberate indifference' to a substantial risk of serious harm to an inmate violates the Eighth Amendment."¹²³ In Farmer, the court decided that in order to show that a prison official was intentionally indifferent to a risk of harm, the prison had to show that the official knew about the harm or possibility of harm. In other words, that they were "subjectively aware of the risk."¹²⁴ "Subjective" in this context means the court will look into the mind of the actual jail officials in the case to ask if they knew what was going on.

For a long time, claims about conditions of pretrial confinement were treated the same way. If a pretrial detainee wanted to make a claim about a condition of their confinement, they had to show not just that the condition amounted to punishment (the first question under Bell v. Wolfish, explained above) but that the jail officials responsible for the condition knew it was happening and meant for it to be a punishment.

A recent Supreme Court case changed this standard for claims of excessive force against a pretrial detainee by a prison or law enforcement official. In Kingsley v. Hendrickson,¹²⁵ the Court decided that the appropriate legal standard to use in considering a claim of violence against a pretrial detainee was an objective standard of deliberate indifference. "Objective" means that if the court is deciding if the force used against you was constitutional or not, the court will not go inside the mind of the jail official to ask if the official meant to punish you or hurt you. They will only ask if the official meant to commit the action that hurt you and if they did, was it reasonable for them to do it given the circumstances.

123. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 828, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1974, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994).

124. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 829, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1974, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994).

125. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 396–397, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2472–2473, 192 L.Ed.2d 416, 426 (2015).

If you are bringing an excessive force claim against a jail or police official as a pretrial detainee anywhere in the country, you would cite to Kingsley and answer the following two questions in your complaint:

- (1) Was the officer's action deliberate, i.e. on purpose? (So, accidentally tripping and falling on an inmate, for example, will not count. Neither will behavior that was only negligent.)
- (2) Was the condition objectively unreasonable? In other words, would a reasonable person in the same position as the officer have acted in the same way?

Depending on where you are, you may be able to use the reasoning from Kingsley for other pretrial conditions of confinement claims. Some circuits have applied the logic of Kingsley to any conditions of pretrial confinement questions and some have applied it to specific categories of claims, such as medical neglect and failure to protect claims.¹²⁶ If you are filing your claim in a circuit that has extended Kingsley, you would first argue that the condition you were subjected to was sufficiently bad under Bell to violate your constitutional rights and then you would argue under Kingsley that the prison officials responsible for this condition meant to act the way they did and that their actions were objectively unreasonable. If you are in a circuit that has not extended Kingsley and are bringing a claim besides excessive force, you will cite to Farmer and try to show that the prison officials knew that you were in unreasonable conditions. You can also try to argue that the objective standard in Kingsley should apply to your case, but you should make sure you have read the cases from your jurisdiction that have already considered Kingsley.

The next few Sections discuss some common problems that come up in pretrial detention and what the law says about them. You would use these cases or similar ones from your own jurisdiction when you are applying the tests in Bell, Farmer and Kingsley. The cases discuss conditions that are unreasonable and what officers can and cannot do. But first, there is one important exception to the right not to be punished.

(b) Exception to the Right Not to be Punished: Disciplinary Measures for Infractions of Prison Rules

One exception to your right not to be punished while you are detained before trial is the process you go through if you break one of the jail rules. Unfortunately, there is little guidance to distinguish “discipline” from “punishment.”¹²⁷ Jails can discipline you for breaking one of their internal rules as long as they are not punishing you for your charges.

126. Because this case is not very old, you should look into whether or not your circuit has extended Kingsley after this Chapter was last updated (February 2020). In the First Circuit, Kingsley still only applies to excessive force claims. Miranda-Rivera v. Toledo-Davila, 813 F.3d 64, 74 (1st Cir. 2016). Second Circuit: Applies to all pretrial conditions of confinement claims. Darnell v. Pineiro, 849 F.3d 17, 35 (2d Cir. 2017). Third Circuit: Undecided, so Kingsley is still used only for excessive force claims. Moore v. Luffey, 767 F. App'x 335, 340 (3d Cir. 2019). Fourth Circuit: Undecided. Fifth Circuit: Undecided. Sixth Circuit: Undecided. Just excessive force but has considered the decision of the Second Circuit to extend it. Powell v. Med. Dept. Cuyahoga Cnty. Corr. Ctr., No. 18-3783, 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 10461, at *5 n.1 (6th Cir. Apr. 8, 2019) (unpublished), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 150, 205 L. Ed. 2d 183 (2019). Seventh Circuit: Extended to all pretrial conditions of confinement claims. Hardeman v. Curran, 933 F.3d 816, 823 (7th Cir. 2019). Eighth Circuit: Declined to extend. Whitney v. City of St. Louis, 887 F.3d 857, 860 n.4 (8th Cir. 2018). Ninth Circuit: Extended specifically to failure to protect cases, Castro v. County of Los Angeles, 833 F.3d 1060, 1070 (9th Cir. 2016), and medical care cases. Gordon v. County of Orange, 888 F.3d 1118, 1120 (9th Cir. 2018), cert. denied sub nom. County of Orange v. Gordon, 139 S. Ct. 794, 202 L. Ed. 2d 571 (2019). Tenth Circuit: Undecided but has considered extending. See Perry v. Durborow, 892 F.3d 1116, 1122 n.1 (10th Cir. 2018); Estate of Duke ex rel. Duke v. Gunnison Cnty. Sheriff's Office, 752 F. App'x 669, 673 n.1 (10th Cir. 2018); Extended beyond excessive force to cases involving public exposure of the incarcerated person's nude body. Colbruno v. Kessler, 928 F.3d 1155, 1163–1164 (10th Cir. 2019). Eleventh Circuit: Declined to extend. Nam Dang ex rel. Vina Dang v. Sheriff, 871 F.3d 1272, 1279 n.2 (11th Cir. 2017); Johnson v. Bessemer, 741 F. App'x 694, 699 n.5 (11th Cir. 2018).

127. See Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 343 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that eight hours in restraint chair after disruptive behavior would be unconstitutional if it were found to have been imposed as punishment,

When you break prison rules, you can be subjected to additional restraints on your liberty. These restraints include being placed in administrative detention or isolation,¹²⁸ having privileges taken away,¹²⁹ and being held in handcuffs or other restraining devices.¹³⁰

Jails are required to follow certain procedures when they want to punish you for an action they say you committed in jail.¹³¹ Wolff v. McDonnell describes the due process rights of convicted incarcerated people at a prison disciplinary hearing.¹³² These rights would generally apply to pretrial detainees as well.¹³³ You are entitled, for example, to be given written notice of the charges against you, to be given a hearing on the charges before an impartial officer, and to call witnesses and present evidence at that hearing.¹³⁴ Courts do not agree about the exact procedure you should get. Some courts have said you have the right to a full trial-like process before additional restrictions on your liberty are imposed.¹³⁵ Other courts have allowed the restrictions first, as long as they were followed up with a procedure that satisfies due process.¹³⁶ The punishment you get cannot be too extreme. For a more although there was also evidence that defendant was put in the restraint chair “to stop his disruptive behavior and maintain prison order and security”); McFadden v. Solfaro, No. 95 Civ. 1148, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5765, at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (finding the disciplinary segregation of pretrial detainee for breaking prison regulations acceptable because it was not punitive and instead was “tied to the legitimate objective of maintaining order and impressing the need for discipline”).

128. See McFadden v. Solfaro, No. 95 Civ. 1148, 1998 U.S. Dist. Lexis 5765, at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (upholding constitutionality of pretrial detainee’s administrative segregation for acting against prison regulations by “committing . . . unhygienic acts” and threatening guards). But see Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (ruling that a due process hearing is required in order to subject pretrial detainees to discipline for breaking prison rules).

129. See McFadden v. Solfaro, No. 95 Civ. 1148, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5765, at *32 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (upholding loss of privileges including “commissary, walkman, phone”).

130. See Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 343 (3rd Cir. 2000) (holding that a jury could reasonably conclude that the use of a restraint chair by prison officials for eight hours is not punitive but a method to “quell a disturbance and restore the order and security of the institution”). On the other hand, prison officials are not allowed to go too far with their disciplinary actions. When they do, you may have a valid constitutional claim under the 14th Amendment. See Danley v. Allen, 540 F.3d 1298, 1309 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding that when jailers continue using “substantial force against a incarcerated person who has clearly stopped resisting—whether because he has decided to become compliant, he has been subdued, or he is otherwise incapacitated—that use of force is excessive”).

131. See Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 188 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that imposition of non-punitive restrictions which nonetheless were significant restraints on detainees’ liberty required subsequent due process protections); Rapier v. Harris, 172 F.3d 999, 1004–1005 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that pretrial detainees, unlike convicted incarcerated people, are entitled to procedural protection before the imposition of punishment for misconduct); Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that a due process hearing is required before imposing disciplinary segregation on a pretrial detainee). But see Wilson v. Blankenship, 163 F.3d 1284, 1295 (11th Cir. 1998) (finding temporary placement of pretrial detainee in isolation, without bedding, for causing a disturbance was permissible without a hearing). The rule that punishments must be “atypical and significant” to require due process protections applies only to convicted incarcerated people, not to pre-trial detainees. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995). If you are a convicted incarcerated person and want a more complete explanation on this topic, see JLM, Chapter 18, Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings.

132. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 556–572, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975–2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951–960 (1974).

133. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 190 n.12 (2d Cir. 2001) (noting that although Wolff involved a convicted incarcerated person, the same standard applied to pretrial detainees).

134. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 190 (2d Cir. 2001); see Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564–566, 570–571, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956, 959 (1974) (requiring that incarcerated person disciplinary hearings observe due process requirements related to notice, presentation of evidence, and impartiality).

135. See Rapier v. Harris, 172 F.3d 999, 1005 (7th Cir. 1999) (finding that “punishment can be imposed only after affording the detainee some sort of procedural protection”); Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that “a pretrial detainee may not be punished without a due process hearing”).

136. See Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 189–190 (2d Cir. 2001). (upholding the district court holding that detainees placed in high security or restraint status should “reasonably promptly” receive due process hearings after being placed on that status).

detailed discussion of due process rights in prison disciplinary hearings, see JLM, Chapter 17, “Your Rights at Disciplinary Proceedings.”

Finally, jail officials cannot charge you with jail actions you did not commit just to punish you for your charges or some other reason. For example, if one prison official makes up a false charge against you to punish you for your charges and then other guards act on that accusation, causing you harm, you may be able to establish unconstitutional pretrial punishment if you can trace back the harmful treatment to the accusing prison official.¹³⁷

2. Your Right to be Free from Violence

You may experience violence or force from jail guards or other inmates. Jail guards are not allowed to use excessive force on you. Guards can only use force for a legitimate reason, as explained above. In some circumstances, jail officials also have an obligation to protect you from violence by other inmates. Because violence from guards and violence from other inmates are treated differently under the law, they are explained separately below.

(a) Violence and Use of Force by Jail Guards

If a jail guard uses force against you and you challenge it in court, the court will apply the Kingsley test mentioned above and ask:

- (1) Was the officer’s action deliberate (meaning done on purpose)? Note that accidents, like if a guard trips and falls on you, will not count.¹³⁸ Neither will behavior that was only negligent.¹³⁹
- (2) Was the amount of force used objectively unreasonable? In other words, would a reasonable person in the same position as the officer have acted in the same way?¹⁴⁰

To answer these questions, the court will look at the facts from each individual incident. The court may consider other things, such as alternative actions the officer could have taken, whether you were resisting, and the security threat the officer faced.¹⁴¹

In the Kingsley case for example, the Court considered a claim from a pretrial detainee who said that guards used excessive force when they removed him from his cell, restrained him in another room, tased him, and kned him in the back while handcuffed.¹⁴² Kingsley, the detainee, filed a § 1983 action saying the jail guards violated his due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.¹⁴³

These concepts also apply to physical force used as punishment. In one case, incarcerated people were chained and handcuffed for over twelve hours and deprived of access to toilets after a failed escape attempt. The court held that a reasonable jury could conclude that such restraints violate the Fourteenth Amendment. In that case, there would be a violation if there was evidence that guards did this with the intent to punish, if the punishment was not a reasonable way to prevent another prison break, or if there were “alternative and less harsh methods” of preserving security and order at the jail.¹⁴⁴ In another case, the court decided that severely cutting the amount of time a pretrial detainee could spend out of their cell might count as punishment,¹⁴⁵ even when dealing with incarcerated people who were “prone to: escape; assault staff or other inmates ... or likely to need protection from other

137. Surprenant v. Rivas, 424 F.3d 5, 14 (1st Cir. 2005) (holding that fabricating a serious charge, knowing that the lie would have serious negative consequences for a pretrial detainee, is an illegal manipulation of legitimate prison regulations and “can constitute arbitrary punishment by a correctional officer, even if the response by other (unwitting) prison officials is legitimate and non-punitive”).

138. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 396, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2472, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 425–426 (2015).

139. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 396, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2472, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 425 (2015).

140. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 396–397, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2472–73, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 426 (2015).

141. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 397 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2473, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 426 (2015).

142. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2470, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 423–424 (2015)

143. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 393, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2470–2471, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 424 (2015).

144. Putman v. Gerloff, 639 F.2d 415, 420 (8th Cir. 1981).

145. Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1208 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that pretrial detainees must be given adequate time out of their cells to observe their religions and conduct physical exercise, and that less than ninety minutes of physical exercise per week violated the detainees’ constitutional rights).

inmates [sic].”¹⁴⁶ Another time, a pretrial detainee was assaulted by an officer who caught him while he was trying to escape. In that case, the court held that if the officer’s purpose was to “injure, punish, or discipline” the person (not just stop the escape), then the assault was illegal punishment.¹⁴⁷

Ultimately, not all violence you experience from jail guards is a violation of your rights. But, if jail officials purposefully use an objectively unreasonable amount of force against you, your rights have been violated.

(b) Violence from Other Incarcerated People

If you are being attacked by other incarcerated people, the jail must protect you as long as they know what is going on (or, in the Second, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits, as long as they knew or should have known what was going on). The issue of violence between incarcerated people was addressed by the Supreme Court in Farmer v. Brennan.¹⁴⁸ In that case, prison officials ignored information that someone was being assaulted by other incarcerated people and failed to take protective measures.¹⁴⁹ Farmer applies a “subjective standard” (meaning the court only asks if the prison guards actually knew that Farmer was in danger). The court then asks if the guards responded reasonably to that knowledge.¹⁵⁰

By contrast, if you are in the Ninth Circuit, you would only have to show that the guards should have known about the danger (the “objective standard”) and that the guards acted unreasonably in not knowing it and not doing more to protect you.¹⁵¹ See JLM Chapter 23 for more information on your right to be free from assault.

3. Medical Care¹⁵²

As a pretrial detainee, you have the right to access medical care (both physical and psychiatric) that is adequate. In City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., a man was shot by the police during arrest and taken to the hospital. The Court held that the city had an obligation to bring the man to the hospital, but the city did not automatically have to pay for his care. However, if someone in pretrial detention can only get medical care if the government pays for it, then the government must provide the care and pay for it.¹⁵³

146. Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1196 n.3 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting CAL. PENAL CODE § 1053).

147. Putman v. Gerloff, 639 F.2d 415, 420–422 (8th Cir. 1981); see also Collazo-Leon v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 51 F.3d 315, 318 (1st Cir. 1995) (noting that an otherwise legitimate restriction or condition may be viewed as punitive and therefore violate the detainee’s constitutional rights if the condition is “excessive in light of the seriousness of the [detainee’s] violation [of the prison rules]”).

148. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994).

149. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 829–831, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1974–1976, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820–821 (1994).

150. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

151. See, e.g., Castro v. County of Los Angeles, 833 F.3d 1060, 1071 (9th Cir. 2016) (en banc). In Castro, the court said that a detainee making a failure to protect claim would have to show that: “(1) The defendant [the defendant in this case is the jail] made an intentional decision with respect to the conditions under which the plaintiff was confined; (2) Those conditions put the plaintiff at substantial risk of suffering serious harm; (3) The defendant did not take reasonable available measures to abate that risk, even though a reasonable officer in the circumstances would have appreciated the high degree of risk involved—making the consequences of the defendant’s conduct obvious; and (4) By not taking such measures, the defendant caused the plaintiff’s injuries. With respect to the third element, the defendant’s conduct must be objectively unreasonable, a test that will necessarily ‘turn[] on the facts and circumstances of each particular case.’” Castro v. County of Los Angeles, 833 F.3d 1060, 1071 (9th Cir. 2016) (en banc) (quoting Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 396, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2473, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 426 (2015) (alteration in original)).

152. There are some big differences in how abortion and reproductive healthcare are treated in the state and federal systems. For more information about issues affecting women, see Chapter 41 of the JLM, including Part C(2), “Abortion.”

153. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244–245, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983); see also Weyant v. Okst, 101 F.3d 845, 856 (2d Cir. 1996) (“The rights of one who has not been convicted are protected by the Due Process Clause; and while the Supreme Court has not precisely limned the duties of a custodial official under the Due Process Clause to provide needed medical treatment to a pretrial detainee, it is

If you are in a jurisdiction that applies a subjective standard (see above) to medical care cases, you must show that prison officials knew you had medical conditions that were not being treated and decided not to treat them. If you are in a jurisdiction that uses an objective standard, you must show that the jail official knew or should have known you needed treatment, and also that by not providing the treatment, they made your condition worse.¹⁵⁴

To learn more about your right to medical care while incarcerated, see JLM Chapter 23, Your Right to Adequate Medical Care. Remember, you can cite Eighth Amendment cases about denial of medical care that seem to involve conditions similar to yours and then say that the case applies because you are being punished without due process.

4. Access to your Lawyer

Under the Sixth Amendment, you have a right to counsel in the preparation of your defense. (See Parts B and C of this Chapter for a broader discussion of your right to counsel.) This right includes the right to meet with and communicate with your attorney while you are detained awaiting trial. If the conditions of your detention interfere with your ability to meet with your attorney or to communicate in private to discuss your case, then those conditions may violate your Sixth Amendment right to counsel.¹⁵⁵ When pretrial detainees are kept from effectively communicating with their attorneys, “the ultimate fairness of their eventual trial can be compromised.”¹⁵⁶

As an incarcerated person, you also have the right to have access to the courts, which includes access to members of your legal team.¹⁵⁷ Regulations and conditions that unlawfully interfere with this right include limits on detainees’ telephone conversations with attorneys,¹⁵⁸ inadequate privacy during such telephone discussions,¹⁵⁹ inadequate or inadequately private space in which to meet with your attorneys,¹⁶⁰ and prison regulations that create substantial and unpredictable delays when your plain that an unconvicted detainee’s rights are at least as great as those of a convicted prisoner.”); Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 983 (2d Cir. 1991) (finding that it is unclear whether pretrial detainees must meet the “deliberate indifference” standard under Estelle or a lower standard, but plaintiff must show something more than simple negligence). The question remaining after Bryant is whether there is some standard of care for pretrial detainees that falls between the negligence standard (which is not sufficient to establish a due process violation) and the deliberate indifference standard applicable to convicted people. Pretrial detainees are, at a very minimum, entitled to not be treated with deliberate indifference.

154. See Gordon v. County of Orange, 888 F.3d 1118, 1124–1125 (9th Cir. 2018), cert. denied sub nom. County of Orange v. Gordon, 139 S. Ct. 794, 202 L. Ed. 2d 571 (2019).

155. You should also look at the chapters of the JLM describing the rights of access to counsel of convicted people because these rights certainly apply to pretrial detainees as well. See JLM, Chapter 3, “Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court,” on your right of access to a law library, and Chapter 19, “Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World,” on your right to correspond with and visit with your attorney.

156. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051 (8th Cir. 1989) (citation omitted).

157. See Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L.Ed.2d 224, 243 (1974). For additional information about the right of access to counsel while incarcerated, see also Johanna Kalb, Gideon Incarcerated: Access to Counsel in Pretrial Detention, 9 U. CAL. IRVINE L. REV. 101 (2018).

158. See Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–1052 (8th Cir. 1989) (noting that, if proven, restrictions on access to counsel were “inadequately justified” where detainees were effectively permitted one attempt at a 20-minute phone call with attorneys during office hours every other week).

159. See Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–1053 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding inadequate privacy where phones were brought to a noisy public space and conversations with counsel could be overheard by guards and other incarcerated people).

160. See, e.g., Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 187–188 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that detention facility must provide attorneys with an adequate number of visitation rooms in which to meet with their clients prior to and during trial, and these rooms must provide adequate privacy).

attorneys come to meet with you.¹⁶¹ A transfer from one detention facility to another may also violate your right to counsel, if the transfer is to a place so distant that your access to counsel is impaired.¹⁶²

However, certain conditions that make it difficult (but not impossible) to communicate with your attorney are sometimes allowed. The Supreme Court has held that an incarcerated person must demonstrate the “actual injury” caused by the alleged rights violation.¹⁶³ Some examples of things courts have decided were not enough to be constitutional violations by themselves include: attorney visiting rooms where incarcerated people had to speak to their attorneys through telephones, making it very easy for other incarcerated people and law enforcement officers to eavesdrop;¹⁶⁴ mail screening policies allowing prison officials to read attorney mail before giving it to their clients;¹⁶⁵ and sometimes, even monitoring phone calls with attorneys.¹⁶⁶ Importantly, in all of these cases, the plaintiff was unable to “show an injury” and so the incarcerated person lost the lawsuit.¹⁶⁷ Jails may not, however, have a policy of monitoring all attorney visits with incarcerated people,¹⁶⁸ nor can they withhold mail between attorneys and detainees.¹⁶⁹ If the facilities are so bad that you actually cannot communicate with your legal team at all, your rights have been violated.

The Sixth Amendment right to counsel may also protect your right to access a law library while detained.¹⁷⁰ In particular, under Faretta v. California, incarcerated people who wish to proceed “pro

161. See Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 179, 188 (2d Cir. 2001) (affirming that the 6th Amendment was violated when attorneys “routinely face[d] unpredictable, substantial delays in meeting with clients” after their arrival at the facility—from 45 minutes to two hours or more—because of various factors including a limited number of counsel rooms, a rule requiring that certain detainees not be moved to counsel rooms without escorts, and a rule prohibiting incarcerated people from being brought to counsel rooms during counts of incarcerated people).

162. See Covino v. Vt. Dept. of Corr., 933 F.2d 128, 130 (2d Cir. 1991) (per curiam) (requiring trial court to determine whether detainee’s transfer to a facility 56 miles away from his prior facility impaired his 6th Amendment right to counsel); see also Cobb v. Aytch, 643 F.2d 946, 960 (3d Cir. 1981) (affirming an order limiting future transfers of detainees to distant facilities “without consent of pretrial detainees, unless and until [prison officials] can present a change in circumstances” justifying the transfers, because such transfers substantially interfere with detainees’ right to counsel).

163. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 349, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 616 (1996) (holding that an incarcerated person must show “actual injury” to file a lawsuit).

164. See United States v. Roper, 874 F.2d 782, 790 (11th Cir. 1989).

165. See Oliver v. Fauver, 118 F.3d 175, 178 (3d Cir. 1997); McCain v. Reno, 98 F. Supp. 2d 5, 7–8 (D.D.C. 2000); Morgan v. Montanye, 516 F.2d 1367, 1370 (2d Cir. 1975).

166. United States v. Brooks, 66 M.J. 221, 225 (C.A.A.F. 2008).

167. See United States v. Irwin, 612 F.2d 1182, 1186–1187 (9th Cir. 1980) (“[M]ere government intrusion into the attorney-client relationship, although not condoned by the court, is not of itself violative of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel.”).

168. See Case v. Andrews, 603 P.2d 623, 627 (Kan. 1979) (holding that visual surveillance of a detainee’s meetings with his attorney violated the 6th Amendment where the jail “made no showing that the [surveillance] furthers any substantial governmental interest in security, order, or rehabilitation”).

169. See Lamar v. Kern, 349 F. Supp. 222, 224 (S.D. Tex. 1972).

170. See, e.g., Walton v. Toney, 44 Fed. App’x 49, 51 (8th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (“To prevail on an access-to-courts claim, an inmate must...demonstrate that the alleged shortcomings in the library or legal assistance program hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim....”) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). But see United States v. Smith, 907 F.2d 42, 45 (6th Cir. 1990) (finding that “by knowingly and intelligently waiving his right to counsel, [a pretrial detainee] also relinquished his access to a law library”); United States v. Wilson, 690 F.2d 1267, 1271–1272 (9th Cir. 1982) (asserting that where a defendant chooses not to represent himself and where adequate legal assistance is offered, such as a free attorney, no constitutional right to access a law library exists, and noting that “[t]he Supreme Court, in requiring meaningful access to the courts, has been careful to note that providing access to law libraries is but one of a number of constitutionally permissible means of achieving that objective.... When such adequate access is provided, as was here, an inmate may not reject the method provided and insist on an avenue of his or her choosing”). To learn more about your right to access a law library, see JLM, Chapter 3, “Your Right To Learn The Law And Go To Court.”

se” (advocating for yourself without a lawyer) may have a right to a law library.¹⁷¹ However, not every circuit recognizes that right.¹⁷²

5. Voting Rights

You still have the right to vote as a pretrial detainee.¹⁷³ Denying your right to vote violates your rights under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The jail cannot make it impossible for you to vote. However, you do not have the right to a specific mechanism for voting. For example, there is no guaranteed right to vote through an absentee ballot (a ballot that allows you to vote through the mail).¹⁷⁴ But, if the state officials (or the jail) do not let you access absentee ballots and there is no other way to vote, then your Fourteenth Amendment Equal Protection rights have been violated.¹⁷⁵

6. Other jail practices

Not every problem that comes up in pretrial detention is unconstitutional. Bell v. Wolfish itself involved a wide range of prison practices, all of which were found constitutional. For example, permissible actions include double-bunking of pretrial detainees,¹⁷⁶ random shakedown searches of detainees’ cells,¹⁷⁷ a “publishers-only” rule that blocks detainees from receiving hardcover books unless they are mailed directly from the publisher,¹⁷⁸ and routine body cavity searches after contact visits.¹⁷⁹ The court decided these are reasonable security measures that do not violate the due process rights of pretrial detainees.

F. Conclusion

171. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 819–820, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2533–2534, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 572–573 (1975) (upholding one’s right to self-representation and stating that “other defense tools” besides an attorney are guaranteed by the 6th Amendment).

172. Compare Taylor v. List, 880 F.2d 1040, 1047 (9th Cir. 1989) (“[T]he Sixth Amendment right to self-representation...includes a right of access to law books, witnesses, and other tools necessary to prepare a defense.” (citing Milton v. Morris, 767 F.2d 1443, 1446 (9th Cir. 1985))), with United States v. Cooper, 375 F.3d 1041, 1051–1052 (10th Cir. 2004) (“[P]retrial detainees are not entitled to law library usage if other available means of access to court exist.... When a prisoner voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently waives his right to counsel in a criminal proceeding, he is not entitled to access to a law library or other legal materials.”) (citations omitted).

173. See, e.g., Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 380 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (noting that, under the Equal Protection Clause of the Constitution, a state statute that denies pretrial detainees the right to vote must be interpreted to allow pretrial detainees to vote, or it becomes unconstitutional).

174. See McDonald v. Bd. of Election Comm’rs, 394 U.S. 802, 809–810, 89 S. Ct. 1404, 1409, 22 L. Ed. 2d 739, 746 (1969) (“It is thus not the right to vote that is at stake here but a claimed right to receive absentee ballots. Despite appellants’ claim to the contrary, the absentee statutes, which are designed to make voting more available to some groups who cannot easily get to the polls, do not themselves deny appellants the exercise of the franchise; nor, indeed, does Illinois’ Election Code so operate as a whole, for the State’s statutes specifically disenfranchise only those who have been convicted and sentenced, and not those similarly situated to appellants.”) (citations omitted).

175. O’Brien v. Skinner, 414 U.S. 524, 530, 94 S. Ct. 740, 743, 38 L. Ed. 2d 702, 707–708 (1974) (holding it unconstitutional for the state to deny detainees “any alternative means of casting their vote although they are legally qualified to vote”).

176. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 542, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1875, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 470 (1979) (stating that there is no “one man, one cell” principle lurking in the Due Process Clause).

177. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 556–562, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1883–1886, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 480–483 (1979) (finding that the searches did not violate the 4th Amendment and did not constitute punishment under the Due Process Clause).

178. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 550–552, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1879–1881, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 475–477 (1979) (finding no 1st Amendment violation or punishment in violation of the Due Process Clause).

179. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 558–561, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884–1885, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 482–484 (1979) (finding no 4th Amendment violation or punishment in violation of the Due Process Clause). But see United States v. Calhoun, No. 02-10120-01-WEB, 2002 U.S. Dist. Lexis 23277, at *14 (D. Kan. Nov. 13, 2002) (stating that strip searches of people arrested on non-violent misdemeanors must be justified by a reasonable suspicion outside the confinement context).

As a pretrial detainee, you have rights that are protected under the Constitution, and national and state laws. These rights protect you when you are being investigated for a crime, and they continue to protect you once you have been arrested and charged. You have the right to an attorney and you should request one as soon as you are detained or taken into custody. An attorney can help you from the pretrial stage, including bail hearings, through the resolution of your case. Finally, you have rights regarding the jail conditions if you are not released before your trial. As always, remember to check the law in your own state and make sure the cases and statutes you are citing are current.

APPENDIX A

STATE SPEEDY TRIAL STATUTES

This list covers state speedy trial provisions, either in statutes or court rules. If no statute is listed for a state, that state likely still has a speedy trial guarantee, but the guarantee is constitutional rather than statutory.

Alabama

None

Alaska

Alaska R. Crim. P. 45 (West 2019).

Arizona

ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-114 (2010).

Arkansas

Ark. R. Crim. P. 27.1–30.2 (West 2020).

California

CAL. PENAL CODE § 1381-82 (West 2000).

Colorado

COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 18-1-405 (West 2004 & Supp. 2011).

Connecticut

CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 54-82m (West 2009).

Delaware

None. However, there is a state constitutional guarantee for a speedy trial.¹⁸⁰

District of Columbia

D.C. CODE ANN. § 23-1322 (West 2012).

Florida

Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.191 (West 2019).

Georgia

Ga. Code § 17-7-170 (West 2011).

Hawaii

Haw. R. Penal. P. 48(b) (West 2020).

Idaho

IDAHO CODE ANN. § 19-3501 (West 2020).

Illinois

725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/103-5 (West 2014).

180. DEL.C.ANN. CONST., Art. 1, § 7.

Indiana

Ind. R. Crim. P. 4 (West 2020).

Iowa

Iowa R. Crim. P. 2.33(2) (West 2002).

Kansas

KAN. STAT. ANN. § 22-3402 (West 2017).

Kentucky

KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 500.110 (West 2019).

Louisiana

LA. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. ART. 701 (2020).

Maine

Maine Rules U. Crim. P. 48(b) (West 2020).

Maryland

MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. PROC. § 6-103 (West 2011).

Massachusetts

MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 41, R. 36(b) (West 2006).

Michigan

MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 768.1 (West 2000).

Minnesota

Minn. R. Crim. P. 11.09(b) (West 2020).

Mississippi

MISS. CODE ANN. § 99-17-1 (West 2020).

Missouri

MO. ANN. STAT. § 545.780 (West 2002).

Montana

MONT. CODE ANN. § 46-1-506 (West 2009.).

Nebraska

REV. STAT. OF NEB. ANN. § 29-1207 (West 2009).

Nevada

NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 178.556 (West 2015).

New Hampshire

None. However, in New Hampshire, courts have recognized a state constitutional right to a speedy trial.¹⁸¹

New Jersey

N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2A:162-22 (West 2015)

181. N.H. CONST. PT. 1, art. XIV; State v. Allen, 150 N.H. 290, 292, 837 A.2d 324, 326 (2003).

New Mexico

None.

New York¹⁸²

N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 30.20–30 (McKinney2020).

North Carolina

GEN. STAT. N.C. ANN. § 15-10 (West 2009).

North Dakota

N.D. CENT. CODE ANN. § 29-19-02 (West 2008).

Ohio

OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2945.71 (West 2006).

Oklahoma

OKLA. STAT. ANN. Tit. 22, § 812.1 (West 2008).

Oregon

OR. REV. STAT. ANN. § 135.746 (West 2003).

Pennsylvania

Pa. R. Crim. P. 600 (West 2017).

Rhode Island

R.I. GEN. LAWS § 12–13–7 (West 2020).

South Carolina

None.

South Dakota

S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 23A–44–5.1 (2018).

Tennessee

TENN. CODE ANN. § 40–14–101 (West 2017).

Texas

TEX. CRIM. PROC. CODE ANN. art. 32.01 (West 2006).

Utah

UTAH CODE ANN. § 77–1–6 (West 2017).

Vermont

VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 7553b (West 2007).

Virginia

VA. CODE ANN. § 19.2-243 (West 2007).

Washington

WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 10, CrRLJ Rule 3.3 (West 2002).

182. See Part D(2)(e) of this Chapter for in-depth information about New York’s statute.

West Virginia

W. VA. CODE ANN. § 62–3–21 (West 2020).

Wisconsin

WIS. STAT. ANN. § 971.10(2007).

Wyoming

Wyo. R. Cr. P. Rule 48 (West 2020).

CHAPTER 35

GETTING OUT EARLY: CONDITIONAL AND EARLY RELEASE*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains the different ways you can be released from prison before serving your full sentence. Parts B through J of this Chapter discuss New York State law, which only applies to incarcerated people in New York state prison. If you are incarcerated in state prison in another state, look at your state's appropriate laws and regulations. Parts K through P discuss federal law, which only applies to incarcerated people in federal prisons.

B. New York State

There are four main ways that you can be released from state prison in New York before serving your full or maximum sentence: parole, conditional release, early release, and presumptive release. This Chapter will provide you with information about the last three: Part E explains merit-time credit, Part F explains conditional release, Part G explains early release, and Part H explains presumptive release. This Chapter does not discuss parole. If you are looking for information about parole, see JLM, Chapter 32, "Parole."

You must do three things to determine whether or not you are eligible for one of these early release programs: (1) you must figure out which type of sentence you are serving, (2) you must figure out whether you have earned good-time credit, and (3) you must figure out how much good-time credit you have earned. Parts C and D will help you figure out these three things: Part C(1) explains the different types of sentences in New York and how they relate to conditional, early, and presumptive release programs; Part D explains good-time credit.

You can also be released from state prison before serving your full or maximum sentence in two other ways: clemency and compassionate release. "Clemency" means the power of an executive officer (for example, the Governor of New York) to change a criminal defendant's sentence to prevent injustice from occurring.¹ "Compassionate release" means a program for releasing dying or seriously ill incarcerated people. Clemency and compassionate release are harder to get than conditional, early, and presumptive release. If you are interested in pursuing these options, see Part I, which explains clemency (with a focus on battered women), and Part J, which explains compassionate release.

C. Sentencing Structure in New York

1. Definite, Determinate, and Indeterminate Sentences

There are three kinds of sentences in New York: (1) definite sentences, (2) determinate sentences, and (3) indeterminate sentences. Knowing which kind of sentence you have is important because your sentence type will affect your eligibility for good-time credit, early release, conditional release, and presumptive release.

A definite sentence is the type of sentence given to someone who is convicted of a misdemeanor, violation, or certain felonies.² A definite sentence is for a fixed term (that is, a specific length of time). For example, if you were convicted of a violation and you received a sentence of ten days, then your

* This Chapter was revised by Jarrell Mitchell, based in part on previous versions by Natasha Korgaonkar, Joe McFadden, Margo Eakin, Emily O'Connor, Bartram S. Brown, and Holly Chen. Special thanks to Professor Philip Genty and Steve Statsinger for their comments.

1. New York State, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Apply for Clemency, available at www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

2. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.15 (McKinney 2009). Note that, if convicted of certain felonies (including drug offenses and sex offenses), the judge may, at his discretion, sentence you to a determinate sentence. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.00(4), 70.20(2), 70.70(2)(c), (3)(e), 70.80(4)(c) (McKinney 2009).

sentence is a definite sentence.³ A violation carries a maximum definite sentence of fifteen days.⁴ If you were convicted of a Class A misdemeanor, your maximum definite sentence is 364 days.⁵ If you were convicted of a Class B misdemeanor, your maximum definite sentence is three months.⁶ You serve a definite sentence in a county or regional jail, unless you have also received an additional determinate or indeterminate sentence.⁷

A determinate sentence is the type of sentence given to persons convicted of most types of violent felonies,⁸ drug felonies,⁹ and felony sex offenses.¹⁰ A determinate sentence is for a fixed term. For example, if you were convicted of a violent felony and received a two-year sentence, your sentence is determinate. While a definite sentence cannot last more than one year, the minimum determinate sentence is one-and-a-half years.¹¹ You usually serve a determinate sentence in state prison.¹²

An indeterminate sentence is the type of sentence given to you if you are convicted of a felony not requiring a determinate sentence.¹³ An indeterminate sentence is not for a fixed term. Instead, an indeterminate sentence is a range of time that includes (1) a minimum term (which must be at least one year), and (2) a maximum term (which must be at least three years, but can be as much as life imprisonment).¹⁴ For example, a sentence of “five to ten years” is an indeterminate sentence where the minimum term is five years and the maximum term is ten years. You must serve the maximum term of an indeterminate sentence if (1) there are no reductions to your sentence or (2) you are not paroled. You generally serve an indeterminate sentence in state prison.¹⁵

It is important to understand what type of sentence or sentences you are serving because the rules for when and how you can become eligible for early release are different for each of the three types of sentences. Below is a brief overview of good-time credit, conditional, early, and presumptive release (more detailed information is provided later in this Chapter).

2. Good-Time Credit

A good-time credit is a credit that you can earn in prison for good behavior.¹⁶ If you are serving a definite sentence, and you earn good-time credit, you can use the credit to shorten your sentence. You cannot, however, use the credit to get conditional release.

On the other hand, if you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence, and you earn good-time credit, you can use this credit to get conditional release. Note, however, that if you are serving an indeterminate sentence with a maximum term of life imprisonment or an “intermittent sentence” (that is, a sentence only requiring that you be in jail on certain days of the week or during certain hours of

3. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.15 (McKinney 2009).

4. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.15(4) (McKinney 2009).

5. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.15(1) (McKinney 2009).

6. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.15(2) (McKinney 2009).

7. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.20(2) (McKinney 2009). Youth and adolescent offenders are “committed to the custody of the commissioner of the office of children and family services who shall arrange for the confinement of such offender in secure facilities of the office.” N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.20(4)(a) (McKinney 2009).

8. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02(2)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2009) (defining the various classes of felony offenses subject to determinate sentence); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.04(2) (McKinney 2009) (stating current requirement to impose a determinate sentence for second violent felony offenders). Starting September 1, 2020, if you are convicted of a Class B or Class C violent felony offense, your sentence must be indeterminate. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.02(2)(a), 70.04(2) (McKinney 2009).

9. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70(2) (McKinney 2009).

10. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.80(3) (McKinney 2009).

11. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02(3)(d) (McKinney 2009).

12. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009). Note that, if convicted of certain felonies (including drug offenses and sex offenses), the judge may, at his discretion, sentence you to a determinate sentence. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.70(2)(c), (3)(e), 70.80(4)(c) (McKinney 2009).

13. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.00(1) (McKinney 2009).

14. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.00(2) (McKinney 2009).

15. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

16. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 804(1), 803(1) (McKinney 2014).

the day), you are ineligible for good-time credit.¹⁷ Part D of this Chapter discusses good-time credit in more detail.

3. Conditional Release

Conditional release is a way that you can be released from prison before you serve your full or maximum sentence. Your rights and responsibilities while on conditional release will be very similar to those of someone on parole. If you get out on conditional release, you will sign the same agreement signed by parolees. Additionally, you must follow the rules set by the parole or probation department, or you could lose your conditional release. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 32, “Parole.”

Although New York State law uses the same word to refer to conditional release from a definite sentence and conditional release from determinate and indeterminate sentences, they are not actually the same thing. Part E of this Chapter discusses conditional release in more detail.

4. Early Release and Presumptive Release

Early release and presumptive release are other ways you can be released from prison before serving a full sentence. Part F of this Chapter discusses early release in more detail. You can get presumptive release if you are serving one or more indeterminate sentences for non-violent crimes, you have not committed any serious disciplinary violations, and you have not filed or continued “frivolous” (meaning, so unlikely to win that courts consider them a bother) legal claims. Presumptive release works like parole and conditional release. But unlike those programs, it allows you to leave prison without appearing before the parole board. Part G of this Chapter discusses presumptive release in more detail.

D. Good-Time Credit

1. How to Earn Good-Time Credit

You can earn good-time credit for “good behavior and efficient and willing performance of duties” assigned to you in prison, or for “progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program.”¹⁸ On the other hand, you can lose good-time credits for “bad behavior, violation of institutional rules or failure to perform properly” any duties or programs assigned to you in prison.¹⁹ If you fail to complete a “recommended” program, prison officials may also withhold good-time credits.²⁰

You do not have a right to good-time credits.²¹ In other words, prison officials are not required to give you good-time credits. But if prison officials think your behavior in prison is acceptable, they will probably give you good-time credits.

17. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1) (McKinney 2014); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 85.00(3) (McKinney 2009); see also Ferrara v. Jackson, 99 A.D.2d 545, 546, 471 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630 (2d Dept. 1984) (holding that incarcerated people serving intermittent sentences in accordance with Article 85 of the New York Penal Law are ineligible for good behavior allowances).

18. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 803(1), 804(1) (McKinney 2014).

19. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 803(1), 804(1) (McKinney 2014).

20. See Ferry v. Goord, 268 A.D.2d 720, 721, 704 N.Y.S.2d 315, 316 (3d Dept. 2000) (finding that good-time credit was properly withheld where an incarcerated person refused to enroll in recommended—non-mandatory—sex offender counseling and substance abuse treatment program); Burke v. Goord, 273 A.D.2d 575, 575, 710 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (3d Dept. 2000) (finding that good-time credit was lawfully withheld where an incarcerated person refused to enroll in recommended sex offender program); Lamberty v. Schriver, 277 A.D.2d 527, 528, 715 N.Y.S.2d 510, 511 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that the fact that sex offender treatment and aggression therapy programs were “recommended” instead of “assigned” did not prevent time allowance committee from withholding good-time credit).

21. See Bradley v. Ward, 81 Misc. 2d 713, 716, 366 N.Y.S.2d 841, 844 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1975) (finding no statutory right to good behavior time under New York law); N.Y. CORRECT LAW §§ 803(4), 804(3) (McKinney 2014).

You can earn good-time credit only while you are in prison and not while you are on parole, conditional release, or supervised release. In most jurisdictions, prisons do not have to—and will not—accept credits that you earned in a different state prison or a federal prison.²²

Depending on the type of sentence you are serving, you can use good-time credit to shorten your sentence, earn unconditional early release, or, in the case of determinate and indeterminate sentences, earn conditional release.

(a) Good-Time Credit in Definite Sentences

If you are serving a definite sentence and earn good-time credit, prison officials will use the credit to shorten your sentence and decide if and when you can get unconditional early release. The process where prison officials decide whether to grant you good-time credit depends on whether you are incarcerated in jail or prison. If you are serving your definite sentence in a county or regional jail, the sheriff, warden, or other person in charge of the jail will decide whether to give you good-time credit.²³ If you are serving your definite sentence in a state prison, the prison's Time Allowance Committee ("TAC") will recommend to the superintendent the amount of good-time credit it thinks you should receive.²⁴ Every prison in New York is required to have a TAC consisting of at least eight prison employees.²⁵ The prison superintendent will review the TAC's recommendation and may add comments to it. He will then forward the recommendation to the Commissioner of Correctional Services, who will make the final decision about how much good-time credit you will receive.²⁶

(b) Good-Time Credit in Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence and you earn good-time credit, prison officials will use your credit to decide whether you are eligible for conditional release. Unlike for definite sentences, if you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence, you cannot use good-time credit to shorten your sentence or earn unconditional early release.

The TAC starts the process by deciding how much good-time credit you will receive. If you are scheduled to receive the maximum amount of good-time credit, the TAC will review your file four months before you would earn conditional release. During the review, the TAC will decide whether you should, in fact, receive the maximum amount of good-time credit.²⁷ In deciding whether to grant the maximum good-time credit, the TAC will look for good behavior, efficient and willing performance of assigned duties, and progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program.²⁸ All of these aspects of your behavior will be considered in light of (1) your attitude, (2) your capacity (meaning your ability), and (3) the efforts you made within your capacity.²⁹ Although the TAC will review your entire file, it is not required to interview you at this stage.³⁰

After it reviews your file, the TAC will either (1) recommend to the superintendent that you receive the maximum amount of good-time credit or (2) delay making a recommendation because it believes that there might be a sufficient reason not to grant you the maximum amount of good-time credit.

22. Holtzinger v. Estelle, 488 F.2d 517, 518 (5th Cir. 1974) (holding that based on Texas statutes, a person incarcerated in Texas was not entitled to good-time credit earned for time spent in California); Alexander v. Wilson, 540 P.2d 331, 334 (Colo. 1975) (finding that the Colorado legislature had not extended good-time credit to incarcerated people for time spent outside of a Colorado state prison.).

23. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 804(3) (McKinney 2014).

24. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.2 (2020).

25. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.1(a)–(b) (2020).

26. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(b) (2020).

27. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3(a) (2020).

28. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 260.3(b)(1)–(3) (2020).

29. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 260.3(b)(1)–(3) (2020).

30. Please note that your prison's TAC is required to interview you if a prior superintendent's hearing recommended a loss of good-time credits. The TAC will then consider if it should restore these lost good-time credits. The TAC will base its recommendation on your behavior since the prior superintendent's hearing. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3(b) (2020).

If the TAC decides that there is sufficient reason not to grant you the maximum amount of good-time credit, it will hold a time allowance hearing.³¹ The TAC will notify you at least forty-eight hours before the hearing.³² After you receive notice about the hearing, you will be given the opportunity to present facts that you believe the TAC should consider in making its decision. You will also have the opportunity to have factual matters investigated. At the hearing, the TAC will reconsider your file and consider any factual matter you (or your appointed assistant) brought to its attention. The TAC can also hear witnesses at its discretion.³³ In other words, the TAC has the power to decide whether or not to hear witnesses. After the hearing, the TAC will make its recommendation to the superintendent.³⁴ The TAC will inform you of any factual circumstances that appear to support its decision to not authorize good-time credit.³⁵ After the TAC provides this information, it has to give you the opportunity to comment on its decision and make a statement that can be submitted about your good-time credit and time allowance.³⁶

The superintendent will review the TAC's recommendation about how much good-credit time you should receive, add comments, and forward the report to the Commissioner.³⁷ The Commissioner can (1) accept the recommendation, (2) change the amount of good-time credit granted, or (3) send the report back to the TAC for reconsideration.³⁸ Once the Commissioner makes a decision, you will receive a copy of the determination.³⁹

If the Commissioner does not grant the maximum amount of good-time credit, you can file a lawsuit in state court under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules. For more information about bringing a lawsuit in state court, you should read JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Provisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," and JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

If you decide to file a lawsuit in federal court because you believe you unlawfully lost good-time credits, you must read JLM, Chapter 14, which discusses the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). If you do not follow the requirements of the PLRA, you may lose your good-time credit, become unable to receive presumptive release (see Part H of this Chapter), or lose your right to bring future lawsuits in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your lawsuit.

2. How Much Good-Time Credit You Can Earn

In New York State, the amount of good-time credit you can earn depends on the type of sentence you are serving.

(a) Good-Time Credit for Definite Sentences

If you are serving a definite sentence, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-third of your sentence. For example, if you are serving a definite sentence of fifteen days, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is five days (one-third of fifteen days). If you are serving definite sentences "consecutively" (meaning, one after the other), you can earn good-time credits equal to one-third of the total length of your combined sentences.⁴⁰ For example, if you are serving two fifteen-day sentences consecutively, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is ten days (one-third of thirty days).

31. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.4(a) (2020).

32. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.4(b) (2020).

33. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.4(f) (2020).

34. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(a) (2020).

35. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.4(g) (2020).

36. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.4(g) (2020).

37. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(b) (2020).

38. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(c) (2020).

39. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(d) (2020).

40. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 804(1)–(2) (McKinney 2014).

(b) Good-Time Credit for a Single Determinate or Indeterminate Sentence

If you are serving a single determinate or indeterminate sentence, you can receive good-time credit as long as your maximum term is not life imprisonment.⁴¹ If you are serving a determinate sentence, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-seventh of your sentence.⁴² For example, if you are serving a determinate sentence of twenty-one years, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is three years (one-seventh of twenty-one years).

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-third of your maximum term.⁴³ For example, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence of fifteen to thirty years, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is ten years (one-third of thirty years).

The calculation is more complicated if you are serving more than one sentence, as shown below.

(c) Good-Time Credit for Concurrent Determinate Sentences

If you are serving more than one determinate sentence “concurrently” (at the same time), the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-seventh of the determinate sentence that ends last.⁴⁴ For example, if you are serving one determinate sentence of seven years and a second determinate sentence of fourteen years, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is two years (one-seventh of the longer fourteen-year sentence). In this example, if you earn the maximum credit of two years, you are entitled to conditional release after serving twelve years of your sentence. In other words, after twelve years, your two-year credit would equal the amount of time you had left to serve.

(d) Good-Time Credit for Consecutive Determinate Sentences

If you are serving more than one determinate sentence “consecutively” (one after the other), the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-seventh of the combined sentences.⁴⁵ For example, if you are serving a seven-year sentence and a fourteen-year sentence consecutively, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is three years (one-seventh of twenty-one years, the combined length of your two sentences). In this example, if you earn the maximum good-time credit of three years, you are entitled to conditional release after serving eighteen years of your sentence (that is, the total time of your sentences minus the maximum credit).

(e) Good-Time Credit for Concurrent Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving more than one indeterminate sentence concurrently, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-third of the total term of the latest ending indeterminate sentence.⁴⁶ For example, if you are serving one indeterminate sentence of one to three years and a second indeterminate sentence of three to six years, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is two years (one-third of the longest maximum sentence of six years). In this example, if you earn the maximum good-time credit, you are entitled to conditional release after four years (that is, the longest maximum sentence minus the maximum credit).

(f) Good-Time Credit for Consecutive Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving more than one indeterminate sentence consecutively, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-third of the combined maximum terms.⁴⁷ For example, if you are serving two consecutive indeterminate sentences, one sentence for one to three years and another for three to six years, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is three years (one-third of the total maximum

41. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2014).

42. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(c) (McKinney 2014).

43. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(b) (McKinney 2014).

44. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(c) (McKinney 2014).

45. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(d) (McKinney 2014).

46. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(a) (McKinney 2014).

47. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(b) (McKinney 2014).

sentence of nine years). In this example, if you earn the maximum credit you are entitled to release after six years (that is, the total of the maximum sentences minus the maximum credit).

(g) Good-Time Credit for Combined Concurrent Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving one or more determinate and one or more indeterminate sentences concurrently, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is either (1) one-seventh of the latest ending determinate sentence, or (2) one-third of the maximum term of the latest ending indeterminate sentence—whichever allowance is larger.⁴⁸ For example, suppose you are serving a determinate sentence of fourteen years at the same time as an indeterminate sentence of six to nine years. You could earn either one-seventh of the determinate sentence (one-seventh of fourteen years, which is two years) or one-third of the indeterminate sentence (one-third of nine years, which is three years). Since the allowance for the indeterminate sentence (three years) is larger than the allowance for the determinate sentence (two years), the maximum good-time credit you can earn is three years. If you earn the maximum credit, you are entitled to conditional release after eleven years (that is, the determinate sentence of fourteen years minus the maximum credit of three years).

(h) Good-Time Credit for Combined Consecutive Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving one or more determinate sentences and one or more indeterminate sentences consecutively, the maximum good-time credit you can earn is one-third of the maximum terms of the indeterminate sentences added together, plus one-seventh of the terms of the determinate sentences added together.⁴⁹ For example, suppose you are serving a determinate sentence of fourteen years consecutively with an indeterminate sentence of six to nine years. You can earn up to two years of good-time credit from the determinate sentence (one-seventh of fourteen years) and up to three years of good-time credit for the indeterminate sentence (one-third of nine years). If you receive the maximum credit of five years, you are entitled to conditional release after eighteen years (that is, the total of your maximum sentences—twenty-three years—minus the total of your good-time credit—five years).

(i) Potential Changes in Law and How They Affect your Sentence

Suppose your state government passes a new law to reduce the good-time credit that you could have received under an older law. If your offense occurred before the enactment of the new law, then the new law cannot apply to you because it would violate “ex post facto” principles. “Ex post facto” principles state that you can only be punished under a law that was in effect at the time when you committed the offense, and your punishment cannot be increased if stricter laws are passed after you committed the offense.⁵⁰ If you received a harsher punishment based on a law that was passed after the commission of your offense, you may have a valid constitutional claim.⁵¹

3. Loss of Good-Time Credit

You can lose good-time credit in two ways. First, your prison’s TAC may decide not to grant you the maximum good-time credit. The TAC is not required to recommend that you receive the maximum 48. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(e) (McKinney 2014).

49. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(2)(f) (McKinney 2014).

50. See Weaver v. Graham, 450 U.S. 24, 30–33, 101 S. Ct. 960, 964–966, 67 L. Ed. 2d 17, 22–24 (1981) (holding that applying new requirements for good-time credit to an incarcerated person whose crime occurred before the new requirements were established is a violation of the ex post facto clause). But see In re Ramirez, 39 Cal. 3d 931, 936, 705 P.2d 897, 901, 218 Cal. Rptr. 324, 328 (Cal. 1985) (finding that a law is not a violation of the ex post facto principle when applied to prison misconduct that occurred after the new law’s enactment, even if the original crime occurred before the enactment of the law).

51. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” and JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the NY Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

credit allowed by the law.⁵² Second, officials may penalize you with a loss of good-time credits after a disciplinary hearing.⁵³ Please see JLM, Chapter 18, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings,” to learn more about some of your rights in these proceedings. These proceedings are usually only held when an incarcerated person is charged with serious misconduct.

Even if you lose good-time credit in a disciplinary hearing, you may regain it later. The loss is not permanent until it affects your consideration for parole, conditional release, or other release.⁵⁴ When your prison’s TAC reviews your file for the last time before your earliest possible parole or conditional release date, it may decide that you should get back the good-time credit you previously lost. A record of good behavior since the time you lost your good-time credit increases the chance of regaining it.⁵⁵

Note: if you are released early on conditional release or parole, and you later violate the terms of your release or parole and return to prison, you cannot use the good-time credit you earned before release. If you are sent back to prison for a violation, you must start earning good-time credit all over again.⁵⁶

4. Challenging the Loss of Good-Time Credit

The Supreme Court has ruled that because good-time credit leads to a shorter time in prison, procedures that take away good-time credit must meet the requirements of the U.S. Constitution’s Due Process Clause.⁵⁷ This means that if prison officials have not followed the appropriate procedures, then you have the right to challenge their decision under Article 78, state habeas proceedings, or federal habeas proceedings. To learn how to do this, see JLM, Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Proceedings Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” JLM, Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus,” and JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus.” JLM, Chapter 18, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings,” also explains your right to good-time credit.

As noted above, if you decide to file a lawsuit in federal court, you must first read JLM, Chapter 14, which discusses the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). If you do not follow the requirements in the PLRA, you may lose your good-time credit, you may become unable to receive presumptive release (see Part H of this Chapter), or you may lose your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your claim.

E. Merit-Time Credit

In addition to good-time credit, incarcerated people may also earn merit-time credit. Merit-time credit can shorten certain indeterminate and determinate sentences.⁵⁸

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence, merit-time credit can shorten it by reducing the minimum length of the indeterminate sentence (unlike good-time credit, which reduces the maximum length of an indeterminate sentence).⁵⁹ Merit-time credit can only be applied to your indeterminate sentence if you were in the custody of the Department of Corrections and serving an indeterminate

52. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3(c) (2020).

53. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(ii) (2020).

54. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 260.4(b) (2020).

55. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3(b) (2020).

56. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(5) (McKinney 2014).

57. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974); see also Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 477–478, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2297, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 425–426 (1995) (holding that neither the Due Process Clause nor the Hawaii regulations created a liberty interest in avoiding disciplinary confinement for 30 days; restating the holding in Wolff v. McDonnell that good-time credits could not be revoked without adequate procedures because the statute had created a “liberty interest”).

58. N.Y. State Dept. of Corrections and Community Supervision Programs, Guidance and Counseling, available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

59. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014). Information about merit-time credits is available online. See New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Programs, available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

sentence between December 14, 2005 and September 1, 2011.⁶⁰ If you were serving an indeterminate sentence for a non-violent crime during this time period,⁶¹ you may receive merit-time allowances of up to one-sixth of the minimum period of your sentence.⁶² For example, if you are serving a sentence of twelve to sixteen years, you may receive a merit-time allowance of up to two years, which is one-sixth of your twelve-year minimum sentence. If you receive this credit, you are first eligible for release (conditional or presumptive) after serving five-sixths of the minimum period of your sentence. In this example, you would be eligible for release after ten years.

Merit-time credit may also shorten determinate sentences for certain felony drug crimes by one seventh.⁶³ This is in addition to good time credit.⁶⁴ Merit-time credit is only available to incarcerated people who were sentenced to a qualifying determinate sentence before September 1, 2011.⁶⁵ If you are serving a determinate sentence that qualifies for merit-time, you may receive merit-time allowances of up to one-seventh of your sentence.⁶⁶ For example, if you are serving a sentence of seven years, you may receive a merit-time credit of up to one year, which is one-seventh of your seven-year sentence. If you receive this credit, you are first eligible for release (conditional or presumptive) after serving six years (six-sevenths of your seven-year sentence).

To obtain merit-time credit you must also complete other requirements. First, you must successfully complete a work and treatment program.⁶⁷ Second, you must obtain at least one of the following:

- A general equivalency diploma (GED),
- An alcohol and substance abuse treatment certificate,
- A vocational trade certificate after completing six months of vocational programming, or
- 400 hours of service on a community work crew.

Like good-time credit, you do not have a right to merit-time credit. This means that prison officials are not required to give you merit-time credit. If you receive a serious disciplinary infraction or file a frivolous lawsuit against a prison official, you may not receive merit-time credit.⁶⁸ Frivolous means the lawsuit was filed or continued in bad faith, to harass someone, or the suit has no reasonable basis and is not supported by the law.⁶⁹ Please note that merit-time credit may be used to gain presumptive release. To learn more about the Presumptive Release Program, your eligibility

60. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(v) (McKinney 2014).

61. Under New York state law, an incarcerated person is not eligible for merit-time if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I felony, (2) a violent felony offense under Section 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law (“relating to sex offenses”), (7) incest, (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law (“relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance”), or (9) aggravated harassment of an employee by an inmate. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2014).

62. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

63. If you are serving time for committing a drug-related crime and were sentenced to a determinate sentence, you may be eligible for merit-time credits if the crime you were convicted of was a felony offense under Sections 70.70 or 70.71 of the New York Penal Law. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(i) (McKinney 2014).

64. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

65. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(v) (McKinney 2014).

66. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

67. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2014).

68. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2014).

69. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8303-a(c) (McKinney 1997).

for it, and how your merit-time credit can be used in the program, read Part H, “Presumptive Release.”

F. Conditional Release

1. Conditional Release from a Definite Sentence

If you are serving a definite sentence with a term of more than ninety days, you are eligible for conditional release after you have served sixty days of your sentence.⁷⁰ Conditional release is at the discretion of the Board of Parole. The Board of Parole can also impose certain conditions for your release.⁷¹

Conditional release from a definite sentence lasts for one year no matter how much time you have remaining in your sentence when you are released. Also, if you violate the terms of your conditional release at any time during that year, you may be returned to prison where you would have to finish out your full sentence as if you had never been released.⁷²

2. Conditional Release from a Determinate or Indeterminate Sentence

Based on the type of determinate or indeterminate sentence or sentences you are serving, you may be eligible for conditional release from prison as soon as the good-time credit you have earned in prison is equal to the amount of time that you have left to serve on your maximum sentence or sentences.⁷³ For example, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence of three to six years and you have earned two years of good-time credit, you are eligible for release when you have served four years of your sentence (the maximum sentence of six years minus the two years of good-time credit earned).

Note that if you are serving one or more determinate and one or more indeterminate sentences concurrently (that is, at the same time), you cannot be granted conditional release until you have served six-sevenths of the determinate sentence with the longest time to run.⁷⁴ For example, if you are serving a determinate sentence of twenty-one years at the same time as an indeterminate sentence of ten to twenty-one years, you cannot be released until you have served eighteen years (six-sevenths of your determinate sentence), even if you have earned more than three years of good-time credit against your indeterminate sentence.

3. The Release Agreement

Before you can leave prison on conditional release, you must sign a release agreement. This agreement explains the conditions of your release. By signing the agreement, you promise to obey all of the listed rules. The rules of your conditional release may change at any time before your sentence is over. A parole officer may also add special conditions. For example, the parole officer may impose a curfew, require that you attend an alcohol treatment program, or require you to find housing.⁷⁵ See JLM, Chapter 32, “Parole,” for an explanation of parole in New York.

If you are conditionally released from a determinate sentence as a violent felony offender or a drug offender serving a sentence other than life in prison, you will be required to sign a post-release supervision agreement that will extend your supervision for three to five years.

70. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2009).

71. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2009).

72. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(3)(b) (McKinney 2009).

73. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2009).

74. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2009).

75. See, e.g., People ex rel. Travis v. Coombe, 219 A.D.2d 881, 881–882, 632 N.Y.S.2d 340, 340 (4th Dept. 1995) (conditions of release included requirement that parolee find housing, and when potential parolee failed to do so, he was not released); People ex rel. DeFlumer v. Strack, 212 A.D.2d 555, 555, 623 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (2d Dept. 1995) (conditions of release included that parolee must live in approved housing, which in this case was the home of parolee’s sister).

4. Jenna's Law and Post-Release Supervision for All Determinate Sentences and Drug Offenses

In 1998, the New York state legislature passed Jenna's Law.⁷⁶ This law imposes a period of mandatory post-release supervision for all incarcerated people serving determinate sentences. The Drug Law Reform Act of 2004 requires that all sentencing for felony drug offenses include, as a part of the sentence, a period of post-release supervision.⁷⁷ Unlike incarcerated people serving definite sentences, who are conditionally released with one year of supervision, and unlike incarcerated people serving indeterminate sentences, who are conditionally released on terms very similar to parole, those serving determinate sentences are subject to mandatory post-release supervision.⁷⁸

If you received a determinate sentence for a crime committed on or after September 1, 1998, you will be subject to post-release supervision. Generally, for felony offenses that are not sex offenses, the period of post-release supervision for determinate sentences is five years. However, drug offenses and first-time violent felony offenses listed in section (a) (see below) may have shorter periods of supervision.⁷⁹ The court has the power to set your post-release supervision period anywhere between the minimum and the maximum possible periods under the law.⁸⁰ If the court does not specify a time, however, you will most likely be subject to the maximum possible post-release supervision time available for the particular crime for which you were convicted.

(a) Length of Post-Release Supervision

Three groups of offenses lead to different lengths of post-release supervision: felony drug offenses, first-time violent felony offenses, and felony sex offenses committed after April 13, 2007. For more information on felony sex offenses see JLM, Chapter 36, "Special Considerations for Sex Offenders." The tables below show possible post-release supervision time, depending on your sentence's type and class.

Drug Offenses

	First Time	Non-first Time
Class D or E	1 year	1–2 years
Class B or C	1–2 years	1 ½–3 years

Violent Felony Offenses

	First Time / Non-first time
Class D or E	1 ½–3 years
Class B or C	2 ½–5 years

76. Jenna's Law is named after Jenna Griebshaber, who was murdered by an individual who had been convicted of a violent felony and had been released early from prison after serving two-thirds of his indeterminate sentence. The purpose of Jenna's Law was to ensure that violent offenders are appropriately monitored upon their reintroduction into society. See Barry Kamins, New Criminal Law and Procedure Legislation, 81-FEB N.Y. St. B.J. 28, 28 (2009).

77. See, e.g., N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70(2)(a), (3)(b), (4)(b) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71(2)(b), (3)(b), (4)(b) (McKinney 2009).

78. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

79. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2009).

80. See e.g., N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2)(b) (McKinney 2009) ("[S]uch period shall be not less than one year nor more than two years whenever a determinate sentence of imprisonment is imposed ... upon a conviction of a class B or class C felony offense[.]").

Felony Sex Offenses

	First Time	Non-first Time
Class D or E	3–10 years ⁸¹	5–15 years ⁸²
Class C	5–15 years ⁸³	7–20 years ⁸⁴
Class B	5–20 years ⁸⁵	10–25 years ⁸⁶
Child Sexual Assault		10–20 years ⁸⁷

(b) Results of Violating a Condition of Post-Release Supervision

If you violate any of the terms of your post-release supervision, you will receive a revocation hearing. The rules for revocation hearings for post-release supervision are the same as the rules for parole revocation.⁸⁸ See JLM, Chapter 32, “Parole,” for an explanation of parole revocation hearings in New York. If your post-release supervision is revoked at the hearing, and you are not a felony sex-offender, then you may be sent back to prison. You cannot be sent back to prison for more time than you have remaining in your post-release supervision period and you can never be sent back for more than five years.⁸⁹

For example, if you are a first time Class D drug offender, you will undergo 1 year of post-release supervision; that is 12 months of supervision. If 6 months into your post-release supervision, you were to violate one of the terms in your post-release supervision agreement, you could be sent back to jail for 6 months, to serve out the remaining 6 months of post-release supervision remaining on your scale. If instead you had 10 years of post-release supervision, and you violated a term of your agreement 2 years into your post-release supervision, you could be sent back to jail for at most five years, even though you have 8 years remaining on your post-release supervision.

If you were convicted of a felony sex offense, the maximum amount of time that you can be sent back to prison is the amount of time remaining in your post-release supervision period, even if it is longer than five years.⁹⁰ If you have fewer than three years remaining of post-release supervision, you will be released after you serve three years. If you have three or more years of supervised release left when you are given an additional term of imprisonment for violating the terms of your supervised release, you will not be automatically released after serving three years. Instead, after serving three years, your case will be reviewed by the Board of Parole. The Board will determine whether you can be released to post-release supervision or whether you should stay in prison and have your case reviewed a second time at a date not more than twenty-four months after the Board's determination on whether to release you.⁹¹

If your post-release supervision is revoked, you may be sentenced for a period longer than the maximum time periods listed above if you were given both determinate and indeterminate sentences.⁹² If you had more time left on the combined amount of your indeterminate and determinate sentences

81. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(a), (d) (McKinney 2009).

82. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(g) (McKinney 2009).

83. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(b), (e) (McKinney 2009).

84. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(h) (McKinney 2009).

85. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(c), (f) (McKinney 2009).

86. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(i) (McKinney 2009).

87. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2-a)(j) (McKinney 2009).

88. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3) (McKinney 2018).

89. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

90. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

91. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1-a) (McKinney 2009).

92. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

when you left prison on supervised release, you may be sentenced to serve that remaining amount of time instead of the shorter period of supervised release.

The amount of time you served under post-release supervision will not count if the Board of Parole declares you “delinquent.” The Board will declare you “delinquent” if you violate a condition of your release.⁹³ Violating a condition of your release will result in your incarceration and essentially stops the clock counting the time you have spent in post-release supervision. The clock will remain stopped until you are released from prison back to supervision. The time you spend in custody while awaiting the decision of whether or not your post-release supervision is revoked will be credited towards your maximum sentence, or aggregate maximum sentences (if you have multiple sentences) for which you were released. If you are sentenced to a new determinate or indeterminate sentence, your remaining period of post-release supervision will be on hold until you are re-released from prison, at which time you will begin serving that period of post-release supervision again.⁹⁴ Any amount of time you spent in custody due to a delinquency declaration exceeding your maximum sentence will be credited against your remaining period of post-release supervision.⁹⁵

(c) Challenging Post-Release Supervision

If you have received a term of post-release supervision, you should read this section carefully to ensure that your sentence is lawful, as there have been a number of important changes in New York law that will affect many incarcerated people.

You may challenge your term of post-release supervision if you are serving a determinate sentence, and your sentencing judge failed to impose a term of post-release supervision at your sentencing. Prior to 2008, the New York Department of Corrections (DOCS) (not the sentencing judge) occasionally imposed a mandatory period of post-release supervision for incarcerated people at the time of release. In 2008, however, the New York Court of Appeals held that DOCS may not do this—only a judge can impose post-release supervision.⁹⁶ In addition, the judge must have imposed or stated the term of post-release supervision at sentencing.⁹⁷ Because the law has changed, if you were given post-release supervision, you should confirm that this was given to you by your sentencing judge and not by DOCS. If your post-release supervision was imposed by DOCS at the time of release and not by your sentencing judge at the time of your sentencing, you may be able to challenge the post-release supervision.

This change in the law affects thousands of incarcerated people in New York State. In order to help deal with these cases in which judges failed to impose or state post-release supervision at sentencing, the New York legislature passed N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85, effective as of June 30, 2008.⁹⁸ This statute applies to cases in which a determinate sentence requiring post-release supervision was imposed between September 1, 1998 and June 30, 2008, and the court failed to impose or state the term of post-release supervision at sentencing. If your case fits within this category, the court may (with the approval of the district attorney) resentence you and re-impose your original determinate sentence without requiring the term of post-release supervision.⁹⁹ In addition, the judge must have imposed or stated the term of post-release supervision at sentencing.¹⁰⁰ Because the law has changed, if you were given post-release supervision, you should confirm that this was given to you by your

93. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(5)(d) (McKinney 2009).

94. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(5)(e), (f) (McKinney 2009).

95. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(5)(d) (McKinney 2009).

96. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 468–470, 889 N.E.2d 459, 463, 859 N.Y.S.2d 582, No. 53, slip op. at 7 (2008) (finding that sentencing is a “uniquely judicial responsibility” that can only be imposed by the courts).

97. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 468–469, 889 N.E.2d 459, 463, 859 N.Y.S.2d 582, No. 53, slip op. at 7 (2008).

98. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

99. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

100. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 468–469, 889 N.E.2d 459, 463, 859 N.Y.S.2d 582, No. 53, slip op. at 7 (2008).

sentencing judge and not by DOCS. If your post-release supervision was imposed by DOCS at the time of release and not by your sentencing judge at the time of your sentencing, you may be able to challenge the post-release supervision.

This change in the law affects thousands of incarcerated people in New York State. In order to help deal with these cases in which judges failed to impose or state post-release supervision at sentencing, the New York legislature passed N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85, effective as of June 30, 2008.¹⁰¹ This statute applies to cases in which a determinate sentence requiring post-release supervision was imposed between September 1, 1998 and June 30, 2008, and the court failed to impose or state the term of post-release supervision at sentencing. If your case fits within this category, the court may (with the approval of the district attorney) resentence you and re-impose your original determinate sentence without requiring the term of post-release supervision.¹⁰² In the resentencing process, you have certain rights. DOCS or the Division of Parole must notify you, as well as the sentencing judge, that resentencing must take place.¹⁰³ Within ten days of receiving the notice, the sentencing judge must appoint counsel for you.¹⁰⁴ Within forty days after the notice, the judge must make a decision and resentence you.¹⁰⁵ Note that you may waive these deadlines.¹⁰⁶

Even if DOCS imposed post-release supervision on you, a judge may re-sentence you and still impose a term of post-release supervision.¹⁰⁷ Additionally, if you were placed on post-release supervision, and the terms of that post-release supervision were imposed by DOCS (not the sentencing judge), and you are then charged with violating the terms of your post-release supervision, you cannot be re-incarcerated for violating those terms.¹⁰⁸ If you are incarcerated for these reasons, you are entitled to immediate release.

There is also another way that you can challenge your term of post-release supervision. If you pleaded guilty and received a sentence that included a mandatory term of post-release supervision, you may be able to vacate (take back) your guilty plea if you were not informed that your sentence would include post-release supervision during the plea colloquy (the exchange of questions and answers between a judge and defendant who is pleading guilty). The New York State Court of Appeals (the highest court in New York) held that if you pleaded guilty without being informed that you would be subject to post-release supervision, you could vacate your guilty plea, because the plea was not a “voluntary and intelligent choice.”¹⁰⁹ The New York Appellate Division also held that if you pleaded guilty, and the sentencing judge did not advise you of the post-release supervision during the plea colloquy, but did impose post-release supervision at sentencing, N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 does not apply, and the plea has to be vacated.¹¹⁰

Note that if you were not informed of the post-release supervision during your plea colloquy, although you can take back your plea, you will not be able to take back the guilty judgment against you.¹¹¹ This means that you will either be given a new trial or re-sentencing. If you are re-sentenced, however, you will likely get the same sentence, so only take back your plea if you want to go to trial

101. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

102. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

103. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 601-d(2) (McKinney 2014).

104. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 601-d(4)(a) (McKinney 2014).

105. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 601-d(4)(d) (McKinney 2014).

106. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 601-d(4)(e) (McKinney 2014).

107. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 471, 889 N.E.2d 459, 464, 859 N.Y.S.2d 590 (2008) (finding the procedure through which post-release supervision was imposed did not comply with the statutory mandate, but still remanding to trial court for re-sentencing).

108. People ex rel. Lucas Foote v. Piscotti, 51 A.D.3d 1407, 1408, 857 N.Y.S.2d 515, 515 (4th Dept. 2008); People ex rel. Gerard v. Kralik, 51 A.D.3d 1045, 1046, 858 N.Y.S.2d 771, 772 (2d Dept. 2008); see also Prendergast v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr., 51 A.D.3d 1133, 1133–1134, 856 N.Y.S.2d 725, 726 (3d Dept. 2008) (holding that only a court may impose post-release supervision).

109. People v. Catu, 4 N.Y.3d 242, 245, 825 N.E.2d 1081, 1082, 792 N.Y.S.2d 887, 888 (2005).

110. People v. Rucker, 67 A.D.3d 1126, 1128, 888 N.Y.S.2d 313, 316 (3d Dept. 2009).

111. People v. Louree, 8 N.Y.3d 541, 546, 869 N.E.2d 18, 21–22, 838 N.Y.S.2d 18 (2007).

instead of keeping your plea. Even if you do not wish to vacate your plea or if you have already served your sentence, you may be able to challenge your post-release supervision without setting aside your sentence.

5. Length of Your Conditional Release

If you are conditionally released from a definite sentence, you will be on conditional release for one year—no matter how little time you have remaining on your sentence.¹¹² During this year, the Board of Parole will supervise you, and you must continue to follow the terms of your conditional release agreement.¹¹³

If you are conditionally released from an indeterminate sentence, your conditional release will last for the maximum amount of time remaining on your sentence.¹¹⁴ For example, if you get out on conditional release after twenty years of an indeterminate sentence of fifteen to thirty years, you will be on conditional release for ten years. For those ten years, you will be in the legal custody of the Board of Parole. You will have to obey the conditions of your release, and you will have to report regularly to a parole officer, just like a person on parole.¹¹⁵ For more information about parole, see Chapter 32, “Parole,” of the JLM.

If you are granted conditional release from a determinate sentence, you will be under supervision for six months to five years. For more information about conditional release after a determinate sentence, see Part E(4) above.

If you are granted conditional release from a determinate or indeterminate sentence, you may be able to end your conditional release supervision early (which is also called a “merit termination”). The Board of Parole has the power to grant an absolute discharge to individuals on conditional release, unless you received a determinate sentence after being convicted of a felony other than one under N.Y. Penal Law Section 220 or 221 (the sections on marijuana or other controlled substance offenses).¹¹⁶ This kind of merit termination satisfies all the remaining time on your sentence, as if you had served it all in prison.

The Board of Parole has the discretion to grant or withhold early discharges from conditional release. Ask your parole officer about early discharge to find out whether and when it may be a possibility for you.

6. Revocation of Conditional Release

Conditional release can be revoked in the same way that parole can be revoked. Both the Conditional Release Commission and the Board of Parole have broad discretion to revoke conditional release.¹¹⁷ If an officer of the Conditional Release Commission (applicable if your conditional release is from a definite sentence) or a parole officer (applicable if your conditional release is from a determinate or indeterminate sentence) has reasonable cause to believe that you violated the terms of your conditional release, your conditional release may be revoked.¹¹⁸ Examples of such violations include failure to appear for a scheduled meeting with your parole officer or participation in criminal

112. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2009).

113. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2009).

114. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2009).

115. See N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(1) (McKinney 2009).

116. But see N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-j(1) (McKinney 2018) (allowing for a discharge of post-release supervision after three consecutive years if certain conditions are met). Please note that if you were convicted of a felony sex offense, discharge of post-release supervision is available only after five years if certain conditions are met.

117. See Hyser v. Reed, 318 F.2d 225, 234 (D.C. Cir. 1963) (en banc) (finding statute gives Board of Parole broad discretion to both grant and revoke parole, without requiring adversarial hearings). See also N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(3)(b) (McKinney 2009) (stating that the local Conditional Release Commission or Board of Parole that supervises a person on conditional release has discretion to revoke their conditional release).

118. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 274(1) (McKinney 2014); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018).

activities. Before your conditional release can be revoked, however, your parole officer must report your actions to a member of the Board, who may then issue a warrant for temporary detention.¹¹⁹

Before revoking your conditional release, the government must schedule a hearing and notify you about it. The written notice must state the date, place, and purpose of the hearing.¹²⁰ The notice must also inform you of which conditions you are alleged to have violated, your right to appear and speak on your own behalf, your right to present evidence, and your right to confront the witnesses who testify against you.¹²¹ The government will hold a preliminary revocation hearing, which you are required to attend, within fifteen days of the execution of the warrant for temporary detention.¹²² At this hearing, the government will determine whether there is probable cause (that is, a legally sufficient reason) to believe that you violated the conditions of your release.¹²³ If probable cause is not found, the case will be dismissed, and you will be released again.¹²⁴ If probable cause is found, however, the government must hold a revocation hearing within ninety days.¹²⁵ The government must notify you in writing at least fourteen days before the revocation hearing. The notice must include the date, place, and time of the hearing.¹²⁶

The Conditional Release Commission or the Board of Parole must provide you with due process before permanently revoking your conditional release.¹²⁷ In order to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution's due process clause, there must be a finding by a "preponderance of the evidence" (meaning that it must be "more likely than not") that you violated a term of your conditional release, and you must be given an opportunity to be heard.¹²⁸ You are also entitled to a lawyer at the revocation hearing.¹²⁹ If you are unable to afford a lawyer, the local county court must provide you with a lawyer for the hearing.¹³⁰ At the hearing, you will be given the opportunity to make a statement.¹³¹ You also have the right to present evidence and to confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you.¹³² If it cannot be determined by a preponderance of the evidence that you violated a condition of your release, the case will be dismissed and you will again be released.¹³³ But if it is determined by a

119. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(a)(i) (McKinney 2018).

120. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018).

121. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018).

122. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2018).

123. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2018).

124. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(vii) (McKinney 2018).

125. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(i) (McKinney 2018). Please take note that this ninety day time may be extended if you request and receive a postponement of your conditional release revocation hearing, or if you consent to the Conditional Release Commission's or Parole Board's request for a revocation hearing beyond the ninety day time limit.

126. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(iii) (McKinney 2018).

127. See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 482–484, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2601–2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 495–497 (1972) (holding that because a parolee faces a severe loss of liberty if his parole is revoked, due process is required before parole can be revoked). Although this ruling dealt with parole revocation, one can argue the reasoning should apply equally to the conditional release revocation. See Kroemer v. Joy, 2 Misc. 3d 265, 268, 769 N.Y.S.2d 357, 360 (Sup. Ct. Yates County 2003) (finding incarcerated people in temporary release status have a due process right to a hearing before their status is revoked since it would be a loss of liberty); Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that an incarcerated person on work release is entitled to procedural due process before his status can be denied to prevent a deprivation of his liberty); Anderson v. Recore, 446 F.3d 324, 333–334 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that incarcerated people have a protected liberty interest in continuation in a temporary release program that affords them due process rights including notice and a hearing before its revocation).

128. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(1)(b), (3) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v)–(vi) (entitlement to hearing), (viii)–(ix) (requiring preponderance of evidence) (McKinney 2018).

129. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(4) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018).

130. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018).

131. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(2) (McKinney 2005).

132. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(3) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(iv)–(vi) (McKinney 2018).

133. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(3), (5) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(ix) (McKinney preponderance of the evidence that you violated one or more conditions of your release in an important respect (such as failing to appear for a scheduled meeting with your parole officer), your conditional release may be revoked, and you will again be detained or your release may be modified.¹³⁴ If you are released again, the time you spent in detention will be credited against the time you must serve.¹³⁵

7. Disadvantages of Conditional Release for Incarcerated people Serving Definite Sentences

Under some circumstances, it may be preferable to stay in prison rather than take advantage of conditional release. For example, if you are a definite-sentence incarcerated person, and you are conditionally released, you must remain under the supervision of the Conditional Release Commission for a full year, no matter how little time is left on your original sentence.¹³⁶ When you are near the end of a definite sentence (which could even be shortened by good-time credit), you might have to choose between conditional release now (followed by a year of supervision) or another month or so in prison (followed by complete freedom from supervision). The local Conditional Release Commission may try to grant you conditional release near the end of your sentence just to keep you under supervision for a year. For example, incarcerated people often apply for conditional release as soon as they become eligible for it, but the local Conditional Release Commission often deny these requests until shortly before their sentence ends so as keep these incarcerated people under supervision for a year. If you are serving a definite sentence and the Commission agrees to grant you conditional release, be sure you know exactly how much additional time you would have to serve in prison to finish your sentence. You should think about whether you would rather serve a short additional time in prison, or spend what might be a longer time (one year) under supervision. There are different reasons to make either of these choices, so neither is the wrong decision. But it is important to be aware of your options, and to realize how much of your life you are committing to supervision (either by being incarcerated or by being under post-release supervision). You are in the best position to decide which option makes the most sense for you.

G. Early Release from a Definite Sentence

If you are serving a definite sentence but do not get out on conditional release, you can still get out before the end of your sentence if you have earned good-time credit. Remember, good-time credit is not used to determine eligibility for conditional release from a definite sentence.

If the amount of good-time credit you have earned equals the time remaining on your definite sentence, you should request to be unconditionally released. Because you cannot earn good-time credit for more than one-third of your definite sentence, you will have to serve at least two-thirds of your definite sentence before being eligible for this automatic early release.¹³⁷ For example, if you were sentenced to nine months and earned three months of good-time credit, your sentence can be reduced by three months, making it a six-month sentence.

As soon as you are eligible and request to be released, your sentence will be over—there is no post-release supervision. Accordingly, unlike incarcerated people released on parole or on conditional release, you will not need to sign a release agreement or worry about supervision or parole officers. Although both conditional and early release allow you to leave prison before serving your entire sentence, only early release also frees you from post-release supervision.

2018).

134. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 410.70(3), (5) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(x) (McKinney 2018).

135. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(h) (McKinney 2018).

136. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2009).

137. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 804(1) (McKinney 2014).

H. Presumptive Release

In 2003, the New York state legislature enacted a new kind of release program called presumptive release.¹³⁸ In some ways, presumptive release is a lot like parole. The one major difference, however, is that presumptive release is designed to encourage the early release of model, well-behaving incarcerated people serving indeterminate sentences. That is, presumptive release is intended to be readily available for incarcerated people who have followed prison rules and participated in their assigned work and treatment programs. In addition, unlike parole, you do not have to appear before the Board of Parole to be released. Please take note, however, that this release program is scheduled to end on September 1, 2021.¹³⁹

Although you do not have a right to demand presumptive release,¹⁴⁰ you may be eligible if you meet certain requirements. First, the presumptive release program is only available to incarcerated people serving one or more indeterminate sentences. Second, the presumptive release program is only available to incarcerated people serving sentences for non-violent crimes,¹⁴¹ who have not committed any serious disciplinary infractions,¹⁴² and who have not been deemed to have filed or continued frivolous (that is, not serious) legal complaints.¹⁴³

1. Earned Eligibility Program

To be eligible for presumptive release, you must first receive a “certificate of earned eligibility.”¹⁴⁴ Whether you are serving an indeterminate or a determinate sentence, you should have been assigned a work and treatment program.¹⁴⁵ Two months before your earliest possible parole date, or at some point after that, the commissioner will review your record to determine whether you have complied with this program.¹⁴⁶ If the commissioner decides you have successfully participated in your program, he may issue you a certificate of earned eligibility.¹⁴⁷ This certificate will factor into your parole hearing and also play a key role in getting presumptive release.

2. Requesting Presumptive Release

To get presumptive release, you must (1) have a certificate of earned eligibility,¹⁴⁸ (2) not have been convicted of a violent offense,¹⁴⁹ (3) not have committed any serious disciplinary violations while

138. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806 (McKinney 2014). Please note that more information about the presumptive release program is available online. See New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Programs, Directive No. 4791, Presumptive Release (2017), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4791.pdf>, (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

139. This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2021. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online. See New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Programs, Directive No. 4791, Presumptive Release (2017), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4791.pdf>, (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

140. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(5) (McKinney 2014).

141. Under New York State law, an incarcerated person is not eligible for presumptive relief if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I felony, (2) a violent felony offense under § 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law (“relating to sex offenses”), (7) incest, or (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law (“relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance”). N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1)(i) (McKinney 2014).

142. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1)(ii) (McKinney 2014).

143. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1)(iii) (McKinney 2014).

144. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1) (McKinney 2014).

145. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

146. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

147. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

148. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2014).

149. Under New York state law, an incarcerated person is not eligible for presumptive relief if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I in prison, and (4) not have filed any frivolous lawsuits.¹⁵⁰ In addition to these requirements, one final requirement is contingent on whether or not you have received merit-time credit. If you have received merit-time credit, you must have already served at least five-sixths of your minimum sentence (or total minimum sentences). If you have not received merit-time credit, you must have already served your entire minimum sentence (or total minimum sentences).¹⁵¹

The conditions of presumptive release are very similar to the conditions of parole or conditional release.¹⁵² You will be subject to the supervision of the Board of Parole for the remainder of your sentence.

I. Clemency and Commutation in New York

“Clemency” is a general term for the power of an executive officer (for example, the Governor of New York) to change the sentence of a criminal defendant to prevent injustice from occurring.¹⁵³

There are several different types of clemency, including amnesty, reprieve, pardon, and commutation. A pardon attempts to clear a person’s name of a crime and restore their reputation. “Amnesty” refers to an official pardon for people who have been convicted of political offenses. A reprieve postpones a scheduled execution. Finally, a commutation either fully or partially reduces the current sentence being served, either fully or partially.¹⁵⁴

All forms of clemency are generally difficult to obtain. You may have a stronger chance at clemency, however, if you are a non-violent offender or a woman who is in jail for killing an abusive partner. This Section focuses on clemency for battered women.¹⁵⁵ If you are not a battered woman and are still seeking clemency, the outlined procedures will still be helpful to you in preparing your petition. This is because the basic procedures for filing a good petition apply to all types of clemency petitions, even those that are not based on domestic abuse.

If you are currently seeking clemency for a death sentence, you may be entitled to a lawyer.¹⁵⁶ For more information on clemency in the State of New York, see “Guidelines for Review of Executive Clemency Applications,” which is on file in the law library of each correctional facility in New York.¹⁵⁷ felony, (2) a violent felony offense under § 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law (“relating to sex offenses”), (7) incest, or (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the Penal Law (“relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance”). N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1)(i) (McKinney 2014).

150. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1) (McKinney 2014).

151. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 806(1)–(2) (McKinney 2014).

152. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.40(1)(c) (McKinney 2009). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2021, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

153. New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Executive Clemency, available at <https://www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020). In thirty-five states, including New York, the governor grants clemency. In other states either the governor and an advisory board, or an advisory board alone, makes the decision. Florida Rules of Executive Clemency, ch. 4, available at https://www.fcor.state.fl.us/docs/clemency/clemency_rules.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

154. The Mich. Women’s Clemency and Justice Project, Clemency for Battered Women in Michigan: A Manual for Attorneys, Law Students and Social Workers, ch. II-A, available at http://umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/printable.html (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

155. For further information on clemency for battered women nationwide, contact the National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women, 990 Spring Garden Street, Suite 703, Philadelphia, PA 19123, (215) 763-1144 or (800) 903-0111 extension 3 (toll free). The Clearinghouse accepts collect calls from incarcerated battered women.

156. Federal law authorizes the courts in some instances to appoint lawyers for prisoners in capital cases facing death sentences who cannot afford lawyers. See 18 U.S.C. § 3599. In Harbison v. Bell, the Supreme Court held that the statute gives federal courts the power to appoint counsel to prisoners serving their sentences in federal and state prisons who cannot afford lawyers and who seek counsel in federal or state clemency proceedings. Harbison v. Bell, 556 U.S. 180, 185–186, 129 S. Ct. 1481, 173 L.Ed.2d 347 (2009).

157. N.Y. State Dept. of Corrections and Community Supervision, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision, Section 8 (2017), available at

1. Pardons

Pardons are different from commutations. A pardon is most commonly available if there is (1) overwhelming and convincing proof of your innocence that was not available at the time of your conviction, (2) a problem with the judgment of conviction in your case, or (3) a chance that you will be deported from the United States.¹⁵⁸ Usually a pardon is not available if you have any other administrative or legal remedy available to you.

2. Commutations

If you are granted a commutation, you can appear before the Board of Parole to be considered for a release on parole earlier than what your initial sentence would allow. When exceptional and compelling circumstances are not present, a commutation of sentence requires all of the following:

- (1) your minimum sentence is more than one year,
- (2) you have already served at least half of your minimum sentence,
- (3) you are ineligible for release on parole within one year of the date you apply for clemency, and
- (4) you are ineligible for release on parole at the discretion of the Board of Parole.¹⁵⁹

In addition, you must be able to prove by clear and convincing evidence that one of the following three circumstances applies:

- (1) You have made “exceptional strides in self-development and improvement;” you have “made responsible use of available rehabilitative programs and [have] addressed identified treatment needs” (for example, by completing a drug program), and commutation of your sentence is “in the interest of justice, consistent with public safety and [with your] rehabilitation;”
- (2) You have a terminal illness or a “severe and chronic disability which would be substantially mitigated by release from prison and such release is in the interest of justice and consistent with public safety” (illnesses such as cancer and multiple sclerosis may qualify); or
- (3) “[F]urther incarceration would constitute gross unfairness because of the basic inequities involved.”¹⁶⁰

3. How to Request a Pardon or Commutation

To be considered for clemency in New York, send a written petition requesting clemency to either of the following addresses:

The Governor of the State of New York
Executive Chamber
State Capitol
Albany, NY 12224

Director, Executive Clemency Bureau
N.Y. State Division of Parole
97 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206

https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

158. N.Y. State Dept. of Corrections and Community Supervision, Executive Clemency, available at <https://www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

159. N.Y. State Dept. of Corrections and Community Supervision, Executive Clemency, available at <https://www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

160. Criminal Justice Policy Foundation, New York Executive Clemency Fact Page, available at <http://www.cjpf.org/clemency-ny> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

After the Governor receives a petition requesting clemency, he then gathers the necessary information. The Governor generally grants a formal hearing to those seeking commutation of a death sentence. The Governor will review the information and make a decision. You should send all supporting application materials within thirty days of sending the petition. Petitions are typically considered in the order in which they are received.¹⁶¹

(a) Organization of Your Petition

To organize your petition, you should write an introductory paragraph that explains the strongest reason why you deserve a pardon or commutation. For example, you could include special circumstances about your case or discuss significant things you have accomplished in prison. Make the petition as brief as possible, but make sure not to leave out any important information. Use headings to separate your points. Emphasize how you have spent your time in prison in order to show self-development and character improvement. Write out in detail what you plan to do after you have been released. Be sure to include how you will be moving into a stable environment, how you will support yourself, and who is included in your support network.

If you were the victim of domestic violence and the domestic violence is related to your conviction, consider making a table or list that includes the date of each incident of abuse, the nature of the abuse, and a description of any existing evidence that may help prove the incident(s).¹⁶²

(b) Exhibits

In order to show strong character and good behavior, you should include evidence, such as letters of support from prison administrators, work supervisors, religious leaders, educators, and social workers. You should include this evidence as exhibits to your petition. If you were a victim of abuse, you should also include police and hospital records documenting the abuse.

To obtain police records, you should call or write to the records office in the county where the event happened. Different police departments have different policies, and you may have to fill out a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to get the records.¹⁶³ To obtain hospital records, call or write to the patient records office at the hospital where you went for treatment. A written request should include your name, date of birth, Social Security Number, the specific date or general time range of your hospitalization, and the specific information you are requesting.

If you were a victim of domestic violence abuse, and you were evaluated by an expert regarding battered women's syndrome, you should include that evaluation or testimony, as well as evidence of any violent criminal history of your abuser. Include any orders of protection and photographs showing physical injury from the abuse. You also want to attach affidavits or letters from friends, family members, and domestic violence workers who had first-hand knowledge of the abuse. An affidavit is a written statement made by a person that they then sign and swear to be true in front of someone authorized to administer an oath, such as a notary public. An affidavit can sometimes be used as evidence in court. You should refer to these exhibits in your petition, labeling and attaching them to the end of the petition.

(c) Obtaining Documents

Getting documents related to your case and your prison term will help you write your petition. Because you may have difficulty getting all of these documents while incarcerated, you should try to have a close friend or family member assist you in gathering this information and in developing your petition. For information on the Federal Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), the Federal Privacy Act

161. Criminal Justice Policy Foundation, New York Executive Clemency Fact Page, <http://www.cjpf.org/clemency-ny> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

162. The Mich. Women's Clemency and Justice Project, Clemency for Battered Women in Michigan: A Manual for Attorneys, Law Students and Social Workers, ch. VII, available at http://umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/printable.html (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

163. For more information, see JLM Chapter 7, "Freedom of Information."

(PA), and New York's Freedom of Information Law (FOIL), see JLM, Chapter 7, "Freedom of Information." JLM, Chapter 7 also includes a list of FOIA statutes in other states. You will want to obtain your DOCS records (records pertaining to the time you have spent in prison), your parole file, your case file, documentation of battering (if applicable), and affidavits or letters of support.

Your DOCCS Records

Your DOCCS records include:

- (1) All reports of misbehavior and supplemental sheets,
- (2) Physical force and unusual incident sheets,
- (3) Adjustment committee reports and dispositions,
- (4) Copy of legal dates,
- (5) Crimes of commitment,
- (6) Personal history record,
- (7) Disciplinary record,
- (8) Correctional supervision history,
- (9) Certificates of program completion, and
- (10) Recognition letters.

You have a right to this information under FOIA and New York's Personal Privacy Protection Law (PPPL),¹⁶⁴ but you must authorize release of these records if they are being sent to someone other than you. In order to obtain these documents, you should write to the prisoner records coordinator of your facility with your name, DOCCS number, where you would like the records sent, and a list of the documents you want to receive. If the documents are being sent to someone other than you, you must state that you authorize that person to receive the documents you are requesting.

Your Parole Records

You also have a right to your case record and parole file under FOIL and PPPL. The case record is the most complete set of records maintained by the Board of Parole and can be obtained by writing to the senior parole officer of your facility with your name, ID number, and release interview date, revocation hearing date, or appeal pending date, whichever applies. State that you want to review all the information in the file that will be considered by the Board of Parole to prepare for the upcoming date.

The parole file is a less complete record in the central office, and it can be obtained by writing to the following address:

Chairman of the Board of Parole
97 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206.

Be sure to state that you are requesting these records pursuant to FOIA and PPPL.

Your Case File

The case file includes:

- (1) Police reports,
- (2) Grand jury minutes,
- (3) Indictment,
- (4) Pretrial hearings and motions,
- (5) Trial transcripts,
- (6) Summation,
- (7) Jury charge,
- (8) Jury requests/read backs,
- (9) Verdict,

164. N.Y. PUB. OFF. LAW §§ 94–95 (McKinney 2008).

- (10) Sentencing,
- (11) Plea allocutions of co-defendants,
- (12) Direct appeal appellate and response briefs,
- (13) Reply/supplemental brief,
- (14) Decision on appeal, and
- (15) Anything else of interest in the court file.

Ask your attorney for copies of these documents and transcripts. If you do not have an attorney or if your attorney does not have complete transcripts, you may need to call the criminal courthouse to obtain copies.

For your criminal record, send a request to:

Record Review Unit
New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services Civil Identification Bureau
4 Tower Place
Albany, NY 12203.

In your request, you should include your name, date of birth, Social Security Number, and Department Identification Number (D.I.N.). You can also ask them to rush process your request of your file if you need the information quickly. Otherwise, it can take eight weeks or longer to receive your criminal record. You should send the request in a facility envelope, if possible.

You also have a right to obtain pre-sentencing reports, though you may be asked to show a factual need for the reports.¹⁶⁵ To get them, send a written request addressed “To Whom It May Concern” to the Record Review Unit (see above address), with your name, birth date, indictment number, sentencing court, the address where you would like the information to be sent, and a signed release authorizing another person to receive the information, if necessary.

Documentation of Battering

Documentation of battering should include:

- (1) Medical records of injuries from abuse;
- (2) Mental health records showing your diminished capacity at the time of the crime and/or the stress, fear and anxiety caused by living in a violent relationship;
- (3) Orders of protection;
- (4) Police reports related to the abuse; and
- (5) Photographs showing physical injury.

“Diminished capacity” means an unbalanced mental state that would make you less accountable for your actions. Try to obtain copies of any relevant records from hospitals, clinics, private doctors, or mental health clinicians, as well as police reports of incidents of domestic violence.

Affidavits or Letters of Support

You should also include affidavits and letters of support in your petition. You can ask family members, friends, coworkers, doctors, neighbors, therapists, and other people involved in your life to submit an affidavit. You can also ask them to submit letters of support. The affidavit or letter of support should explain that you were battered and/or describe the crime. When you submit the affidavits or letters in your petition, you should state whether these people testified at your criminal trial.

165. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.50(2)(a) (McKinney 2005); see Gutkaiss v. People, 49 A.D.3d 979, 979–980, 853 N.Y.S.2d 677, 678 (3d Dept. 2008) (reversing a denial of disclosing a pre-sentence report because an upcoming hearing for the parole board was a sufficient “factual showing” by the incarcerated person); see also In re Blanche v. People, 193 A.D.2d 991, 991–992, 598 N.Y.S.2d 102 (3d Dept. 1993) (stating that because there was no “factual showing” or statutory authority cited by the incarcerated person the sentencing court was allowed to deny the request for a pre-sentence report).

J. Compassionate Release for Persons with Terminal Diseases

Forty-nine states and the District of Columbia have programs that allow for the release of dying or seriously ill incarcerated people.¹⁶⁶ For example, California has a compassionate release procedure that allows the court to re-sentence or recall the sentence.¹⁶⁷ You must have an incurable illness that will cause death within six months or be permanently medically incapacitated (as determined by a physician employed by the Department of Corrections), and you must not pose a threat to public safety.¹⁶⁸ This does not apply if you are sentenced to death or to a term of life without the possibility of parole. If you are incarcerated in California and are interested in receiving a compassionate release, you or someone you designate should contact the chief medical officer of the prison or the Director of Corrections.¹⁶⁹

Every state's rules are different, and many states have recently implemented new programs or are considering new legislation on this issue. For example, in 2008, North Carolina and Wyoming introduced new compassionate release programs.¹⁷⁰ If you have a serious or terminal illness or are elderly, you should check to see if your state has a compassionate release program.

New York State prisons also release some incarcerated people through medical parole.¹⁷¹ To be eligible, you must have a terminal health condition or a significant and permanent non-terminal condition.¹⁷² You must also be so incapacitated or debilitated that there is a reasonable probability that you do not present a danger to society. To prove this, you must have a physician's certification that you are severely restricted in your ability to move around and to care for yourself.¹⁷³ In addition, the Commissioner of DOCS (or someone authorized by the Commissioner) must certify both the doctor's diagnosis and your incapacity. Officials will consider the length of and reason for your incarceration, as well as your criminal record. You are not eligible if you are serving a sentence for first- or second-degree murder, first-degree manslaughter, or any sex offense (defined by Article 130 of the New York Penal Law), or an attempt to commit any of these crimes.¹⁷⁴

166. Chris Feliciano Arnold, The Dying American Prisoner, THE ATLANTIC, Dec. 23, 2019 ("Over time, 49 states and the District of Columbia adopted ["compassionate release"] policies"), available at <https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2019/12/compassionate-release-lets-prisoners-die-free/603988/> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

167. CAL. PENAL CODE § 1170(e) (LexisNexis 2015).

168. CAL. PENAL CODE § 1170(e)(2) (LexisNexis 2015).

169. CAL. PENAL CODE § 1170(e)(6) (LexisNexis 2015).

170. See N.C. GEN. STAT. § 15A-1369 (2014); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-13-424 (2015).

171. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r (McKinney 2018). See also N.Y. STATE DIV. OF PAROLE, NEW YORK STATE PAROLE HANDBOOK: QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING PAROLE RELEASE AND SUPERVISION, MEDICAL PAROLE SECTION, available at http://www.doccs.ny.gov/CommSup_Handbook.html (last visited Sept. 28, 2019); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 20, 2020).

172. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 20, 2020).

173. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 20, 2020).

174. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(1)(a) (McKinney 2018). Note that New York Executive Law § 259-r is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2021, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

The New York medical parole process has three steps.¹⁷⁵ First, you need a physician's certification to start the process.¹⁷⁶ To get this, you or someone acting on your behalf must make a request to the Commissioner of DOCS or the Division of Health Services that you be considered for medical parole.¹⁷⁷ If you are eligible, the Commissioner has discretion to order a medical evaluation and discharge plan. A physician employed by DOCS, or by a medical facility used by DOCS, can perform the evaluation. During the evaluation, the physician will make observations on the following: the disease, syndrome, or terminal condition you suffer from; the likelihood of your recovery; the extent of your debilitation or physical incapacity and its possible duration; the medications and dosages you are currently taking; and your ability to administer them to yourself.¹⁷⁸

The second step begins when the medical evaluation report plan is sent to the commissioner or commissioner's designee, who will advise the Commissioner whether you meet the criteria for medical parole. The commissioner's designee will determine whether you are "so debilitated or incapacitated as to create a reasonable probability that [you are] physically incapable of presenting any danger to society."¹⁷⁹ If the Commissioner decides that you meet the conditions for medical parole, the matter is referred to the Board of Parole for consideration. At that time, the Central Health Services staff and the correctional facility will begin to prepare a medical discharge plan. The medical discharge plan includes information on the level of care you will need, a description of special equipment or transportation needs, a description of your participation in the discharge plan, home-care plans if applicable, a description of any support needed by you or your care-giver, a report on the status of applications for Public Assistance or Medicaid, and a report on the status of applications for institutional placement. If it appears that you are in need of Public Assistance, an application will be sent to the Department of Social Services.¹⁸⁰

If you can get both the physician's certification and the Commissioner's certification, and there is no other reason you would be ineligible, you may receive compassionate release, also called medical parole. However, getting through the third phase of formal review by the Board of Parole can be very difficult. The process has many steps and can be time-consuming. The judge who sentenced you, the District Attorney, and the attorney who represented you will all be notified that you might receive parole. They will each have fifteen days to submit comments on your release, and you must wait for this comment period to pass before you can be granted medical parole.¹⁸¹ Additionally, DOCS must provide "an appropriate medical discharge plan" to the Board of Parole.¹⁸² The Board must assess whether, considering your medical condition, it is reasonably possible you will live outside of prison without breaking the law. It must also consider whether letting you out on such a release might be harmful to society, or will go against society's idea of fairness, taking into account the seriousness of your crime. The Board must also consider whether your release will "undermine respect for the law."¹⁸³ The process can take months, so it is very important to start it as soon as you become eligible.

175. See John A. Beck, Compassionate Release from New York State Prisons: Why Are So Few Getting Out?, 27 J.L. MED. & ETHICS 216, 217–231 (1999) (explaining the process and problems with compassionate release in New York).

176. Physicians in the prison system can also initiate the request for you. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020) (stating that someone acting on the prisoner's behalf or a department employee may also make the request).

177. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

178. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 21, 2020); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(2)(a) (McKinney 2018).

179. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(2)(b) (McKinney 2018).

180. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (2014), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4304.pdf> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

181. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(1)(c) (McKinney 2018).

182. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(2)(c) (McKinney 2018).

183. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(1)(b) (McKinney 2018).

If parole is ultimately granted, the health services staff will send copies of all appropriate medical records to the physician or facility that will care for you. Once you are released, you must get medical care as appropriate and remain under the care of a physician.¹⁸⁴ Every six months after your release, the Board will review your case, deciding whether to let you stay out of prison by renewing the grant of parole.¹⁸⁵ Each time, you will need to agree to have a medical examination.¹⁸⁶

K. Federal Sentences

This Section outlines the four different ways that you can be released early from your federal sentence.

First, you can earn credit for time you served in prison prior to beginning your sentence. To learn more about what types of time previously served can be used to shorten your sentence, see Section L of this Chapter, which describes this option in more detail.

Second, you may be able to reduce your sentence by helping the government investigate or prosecute other people. There is no guarantee, however, that your sentence will be reduced if you provide such assistance. Even if your sentence is reduced, it is up to the court to decide the level of reduction. To determine if you are eligible for this type of reduction, see Section M of this Chapter, which explains this option in more detail.

Third, the Bureau of Prisons (“BOP”) can shorten your sentence by (1) awarding you “good conduct time credits,” (2) granting you early release for participation in a Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP), (3) granting you early release under the Second Chance Act, or (4) granting you compassionate relief. To determine if you are eligible for these programs, learn how to apply for these programs, and understand their potential effect on your sentence, see Section N of this Chapter.

Finally, in very rare cases, the President of the United States can grant you executive clemency, which releases you from your prison sentence and/or your term of supervised release. The President can also forgive your crime after you have finished serving your sentence, and have shown remorse and rehabilitation. Federal executive clemency is discussed in Section P of this Chapter.

This Part also explains federal supervised release. Federal supervised release is an additional sentence that a judge can impose that you must serve after you complete your prison sentence. During a period of federal supervised release your conduct will be monitored by a probation officer to make sure that you do not violate any of the conditions of your supervised release. Federal supervised release and its conditions can be revoked, terminated, or modified at any time. This could result in your being sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment. Section O of this Chapter explains federal supervised release in more detail.

L. Credit for Time Served

You can earn credit both for (1) time spent serving your current federal sentence, and (2) for time spent serving in prison after the date you committed your current federal offense but before you began serving your current sentence. The amount of time that is credited towards your sentence for “time served” is determined by the Attorney General or the BOP after the district court announces your sentence.¹⁸⁷ District courts cannot directly order that time previously served be credited to reduce the length of your current sentence. You can challenge the amount of time credited towards your sentence only after trying all other administrative remedies available with the BOP.¹⁸⁸

184. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(4)(b) (McKinney 2018).

185. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(4)(a), (e) (McKinney 2018). See also N.Y. State Div. of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2017), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf html (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

186. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-r(4)(d) (McKinney 2018).

187. United States v. Wilson, 503 U.S. 329, 333, 112 S. Ct. 1351, 1353–1354, 117 L. Ed. 2d 593, 599 (1992).

188. United States v. Whaley, 148 F.3d 205, 207 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that a district court does not have jurisdiction to hear an incarcerated person’s appeal to a sentencing determination until the that person has requested review with the BOP and exhausted all of his administrative remedies).

You can only earn credit for time spent in official detention. The Supreme Court has ruled that “official detention” means time spent under federal detention.¹⁸⁹ This does not include time on release, like on bail or under house arrest. The BOP interprets the Supreme Court’s ruling to mean that you are also not entitled to any time credit off an additional sentence if your release was a condition of parole, probation or supervised release, regardless of how severe the restrictions were.¹⁹⁰ You can still receive credit, however, for time spent in a community treatment center or lower security placement if it is ordered as a condition of your presentence detention or because of overcrowding in federal facilities.¹⁹¹

There are three types of credit that can count against your sentence as time served:

- (1) time actually spent serving a federal sentence;
- (2) time previously served; and
- (3) time in non-federal pre-detention custody when you are denied bail under a federal detainer.¹⁹²

The first category—time actually spent serving a federal sentence—refers to the time spent serving your current federal sentence. Your federal sentence does not begin until the date you are “received in custody awaiting transportation to,” or until you arrive voluntarily to begin serving your sentence at the official facility where you will serve your federal sentence.¹⁹³ The time you serve can be reduced even further if you obtain good conduct time credits¹⁹⁴ and/or early release under the Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP).¹⁹⁵

The second category—time previously served—allows credit to be applied for time previously served in official detention (state, foreign, or federal) before the date when your federal sentence began. In general, credit can apply from the time that you spent in detention for (1) your current offense prior to sentencing, or (2) any other offense for which you were arrested after you committed the current offense, provided that the time has not been credited against another sentence.¹⁹⁶ For example, you can include the time you spent in federal custody after arrest on your federal charge.¹⁹⁷ This includes the time spent in federal custody before sentencing, including time spent in state proceedings.¹⁹⁸

You may also be able to receive credit for a second category of time served: that is, the time (after your federal offense) that you spent in custody serving another sentence that was not and will not be counted towards any sentence. For example, if you were serving time in official detention for a state or foreign sentence that was later vacated and you were not re-sentenced, you can include this time. Likewise, if you were serving a federal, state, or foreign sentence that was vacated and you were re-sentenced to a period shorter than that which you already served, the extra time beyond time already served on that sentence can be applied to your federal sentence.¹⁹⁹

189. Reno v. Koray, 515 U.S. 50, 60–61, 115 S. Ct. 2021, 2027, 132 L. Ed. 2d 46, 57 (1995) (holding that the time spent by the plaintiff in a community treatment center while on bail would not be credited against his federal sentence, as he was on release and thus not in official detention).

190. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-14H (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

191. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-14F (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

192. Gross v. Berkbile, No. 7:CV-00095-KKC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 620, at *7 (E.D. Ky. Jan. 4, 2011) (unpublished); Stackpole v. Williamson, No. 3:CV-07-0396, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54992, at *6–7 (M.D. Pa. July 30, 2007) (unpublished).

193. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(a).

194. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b).

195. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(2)(B).

196. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b).

197. In Jonah R. v. Carmona, the Ninth Circuit applied these provisions to grant juveniles credit for time spent in pre-detention custody. See Jonah R. v. Carmona, 446 F.3d 1000, 1010 (9th Cir. 2006).

198. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-16 to 1-16A (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

199. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-17 (1997), available at

If you were arrested for a different offense after you committed the offense for which you were sentenced, and you spent time in official detention for that different offense, you can receive credit for that time you spent in detention prior to receiving the sentence you are now serving.²⁰⁰ You can also receive credit for time in a state facility when a federal court ordered that your federal and state sentences run “concurrently” (at the same time). Only a federal court can officially order that a federal and state sentence run concurrently. A state court may suggest that a federal and state sentence run concurrently, but federal courts have held that federal authorities do not need to follow the state’s recommendation. Therefore, any time spent serving the state sentence in a state facility while waiting for transport or transfer to the federal facility will not necessarily be credited against your sentence as time already served.²⁰¹ However, if you are first convicted in state court and later convicted in federal court, the federal court can order that your sentences run concurrently starting on the date that the federal sentence is announced or imposed by the court.²⁰² The federal court must specifically state that the federal sentence will run concurrently with your state sentence, or it will automatically run consecutively (one after the other).²⁰³ Only the time that you remained in state prison after the federal sentence was announced can be credited towards your federal sentence.

Note that you cannot “double count” credit for any previous time served in state or federal prison that has already been counted against your state sentence or a different federal sentence.²⁰⁴ This rule includes time spent in detention related to your trial and prosecution for unrelated federal charges,²⁰⁵ as well as time served in federal pre-sentence custody that has been credited to your state sentence.²⁰⁶ A district court cannot apply credits for time previously served to your federal sentence; only the Attorney General of the United States can do this, although the Attorney General may authorize the BOP to do so as well.²⁰⁷

The third category—called “Willis time credits”—covers time served in non-federal pre-detention custody when you were denied bail because you were being detained on separate charges by the federal http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

200. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b)(2) (allowing you to receive credit toward a sentence for any time spent in official detention prior to the date a new sentence commences, when your original detention time was the result of any other charge for which you were arrested after the commission of the offense for which you are now sentenced. So, if you were serving an official sentence for a crime you committed one year ago, and then were sentenced for a crime that you committed 2 years ago, the time you have served for the more recent crime can be applied to the sentence for the older crime for which you are just now being sentenced).

201. Leal v. Tombone, 341 F.3d 427, 429 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that federal authorities are not required to follow state recommendations for state and federal sentences to run concurrently and therefore are under no obligation to credit time served in state prison that could have been served in federal prison if authorities had chosen to commence transfer earlier (citing Taylor v. Sawyer, 284 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 2002) and Bloomgren v. Belaski, 948 F.2d 688, 690–691 (10th Cir. 1991)).

202. 18 U.S.C. § 3584(a); see Carmona v. Williamson, 226 F. App’x 240, 241 (3d Cir 2007) (unpublished) (holding that the time a plaintiff served in state prison before being given his federal sentence could not be credited against the federal sentence).

203. 18 U.S.C. § 3584(a).

204. Carmona v. Williamson, 226 F. App’x 240, 241 (3d Cir 2007) (unpublished).

205. United States v. Mills, 501 F.3d 9, 11–12 (1st Cir. 2007) (holding that the 365 days that plaintiff served in state prison that had been credited against his state sentence could not also be credited against his federal sentence where the federal detainer was completely unrelated to the reason he was in state custody).

206. United States v. Storm, No. 1:01-CR-4 TS 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57019, at *4 (D. Utah Aug. 2, 2007) (unpublished) (finding plaintiff not entitled to credit for time served in official detention prior to commencing his federal sentence when this same pre-custody time was already counted towards his state sentence), vacated on other grounds in, United States v. Storm, No. 1:01-CR-4 TS, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 13024 (10th Cir. June 16, 2008) (unpublished).

207. In United States v. Wilson, the Supreme Court held that credit for time already served under 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b) cannot be granted by the court, but only by the U.S. Attorney General (or the BOP, acting pursuant to the Attorney General’s orders) and only after the prisoner has begun serving his sentence. United States v. Wilson, 503 U.S. 329, 334–335, 112 S. Ct. 1351, 1354–1355, 117 L. Ed. 2d 593, 599–601 (1992); see also United States v. Peters, 470 F.3d 907, 909 (9th Cir. 2006) (reaffirming Wilson’s holding that only the Attorney General, and not the district court, has the authority to grant prisoners credit for time served).

government.²⁰⁸ You may be eligible for Willis time credits if you are sentenced to concurrent federal and state sentences, and your estimated federal release date is the same or later than your estimated state release date, without any reduction credits applied. In this scenario, you will earn Willis time credits for the time you spent in non-federal pre-sentence custody after the date that the federal offense you are charged with occurred, to the date that your first sentence began (either the federal or state sentence, whichever started earlier).²⁰⁹ You cannot obtain any Willis time credits if you are released from your state sentence before your federal sentence begins and the pre-sentence time was credited against your state sentence.²¹⁰

However, if your estimated federal release date, without any reduction credits applied, is earlier than your state estimated release date, then you may still be eligible for a reduction.²¹¹ A court has held that the BOP's decision to only apply pre-sentence credits to longer non-federal sentences was unreasonable.²¹² When the amount of time in the credit is longer than the amount of time separating the federal and state sentences, the court orders the pre-sentence time to first apply against the state sentence and then to reduce the federal sentence to match the length of the newly calculated state sentence.²¹³

M. Substantial Assistance Prosecuting Others

A second way that you may be released early from prison is by providing substantial help to the government to investigate or prosecute other people. Depending on how much help you provide, the judge can significantly reduce your sentence. The judge can even reduce your sentence below the statutory minimum.²¹⁴ Keep in mind, however, that there is no guarantee that your sentence will be reduced: the court may decide to keep your original sentence.²¹⁵

If you think you might be able to help the government in this way and want to try to reduce your sentence, you should talk to the government about this as soon as possible after your sentencing. For you to be eligible for this reduction, the government must first file a motion with your sentencing judge, asking the judge to reduce your sentence.²¹⁶ If the government files this motion within a year of your sentencing,²¹⁷ the judge will consider whether you gave “substantial assistance in investigating or prosecuting another person.”²¹⁸ But if you wait more than a year after sentencing before you help

208. These credits are named after a case, Willis v. United States, 438 F.2d 923, 925 (5th Cir. 1971) (holding that defendant was entitled to credit for time served in state pre-sentence custody because this time was related to his federal offense where defendant was denied release on bail because of the federal detainer lodged against him).

209. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-22 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

210. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-22 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

211. Kayfez v. Gazele, 993 F.2d 1288, 1290 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding unreasonable the BOP's decision to only apply credits for pre-sentence time to the longer non-federal sentence even where the amount of time in the credit was longer than the amount of time separating the federal and non-federal sentences, and instead ordering the pre-sentence time be applied against the non-federal sentence and then applied to reduce the federal sentence to match the length of the newly calculated non-federal sentence); see also Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-22 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

212. Kayfez v. Gazele, 993 F.2d 1288, 1290 (7th Cir. 1993).

213. Kayfez v. Gazele, 993 F.2d 1288, 1290 (7th Cir. 1993). Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-22 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017).

214. FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(b)(4).

215. FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(b).

216. FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(b)(1) & (2).

217. As used in this rule, “sentencing” means the oral announcement of the sentence. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(c).

218. FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(b)(1).

the government, it will be harder to get your sentence reduced and you may no longer be eligible. In this situation, the judge can only reduce your sentence if you also meet one of the following three requirements:²¹⁹

- (1) You did not know about the information until a year or more after your sentencing;
- (2) You told the government the information within one year of your sentencing but the information was not useful to the government until more than a year after your sentencing; or
- (3) You had the information but did not realize it would be useful to the government until more than one year after your sentencing. As soon as you realized it was useful, you told the government the information.

You should be aware that even if you help the government, you are not guaranteed a reduced sentence. It is entirely up to the government whether you are eligible for this reduction. Unless the government files a motion asking the judge to reduce your sentence, the judge cannot reduce your sentence.²²⁰ In addition, you should speak directly with a federal prosecutor about the possibility of obtaining a sentence reduction in exchange for information. Prison wardens and other BOP officials are not government officials and cannot file a motion with the court asking for a sentence reduction.²²¹

N. Additional Ways the BOP Can Shorten a Federal Sentence

In addition to earning credit for time served and substantially helping the government prosecute others, you may receive early release through one of four BOP programs. First, you can earn good conduct time credits that can be used to reduce your sentence. Second, you may be eligible for early release after participation in a Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP). Third, you may be eligible for early release under the Second Chance Act. Finally, you may be eligible for compassionate relief. Keep in mind, however, that it is difficult to obtain compassionate relief, which is only awarded in the most extraordinary circumstances. Each of the next subsections discusses these programs in more detail.

1. Good Conduct Time Credits

Federal good conduct time is similar to the state good-time credit discussed above in Parts C(2) and D of this Chapter. If you are serving a sentence of more than one year, but less than life imprisonment, you can earn up to fifty-four days of good conduct time credits for each year served of your sentence. These will be subtracted from your total sentence.²²²

(a) How to Earn Good Conduct Time Credit

Good conduct time credits are awarded for “exemplary compliance with institutional disciplinary regulations,” or successfully following prison rules.²²³ Credits are awarded at the BOP’s discretion at the end of each year.²²⁴ If you have not followed prison rules, you may receive fewer credits or no credits at all in any given year.²²⁵

219. FED. R. CRIM. P. 35(b)(2)(A)–(C).

220. United States v. Mulero-Algarin, 535 F.3d 34, 38 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that only the government—not a judge—has the power to make an incarcerated person eligible for a sentencing reduction for substantial assistance).

221. United States v. Ellis, 527 F.3d 203, 207–209 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that a warden within the BOP was unauthorized to make the motion as the “government” under Rule 35(b)).

222. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

223. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

224. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

225. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

(b) Amount of Good Conduct Time Credit You Can Earn

The amount of good conduct time you can earn depends on the date you committed your offense. If you committed your offense on or after November 1, 1987, but before September 13, 1994, you can earn up to fifty-four days credit for each year of your sentence served.²²⁶ If you committed your offense on or after September 13, 1994, but before April 26, 1996, your good-time credits will be applied towards your sentence if you have a high school diploma, a General Educational Development (GED) credential, or are making satisfactory progress toward your GED.²²⁷

If you are serving a sentence for an offense you committed on or after April 26, 1996, and you do not have a high school diploma or a GED, the amount of days of credit you can earn in a year depends on whether you are making satisfactory progress towards receiving a GED. The education department at your prison will decide whether you are making satisfactory or unsatisfactory progress towards obtaining your GED.²²⁸ If you have a GED or are making satisfactory progress towards obtaining one, then you can earn up to fifty-four credits for each year served.²²⁹ If you do not have a GED and are not making satisfactory progress towards obtaining one, then you can only receive up to forty-two days of credit for each year served.²³⁰ You can change your progress status during the year from unsatisfactory to satisfactory and become eligible for the full fifty-four credits if you begin making satisfactory progress toward receiving a GED.²³¹

If you are serving a sentence longer than 366 days, then after 366 days in prison the BOP will decide how many of the fifty-four possible credits you have earned for that year.²³² Any of the possible credits that you did not earn that year are lost and you cannot earn them back in the following year(s).²³³ One year later, the BOP will review your case again to determine how many credits you have earned for the 365 days you served since the last good conduct time credit assessment. This process will repeat every year until you have less than 365 days left to serve on your sentence. When you are one year away from your estimated release date, after taking into account the amount of good conduct time credits that you have earned, the amount of credits you can earn is prorated.²³⁴ Prorated means proportioned for the remaining days you have left to serve in that year by applying the “GCT

226. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(a) (2019).

227. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(b) (2019).

228. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5884.03, at 3 (2006), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5884_003.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

229. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(c)(1) (2019).

230. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(c)(2) (2019).

231. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5884.03, at 3 (2006), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5884_003.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

232. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-78R (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

233. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-78R (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

234. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

formula.”²³⁵ These credits should be credited to you within the last six weeks of your sentence.²³⁶ However, your good-time credits are not secure until you are actually released from prison.²³⁷ Therefore, you can lose your good-time credits for the current year and all previous years up until your actual release from prison,²³⁸ as described in the next Section of this Chapter. If you do, your estimated release date will be recalculated and you will lose the benefit of your good conduct time credits.²³⁹

(c) Loss of Good Conduct Time Credit

If you violate prison regulations or bring an unfounded (or “frivolous”) lawsuit,²⁴⁰ you may lose unvested good conduct time credit as punishment.²⁴¹ Federal statute defines an unfounded claim as a claim (1) that was filed for a malicious (“bad”) purpose; (2) that was filed solely to harass (“annoy”) the party against which it was filed; or (3) where the prisoner testifies falsely or otherwise knowingly presents false evidence or information to the court.²⁴² This Chapter does not discuss the consequences of bringing a frivolous lawsuit, so you must read JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information about this possibility.

Note, though, that you cannot lose your good conduct time credits if they have already vested; that is, if your offense was committed on or after November 1, 1987 but before September 13, 1994, or your offense was committed on or after September 13, 1994, but before April 26, 1996 and you have made satisfactory progress in obtaining your GED. If your offense occurred on or after April 26, 1996, your credits have not already vested (that is, been credited and applied against your sentence) and will not vest until your release. Therefore, you can lose good conduct time credits as a result of committing a prohibited act.²⁴³

Before the BOP can take away your good conduct time credits for alleged misconduct, there are several steps that the staff at your institution must take. First, a staff member who believes that you have violated prison regulations must file an Incident Report with a lieutenant.²⁴⁴ A staff member will

235. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-44 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020). The GCT formula is used to ensure that the amount of time served plus the amount of GCT granted exactly equals the number of days in your total sentence. The GCT formula is applied by multiplying the number of days in your sentence by 0.148. For example, if your sentence is one year and one day (the minimum length to be eligible for good conduct time credits), you cannot earn 54 days for that year, because after subtracting 54 GCT days from your sentence, you will not have served 365 days, and therefore could not have earned the full 54 days allowed per year of time served. Instead, the maximum amount of good conduct time days you can earn for a sentence of one year and one day using the GCT formula is 47 days. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-44–1-49 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Sept. 28, 2019). To determine how many days of good conduct time you could earn based on how many days are left to be served on your sentence, see Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 4-1–4-6, (1992), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5884_003.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2020).

236. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1).

237. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-78S (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

238. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-78S (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020).

239. See Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1996, PUB. L. NO. 104-134, § 809, 110 STAT. 1321 (1996); 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

240. 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

241. 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

242. 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

243. 28 C.F.R. § 541.4(b) (2019); see also 28 C.F.R. § 541.3 (2019) (listing prohibited actions). Examples of actions that can result in the loss of good-time credits include: assaulting another person, escape from an escort or institution, fighting with another person, possession of a weapon, use of illegal drugs, engaging in sexual acts, stealing, refusing to take a drug or alcohol test, refusing to work or obey an order, gambling, being unsanitary or unclean, and using obscene language. 28 C.F.R. § 541.3 (2019).

244. 28 C.F.R. § 541.5(a) (2019); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 17 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Feb. 21, 2020). If the charge against then investigate the incident.²⁴⁵ At the beginning of the investigation, you should be given a copy of the Incident Report.²⁴⁶ After you receive an Incident Report, the investigator will tell you what you are being charged with, provide you with a written copy of the charges, and ask for your statement on the incident. You can choose to give or not give a statement. Your silence can be used as evidence to show that you broke the rule, but it is not enough alone to prove that you broke the rule.²⁴⁷

Next, the United Discipline Committee (UDC) will conduct an initial hearing. After the BOP becomes aware of your involvement, the hearing will normally occur within five business days, not counting the day the incident report was issued, weekends, and holidays.²⁴⁸ You generally have a right to be present at the UDC's hearing unless your presence would threaten the prison's security.²⁴⁹ You also have the right to present evidence and make a statement on your own behalf at this hearing.²⁵⁰ The UDC can find: (1) that you committed the prohibited act charged in the incident report; (2) that you did not commit the prohibited act charged in the incident report; (3) if the act you are charged with is considered very serious, the UDC may refer the incident report to the Discipline Hearing Officer (DHO) for further review; and (4) if the act you are charged with is considered a "Greatest" or "High" severity prohibited act, then the UDC will automatically refer the incident report to the DHO for further review.²⁵¹ The UDC's decision must be based on "some evidence"²⁵² that you either did or did not break the rule. You should receive a written copy of the UDC decision following its review of the incident report.²⁵³

The DHO can take away your good-time credits if you commit a prohibited act.²⁵⁴ Prohibited acts include, killing, rioting, taking hostages, etc..²⁵⁵ At least twenty-four hours before your hearing in front of the DHO, you will receive written notice of the charges against you.²⁵⁶ If your case is referred to the DHO, you have the option of selecting a staff member to represent you at the DHO hearing.²⁵⁷ The staff member cannot have been involved in the incident and cannot have investigated your incident report. If the staff member you select is unable or unwilling to represent you, you can request a different staff member. If several staff members cannot or will not represent you, however, then the Warden will appoint a staff member to be your representative if you want one or if you are not able to represent yourself (for example, if you cannot read and write).²⁵⁸ You and your witnesses can present documents and make statements to prove that you did not break the rules.²⁵⁹ Based on at least some you is categorized as "low severity" or "moderate severity" and the BOP staff member in charge of your investigation thinks that he or she can informally come up with a solution to the incident with you, then the charge will be dropped and the incident will not be listed in your file. 28 C.F.R. § 541.5(b)(3) (2019).

245. 28 C.F.R. § 541.5(b) (2019).

246. 28 C.F.R. § 541.5(a) (2019).

247. 28 C.F.R. § 541.5(b)(1)(B) (2019).

248. 28 C.F.R. § 541.7(c) (2019).

249. 28 C.F.R. § 541.7(d) (2019).

250. 28 C.F.R. § 541.7(e) (2019).

251. 28 C.F.R. § 541.7(a) (2019).

252. Luna v. Pico, 356 F.3d 481, 487–488 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing Superintendent v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 454, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2773, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 364 (1985) (holding that at least some evidence is required before good conduct time credits can be taken away in a prison disciplinary hearing)).

253. 28 C.F.R. § 541.7(h) (2019).

254. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(g) (2019); 28 C.F.R. § 541.3, tbl. 1 (2019).

255. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(g) (2019); 28 C.F.R. § 541.3, tbl. 1 (2019).

256. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(c) (2019).

257. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(d) (2019).

258. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(d)(1) (2019).

259. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(f) (2019). Please note, you may request that witnesses appear in person at your hearing to testify on your behalf. Such witnesses, however, may not appear if in the DHO's discretion, the witness is not reasonably available, their appearance at your hearing would threaten prison security, or if their testimony would be repetitive. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(f)(3) (2019).

facts and the weight of the evidence, the DHO will then decide whether or not you committed the prohibited act.²⁶⁰

After the DHO hearing, you will be given a copy of the DHO's decision, which will include: (1) whether you were advised of your rights during the DHO process; (2) the evidence relied on by the DHO; (3) the DHO's decision; (4) the sanction ("penalty") imposed by the DHO; and (5) the reason(s) for the sanction(s) imposed.²⁶¹

When the DHO makes a decision on how much good-time credit to take away as punishment for your act, it will look at how bad your violation was and how often you committed the violation within a recent period of time.²⁶² There are four categories of offenses based on the seriousness of the violation: (1) Greatest Severity, (2) High Severity, (3) Moderate Severity, and (4) Low Severity.²⁶³ The amount of good-time credits that you can lose increases with the level of your offense. The DHO can follow these guidelines, or can take away more or less credits based on aggravating (bad) or mitigating (good) factors in your case.²⁶⁴

If the offense you committed was on or after September 13, 1994 and before April 26, 1996, and you committed an offense that was labeled a "crime of violence" under the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act (VCCLEA) of 1994, then the amount of good-time credit you can lose in a disciplinary hearing is described below.²⁶⁵

For a Greatest Severity offense, the DHO must deduct at least forty-one days of credit, or if there is less than fifty-four days available for the prorated period, at least 75% of available good time for each act committed.²⁶⁶ For a High Severity offense, the DHO must deduct at least twenty-seven days of credit or at least 50% of the available good conduct time for each act committed if less than fifty-four days are in the period.²⁶⁷ For a Moderate Severity offense, the DHO does not have to deduct time unless you have been found to have committed two or more offenses at this level within the current year of your good conduct sentence credit availability, in which case the minimum deduction is fourteen days or 25% of the available good conduct time if less than fifty-four days are available for the period.²⁶⁸ For a Low Severity offense, the DHO does not have to deduct time unless you committed three or more Low Severity offenses during the current year of your good conduct credit availability, in which case the minimum deduction is seven days or 12.5% of available good time for a period less than fifty-four days.²⁶⁹

Type of Offense	Minimum Credits Deducted by DHO ²⁷⁰
Greatest Severity	Forty-one days of credit 75% of available good time for each act if less than fifty-four days are available
High Severity	Twenty-seven days of credit 50% of available good time for each act if less than fifty-four days are available

260. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(f) (2019).

261. 28 C.F.R. § 541.8(h) (2019).

262. 28 C.F.R. § 541.3 (2019).

263. 28 C.F.R. § 541.3 (2019). See Table 1 for a list of offenses by category.

264. 28 C.F.R. § 541.3, tbl. 1(1)(b.1), (1)(b.1)(II) (2019).

265. 28 C.F.R. § 541.4 (2019). Please note that other types of incarcerated people may be subject to this good time credit loss rule. Please make sure to read 28 C.F.R. § 541.4 to see if this rule applies to your sentence.

266. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 11 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Jun. 22, 2020).

267. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 11 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Jun. 22, 2020).

268. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 12 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Jun. 22, 2020).

269. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 12 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Jun. 22, 2020).

270. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.09, at 11-12 (2011), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_009.pdf (last visited Jun. 22, 2020).

Moderate Severity	Only if you committed two or more offenses at this level within the current year of your good conduct sentence credit availability Fourteen days of credit 25% of available good time for each act if less than fifty-four days are available
Low Severity	Only if you committed three or more offenses at this level within the current year of your good conduct sentence credit availability Seven days of credit 12.5% of available good time for each act if less than fifty-four days are available

(d) Challenging the Loss of Good-Time Credits

You can challenge the loss of good-time credit. Under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause, you have a protected liberty interest in your good-time credits.²⁷¹ The BOP must follow certain procedures in order to take your credits without violating your due process rights.²⁷² You should read JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings," which explains your due process rights and how to raise defenses and challenges to your treatment at disciplinary hearings.

The proper way to bring a lawsuit to challenge the loss of good-time credits is through a petition for a writ of habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C. § 2241.²⁷³ Before filing, you must read JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," to learn how to file a federal habeas corpus petition. Before you can bring a lawsuit in court to challenge the loss of good-time credits, you must exhaust your administrative remedies²⁷⁴ as required under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). You should also read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," to learn about PLRA requirements and consequences.

This Section includes only a brief description of the federal administrative remedy procedures you will need to follow to challenge the loss of your good-time credits. You have twenty calendar days from the date of the DHO decision to appeal it.²⁷⁵ Your appeal should be sent directly to the Regional Director for your region within twenty days of the decision to take away your good time credits.²⁷⁶ You should include a separate completed, signed, and dated form BP-10 for each incident that is being appealed along with a copy of the DHO report.²⁷⁷ The form can be obtained from the staff at 271. Henson v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 213 F.3d 897, 898 (5th Cir. 2000) (recognizing a person incarcerated federal prison's due process right to a hearing before removal of good-time credits, but noting not all the rights due in a criminal trial apply).

272. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 556–557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974). For a full discussion of this case and these issues, see JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

273. Thomas v. Marberry, No. 06-CV-13282, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25408, at *5 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 5, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a habeas corpus petition is a proper means of challenging the loss of good-time credits in a disciplinary proceeding because it affects the way in which the sentence is being executed); see also Edwards v. Clarke, No. C07-5057RJB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24271, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 2, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing a person incarcerated in federal prison's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim to recover his lost good conduct time credits because such a claim is challenging the length of confinement and finding that the correct claim for relief is a habeas corpus petition (citing Edwards v. Baslisok, 520 U.S. 641, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906 (1997))).

274. "Administrative remedies" are the internal procedures used within the BOP system to resolve your complaint. A federal court will not accept your case unless you have "exhausted" (used up) all the appeals and procedures within the BOP system. See JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information.

275. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 6–7 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

276. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 6–7 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020)..

277. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 7 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

Community Corrections Centers or from institution staff(usually the correctional counselor).²⁷⁸ The Regional Director should respond to your appeal within thirty days of receiving it.²⁷⁹

If the Regional Director does not remove the charges against you, the final administrative appeal step is to send an appeal to the General Counsel of the Community Corrections Center Central Office within thirty days of the date the Regional Director signed the response.²⁸⁰ Your appeal to the General Counsel should include a completed, signed, and dated form BP-11(which can be obtained from the same staff member, a copy of the DHO report), a copy of your appeal to the Regional Director, and a copy of the Regional Director's response, along with the reason that you are appealing.²⁸¹ The General Counsel should provide you with a response to your appeal within forty days of receiving it.²⁸²

2. Early Release under the Residential Drug Abuse Program

In addition to good-time credits, you can also shorten your federal sentence through participation in a Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP). You must meet certain conditions to participate in a RDAP. You must also meet additional requirements to be eligible for early release upon completing a RDAP. If at any stage of application, admission, removal, or denial of early release status you do not agree with the decision in your case, you can appeal by using the same procedures described in the good conduct time section above.²⁸³ Just like good conduct time, you must exhaust your administrative remedies before you can bring a lawsuit to challenge the BOP's decision.

(a) What is RDAP?

The Residential Drug Abuse Program ("RDAP") is a federal program offered in some federal facilities for incarcerated people with substance abuse problems.²⁸⁴ In RDAP, you participate in individual and group activities to learn to overcome your substance abuse problems.²⁸⁵ RDAP is a 500-hour program that takes place over nine to twelve months in a separate housing facility for RDAP participants.²⁸⁶

(b) How do You Get into RDAP?

Entry into RDAP is voluntary, and is determined by the drug abuse treatment coordinator through staff referrals and/or incarcerated people' applications. If you want admission to an RDAP, you can receive a referral from, or make a request to, a staff member in your housing unit or on the drug treatment team.²⁸⁷ If you request admission into an RDAP, the BOP will decide whether you are eligible to participate in the residential portion.

278. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 5 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

279. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 9 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

280. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 6–7 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

281. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 7 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

282. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.17, at 9 (2012), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_017.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

283. 28 C.F.R. § 550.57 (2019).

284. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Substance Abuse Treatment, available at http://www.bop.gov/inmates/custody_and_care/substance_abuse_treatment.jsp (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

285. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Substance Abuse Treatment, available at http://www.bop.gov/inmates/custody_and_care/substance_abuse_treatment.jsp (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

286. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(5)(A); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.11, at ch. 2, 8–10 (2009), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_011.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

287. 28 C.F.R. §§ 550.53(c)–(d) (2019).

(c) Who is Eligible to Participate in RDAP?

Before you can participate in RDAP, the BOP must decide that you have a substance abuse problem, and you must be willing to participate in a residential substance abuse treatment program.²⁸⁸ To be eligible, you must also sign an agreement form stating that you understand your responsibilities in joining the RDAP.²⁸⁹ Some of your responsibilities include not disrupting the staff, other group members, or activities of RDAP; completing all RDAP activities, including homework and group assignments; and, not sharing information about other incarcerated people in the program.²⁹⁰ In general, you can be admitted to RDAP when you are at least 24 months from your release date.²⁹¹ Prisoners with serious mental impairments that would not allow them to fully participate in the program will not be allowed into RDAP.²⁹²

If you have a physical or medical disability that prevents you from living in an RDAP housing unit, you may still be eligible for early release if you meet all of the eligibility requirements for RDAP and have completed all of the program components of RDAP, including community-based treatment.²⁹³

Even if you cannot participate in RDAP, there are other substance abuse programs you may be able to join. These programs do not, however, have the same early release benefits as RDAP. These other programs include drug abuse education classes²⁹⁴ and non-residential drug abuse treatment.²⁹⁵ Community treatment services (“CTS”) are available for incarcerated people with mental illnesses and sex offenders. Community treatment is also available for some incarcerated people who remain in a Residential Reentry Center and have gotten an incident report related to substance abuse and who are dealing with issues like grief, loss, depression, adjustment issues, or anxiety.²⁹⁶

(d) Who May be Eligible for Early Release under RDAP?

To be eligible for early release under RDAP you must meet all four of the following requirements:

- (1) You were convicted and sentenced for either:
 - a. a federal offense that occurred on or after November 1, 1987,²⁹⁷ or
 - b. a Washington D.C. offense on or after August 5, 2000;²⁹⁸
- (2) You were sentenced for committing a non-violent offense;²⁹⁹
- (3) The BOP categorizes you as having a “verifiable substance use disorder”;³⁰⁰
- (4) You successfully completed all stages of a RDAP.³⁰¹

288. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(5)(B)(i)-(ii).

289. 28 C.F.R. § 550.53(b)(2) (2019).

290. 28 C.F.R. § 550.53 (2019).

291. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 11 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020). (“Upon assignment of a RDAP referral by the DAPC, the DTS will review an inmate’s Central File and other collateral sources of documentation to determine if there is sufficient time remaining on the inmate’s sentence, ordinarily 24 months”).

292. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 9 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Sept. 20, 2020).

293. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 9 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

294. 28 C.F.R. § 550.51 (2019).

295. 28 C.F.R. § 550.52 (2019).

296. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Substance Abuse Treatment, available at http://www.bop.gov/inmates/custody_and_care/substance_abuse_treatment.jsp? (last visited Feb. 23, 2020); see also 28 C.F.R. § 550.56 (2019).

297. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(a)(1)(i) (2019).

298. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(a)(1)(ii) (2019).

299. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(a)(1)(i)-(ii) (2019).

300. 28 C.F.R. § 550.53(b)(1) (2019).

301. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(a)(2) (2019).

Under the second requirement, you are ineligible to receive early release under RDAP if you were sentenced for committing a violent offense.³⁰² The BOP can look at both the actual crime for which you were sentenced as well as the circumstances surrounding that crime to determine eligibility for RDAP. You are also ineligible for RDAP if you are an Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) detainee, if you are a pretrial detainee, if you are being held in federal prison for a state or military crime, or if you have a prior felony or misdemeanor conviction for homicide, forcible rape, robbery, aggravated assault, arson, kidnapping, or sexual abuse involving a minor, that occurred within 10 years before the date of sentencing for your current conviction.³⁰³ You can also be ineligible at the Director's discretion if you have a current felony conviction for other sorts of offenses.³⁰⁴ These felony offenses include: a felony that has as an element the actual, attempted, or threatened use of physical force against a person or property; a crime involving the carrying, possession, or use of a firearm, explosive or other dangerous weapon; a crime that presents a serious potential risk of physical force against the person or property of someone else (even if force is not an element of the crime); or a crime involving sexual abuse of children.³⁰⁵ You may also not receive early release if you have been convicted of an attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation to commit one of the offenses in this paragraph.³⁰⁶ Finally, you may not receive early release if you have received early release under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e) before.³⁰⁷

To meet the third requirement, a drug abuse coordinator must find that you have a “drug use disorder,” which is a “substance abuse or dependence,” as defined in the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM). Any written documentation in your Pre-Sentence Investigation (PSI) report or central file showing that you previously used the same substance can also be used to verify your substance abuse problem.³⁰⁸ Specifically, the BOP will consider the following when deciding whether you have a substance abuse problem:

- (1) Documentation that shows that you had a substance abuse problem within one year of your arrest on the offense for which you are now serving;
- (2) Documentation by a probation officer, parole office, social services worker, etc. that you had a substance abuse problem within one year of your arrest on the offense for which you are now serving;
- (3) Documentation by a substance abuse counselor, doctor, or substance abuse treatment provider who diagnosed and treated you within one year of your arrest on the offense for which you are now serving;
- (4) Multiple (two or more) convictions for Driving Under the Influence (DUI) or Driving While Intoxicated (DWI) in the 5 years prior to your arrest on the offense for which you are now serving.³⁰⁹

302. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5162.05, Categorization of Offenses, at Ch. 3, 8 (2009), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5162_005.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020) (listing offenses that are considered violent and will prevent you from participating in RDAP).

303. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(b)(1)–(4) (2019).

304. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(b)(5) (2019). In Lopez v. Davis, the Supreme Court held reasonable the Bureau of Prisons' regulations making certain incarcerated people automatically ineligible for early release under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e) if there was a firearm involved in their offense, even where the underlying was categorized as a non-violent offense. Lopez v. Davis, 531 U.S. 230, 244, 121 S. Ct. 714, 724, 148 L. Ed. 2d 635, 648 (2001).

305. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(b)(5) (2019); see also Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5162.05, Categorization of Offenses, at 8–15 (2009), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5162_005.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020) (listing offenses that are included in this category and offenses that may create ineligibility for RDAP at the Director's discretion).

306. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(b)(6) (2019).

307. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55(b)(7) (2019).

308. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 11–12 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

309. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 16 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

You also may be classified as having a drug abuse problem during your participation in a drug abuse education course or non-residential drug abuse treatment after testing positive during a urine test.

The fourth requirement is that you successfully complete all stages of RDAP. RDAP has three stages, each of which you must finish before you can be considered for early release. The first stage of RDAP is the unit-based program that ordinarily takes no longer than nine months.³¹⁰ The unit-based program has three phases: orientation, core treatment, and transition. To complete the unit-based program, you must attend and participate in group activities and pass a test given at the end of each subject covered in treatment.³¹¹ If you do not pass a test for any given subject, you will typically be allowed to take the test only one more time.³¹²

The second stage of RDAP is follow-up services. If there is time between the completion of your unit-based program and your transfer to a community-based program, you must participate in follow-up treatment services.³¹³ You will enter follow-up treatment within one month after returning to general population. You must remain in follow-up services for at least twelve months or until you undergo transitional drug abuse treatment (“TDAT”).³¹⁴ Follow-up services consist of twelve-monthly group sessions of at least one hour.³¹⁵

The final stage of RDAP is TDAT. After completing follow-up services, you will be transferred to community confinement where you must participate in treatment for at least one hour per month.³¹⁶

(e) How Might RDAP Affect Your Sentence?

If you meet the requirements for RDAP early release, the BOP can reduce your prison sentence by up to one year, in addition to any good conduct time credit reductions you have received.³¹⁷ Your case will be reviewed several times to determine whether you remain eligible for early release under RDAP.³¹⁸ Refusal to participate in follow-up treatment is one way you can lose your early release award.³¹⁹ While the BOP has the ability to reduce your sentence after you successfully complete RDAP, the BOP is not required to do so.³²⁰ If at any time you commit a prohibited act, fail to complete all

310. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 16 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

311. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 16–17 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

312. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 16 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

313. 28 C.F.R. § 550.53(a)(2) (2019).

314. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 22 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

315. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, at Ch. 2, 22 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

316. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56 (2019).

317. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, First Step Act - Frequently Asked Questions Residential Drug Abuse Treatment Program (RDAP), available at https://www.bop.gov/inmates/fsa/faq.jsp#fsa_rdap (last visited Sept. 18 2020).

318. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5331.02, Early Release Procedures Under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e), 5–6 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331.02.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020). Your early release can be delayed or removed if the Regional Drug Abuse Treatment Coordinator certifies that you have not successfully completed your treatment. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5331.02, Early Release Procedures Under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e), 12 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331.02.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

319. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 11 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

320. See Richardson v. Joslin, 501 F.3d 415, 420 (5th Cir. 2007) (finding that defendant had no liberty interest in a reduction of his sentence after he successfully completed RDAP since BOP has “the authority, but not the duty” to reduce a term of imprisonment); see also Lopez v. Davis, 531 U.S. 230, 241–242, 121 S. Ct. 714, 722, 148 L. Ed. 2d 635, 646–648 (2001) (finding that the BOP has the discretion to not reduce an incarcerated person’s term of imprisonment based on his conduct from before his conviction, and even to categorical exclude

RDAP requirements, or the BOP discovers it made an error in determining your eligibility, the BOP can remove RDAP early release status.³²¹ The denial of early release after you successfully complete RDAP does not violate any contractual rights guaranteeing your release or the Constitution's Ex Post Facto Clause.³²² You can appeal your denial of early release under RDAP using the same procedures explained in the loss of good-time credit section.³²³

(f) How Can Your Participation in RDAP End?

Your participation in RDAP can end if you choose to voluntarily end your participation in RDAP, fail to pass your subject tests, fail to participate or attend RDAP activities satisfactorily, or are removed from RDAP by the BOP.³²⁴ Once you are no longer in RDAP, you lose your early release eligibility and return to your previous housing unit or facility. The drug treatment coordinator may remove you from the program for disruptive behavior. If you are in the RDAP program you must be given one formal warning before you are removed from the program, unless your actions are considered so disruptive that you would create a problem for RDAP staff and other incarcerated people in the program.³²⁵ Also, if you do not follow all of the rules and regulations of RDAP you will be expelled from the program.³²⁶

If the warden or the drug abuse treatment program coordinator removes you from RDAP, you may request readmission by submitting an "Inmate Request to Staff Form."³²⁷ You will have to wait ninety days after your removal from the program to submit the Inmate Request to Staff Form.³²⁸ The drug abuse treatment program coordinator will decide whether to readmit you to the program. Even if you are readmitted to RDAP, you will not receive credit for the parts of the program you completed before you were removed from the program.³²⁹ reductions for incarcerated people with certain types of pre-conviction conduct).

321. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5331.02, Early Release Procedures Under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e), 7 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331.02.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

322. See Seacrest v. Gallegos, 30 F. App'x 755, 756 (10th Cir. 2002) (unpublished) (finding the BOP's decision to change an incarcerated person's status from eligible for early release consideration to ineligible did not violate the Ex Post Facto Clause because the decision did not affect the legal definition of the crime or increase the incarcerated person's punishment, and finding that no contractual relationship existed between the incarcerated person and the BOP because his eligibility status had only been provisionally changed to eligible due to a court case that was later determined to be incorrect).

323. 28 C.F.R. § 550.57 (2019); 28 CFR § 542.15 (2019); see Fristoe v. Thompson, 144 F.3d 627, 630 (10th Cir. 1998) (finding that there is no Ex Post Facto Clause violation because the legal consequences and the sentence of the incarcerated person's crime remained the same after the change); see also Stiver v. Meko, 130 F.3d 574, 578 (3d Cir. 1997) (finding that there was no Ex Post Facto Clause violation because the legal consequences of the incarcerated person's crime remained the same).

324. See FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, PROGRAM STATEMENT NO. 5330.11, PSYCHOLOGY TREATMENT PROGRAMS, at Ch. 2, 17–19 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020). You can be removed from RDAP by BOP for disruptive behavior related to the program or unsatisfactory progress. You will usually be given a formal warning before removal and ordinarily not removed without one treatment intervention session. Treatment intervention includes meeting with staff to create a treatment plan to eliminate the behavior or to improve progress. You will be removed immediately, without formal intervention, if you are found to have committed a prohibited act involving: alcohol or drugs; violence or threats of violence; escape or attempted escape; or any 100-level incident. Some non-violent 100-level incidents include starting a fire or rioting. You can also be removed from the program without intervention if you violate RDAP confidentiality.

325. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 17–18 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

326. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 17–19 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

327. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 19 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

328. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 19 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

329. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5330.11, Psychology Treatment Programs, Ch. 2, 19 (2009), available at <https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330.11.pdf> (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

3. Early Release Under the Second Chance Act

The Second Chance Act of 2007 is a federal law designed to improve the system for releasing people incarcerated in federal prisons.³³⁰ This Act authorizes the BOP to grant early release to incarcerated people who meet the following three conditions:³³¹

- (1) Are sixty or over the age of sixty;
- (2) Have never been convicted of a violent crime or sex offense;
- (3) Have never escaped or attempted to escape a prison facility; and
- (4) Have served two-thirds of their sentence.

Very few incarcerated people will be eligible for early release under this program. The Bureau of Prison recently estimated that only about 650 federal incarcerated people (or 0.003% of all people incarcerated in federal prison) will meet the requirements.³³² The BOP began a pilot program, however, to test this new early release system. The program began in October 1, 2008. If you think you are eligible for early release under this program, you should ask your warden whether your prison or jail is participating.

4. Federal Compassionate Release

There are no formal definitions for “extraordinary and compelling” reasons. The U.S. Sentencing Commission, however, provides four examples of what could be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons that might justify compassionate relief:³³³

- (1) You have a medical condition that hampers your ability to provide self-care or to recover within the correctional facility environment;³³⁴
- (2) Your only family member, spouse, or registered partner who can care for your minor child or children is no longer able to do so due to death or incapacitation;³³⁵
- (3) You are at least 65 years old, you are experiencing worsening physical or mental health from getting older, and your medical condition does not allow you to properly care for yourself in prison and your condition is unlikely to improve through treatment, and you have served at least ten years or 75% of your term of imprisonment (whichever is less);³³⁶ or
- (4) The BOP Director has found another reason you should be granted compassionate release, or the BOP Director has found you qualify because of a combination of reasons (1), (2), and (3).³³⁷

In addition to each of these reasons, you also must not be a danger to society or be able to commit a further crime.³³⁸

(a) How Can You Apply for Compassionate Release?

It is important to know that you cannot make a motion directly to a court to reduce your sentence for compassionate release. If you file a motion yourself, the court will not reduce your sentence. The 330. Second Chance Act of 2007, 110 Pub. L. No. 199, § 231, 122 Stat. 657, 683–690 (2008).

331. 34 U.S.C. § 60541(g)(5)(A).

332. Douglas A. Berman, Another Report from the USSC Alternatives Symposium, SENTENCING LAW AND POLICY (July 24, 2008), available at https://sentencing.typepad.com/sentencing_law_and_policy/2008/07/another-report.html (last visited Mar. 1, 2020).

333. 28 U.S.C. § 994(t) (stating that the Sentencing Commission has power to describe what should be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons for reducing a prisoner’s sentence).

334. 18 U.S.C. App’x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(A) (2018).

335. 18 U.S.C. App’x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(C) (2018).

336. 18 U.S.C. App’x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(B) (2018).

337. 18 U.S.C. App’x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(D) (2018).

338. See Leja v. Sabol, 487 F. Supp. 2d 1, 3 (D. Mass. 2007) (holding that the BOP’s decision to deny release was not arbitrary or capricious because defendant’s illness was not terminal and defendant was still able to commit crimes).

only way to obtain compassionate release from the court is through a motion made by the Director of the BOP.³³⁹

To receive this, you must first submit a motion to your warden, asking for compassionate release. The request should be in writing. In the motion, you must describe the extraordinary or compelling circumstances that did not exist when you were sentenced.³⁴⁰ You must also describe your plan for release, including where you will live, how you will support yourself, and if your reason is based on your health, where you will get medical care, and how you will pay for it.³⁴¹

If your reason for compassionate release is based on a medical condition, make sure to state that information at the beginning of your motion so that your request can be reviewed more quickly.

If the warden thinks your motion should be granted, he will send it to the Regional Director of the BOP.³⁴² The Regional Director will then review your motion, and if he thinks your motion should be granted, he will send it to the BOP's Office of General Counsel.³⁴³ The General Counsel will then review your motion, and if he decides that you should be given compassionate release, he will ask for an opinion from the Medical Director (if your reason is health-related), or the Assistant Director of the Correctional Programs Division (for all other reasons).³⁴⁴ Finally, the recommendation of the General Counsel, along with the opinion from the Medical or Assistant Director, will be sent to the Director of the BOP to make a final decision on your motion.³⁴⁵

If the Director approves your request, he will contact the U.S. Attorney. The U.S. Attorney will then make a motion to the court to have your sentence reduced.³⁴⁶ The sentencing court will review the Director's motion and decide whether there are extraordinary and compelling reasons to justify your release. If the sentencing court grants the motion, it will order your release. The warden at your facility will then release you.³⁴⁷

(d) Denial

Any of the officials described above may deny your motion. The official who denies your motion will send you written notice stating that your request has been denied and explaining why it was denied. If the warden or the Regional Director denies your request for compassionate relief, you can

339. See United States v. Smartt, 129 F.3d 539, 541 (10th Cir. 1997) (finding that even though the defendant had a medical condition that could be considered an extraordinary and compelling circumstance, the court could not approve his motion because the request was not made by the BOP Director); see also United States v. Tyler, 417 F. Supp.2d 80, 84 (D. Me. 2006) (denying relief because no motion was made by the BOP Director).

340. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(2)(a) (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.61 (2019).

341. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(2)(a), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.61 (2019).

342. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(a), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(1) (2019).

343. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(a), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(1) (2019).

344. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(a)(2), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(3) (2019).

345. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(a)(2), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(3) (2019).

346. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(a)(3), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(3) (2019).

347. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(8)(b), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(b) (2019).

appeal the decision.³⁴⁸ If you are denied by the General Counsel or the BOP Director, however, that decision is a final administrative decision and cannot be appealed.³⁴⁹

In order to challenge the BOP's decision, you must first go through all of the administrative remedies, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act.³⁵⁰ Even if you are sick or believe that the BOP will not approve your motion on appeal, you must still exhaust all levels of the administrative remedy process. Only after you do this can you file a petition for writ of habeas corpus, which asks the court to reverse the warden's decision.³⁵¹ It is important to point out, however, that it is doubtful that the court will grant your appeal. For example, some district courts have ruled that they do not have jurisdiction to hear a habeas corpus petition challenging the denial of compassionate release by the warden or the BOP.³⁵² Some courts of appeals have reached similar decisions by denying review of the BOP's refusal to bring a motion on behalf of incarcerated people under 18 U.S.C. § 4205(g) (the other statute covered by the BOP policy statements on early release).³⁵³ Other courts that have reviewed the BOP's decisions have been unwilling to find these decisions arbitrary and capricious, which is the standard for overturning these decisions.³⁵⁴

348. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(9)(a), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. § 571.63(a) (2019).

349. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 5050.49(9)(d), (2013), https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_049_CN-1.pdf (last visited Feb. 27, 2017); 28 C.F.R. §§ 571.63(b)–(d) (2019).

350. See JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

351. See Leja v. Sabol, 487 F. Supp. 2d 1, 2–3 (D. Mass. 2007) (holding that perceived futility of request and/or medical condition do not relieve an incarcerated person of the requirement of exhaustion of administrative remedies).

352. See United States v. Morales, 353 F. Supp. 2d 204, 205 (D. Mass. 2005) (dismissing habeas corpus petition by terminally ill incarcerated person who requested compassionate relief and release from prison so he could return to Colombia, live with his family, and obtain a heart transplant, and holding the court lacked statutory authority to reduce his sentence without a motion by the Director of the BOP); United States v. Etters, No. 04-20115-13-JWL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75731, at *1 (D. Kan. Sept. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (denying plaintiff's motion to modify her sentence to home imprisonment because the court lacked jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1) when no motion was made by the Director of the BOP). A few district courts have gone a step further, holding that even if you have exhausted your administrative appeals, the court will still not review the final decision made by the BOP under the Administrative Procedures Act because it is barred by the terms of 18 U.S.C. § 3582. See Pham v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 1:07-cv-0025-SEB-JMS, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38184, at *1–2 (S.D. Ind. May 23, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing request made by a defendant with a chronic heart condition to overrule the BOP's denial of compassionate release, and holding that the decision was assigned by law to the discretion of the BOP and was therefore unreviewable under the Administrative Procedures Act); Gutierrez v. Anderson, No. 06-1714 (JRT/JSM), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79580, at *2, 5–6 (D. Minn. Oct. 30, 2006) (unpublished) (finding that 18 U.S.C. § 3582 barred the court “from reviewing the Warden's decision not to recommend compassionate release” and therefore denying the terminally-ill plaintiff's motion to compel compassionate release).

353. See Turner v. U.S. Parole Comm'n, 810 F.2d 612, 618 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding the Parole and Reorganization Act barred the court from reviewing the warden's rejection of the Parole Commissioner's recommendation to reduce plaintiff's sentence); Simmons v. Christensen, 894 F.2d 1041, 1043 (9th Cir. 1990) (same); Fernandez v. United States, 941 F.2d 1488, 1493 (11th Cir. 1991) (holding that because the BOP had the exclusive authority to make motions under 18 U.S.C. § 4205(g), a court could not review the BOP's refusal to compel compassionate release).

354. United States v. Maldonado, 138 F. Supp. 2d 328, 333 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding that BOP's interpretation of “extraordinary and compelling circumstances,” to mean incarcerated people with a generally terminal medical condition that limited life expectancy by a predictable amount, was reasonable because it provided an objective way to limit eligibility while still allowing for truly exceptional circumstances to be taken into account); Hubbs v. Dewalt, NO. 05-CV-512-JBC, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27950, at *5, 11–12 (D. Ky. May 8, 2006) (unpublished) (holding BOP's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A), as applied to an incarcerated person who was a double-leg amputee, was reasonable and not arbitrary and capricious when the BOP staff based its decision on the fact that the sentencing court knew of the incarcerated person's condition at the time of sentencing and its interpretation of “extraordinary and compelling” was limited to terminally-ill incarcerated people who could not complete their sentence). In Dewalt, the court did not consider the other group of incarcerated people covered by the BOP's interpretation—those “who suffer from a severely debilitating and

O. Federal Supervised Release

Federal supervised release is different from parole. Federal supervised release is not a way to get out of your sentence early. Instead, it is a period of supervision that you must serve after you are released from prison. Federal parole is not available for anyone who is convicted of committing a crime that took place on or after November 1, 1987. Therefore, anyone who was convicted of a federal felony or misdemeanor that took place on or after November 1, 1987, may have a term of federal supervised release included in his sentence of imprisonment. There are also certain situations in which a judge must include a period of supervised release in your sentence. For example, a judge must include a period of supervised release if you received a first-time conviction for a domestic violence offense or an offense for which a law requires a term of supervised release.³⁵⁵

1. How long is a supervised release?

Your sentencing judge will decide how long the supervised release will last. The judge will make this decision based on several factors, including: the nature of your offense; the circumstances surrounding your offense; your personal character; the level of deterrence you require to discourage you from committing crimes again; the need to protect the public from you committing crimes in the future; the need to provide you with training and programs; the sentencing range for your offense; the similarity of your sentence to others convicted of similar offenses; and the need for you to repay the victims of your offense.³⁵⁶

The maximum amount of time that you can be sentenced to supervised release depends on the class of the crime for which you were convicted. For a Class A or Class B felony, the maximum length is five years. For a Class C or Class D felony, the maximum length is three years. For a Class E felony, or a misdemeanor (other than a petty offense), the maximum length is one year.³⁵⁷

Your period of supervised release starts on the day that you are released from prison.³⁵⁸ The time will run at the same time as any other Federal, State, or local period of supervised release, probation, or parole you may be subjected to for another offense.³⁵⁹ Any time spent in prison will not be counted towards your period of supervised release unless it is less than thirty days in a row.³⁶⁰

2. What are the conditions of supervised release?

At the time of your sentencing, the judge will include several conditions that you must follow during your period of supervised release. There are some conditions that the judge must include and some conditions that the judge can choose to include, depending on the circumstances of your case. Your probation officer must give you a written copy of the terms of your supervised release, explaining the terms in clear, understandable language.³⁶¹

The following conditions must be included as part of your supervised release:³⁶²

- (1) You cannot commit another crime under federal, state, or local law;
- (2) You cannot unlawfully possess a controlled substance;
- (3) If you were convicted for the first time of a domestic violence offense, you must complete an approved rehabilitation program if there is one within a 50-mile radius of your legal residence;
- (4) If you are a sex offender, you must:

irreversible mental or physical medical condition and are unable to provide self-care.” 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27950, at *5, 11–12 (D. Ky. May 8, 2006) (unpublished).

355. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(a).

356. 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1), (2)(B)–(D), (4)–(7).

357. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(b).

358. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e).

359. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e).

360. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e).

361. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(f).

362. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d).

- a. comply with the requirements of the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act;
- b. cooperate in the collection of your DNA sample under the DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act; and
- c. submit to a drug test within fifteen days of release and at least two more times after that.³⁶³

The following conditions can be included as part of your supervised release:³⁶⁴

- (1) If you are a sex offender, searches may be done at any time of your person, property, and possessions upon reasonable suspicion and without a search warrant;
- (2) Deportation;
- (3) Any other condition that is related to the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553 that does not involve a greater limit on your liberty than is necessary (those factors are listed above in the text to footnote 348;
- (4) Any condition that could be included as a term of probation; or
- (5) Any other condition allowed by a statute.³⁶⁵

3. What happens if you violate a condition of supervised release?

If you violate any of the conditions set out in your sentence, your supervised release can be revoked. Your supervised release must be revoked if you are found in possession of a controlled substance or a firearm; in violation of federal law or in violation of a term of your supervised release; if you refuse to comply with the drug testing requirements, or if as a part of drug testing, test positive for illegal controlled substance more than three times over the course of one year.³⁶⁶ If your supervised release is revoked, you may be sentenced to serve in prison either part or all of the time you were sentenced to supervised release, without any credit for the time you spent on supervised release before it was revoked.³⁶⁷ The court may also order you to serve another term of supervised release in addition to your new term of imprisonment.³⁶⁸ The length of the additional term of supervised release can be no longer than the maximum term allowed for under the statute covering your crime, minus the length of imprisonment for violating your supervised release.³⁶⁹ For example, if your original maximum amount of supervised release was six months, and your term of imprisonment following the supervised release being revoked was three months, your new supervised release can be a maximum of three months. Alternatively, instead of sentencing you to more time in prison, the judge can order that you remain in your home during non-working hours and be monitored by telephone or electronic surveillance devices.³⁷⁰

You may participate in up to two stages of hearings before your supervised release can be taken away. When you are accused of violating the terms of your supervised release, you will be brought before a magistrate judge. The magistrate judge must tell you which violation of supervised release you are being charged with, inform you of your right to obtain an attorney or to request that an attorney be appointed for you, and inform you of your right, if you are currently held in custody, to a preliminary hearing to determine whether or not there is enough evidence for the judge to decide that you may have violated a term of your supervised release.³⁷¹ If you decide not to give up (“waive”) the 363. This condition can be removed if your presentence report or other information in your sentencing file indicates that you have a low risk of future substance abuse. 18 U.S.C. § 3563(a)(5).

364. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d).

365. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d)(1)–(3). 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d)(1)–(3) states that additional conditions must be “consistent with any pertinent policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission” See 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b) for a list of all discretionary probation conditions that can be included as conditions of your supervised release.

366. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(g).

367. This condition sets a limit on the time that has to be served depending on the defendant’s class felony. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(3).

368. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(h).

369. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(h).

370. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(4).

371. FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(a)(3).

preliminary hearing, the magistrate judge will provide you with notice of the hearing, its purpose, the violation you are alleged to have committed, and your right to retain a lawyer or have a lawyer appointed. You have a right to be present at your hearing, to present evidence, and to request the right to question witnesses testifying against you.³⁷² The magistrate judge will either dismiss the case if he finds there is no probable cause to believe that you committed a violation, or the magistrate judge will order a revocation hearing.

To revoke your supervised release, the court must find at the revocation hearing that it is more likely than not that you violated a term of your supervised release.³⁷³ You have the same rights in a revocation hearing that you had in the preliminary hearing, as well as a right to know what evidence will be used against you, the right to question adverse witnesses (you do not need to request to do so ahead of time), the right to present information about mitigating factors in your case, and the right to see the witnesses' prior statements.³⁷⁴ You may waive these rights, but your waiver will only be valid if you knew what the waiver meant and chose to do so voluntarily.³⁷⁵ At a revocation hearing, any evidence may be used against you, even evidence taken without probable cause³⁷⁶—you cannot defend yourself by saying that the government gathered evidence improperly.

4. Can you change the length or conditions of your supervised release?

In addition to being revoked, your period of supervised release can also be ended or modified at your request or the court's request. Usually there will be a hearing before the court terminates or modifies a condition of your supervised release. At the hearing, you will have the right to counsel, to make a statement on your own behalf, and to present evidence showing circumstances why the court should decide in your favor.³⁷⁷ No hearing is required if you waive the right to a hearing, if the change

372. FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(b)(1)(B). The 6th Amendment right to confront witnesses whose testimony will be used against you does not exist in supervised release revocation hearings. United States v. Hall, 419 F.3d 980, 985–986 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that the right to confront a testimonial witness does not apply to hearsay evidence used in supervised release revocation hearings because these hearings are not criminal prosecutions (citing United States v. Aspinall, 389 F.3d 332, 342 (2d Cir. 2004) and United States v. Martin, 382 F.3d 840, 844 n.4 (8th Cir. 2004)). To determine whether you may confront an adverse witness, the judge will balance your due process right against the government's good cause for denying you this right. United States v. Taveras, 380 F.3d 532, 536 (1st Cir. 2004) (applying the recommendation in the 2002 Committee Advisory Note to Rule 32.1 that a balancing test be applied to protect the due process right of parolees recognized in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972)). The government's good cause in not producing the witness will be judged by the reliability of the hearsay evidence and its reason for not presenting the witness. United States v. Rondeau, 430 F.3d 44, 48–49 (1st Cir. 2005) (providing a full discussion of the factors considered in judging reliability and the government's reasons for not providing the witness). For a case describing reliability standards, see United States v. Redd, 318 F.3d 778, 785 (8th Cir. 2003) (finding that, due to long-established recognition of the reliability of documentary evidence, the releasee had a minimal interest in confronting the lab technician who ran his sweat patch reports showing cocaine use at his supervised release revocation hearing). For a case describing the government's reason for not providing the witness, see United States v. Williams, 443 F.3d 35, 45–46 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that the releasee waived his right to confront the witness where the witness would not come forward to present evidence against him out of fear and intimidation caused by threats made by the releasee's acquaintances). Your interest in confrontation is determined by the circumstances of your individual case including the importance of the evidence to the court's finding, your ability to show the evidence was false, and the consequences of the court's decision on factors other than the revocation of your supervised release. United States v. Walker, 117 F.3d 417, 420 (9th Cir. 1997) (stating that the court must use a balancing test in which it "consider[s] the importance of the evidence to the court's finding, the releasee's opportunity to refute the evidence, and the consequences of the court's finding (citing United States v. Martin, 984 F.2d 308, 312 (9th Cir. 1993))).

373. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(3).

374. FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(b)(2); FED. R. CRIM. P. 26.2(g)(3).

375. United States v. Correa-Torres, 326 F.3d 18, 22–23 (1st Cir. 2003) (ordering a new hearing for plaintiff whose supervised release was revoked after waiver of his rights at his first revocation hearing when he did not know what his rights were or what the charges were against him).

376. United States v. Hebert, 201 F.3d 1103, 1104 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that the exclusionary rule does not apply at supervised release revocation hearings).

377. FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(c)(1).

will benefit you and will not extend the length of your supervised release, or if the government attorney does not object to the change you requested after having received notice and having had reasonable time to object.³⁷⁸ You can also apply to the court to clarify the terms of your supervised release if you are unsure what a particular condition means or whether or not you have met the requirements for that condition.³⁷⁹

5. How can you terminate your supervised release?

You can apply to terminate your period of supervised release by either appealing to the court or to the President of the United States through a commutation petition (see Part P below). After you have served one year and one day of your supervised release, you can appeal to the court to have the remaining amount of time on your supervised release sentence discharged.³⁸⁰ If you apply before you have served at least one year and one day of supervised release, the court will dismiss your petition.³⁸¹ In deciding on your request, the court will first look at “many of the same factors” used to determine your original sentence.³⁸² It will then decide whether terminating your supervised release is in the interests of justice and supported by your post-imprisonment conduct.³⁸³ The court is not required to hold a hearing to decide your request for termination because its decision cannot extend the time you will have to spend on supervised release—it can only lower it.³⁸⁴

6. How can you change the terms of your supervised release?

You can petition the district court to modify a condition of your supervised release if your circumstances have changed since the time of your sentencing or if you believe the condition places a heavy limit on your liberty without meeting any goals of your supervised release. If a discretionary condition of supervised release places too much of a burden on a protected liberty interest, without furthering your rehabilitation or protecting the public, a court can order the condition be changed to include no greater limit on your liberty than necessary to meet your supervised release goals.³⁸⁵ The court will first determine whether you have a recognized liberty interest³⁸⁶ affected by the challenged condition and then determine the sentencing goal of that condition and its reasonableness.³⁸⁷ The 378. FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(c)(2).

379. United States v. Lilly, 206 F.3d 756, 762-763 (7th Cir. 2000) (recognizing plaintiff’s right to have the district court clarify whether or not he had met the repayment ordered as a part of his supervised release).

380. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1).

381. United States v. Werber, No. 90 Cr. 364 (LMM), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12307, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 1995) (unpublished) (defendant had not yet served one year of supervised release, and therefore could not move to terminate the term under 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1)).

382. United States v. Lussier, 104 F.3d 32, 34-35 (2d Cir. 1997).

383. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1).

384. United States v. Lai, 458 F. Supp. 2d 177, 177 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding that releasee was not entitled to a hearing on his request for termination of the remaining 14 months of his period of supervised release under FED. R. CRIM. P. 32.1(c). This rule states that a hearing is not required if your request does not extend the term of your supervised release and the relief you seek would benefit you).

385. United States v. Monteiro, 270 F.3d 465, 472-473 (7th Cir. 2001) (ordering a condition of supervised release allowing law enforcement to conduct warrantless seizures of plaintiff, his car, or his home be rewritten by the court to limit the seizure power “to ensure that it relates reasonably to the ends of rehabilitation and protection of the public.”).

386. See United States v. Myers, 426 F.3d 117, 125 (2d Cir. 2005) (stating that the court “must ask first whether the condition at issue ... deprived [the releasee] of any cognizable liberty interest,” and discussing liberty interests in the context of constitutionally-protected interests); see also United States v. Holman, 532 F.3d 284, 290 (4th Cir. 2008) (discussing fundamental rights and supervised release in the context of involuntary medication orders).

387. United States v. Myers, 426 F.3d 117, 125-130 (2d Cir. 2005) (removing as a condition of supervised release that the plaintiff receive approval from his probation office before he could have contact with his minor son. His original sentence for child pornography involved only females, and there was no record demonstrating that his son would be harmed by contact with him or that any sentencing goal that protected other children would be served by this condition, which interfered with his liberty interest in maintaining his parental relationship).

sentencing goal may relate to the offense for which you are currently in prison or to a past offense.³⁸⁸ The court will not approve your requested change if your reason for the change is outweighed by the government's interest in the condition being maintained.

The court can also modify the conditions of your supervised release on its own or in response to a request by your probation officer at any time before the end of your term of supervised release.³⁸⁹ The court can add additional conditions of supervised release to your sentence and/or correct your sentence to include the conditions of supervised release as long as the court provides you with a hearing as described in the introduction to this section³⁹⁰ and the new conditions relate to a rehabilitation goal and do not unduly (overly) limit your liberty interests.³⁹¹

P. Federal Executive Clemency

The President of the United States has the constitutional power to pardon, commute, or reprieve a sentence, and to forgive fines, for conviction of a federal offense.³⁹² It is important to note that clemency is usually not granted: during the Obama Presidency up to 2017 a total of 212 pardons and 1,715 commutations have been granted, but 1,708 pardon requests and 18,749 commutation requests were denied.³⁹³ During the Trump Presidency, up to 2020 a total of 25 pardons and 10 commutations have been granted, but 82 pardon requests and 98 commutation requests were denied.³⁹⁴ The main forms of relief explained in this section—pardon and commutation—only apply to convictions for federal crimes.³⁹⁵ See Part I of this Chapter for information on how to seek clemency for New York State convictions.

For federal sentences, pardons and commutations are very different. A pardon restores civil rights that were taken away when you were sentenced. A commutation can shorten the amount of time that you must serve in prison or in supervised release. Because a pardon does not reduce your sentence, it will be discussed only briefly. This section does not deal with federal executive clemency for military offenses or for people who are sentenced to death, both of which involve separate petition procedures and considerations.

1. Pardons

A federal pardon does not allow you to get out of your sentence early. Instead, a federal pardon allows you to have your federal conviction officially forgiven and your civil rights restored. It does not with his son).

388. United States v. Dupes, 513 F.3d 338, 344 (2d Cir. 2008) (for defendant who was convicted of securities fraud, court upheld the following conditions of supervised release: registration as a sex offender; attending sex offender treatment; staying away from places where children are often located; and not using the internet for child pornography, because—given his past conviction for and history of sexual offenses—such conditions were not overly broad or vague and were appropriate to the sentencing goals of providing defendant with needed treatment and protecting the public from defendant).

389. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(2).

390. United States v. Navarro-Espinosa, 30 F.3d 1169, 1171 (9th Cir. 1994) (upholding district court's sentence against releasee, which was amended under 35 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(2) to include the four years of supervised release that the court had inadvertently neglected to mention when first pronouncing sentence).

391. United States v. Davies, 380 F.3d 329, 333 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding court's adding a condition of supervised release requiring releasee to participate in an alcohol abuse program was not an abuse of discretion because it met releasee's rehabilitation goals, given his alcoholism and depression history, and did not violate his liberty interests because it was less intrusive than a ban on drinking alcohol).

392. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2; see also 28 C.F.R. § 1.1 (2019). See also Richards v. United States, 192 F.2d 602, 610 (D.C. Cir. 1951) (finding that the President has the broad constitutional power to pardon in either limited or conditional terms, or "may be made specific as to effect; for example, to restore civil rights, or to remit fines or other penalties.").

393. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Clemency Statistics, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/clemency-statistics> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

394. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Clemency Statistics, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/clemency-statistics> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

395. 28 C.F.R. § 1.4 (2019).

mean you are innocent. Because pardons are a showing of forgiveness for your crime and not a declaration of your innocence, you must show remorse and rehabilitation, and good behavior after release from prison. It is important to remember a pardon will not erase your conviction. So, any time you are asked to list your convictions you must still include the pardoned offense.³⁹⁶ But you can also note that you received a federal pardon for the offense.³⁹⁷

You should wait five years after the date of your release from prison before you can seek a presidential pardon.³⁹⁸ You should not request a pardon while you are on supervised release, parole, or probation, and the five year timeline begins with your latest release from prison for any crime, even if you are seeking a pardon for a previous offense.³⁹⁹ If there are exceptional reasons why you need the pardon now and cannot wait until the five year period is over, then you can request a waiver. To get a waiver, write a separate letter, stating why you think the waiting period should be waived and submit it with your pardon application. Waivers, however, are very rarely granted.⁴⁰⁰

Even after the five-year waiting period, you need to explain why you are seeking a pardon. Examples include gaining entry into a professional association; obtaining licenses from government authorities; restoration of your civil rights; and accessing benefits provided by administrative agencies. It is important to note that many of your civil rights (for example, your voting rights) are governed by the state where you were convicted and not by the federal government. So, you might want to pursue state clemency procedures instead of, or in addition to, federal procedures to increase your chance of success.⁴⁰¹

To request a federal pardon, you must submit a completed, signed, and dated pardon form to the United States Pardon Attorney at USPARDON.Attorney@usdoj.gov. If you are not able to email the form, you can instead mail it to this address:

Office of the Pardon Attorney

U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington, DC 20530

Pardon forms are available online at: <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/file/960581/download>.

2. Commutations

A commutation of your sentence is a reduction of your sentence's length. A commutation can change your sentence to time served, shorten your imprisonment period so you can be released early, move up the date of your parole hearing,⁴⁰² or shorten or terminate your sentence of supervised release.⁴⁰³ Commutations are rarely granted. Commutation is purely discretionary, which means that

396. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/pardon-information-and-instructions> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

397. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/pardon-information-and-instructions> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

398. 28 C.F.R. § 1.2 (2019).

399. 28 C.F.R. § 1.2 (2019) ("No petition for pardon should be filed until the expiration of a waiting period of at least five years after the date of the release of the petitioner from confinement").

400. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/pardon-information-and-instructions> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

401. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/pardon-information-and-instructions> (last visited Feb. 22, 2020).

402. U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, JUSTICE MANUAL: STANDARDS FOR CONSIDERATION OF CLEMENCY PETITIONS § 9-140.113 (2018), available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/about-office-0> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020) (explaining that a commutation can change a sentence to time served, or reduce a sentence); see also Nicholson-El v. Conley, No. 5:01-0798, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24168, at *2-4, n.1 (S.D.W. Va. Nov. 27, 2001) (unpublished) (noting that petitioner's commutation from President Carter made him immediately eligible for a parole hearing for his two consecutive sentences, but that the commutation did not change the sentences to make them run concurrently).

403. If you are requesting that your period of supervised release be terminated, you must state specifically it is up to the President to decide, and he does not have to issue a commutation if he does not think it is appropriate. The President does not have to state his reasons for granting or denying your petition for commutation. You have no right to appeal the denial of your request for commutation.

(a) Eligibility

In general, your petition for commutation will not be reviewed unless you have started serving your sentence and are not currently appealing or challenging your sentence in court.⁴⁰⁴ You cannot apply for a commutation of sentence, except in exceptional circumstances, if you have any other forms of judicial or administrative relief available, including:⁴⁰⁵

- (1) A motion by the government under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 35 (for providing substantial assistance to the government), or
- (2) A petition for compassionate release under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1).⁴⁰⁶

Examples of exceptional or unusual circumstances include: terminal illness or old age, the severity (harshness) of the sentence, ineligibility for parole, and providing beneficial assistance at the request of the government in the investigation or prosecution of another case.⁴⁰⁷ These are also the reasons commutations are usually granted. If any of these exceptional or unusual circumstances are present in your case, the Pardon Attorney, who assists the President, will consider your application. But the Pardon Attorney will still consider the availability of other means of relief and the amount of time you have already served when reviewing your application.⁴⁰⁸ For example, President George W. Bush granted a commutation of Lewis Libby's sentence of imprisonment, which was at the low end of the Sentencing Guidelines' range, because it was too harsh. The President announced in his Statement on the Executive Clemency for Libby that he considered critics' "arguments and the circumstances surrounding this case," as well as the fact that "the district court rejected the advice of the probation office, which recommended a lesser sentence and the consideration of factors that could have led to a sentence of home confinement or probation."⁴⁰⁹

To be considered for federal commutation, send a written petition requesting a commutation of your sentence, addressed to the President of the United States, to the following address:

Office of the Pardon Attorney
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington, DC 20530

on your petition that this is the type of relief you are seeking and why serving it would be an undue hardship on you as well as why you cannot obtain the same benefit through a petition under 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1). U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, COMMUTATION INSTRUCTIONS, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/commutation-instructions> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020). See Part O(8) of this Chapter for more information on termination of supervised release.

404. U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, JUSTICE MANUAL: STANDARDS FOR CONSIDERATION OF CLEMENCY PETITIONS § 9-140.113 (2018), available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/about-office-0> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

405. 28 C.F.R. § 1.3 (2020); see also U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, JUSTICE MANUAL: STANDARDS FOR CONSIDERATION OF CLEMENCY PETITIONS § 9-140.113 (2018), available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/about-office-0> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

406. See Part J of this Chapter for information about compassionate release in New York State.

407. U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, JUSTICE MANUAL: STANDARDS FOR CONSIDERATION OF CLEMENCY PETITIONS § 9-140.113 (2018), available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/about-office-0> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

408. U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, JUSTICE MANUAL: STANDARDS FOR CONSIDERATION OF CLEMENCY PETITIONERS § 9-140.113 (2018), available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/about-office-0> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020); U.S. Dept. of Justice, Office of the Pardon Attorney, Frequently Asked Questions, available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/frequently-asked-questions> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

⁴⁰⁹ The White House: George W. Bush, Statement by the President on Executive Clemency for Lewis Libby, available at <https://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2007/07/20070702-3.html> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

If you would like your petition to be sent faster, you must submit it through your facility's warden. There are several benefits to sending your petition through the warden, including assistance in obtaining documents. Therefore, this is the method described in this Section.

(b) Obtain and Complete the Petition for Commutation Form

You can obtain the petition for commutation form by requesting it from the Pardon Attorney or the warden in your facility.⁴¹⁰ When you complete the form, you must state the truth or you could be fined and/or imprisoned.⁴¹¹ The form should be easy to read and completed in pen or typewritten.

On the form you will need to include the following information:

- (1) The date(s) when you have previously applied for commutation (if any) and the result(s);
- (2) The offense(s) that you are seeking to have commuted (including district of conviction, citation of offense if known, and sentence);
- (3) The date(s) of any criminal appeals you have filed on your case (if any), the result(s), and the citation to the opinion(s);
- (4) The date(s) of any habeas corpus petition(s) you have filed to challenge your conviction (if any), the result(s), and the citation to the opinion(s);
- (5) Your story of the events that took place during the offense you were convicted of and what your involvement was in those events;
- (6) A list of all of your other arrests and convictions, including any juvenile records (the date, the charge, the arresting agency, and the outcome); and
- (7) The reasons you are seeking commutation.

(c) Submit the form to the warden to be sent to the Pardon Attorney

When you send the petition through the warden at your facility, it will be assigned to a case manager who has thirty days to get the required documents together and submit them to the warden for signature.⁴¹² Your case manager must include with your petition a pre-sentence Investigation Report (if available), Judgment in a Criminal Case, and your most recent Progress Report, if one already exists.⁴¹³ Any requests for additional information will be sent directly to the warden.

(d) Review of Your Petition

Once the Pardon Attorney receives your petition, the Pardon Attorney will conduct an investigation of your case. The Pardon Attorney or the Attorney General may contact other government officials (including your sentencing judge, the Director of the BOP, and the U.S. Attorney in the district where you were convicted) to get their opinions about whether or not your request for commutation should be granted by the President.⁴¹⁴ If you are requesting commutation for a felony offense that involved a victim, the Attorney General may send a notice to the victim (or their spouse, adult child, or parent, if the victim is deceased or rendered incompetent as a direct result of the offense for which clemency is sought) to ask if he or she would like to submit an opinion regarding your request. A victim is someone who has "suffered direct or threatened physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of the commission of the crime for which clemency is sought" and has filed a request with the BOP to be notified upon your release.⁴¹⁵

410. 28 C.F.R. § 1.1 (2020). The form is also available at <https://www.justice.gov/pardon/file/960561/download> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

411. 18 U.S.C. § 1001; 18 U.S.C. § 3571; 18 U.S.C. § 3581.

412. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 1330.15, (2001) (as revised May 2, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

413. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 1330.15, (2001) (as revised May 2, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

414. 28 C.F.R. § 1.6(a) (2020).

415. 28 C.F.R. § 1.6(b)(3) (2020).

After the Pardon Attorney has received and reviewed the reports on your case, he will make a recommendation to the President to deny or approve your petition.⁴¹⁶ If the Pardon Attorney recommends that the President deny your application and the President does not take any other action within thirty days of receiving the recommendation, your petition will be denied and your case closed, as long as you are not serving a death sentence.⁴¹⁷ Your case can also be closed if the President denies your application directly after reviewing it.⁴¹⁸ You will receive notice about the denial from the warden at your facility.⁴¹⁹ You are not entitled to any appeal if your application is denied.

If the President approves your petition for commutation, a warrant of commutation is sent to the warden, who will deliver it to you.⁴²⁰ If you are already on parole or supervised release when your petition is granted, the warrant will be sent to you directly.⁴²¹ Your sentence will then be recalculated and, if you are now eligible for a parole hearing, you will be added to the docket.⁴²² It is important to note in this case that even though you have a right to a parole hearing, you are not guaranteed to be granted parole.

Q. Conclusion

If you are in New York State prison and would like to try to get out before serving your maximum sentence, three types of release programs (and parole) exist: (1) conditional, (2) early, and (3) presumptive release. The type of sentence you are serving affects which of these programs you may use. In general, you can decrease the amount of time in prison by showing good behavior, because good behavior can earn you good-time credit. If you have applied unsuccessfully for a release program, have not acquired the required amount of good time, or have not served enough of your underlying sentence to qualify, you can also petition for a pardon or commutation, which allows you to leave prison immediately. Note that you can pursue several options at the same time.

If you are in a federal prison and would like to try to get out before serving your full sentence, you may be able to be released through (1) good conduct time, (2) the Residential Drug Abuse Program ("RDAP"), (3) the Second Chance Act, and (4) compassionate relief. In addition, you can receive credit for time already served and this credit can be used to decrease your sentence. Finally, keep in mind that you can also apply to have your sentence of imprisonment or supervised release reduced by the U.S. President through a commutation petition.

Some of these methods can be used together to reduce your sentence (for example, good-conduct time and early release under RDAP can be combined) while others may be pursued as alternate ways to reduce your sentence (for example, compassionate relief or executive clemency). You can pursue several of these options at the same time to try to reduce your federal sentence.

416. 28 C.F.R. § 1.6(c) (2020).

417. 28 C.F.R. § 1.8(b) (2020).

418. 28 C.F.R. § 1.8(a) (2020).

419. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 1330.15, at 5 (2001) (as revised May 2, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

420. 28 C.F.R. § 1.7 (2020).

421. 28 C.F.R. § 1.7 (2020).

422. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement No. 1330.15, at 5 (2001) (as revised May 2, 2014), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf (last visited Feb. 23, 2020).

CHAPTER 36

SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR SEX OFFENDERS*

A. Introduction

If you have been convicted of or pled guilty to a sex offense, there are special issues you should know about. Sex offenses are defined differently in each state. Common sex offenses include sexually touching or having sex with another person,¹ when that other person is:

- (1) forced to act;
- (2) unable to agree to sexual behavior (“incapacitated”);² or
- (3) under the age of consent (a child or minor).

Most sex offenses are felonies. However, some lower-level sex offenses are characterized as misdemeanors. These lower-level offenses include sexual misconduct,³ forcible touching,⁴ and sexual abuse in the third degree.⁵ In New York State, most sex offenses appear in Article 130 of the Penal Law of the State of New York.⁶

This Chapter will focus mainly on the more serious felony sex offenses and specifically on New York law. However, this Chapter will also discuss laws from other states as examples. Each state has very specific laws on this topic, so you must always check the laws in the state where you were convicted.

Some sex offender laws may apply to people who have committed crimes that are not usually considered sex offenses. For example, the New York Sex Offender Registration Act⁷ applies to people convicted of crimes which are not included in section 130 of the Penal Code and do not necessarily involve any sexual contact with another individual, or are not even sexual in nature. The Act applies

* This Chapter was revised by Daniel Lennard, based on previous versions by Carrie Lebigre, Mia Gonzalez, Jennifer Parkinson, Lynne Phillips, and Kristen Heavey.

1. In some states, sending sexual messages to a minor without a plan to have sexual contact with that minor is a crime. While the Supreme Court has not decided on this question, the Seventh Circuit held that sending sexual messages online to a minor, without a plan to actually have sexual contact with that minor, is not a crime under 18 U.S.C. § 2422(b), because that person did not take a “substantial step” towards completing the crime. United States v. Gladish, 536 F.3d 646, 650 (7th Cir. 2008). The Second Circuit (New York is in the Second Circuit) has held that this crime only requires intent to entice. United States v. Brand 467 F.3d 179, 202 (2d Cir. 2006); United States v. Douglas, 626 F.3d 161, 164 (2d Cir. 2010). That is, even if the person fails to go through with the sexual acts, they can still be found guilty of violating the statute if they had an intent to entice someone into engaging in these acts with them. Similarly, the Ninth Circuit has held that sending sexual letters and encouraging a meeting is sufficient to support a conviction for attempting to persuade, induce, entice, or coerce a minor to engage in unlawful sexual activity. United States v. Goetzke, 494 F.3d 1231, 1235—1237 (9th Cir. 2007).

2. A person might not be able to agree to engage in sexual behavior because he or she is mentally disabled or mentally incapacitated. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.30(2) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019).

3. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.20 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019) (sexual misconduct is a class A misdemeanor).

4. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.52 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019) (forcible touching is a class A misdemeanor).

5. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.55 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019) (sexual abuse in the third degree involves subjecting another to sexual contact without the latter’s consent, and is a class B misdemeanor).

6. See N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.00 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019) (defining terms used in sex offense charges under New York law).

7. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168 (McKinney 2014).

to kidnapping a minor (Article 135)⁸, prostitution offenses (Article 230)⁹, or offenses against the right to privacy (Article 250).¹⁰

Laws about sex offenses are always changing, and you must be careful to read current statutes to see which apply to you. This Chapter covers issues of special importance for sex offenders based upon the laws in effect at the time of publication.

This Chapter begins with topics most important to your everyday life in prison, such as protective custody (if you believe that you are in danger of being harmed by other incarcerated people), counseling and the consequences of not going to counseling, and good time credits.

Next, this Chapter discusses other issues that might come up in legal proceedings in which you're involved. These issues include HIV testing and post-conviction DNA testing. The courts may require these tests based upon your status as a sex offender. These tests might even be required if you have only been accused, but not convicted, of the offense for which you are incarcerated.

Finally, this Chapter discusses issues that may arise during and after your release from prison. Some of these issues include special parole conditions for sex offenders, community registration, the Adam Walsh Act (a federal sex offender law), and civil confinement.

Some of these topics are addressed in more detail in other places in the JLM.¹¹

B. Protective Custody

You may become a target for abuse if other incarcerated people know you have been convicted of a sex crime. If this happens, or if you think it could happen, most prisons will let you seek “protective custody.”

In protective custody, you are kept from contact with the general population of incarcerated people. Incarcerated people who may be placed in protective custody include potential victims, witnesses likely to be intimidated, and incarcerated people who, for one reason or another, are unable to live safely in the general population. Protective custody can be required or voluntary.¹² Although protective custody

8. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 135 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2019). Kidnapping, which is not a sex offense under normal circumstances, becomes a sex offense for purposes of the Sex Offender Registration Act (and, therefore, the Act will apply to a kidnapper) if the victim is under seventeen years of age and the perpetrator is not the parent. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(2) (McKinney 2014).

9. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 230 (McKinney 2008). Specifically, the New York Sex Offender Registration Act requires registration for persons convicted of §§ 230.04 (patronizing, that is, using, a prostitute) if the person patronized (that is, the prostitute) is under the age of seventeen, 230.05 (patronizing a person below the age of fifteen for prostitution, while being above the age of eighteen), 230.06 (patronizing a person below the age of eleven for prostitution, or patronizing a person below the age of thirteen for prostitution while being above the age of eighteen), 230.30 (promoting prostitution through force or intimidation, profiting from another's promotion of prostitution, or promoting or profiting from the prostitution of a person below the age of eighteen), 230.32 (knowingly promoting or profiting from the prostitution of a person below the age of thirteen, or doing the same for a person below the age of fifteen while being above the age of twenty-one), and 230.33 (compelling prostitution of a person less than eighteen years old while being above the age of eighteen). N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(2) (McKinney 2014).

10. Offenses against the right to privacy include unlawful surveillance in the first degree. This usually involves the use of an imaging device to view the intimate or sexual parts of another located in private areas, such as fitting rooms or restrooms, without their knowledge or consent. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 250, 250.45 (McKinney 2017). You should note that the Sex Offender Registration Act applies only to unlawful surveillance in the first degree. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(2) (McKinney 2014) (referencing N.Y. PENAL LAW § 250.50 (McKinney 2017)). In order for you to be charged with this crime, you have to have been convicted within the last ten years of unlawful surveillance either in the first or second degree from a different incident. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 250.50 (McKinney 2017).

11. See e.g., JLM, Chapter 11 on using DNA analysis to challenge your conviction and “Rights Upon Release” (JLM online chapter).

12. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 330.2 (2019) (defining voluntary and involuntary protective custody incarcerated people as potential victims or witnesses likely to be intimidated, or incarcerated people who cannot live in the general prison community); FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-602.220(3) (2020) (describing procedure for an incarcerated person to request “protective management” under FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33-602.221 (2020)).

is for the incarcerated person's protection and not punishment, incarcerated people in protective custody may have limited opportunities for some things, such as scheduling out-of-cell time, access to library services, and use of the commissary.¹³ Despite these limitations, you might be better off in protective custody if you feel threatened or in danger.

C. "Recommended" Counseling and the Loss of Good Time Credits

The New York Department of Corrections and Community Supervision ("DOCCS") has an Earned Eligibility Program, which is supposed to give eligible incarcerated people an incentive to work on the issues that may have led to their incarceration.¹⁴ This program recognizes that "many inmates are motivated to achieve a positive change in their lives." It aims to help them "prepare to live law abiding lives in the community," and it "assist[s] and guidel[s] inmates in preparing for their release."¹⁵ In New York, you may be able to earn time off your sentence ("good time credit") for "good behavior and efficient and willing performance of duties" that are assigned to you while in prison and/or for "progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program."¹⁶ Assigned treatment programs can include sex offender counseling.¹⁷ If you do not attend counseling, you risk losing your good time credits.¹⁸

JLM Chapter 35, "Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release" explains how each New York State prison has its own Time Allowance Committee ("TAC"). The TAC at your prison looks at your file and tells the superintendent the amount of good time credit or "good behavior allowance" it thinks you should have.¹⁹ The superintendent then looks at the recommendation and forwards it to the Commissioner of Correctional Services, who makes the final decision.²⁰

13. For specific details about conditions of confinement for incarcerated people in New York in protective custody, see N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 330.4 (2019).

14. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 2100.2 (2019) (describing the policy behind the Earned Eligibility Program).

15. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 2100.2(a) (2019).

16. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2014). On September 1, 2021, this law will change the amount of time that can offset your sentence for incarcerated people serving two or more indeterminate sentences. For further information about good time credits, see JLM Chapter 35, "Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release," for a detailed explanation of the requirements and procedures for earning good time credits.

17. Nineteen facilities in New York State that offer sex offender counseling and treatment programs are currently listed on the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision website. The length of the program will vary depending on the category you will be assigned to. The treatment is divided into three categories: Low Risk, Moderate/High Risk, and High Risk. If you are assigned to the Low Risk category, then treatment will last 6 months. If you are in the Medium/High Risk category, the program will last anywhere from 9 to 12 months. If you are in the High Risk category, the program will last anywhere from 15 to 18 months. Your risk level will be determined at a program site by a sex offender program staff member. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Sex Offender Counseling and Treatment Program (SOCTP), <https://doccs.ny.gov/sex-offender-counseling-and-treatment-program-soctp> (last visited Feb. 15, 2020). If you are considered a sex offender because you either committed (or attempted to commit) a sex offense, displayed behavior of a sexual nature in committing a non-sex crime, or your need for sex offender counseling is identified, you will be transferred to one of the institutions where counseling is offered when you are eligible to begin the program. If you are in the Low Risk category, you can begin the program 18 months before your release date. If you are in the Moderate/High Risk or High Risk category, you can begin the program 36 months before your release date. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Sex Offender Counseling and Treatment Program Guidelines, N.Y. STATE DOCCS (Apr. 2018), https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/SOCTP_Procedures_and_Guidelines.pdf (last visited Feb. 15, 2020).

18. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2014) (stating that good behavior allowances (or good time credits) may be withheld, forfeited or canceled in whole or in part for, among other things, "failure to perform properly in the duties or program assigned.")

19. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1(a) (2019).

20. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 262.1 (2019).

In New York, you have no right to demand good time credits.²¹ The Commissioner's decision will be final, unless it is not made "in accordance with law."²² Courts explain that when making a recommendation and decision about good time credits, TACs should look at your entire experience in prison and not just apply a simple rule automatically.²³ The law regarding the requirements for good time credit refers only to "assigned" (required) treatment programs, and not "recommended" ones.²⁴ However, DOCCS will not usually give good time credits to sex offenders who do not complete sex offender treatment programs after the programs have been recommended to them.²⁵ Courts have allowed TACs to withhold good time credits for this reason.²⁶ Courts have been strict in upholding such denials of good time credits even where:

- (1) the incarcerated person was on a wait-list for such a program, but had refused treatment twice before;²⁷

21. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 260.2 (2019). The statute makes clear that the good behavior allowances, or good time credits, are a privilege that need to be earned by an incarcerated person and, therefore, no incarcerated person has the right to demand these allowances/credits.

22. N.Y. CORR. LAW § 803(4) (McKinney 2014).

23. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3(c) (2019). See also People ex rel. Gittens v. Coughlin, 143 Misc. 2d 748, 751, 541 N.Y.S.2d 718, 720 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1989) (explaining that, according to N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3 (2019), the TAC should look at the entire prison experience of the incarcerated person and not just a rule when making its decision regarding good behavior allowances); Amato v. Ward, 41 N.Y.2d 469, 473–474, 362 N.E.2d 566, 570, 393 N.Y.S.2d 934, 937 (1977) (citing N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 261.3 (2019)) (holding that the TAC should appraise the entire institutional experience of the incarcerated person in making its decision).

24. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2014).

25. See, e.g., Matter of Jones v. Goord, 35 A.D.3d 951, 952, 824 N.Y.S.2d 575, 576 (3d Dept. 2006) (upholding the determination to withhold good time credit because of the petitioner's failure to participate in recommended treatment programs); Benjamin v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Serv., 19 A.D.3d 832, 833, 796 N.Y.S.2d 747, 748 (3d Dept. 2005) (citing Matter of McPherson v. Goord, 17 A.D.3d 750, 751, 793 N.Y.S.2d 230, 231 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that "petitioner's refusal to participate in a recommended [drug] treatment program provide[d] a rational basis for withholding a good behavior allowance"); Matter of Thomas v. Time Allowance Comm., 4 A.D.3d 637, 638–639, 771 N.Y.S.2d 739, 740 (3d Dept. 2004) (upholding the withholding of petitioner's good behavior allowance because of his failure to participate in an alcohol and substance abuse treatment program); Matter of Burke v. Goord, 273 A.D.2d 575, 575, 710 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (3d Dept. 2000) (explaining that when an incarcerated person does not participate in a recommended therapeutic program, the TAC can deny him good time credit); Matter of Pfeifer v. Goord, 272 A.D.2d 886, 886, 708 N.Y.S.2d 217, 218 (4th Dept. 2000) (explaining that a TAC can deny good time credit when an incarcerated person fails to participate in "recommended" treatment programs).

26. Matter of Jones v. Goord, 35 A.D.3d 951, 952, 824 N.Y.S.2d 575, 576 (3d Dept. 2006) (upholding the determination to withhold good time credit because of the petitioner's failure to participate in recommended treatment programs); Ferry v. Goord, 268 A.D.2d 720, 721, 704 N.Y.S.2d 315, 316 (3d Dept. 2000) (explaining that failure to participate in "recommended" (rather than "assigned") programs may be a reason for withholding good time credit); Majeed v. Goord, 279 A.D.2d 832, 833, 719 N.Y.S.2d 739, 740 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding that where "an inmate has refused to accept adequate treatment for the behavior that resulted in the incarceration, a decision to withhold good time allowance is not irrational"); see also Matter of Martin v. Goord, 45 A.D.3d 992, 994, 845 N.Y.S.2d 524, 526 (3d Dept. 2007) (explaining that a refusal to address the behavior that resulted in the incarcerated person's incarceration by not properly participating in a recommended or required program is an acceptable and rational reason for withholding good time credits). Furthermore, in Coleman v. Boyle, 270 A.D.2d 739, 739–740, 705 N.Y.S.2d 419, 420 (3d Dept. 2000), the court explained that, because the incarcerated person refused to attend several similar programs in the past, the fact that he later requested a transfer "to another correctional facility that offered a ... sex offender therapy program" made it neither unreasonable nor against the law for the TAC to withhold good time credits from him. See also JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Right to a Part C, "Due Process in Prisons."

27. Staples v. Goord, 263 A.D.2d 943, 944, 695 N.Y.S.2d 190, 191 (3d Dept. 1999) (upholding the TAC's denial of incarcerated person's request for good time credits because he had not completed sex offender counseling, even though he was on the wait list, because he had twice before refused to participate in a counseling program).

- (2) the incarcerated person had previously participated in a behavior intervention program and some sex offender counseling, but he “refused to sufficiently participate in and complete certain recommended offender and aggression counseling programs”;²⁸ and
- (3) the incarcerated person was told he needed additional counseling but he was not allowed to transfer to a facility with an appropriate sex offender therapy program.²⁹

Courts have also said that these requirements do not violate the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.³⁰

For these reasons, you should make every attempt to get counseling if it is recommended to you.

1. Self-incrimination in counseling

Before October 2008, incarcerated people could be required to essentially admit to crimes in counseling. For example, they could be forced to produce “sexual autobiographies.” This rule has been changed. You can only be required to speak about your past sexual behavior in general terms, without having to mention specific details. You cannot be required to admit to any specific crime in order to participate in treatment and receive good time credits.³¹

D. HIV Testing

HIV is the virus that causes AIDS. HIV can be spread in several ways, including through sexual contact, shared use of drug needles, and other methods that result in an exchange of bodily fluids. Because sexual contact is one way to transmit this virus, almost every state (including New York) has a law allowing or requiring courts to order HIV testing for convicted sex offenders or defendants charged with sex offenses.³² Additionally, the federal government may perform HIV testing on any

28. Jones v. Coombe, 269 A.D.2d 632, 632, 703 N.Y.S.2d 554, 554 (3d Dept. 2000). In this case, the court explained that the incarcerated person’s failure to participate in the recommended programs meant that he did not receive “adequate” treatment for “the very thing that resulted in his incarceration.” For this reason, the court concluded that the TAC’s decision to withhold good time credits was not irrational.

29. Coleman v. Boyle, 270 A.D.2d 739, 739—740, 705 N.Y.S.2d 419, 420 (3d Dept. 2000) (explaining that if you ask for counseling after refusing it earlier, the TAC can decide to withhold good time credits even if you had requested a transfer to a facility where they had a full program).

30. Lamberty v. Schriver, 277 A.D.2d 527, 528, 715 N.Y.S.2d 510, 511 (3d Dept. 2000) (explaining that requiring an incarcerated person to participate in sex offender and aggression therapy programs does not violate his 5th Amendment rights); Burke v. Goord, 273 A.D.2d 575, 575, 710 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that withholding good time credits for failure to participate in sexual offender programs does not violate the 5th Amendment).

31. In VanGorder v. Lira, No. 9:08-CV-281 (NAM/ATB), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30584, at *3–4 & n.1 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 30, 2010) (unpublished), the court held that incarcerated people could not be required to sign a confession before participating in a treatment program. The settlement terms were said to apply to future claims that an incarcerated person’s 5th Amendment rights were violated. The settlement agreement also says that when any incarcerated person is admitted to a Sex Offender Counseling Program, DOCCS has to provide that incarcerated person with a form titled “Limits of Confidentiality, Partial Waiver of Confidentiality and Acknowledgment.”

32. See ALA. CODE § 22-11A-17(a) (LexisNexis 2011); ALASKA STAT. § 18.15.300 (2007); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-1415 (2010); ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-82-101(B) (2011); CAL. PENAL CODE § 1202.1 (West 2004); CAL. PENAL CODE § 1524.1 (2019); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-3-415 (2010); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 54-102a (2018); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 54-102b (2019); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 10, § 1077(a) (2011); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 3911 (2008); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 960.003 (2013); GA. CODE ANN. § 17-10-15 (2012); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 801D-4(b) (LexisNexis 2007); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 39-601 (2012); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 39-604 (2012); 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/5-5-3(g) (2019); IND. CODE ANN. § 35-38-1-10.5 (2018); IND. CODE ANN. § 35-38-1-10.6 (2009); IOWA CODE ANN. § 915.42 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 65-6009 (2002); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 510.320 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 15:535 (2008); LA. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 499 (2008); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 5, § 19203-F (2007 & Supp. 2009); MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. PROC. § 11-112 (LexisNexis 2011); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 333.5129 (2011); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 611A.19 (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 99-19-203 (2007); MO. ANN. STAT. § 191.663 (West 2004); MONT. CODE ANN. § 46-18-256 (2010); NEB. REV. STAT. § 29-2290 (2008); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 441A.320 (LexisNexis 2009); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 632-A:10-b (2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2A:4A-43.1 (1994); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:43-2.2 (2011); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 24-2B-5.1 (2010); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15 (McKinney 2012); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 15A-534.3

incarcerated person who has been sentenced to at least six months imprisonment if the health services staff at the prison determines that the incarcerated person is at risk for HIV infection. It may also perform an HIV test on any incarcerated person sentenced to less than six months, who may have transmitted HIV to prison employees or to other non-incarcerated people.³³

Typically, there are two kinds of HIV testing that may be required by law: “informational testing” and “evidentiary testing.”

Informational testing laws require testing criminal defendants so that the state can provide information about the defendant's HIV status to others who may have been exposed to HIV by the incarcerated person.³⁴ This includes telling the defendant's HIV status to either a crime victim or someone who had contact with the defendant's fluids during arrest. Informational HIV test results may sometimes be allowed as evidence in the defendant's trial, but each state has a different rule regarding who may access the test results and how they may be used.

Evidentiary testing laws exist in states where transmission of HIV can be a crime. In these states, a defendant is tested for HIV in order to produce evidence for the prosecution.³⁵

For more detailed information about HIV testing and testing for other infectious disease, see JLM Chapter 26 “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, and Tuberculosis and MRSA in Prison.”

1. Informational Tests

Different states have different regulations for informational HIV testing. States have different rules for when a test should be done, for who is allowed to find out about your test results, and for whether the results can be used in criminal proceedings. Some statutes allow the court to decide if you should be tested for HIV,³⁶ while other statutes require the court to order testing if the victim requests it.³⁷ In some states, testing is automatic.³⁸

Some states do not allow test results to be shown to the court³⁹ or used in criminal or civil proceedings against the defendant,⁴⁰ but other states allow the use of HIV test results by the (2009); N.D. CENT. CODE § 23-07.7-01 (2007); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2907.27 (2014); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 63, § 1-524 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 63, § 1-524.1 (2011); OR. REV. STAT. § 135.139 (2009); 35 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN. § 7608 (West 2003); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-34.1-12 (2009); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-37-17 (2010); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-3-740 (2010); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 23A-35B-3 (2011); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-521 (2010); TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 21.31 (West 2009); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-5-502 (2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-5-504 (2011); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 3256 (2009); VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-62 (2008); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 70.24.340 (2011); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 16-3C-2(f) (2016); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 968.38 (2010); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-1-109 (2011).

33. 28 C.F.R. § 549.12(a)(2) (2018).

34. See WASH. REV. CODE § 70.02.220 (2018). See also HAW. REV. STAT. § 325-16.5 (2009); LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 15:535 (2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 252.15 (2010).

35. See 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/5-5-3 (2013). See also GA. CODE ANN. § 17-10-15(c) (2012).

36. See, e.g., OR. REV. STAT. § 135.139 (2014) (allowing court to order HIV testing for charges where body fluids may have been transferred from one person to another when the court finds there is probable cause to believe (1) you committed the crime; and (2) the victim was substantially exposed).

37. See, e.g., N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 210.16(1) (McKinney 2012) (requiring HIV testing when (1) the victim requests it within six months of the date of the alleged felony offense; and (2) the felony offense includes as an essential element an act of “sexual intercourse,” “oral sexual conduct,” or “anal sexual conduct” as defined in section 130.00 of the penal law).

38. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 18-3-415 (West 2016) (requiring HIV testing upon charging of defendant for any sexual offense).

39. See, e.g., N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(6)(a)(ii) (McKinney 2012) (limiting disclosure “to the victim, the victim's immediate family, guardian, physicians, attorneys, medical or mental health providers and to his or her past and future contacts to whom there was or is a reasonable risk of HIV transmission,” and plainly forbidding disclosure “to any other person or the court”).

40. See, e.g., N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(8) (McKinney 2012) (information on HIV status obtained by consent, hearing, or a court order may not be used as evidence against you in a criminal or civil proceeding related to the events that you were convicted for); TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 21.31(c) (Vernon 2009) (preventing use of test results in any criminal proceeding resulting from the alleged offense).

prosecution.⁴¹ Be sure to read a copy of the statute from your state in order to learn what the law is in relation to your case.

Some defendants have challenged statutes that allow pre- or post-conviction HIV testing against the defendant's wishes. They did so by claiming that these statutes violate the Fourth Amendment's ban on unreasonable searches. Most of the time, the courts have determined that these statutes are constitutional.⁴² Some courts say that some Fourth Amendment protections—warrant and probable cause—do not apply when (1) the reason for the test is a “special need” beyond ordinary law enforcement; and (2) that special need justifies the privacy intrusion.⁴³

(a) New York

New York has its own laws about HIV testing. In New York, the nature of the testing depends on the status of your case. If you have not been convicted but there is an indictment or information filed, then the court must order you to take an HIV test at the victim's request, if it “would provide medical benefit to the victim or a psychological benefit to the victim.” The results will be given to you and the victim, but not to the court.⁴⁴ You may be required to take an HIV test even if there has been no showing that telling the victim about your HIV status would benefit the victim. This is because you have made your medical condition an issue and have given up your right to confidentiality.⁴⁵ If you have been convicted of certain sex offenses, a separate law requires that a court order HIV tests at a victim's request.⁴⁶ If you have been tested under a court order, the results of the test cannot be used against you in court.⁴⁷

41. See, e.g., ALASKA STAT. § 18.15.310(e)(2) (2016) (allowing use of HIV test results when necessary for civil proceedings against a defendant); CAL. PENAL CODE § 1202.1(c) (West 2019) (allowing disclosure of HIV test results to the prosecution for use in an additional criminal charge or to increase the defendant's sentence).

42. See, e.g., Seaton v. Mayberg, 610 F.3d 530, 534 (9th Cir. 2010) (“A right of privacy in traditional Fourth Amendment terms is fundamentally incompatible with the close and continual surveillance of inmates and their cells required to ensure institutional security and internal order.” (quoting Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527–28, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393 (1984))) (Seaton found that the 4th Amendment did not prevent disclosure of the incarcerated person's medical records); Connor v. Foster, 833 F. Supp. 727, 730–31 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (finding that HIV testing against incarcerated person's wishes did not violate the 4th Amendment when incarcerated person's hypodermic needle pricked the finger of an officer during a frisk search); Virgin Islands v. Roberts, 756 F. Supp. 898, 904 (D.V.I. 1991) (holding that the 4th Amendment allowed HIV testing against defendant's wishes), aff'd, Virgin Islands v. Roberts, 961 F.2d 1567 (3d Cir. 1992); People v. Adams, 149 Ill. 2d 331, 352–354, 597 N.E. 2d 574, 584–586 (1992) (finding that an Illinois statute requiring incarcerated people convicted of sex offenses to undergo HIV testing was constitutional, and did not violate the 4th Amendment or the Equal Protection Clause); In re Juveniles A, B, C, D, E, 121 Wash. 2d 80, 98, 847 P.2d 455, 463 (1993) (en banc) (holding that statute requiring HIV testing of sexual offenders is reasonable under the 4th Amendment, does not violate the right to privacy, and may be applied to juveniles).

43. See In re Juveniles A, B, C, D, E, 121 Wash. 2d 80, 91, 847 P.2d 455, 459 (1993) (en banc) (citing Skinner v. Ry. Labor Executives' Ass'n, 489 U.S. 602, 619, 109 S. Ct. 1402, 1414, 103 L. Ed. 2d 639, 661 (1989)). See also United States v. Ward, 131 F.3d 335, 342 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding that a convicted rapist had to undergo a mandatory HIV test, because telling the victim about a potential HIV infection and preventing the spread of HIV were “special needs,” which justified the blood test).

44. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 210.16(1)(a) (McKinney 2012).

45. People v. Durham, 146 Misc. 2d 913, 916, 553 N.Y.S.2d 944, 946–947 (Sup. Ct. Queens Cnty. 1990) (ordering defendant to be tested for HIV after he told his rape victim that he had HIV and thus placed his medical condition at issue); In re Gribetz, 159 Misc. 2d 550, 553, 605 N.Y.S.2d 834, 836 (Cnty. Ct. Rockland Cnty. 1993) (holding that HIV test results were needed to prove defendant had acted recklessly and with depraved indifference to human life, and that the defendant had waived her right to privacy since she had already discussed her HIV status).

46. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 390.15(1) (McKinney 2012).

47. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 210.16(1)(a) (McKinney 2012); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(8) (McKinney 2012).

(b) Federal

Under federal law, specifically the 1994 Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), a victim of certain sex offenses can ask a federal district court to order a defendant to get tested for HIV. These results are given to the victim (and/or the victim's parent or legal guardian) and the defendant.⁴⁸ "[T]he victim may then disclose the test results only to any medical professional, counselor, family member or sexual partner(s) the victim may have had since the attack."⁴⁹

Unlike New York law, which only authorizes testing the defendant after conviction, VAWA allows a court to order testing of a defendant before they have been convicted of certain sex offenses. Although VAWA is a federal law, it applies to accused sex offenders who are being prosecuted in state court under state criminal laws.⁵⁰

This means that no matter what the laws of the state you are in say, you could be required to take an HIV test and to provide the results under VAWA. However, in New York, victims can also request HIV test results under New York State law.⁵¹

Some provisions of VAWA have been challenged in federal courts.⁵² The few courts to consider the question have generally upheld the federal testing provision.⁵³

There is a possibility that a challenge to the HIV testing provisions of VAWA might someday succeed. You should read the most recent case law to determine if the rules have changed at all. Furthermore, VAWA was amended in 2013. Although the amendments do not change the specific laws on HIV testing, be sure to look at the most recent version of VAWA if you believe it applies to your case.

2. Evidentiary Testing Laws

In many states, if you know you are HIV positive, it is a crime for you to have sexual contact with another person without telling the other person your HIV status beforehand.⁵⁴ In states that criminalize HIV transmission, the court must order an HIV test in order for the prosecution to prove one element of the crime (that is, that you are HIV positive). In such situations, the HIV test results may be used against you in your criminal case.⁵⁵

48. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 210.16(1)(a) (McKinney 2012); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(8) (McKinney 2012).

Note that VAWA consists of several subtitles, which can be found throughout the United States Code. Only the subtitle relevant to HIV testing of incarcerated people is cited here.

49. 42 U.S.C. § 14011(b)(5), transferred to 34 U.S.C. § 12391(b)(5) (transferred 2017).

50. 42 U.S.C. § 14011(b)(2)(a), transferred to 34 U.S.C. § 12391(b)(2)(A) (transferred 2017).

51. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 210.16 (McKinney 2016).

52. For example, in United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 627, 120 S.Ct. 1740, 1759, 146 L. Ed. 2d 658 (2000), the Supreme Court invalidated 42 U.S.C. § 13981, the portion of VAWA that provides a civil remedy to victims of gender-motivated violence.

53. See, e.g., United States v. Ward, 131 F.3d 335, 339–340 (3d Cir. 1997) (finding that that a blood test for the limited purpose of determining the presence of HIV complied with the Fourth Amendment).

54. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 775.0877(3) (West 2016) (allowing a defendant who was previously convicted of a sexual offense and tested positive for HIV, who then commits a second sexual offense, to be charged with criminal transmission of HIV); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-5-60 (2011) (criminalizing behavior by a person who knows that he is HIV positive, who then exposes another person to HIV through sexual behavior, sharing drug paraphernalia, or donating blood or other bodily fluids); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/12-5.01 (West Supp. 2012) (allowing a defendant to be charged with criminal transmission of HIV if defendant knows he is HIV positive and then engages in sexual contact, donates blood or other bodily fluids, or shares intravenous drug paraphernalia with another person); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 333.5210 (1) (West 2019) (criminalizing "sexual penetration" by a person who knows he is infected with HIV or AIDS, and who does not tell his sexual partner about his infection).

55. See, e.g., People v. C.S., 583 N.E.2d 726, 731, 222 Ill. App. 3d 348, 355, 164 Ill. Dec. 810, 815 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991) (noting that the positive results of the HIV test performed on defendant would be essential to a future prosecution under state statute that prohibits those who know they are infected with AIDS from having certain conduct that has the potential of transmitting the virus).

E. Post-Conviction DNA Testing

Investigations of sex offenses often involve collecting bodily fluids like semen or blood. These fluids can then be submitted for DNA testing to help identify perpetrators. If you have been convicted of a sex offense and you are trying to prove that you are innocent, DNA evidence could be helpful and may be available. See JLM Chapter 11, “Using Post-Conviction DNA Testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence,” for more detailed information.

F. Special Parole Considerations

1. Parole Generally

You may be paroled—that is, conditionally released from prison—before you have served your entire sentence.⁵⁶ You will be required to follow certain rules from the time of your early release until your full sentence is finished. The state parole division will supervise you and make sure that you do not “violate parole” by breaking these rules.⁵⁷ During this time, the parole division is also required to assist you in reintegrating into the community.⁵⁸ In New York, you are not usually eligible for parole if you have received one or more “determinate” sentences (a sentence where the court specifies a fixed amount of time you will be in prison, as opposed to a range of time).⁵⁹ If you have received a determinate sentence, you will also be subject to a period of “post-release supervision.”⁶⁰ However, the state board of parole supervises incarcerated people released under both parole and post-release supervision.

2. Special Parole Conditions for Sex Offenders

If you are convicted of a sex offense and released on parole, your parole officer will probably impose special conditions or restrictions on you. These conditions may include mandatory address verification and restrictions on how close you can come to school grounds or child care facilities.⁶¹ Courts will not review whether the rules imposed by a parole officer are helpful or fair.⁶² As long as the parole officer’s decision follows the law and makes some sense as a response to your record, the officer’s decision is final.⁶³

56. Parole, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). See also N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-a–c (McKinney 2018) (describing generally the organization and duties of the New York State Division of Parole).

57. Parole Board, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). See also N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-a–c (McKinney 2018) (describing generally the organization and duties of the New York State Division of Parole).

58. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-c (McKinney 2018) (describing the reintegration duties of New York State Division of Parole).

59. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.40–70.45 (McKinney 2009). For example, “5 years” would be a determinate sentence, and you would probably not be eligible for parole. However, if you received “3 to 6 years,” this would be an indeterminate sentence, and you might be eligible for parole after three years. If you received more than one sentence, with one sentence determinate and another indeterminate, you might still be eligible for parole. If you received sentences that can be served concurrently (at the same time) then you may be paroled after you have served the minimum period of the indeterminate sentence or after you have served six-sevenths of the determinate sentences, whichever is later. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.41(a)(iii) (McKinney 2009). If you received sentences that have to be served consecutively (one after another), then you may be paroled after you have served the minimum amount of time in the indeterminate sentence plus six-sevenths of the total length of the sentences put together. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.41(a)(iv) (McKinney 2009).

60. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45 (McKinney 2009).

61. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Release and Community Supervision (May 2019), available at https://docs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020).

62. See Ahlers v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 1 A.D.3d 849, 849, 767 N.Y.S.2d 289, 289 (3d Dept. 2003) (holding that a parole officer was allowed to require a convicted sex offender to attend substance and alcohol abuse treatment programs as a condition of the offender’s parole and that this decision was “beyond judicial review”).

63. M.G. v. Travis, 236 A.D.2d 163, 167–169, 667 N.Y.S.2d 11, 14–15 (1st Dept. 1997) (citing Briguglio v.

G. Incarceration Beyond Your Conditional Release Date

If you are imprisoned in New York State, you will have to tell the Parole Board where you plan to live after prison when your release date is coming up.⁶⁴ The Parole Board can make you change your plans.⁶⁵ If you do not get approval for your living plans after release, you can be held in prison beyond your conditional release date (parole date).⁶⁶ Courts will allow you to be held until you have a living situation the Parole Board approves of. Often, the Board will not let you live near schools or other places that care for children under the age of 18.⁶⁷ Sometimes the state has rules about where you may or may not live after release but other times these rules are local (in a county, city, town, or village).

H. The Importance of Following Parole Rules

If you have been convicted of a sex offense, the Division of Parole will be especially strict in making sure you follow all the rules of your parole, and will send you back to prison if you break those rules.⁶⁸ It is very important that you comply with the requirements and conditions the Parole Board imposes.

I. Community Registration and Notification Laws

1. Generally

In 1989, states began to pass Community Registration and Notification laws, often called “Megan’s Laws.” These are called Megan’s Laws after Megan Kanka, a seven-year-old girl who was murdered in New Jersey in 1994. Her death prompted New Jersey to pass the first Megan’s Law.⁶⁹ Today, all fifty states have these laws.⁷⁰ Although the exact laws are different in each state, the Federal N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 24 N.Y.2d 21, 28, 246 N.E.2d 512, 516, 298 N.Y.S.2d 704, 710 (1969) to support the proposition that decisions of the parole board cannot be reviewed by the courts as long as the parole board does not violate any statutory obligations, and the court’s only ability is to review the board’s decision to determine whether it was arbitrary or capricious).

64. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-c (McKinney 2018) (describing generally the functions, powers, and duties of the State Board of Parole).

65. See Monroe v. Travis, 280 A.D.2d 675, 676, 721 N.Y.S.2d 377, 378 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that the Parole Board was justified in refusing to grant conditional release to a convicted sex offender until the incarcerated person found housing that was satisfactory to the Parole Board).

66. See Billups v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 18 A.D.3d 1085, 1085–1086, 795 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3rd Dept. 2005) (holding that due to petitioner’s violent history and the fact that he sexually assaulted his daughter, the condition that petitioner reside in an approved residence was rationally based); Monroe v. Travis, 280 A.D.2d 675, 676, 721 N.Y.S.2d 377, 378 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that the Parole Board was justified in refusing to grant conditional release to a convicted sex offender until the incarcerated person found housing that was satisfactory to the Parole Board); People ex. rel. Wilson v. Keane, 267 A.D.2d 686, 686, 700 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3d Dept. 1999) (finding that due to petitioner’s history as a sex offender and his failure to participate in available sex offender treatment programs, the condition that petitioner reside in an approved residence was rationally based).

67. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Release and Community Supervision (May 2019), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020) (“The parolee will not be allowed to live near or enter upon any school grounds or any other facilities or institutions primarily used for the care and treatment of persons under the age of 18, unless they meet certain criteria and have the written permission of their PO.”).

68. See, e.g., Farrell v. Burke, 449 F.3d 470, 499 (2d Cir. 2006), (upholding the lower court decision to grant defendants’ motion to dismiss a parolee’s 14th Amendment claim after he was re-arrested and re-incarcerated for violating a special condition of parole prohibiting him from owning pornography).

69. N.J. STAT. ANN. §§ 2C:7-1–2C:7-23.

70. Each state has interpreted its Megan’s Laws differently. Before citing to any of the following statutes, be sure to research how these statutes have been interpreted by the courts in your state. See, e.g., Alabama Sex Offender Registration and Community Notification Act, 2019 CODE OF ALA. tit. 15 Ch. 20A; ALASKA STAT. ANN. §§ 12.63.010–12.63.100; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 13-3821–13-3829; ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 12-12-901–923; CAL. PENAL CODE §§ 290–290.5; COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 16-22-101–16-22-115; CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. §§ 54-250–54-261; DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, §§ 4120–4122; FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 775.21–775.24; GA. CODE ANN. §§ 42-1-12–42-1-19; HAW. REV. STAT. §§ 846E-1–846E-12; IDAHO CODE ANN. §§ 18-8301–18-8331; 730 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 150/1–12,

Government requires that all states collect your name, addresses of where you live and work, information about your physical appearance, fingerprints, a DNA sample, conviction history, a copy of your state issued license/identification card, and license plates of your car if you have one.⁷¹ Additionally, states are required by federal law to tell you about your duty to register, to check your address every year, to tell the police when you move, and to give the public any information about you that it might need to protect itself.⁷²

Challenges to state Megan's Laws have usually failed. States are allowed to impose Megan's Law requirements on sex offenders who were convicted before the laws existed.⁷³ States are also allowed to post a convicted sex offender's picture and information on the internet without giving him a hearing.⁷⁴

In Connecticut Department of Public Safety, the Supreme Court suggested that someday, a defendant might show that a Megan's Law violated "substantive due process," a set of rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.⁷⁵ Under substantive due process, laws have to be fair and reasonable and the government has to have a legitimate reason for creating them.⁷⁶ Even though the Court left this possibility open, it has mostly let states do what they want with Megan's Laws, and a substantive due process challenge to a Megan's Law would probably not succeed right now.⁷⁷

In another case dealing with due process and Megan's Laws, the Sixth Circuit upheld a law that made young sex offenders register even though their records had been sealed because they had pleaded 152/101–152/999; IND. CODE ANN. §§ 11-8-8-1–11-8-22; IOWA CODE ANN. §§ 692A.101–692A.130; KAN. STAT. ANN. §§ 22-4901 to 22-4913; KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 17.500–17.580; LA. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 15:540–15:553; ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 34-A, §§ 11201–11256, 34-A §§ 11271–11304.; MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. PROC. §§ 11-701–11-726; MASS. GEN. LAWS ch. 6, §§ 178D–178Q; MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 28.721–28.736; MINN. STAT. ANN. §§ 243.166–243.167; MISS. CODE ANN. §§ 45-33-21–45-33-59; MO. ANN. STAT. §§ 589.400–589.426; MONT. CODE ANN. §§ 46-23-501 to 46-23-520; NEB. REV. STAT. §§ 29-4001 to 29-4014; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 179D.010–179D.850; N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 651-B:1–651-B:12; N.J. STAT. ANN. §§ 2C:7-1–2C:7-23; N.M. STAT. ANN. §§ 29-11A-1–29-11A-10; N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 168–168-w; N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 14-208.5–14-208.45; N.D. CENT. CODE ANN. § 12.1-32-15; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. §§ 2950.01–2950.99; OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 57, §§ 581–590.2; OR. REV. STAT. §§ 181.592–181.606, 181.820–181.833; 42 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN. §§ 9791–9799.41; R.I. GEN. LAWS ANN. §§ 11-37.1-1–20; S.C. CODE ANN. §§ 23-3-400–555; S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-24B-1–22-24B-34; TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 40-39-201 to 40-39-215; TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. arts. 62.001–62.408; UTAH CODE ANN. § 77-41-101 to 77-41-112; VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, §§ 5401–5415; VA. CODE ANN. §§ 9.1-900 to 9.1-922; WASH. REV. CODE ANN. §§ 9A.44.130–9A.44.145; W. VA. CODE ANN. §§ 15-12-1 to 15-12-10; WIS. STAT. ANN. §§ 301.45–301.48; WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-19-301–7-19-308; D.C. CODE §§ 22-4001–22-4017.

71. Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109-248 § 114, 120 Stat 587 (2006).

72. 42 U.S.C. § 14071; Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109-248 § 117, 120 Stat 587 (2006).

73. 42 U.S.C. § 14071; Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109-248 § 117, 120 Stat 587 (2006) (stating that the sex offender registration law had a legitimate civil purpose to increase public safety, and was not an additional, after-the-fact criminal sanction on convicted sex offenders). See also United States v. Kebodeaux, 570 U.S. 387, 394, 133 S. Ct. 2496, 2503, 186 L. Ed. 2d 540, 549 (2013) (holding that a federal statute could apply to sex offenders convicted before the statute's enactment because of the statute's public safety purpose).

74. Conn. Dept. of Pub. Safety v. Doe, 538 U.S. 1, 4, 123 S. Ct. 1160, 1162–1163, 155 L. Ed. 2d 98, 103 (2003).

75. Conn. Dept. of Pub. Safety v. Doe, 538 U.S. 1, 7–8, 123 S. Ct. 1160, 1164, 155 L. Ed. 2d 98, 105 (2003); See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 (prohibiting any state from depriving "any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law"). In contrast with procedural due process, which may require that a state provide you with a hearing and/or notice before the state can take some action against you, substantive due process protects certain fundamental rights that are more difficult for the state to interfere with, such as privacy within the home.

76. Due Process (Substantive Due Process), BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

77. See, e.g., Paul P. by Laura L. v. Verniero, 170 F.3d 396, 405 (3d Cir. 1999) (holding that New Jersey's version of Megan's Law did not violate a sex offender's constitutionally protected privacy interest); Russell v. Gregoire, 124 F.3d 1079, 1094 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that Washington's Megan's Law did not violate a sex offender's substantive due process right to privacy).

guilty to a sexual offense and completed a “diversion program.”⁷⁸ The Court said that there was no substantive due process violation.⁷⁹

2. Residency Restrictions

Most states have laws that forbid certain convicted sex offenders from living near any sort of childcare center, but courts have required that these laws make an exception and allow an offender to stay where he is if a daycare center moves nearby after he has purchased a home. In Mann v. Georgia Department of Corrections, the Supreme Court of Georgia said that the state could not make a convicted sex offender move from a home he owned near a daycare, even though there was a Georgia law forbidding him from living within 1000 feet of a daycare.⁸⁰ The court explained that because he owned the home (instead of renting it, or living in it for free) it was unfair for the state to make him move without paying him for the house.⁸¹ The court also said that Georgia was still allowed to forbid a convicted sex offender from working near any childcare facility.⁸²

Another case addressing similar restrictions is Doe v. Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole, where the court ruled that if a state law treats convicted sex offenders who were convicted in that state differently from convicted sex offenders who were convicted out of that state and moved there after release, that law may be unconstitutional.⁸³ This case only applies to the Third Circuit (Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware), so you should check what laws apply in your area.

3. New York

(a) Overview

New York's version of Megan's Law is called the Sex Offender Registration Act of 1996 (or “SORA”), which requires convicted sex offenders to register with the New York Division of Criminal Justice Services. The Division will keep a file on you which will include your:

- (1) name;
- (2) aliases (other names) used;
- (3) date of birth;
- (4) sex;
- (5) race;
- (6) height;
- (7) weight;
- (8) eye color;
- (9) driver's license number;
- (10) home address, or the address of the place you expect to live;
- (11) Internet account information and any screen names you use;
- (12) photograph;
- (13) fingerprints;
- (14) a description of the crime of which you were convicted;

78. Doe v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 490 F.3d 491, 494–497, 506 (6th Cir. 2007). The appellants had been charged under Michigan's Holmes Youthful Trainee Act (HYTA), which is only available for certain sex crimes and which seals their criminal records once they plead guilty and complete the diversion program. They were then required to register as convicted sex offenders under Michigan's Sex Offender Registration Act, which makes information about the charges publicly available. The court held that individuals' substantive due process rights do not entitle them to individual hearings on whether they should be required to register if the statute requires all sex offenders to register. Offenders charged after October 31, 2004 are only required to register if youthful trainee status is revoked and they are found guilty.

79. Doe v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 490 F.3d 491, 499–502 (6th Cir. 2007).

80. Mann v. Ga. Dept. of Corr., 653 S.E.2d 740, 745, 282 Ga. 754, 760 (2007).

81. Mann v. Ga. Dept. of Corr., 653 S.E.2d 754, 761, 282 Ga. 740, 745 (2007).

82. Mann v. Ga. Dept. of Corr., 653 S.E.2d 754, 755, 282 Ga. 740, 742 (2007).

83. Doe v. Pa. Bd. of Prob. and Parole, 513 F.3d 95 (3d Cir. 2008).

- (15) the name and address of any higher education institution where you are or expect to be enrolled, attending, or employed, and whether you will live in housing provided by that institution;
- (16) if you are a high risk offender (discussed below), the address where you either work or expect to work; and
- (17) any other information deemed pertinent by the division.⁸⁴

If you were convicted of (not just charged with) any of the offenses in the paragraph below, you are a “sex offender” under SORA and you must register with the Division of Criminal Justice Services before you leave prison.⁸⁵ You must register if you were convicted on or after January 21, 1996, or if you were in prison on parole for a sex offense on January 21, 1996.

You MUST register as a sex offender if you have been convicted of committing or attempting to commit one or more offenses under any of the following sections:

- New York Penal Law Sections 120.70 (luring a child), 130.20 (sexual misconduct), 130.25, 130.30, 130.40, 130.45, or 130.60 (certain offenses involving rape, criminal sexual acts, or sexual abuse)
- New York Penal Law Sections 230.34 (sex trafficking), 250.50 (unlawful surveillance), 255.25, 255.26, or 255.27 (offenses involving incest) or any provision of Article 263 of the penal law (offenses involving sexual performance by a child);
- New York Penal Law Sections 130.52 or 130.55 (forcible touching or sexual assault). If you have previously been convicted of another listed sex offense, then the age of the victim of the offense under 130.52 or 130.55 does not matter; otherwise, you must register as a sex offender only where the victim of the offense was under 18 years old;
- New York Penal Law Sections 135.05, 135.10, 135.20, or 135.25 (offenses involving imprisonment or kidnapping if the victim of the kidnapping is less than 17 years old and you are not the parent of the victim);
- New York Penal Law Section 230.04 (when you are convicted of patronizing a prostitute who is actually younger than seventeen);
- New York Penal Law Sections 230.05, 230.06, 230.30(2), 230.32, 230.33 (offenses involving patronizing prostitutes or promoting prostitution);
- New York Penal Law Section 250.45 (2), (3), or (4) (offenses involving unlawful surveillance) Unless you petition the trial court, and the court holds that registration would be too harsh.;
- the following federal laws: 8 U.S.C. § 2251, 18 U.S.C. § 2251A, 18 U.S.C. § 2252, 18 U.S.C. § 2252A, or 18 U.S.C. § 2260 (various offenses involving sexual exploitation of minors), 18 U.S.C. § 2422(b), 18 U.S.C. § 2423, or 18 U.S.C. § 2425 (offenses involving the use of interstate channels to solicit, transport, or transport information about, minors); or
- any offense in any jurisdiction which has the same elements as any of the crimes listed above.

If you were convicted of a sex offense in another state, you still have to register under SORA, as long as the crime you were convicted of is the same sort of crime as those listed above, or if the state you were convicted in would have required you to register.⁸⁶

You will have to re-register with the Division of Criminal Justice every year for at least twenty years. If you are a “high risk offender” (discussed below), you will have to register every year for the rest of your life, and you will have to give your address to the local police every 90 days.⁸⁷

84. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-b (McKinney 2014).

85. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-f (McKinney 2014).

86. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 168-a(2)(d), 168-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2014).

87. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-h (McKinney 2014).

(b) Risk Assessment Hearing and Right to Appointed Counsel

Under SORA, the sentencing court will put you in one of three categories depending on your “risk level.”⁸⁸ Your “risk level” is the court’s decision about how likely it is that you will commit other sex offenses. The court makes this decision after a Board of Examiners of Sex Offenders looks at your case and makes a recommendation to the court.⁸⁹

The Board uses a Sex Offender Registration Act Risk Assessment Instrument worksheet to decide what your risk level should be.⁹⁰ This worksheet lists different factors and gives a number value to each factor. The Board sees which factors you have and then adds up the number for all of those, which corresponds to your risk level.⁹¹ The factors are related to your crime, criminal history, personal background, and future plans.

If any of the following four factors are present, you are automatically a category 3 (high risk) offender:

- (1) you have a prior felony conviction for a sex crime;
- (2) you inflicted serious physical injury or caused death;
- (3) you have made a recent threat that you will re-offend by committing a sexual or violent crime; or
- (4) there is a clinical assessment that you have a psychological, physical, or biological problem making you unable to control your sexual behavior.⁹²

According to 1999 amendments to SORA, you have a right to a lawyer at your risk level hearing, which occurs about a month before your release.⁹³ The court can appoint a lawyer for you if you cannot afford one.⁹⁴ If you had a court-appointed lawyer at your trial, the court should appoint one for you automatically.⁹⁵ If you paid for your lawyer at trial, but cannot afford one now, you must apply to have one appointed before your hearing.

You should attend your risk assessment hearing. The hearing is the one opportunity to challenge your risk level by giving the lawyer information about the case or your history that the court otherwise would not have. Many convicted offenders have chosen not to attend, either to avoid the hassle of transportation or the embarrassment of the subject, only to realize later the harsh lifetime consequences of receiving a level three risk classification.⁹⁶

88. See N.Y. Bd. of Examiners of Sex Offenders, Sex Offender Registration Act: Risk Assessment Guidelines and Commentary (2006), available at http://www.nycourts.gov/reporter/06_SORAGuidelines.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020).

89. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-1 (McKinney 2014) (describing generally the organization and duties of the Board of Examiners of Sex Offenders).

90. See N.Y. Bd. of Examiners of Sex Offenders, Sex Offender Registration Act: Risk Assessment Guidelines and Commentary (2006), available at http://www.nycourts.gov/reporter/06_SORAGuidelines.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020).

91. See N.Y. Bd. of Examiners of Sex Offenders, Sex Offender Registration Act: Risk Assessment Guidelines and Commentary (2006), available at http://www.nycourts.gov/reporter/06_SORAGuidelines.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020).

92. N.Y. Bd. of Examiners of Sex Offenders, Sex Offender Registration Act: Risk Assessment Guidelines and Commentary (2006), available at http://www.nycourts.gov/reporter/06_SORAGuidelines.pdf (last visited Feb. 14, 2020).

93. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-n(3) (McKinney 2014).

94. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-n(3) (McKinney 2014).

95. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-n(3) (McKinney 2014).

96. See Alan Rosenthal, DEFENDING AGAINST THE NEW SCARLET LETTER: A DEFENSE ATTORNEY'S GUIDE TO SORA PROCEEDINGS 171–172 (2019), available at <https://www.ils.ny.gov/files/Appellate/Resources/SORA%20Manual%202019.pdf> (last visited Aug. 16, 2020).

Before your hearing, the district attorney must give you the evidence used to decide your proposed risk. If he wants you to have a different risk level than the Board recommended, he has to tell you and explain why at least ten days before your hearing.⁹⁷

Any information the Board used to determine your risk level should be available to you and your lawyer. This information may include records from state or local correctional facilities, hospitals, institutions, District Attorneys, law enforcement agencies, probation departments, the Division of Parole, courts, and child protective agencies.⁹⁸

The court is allowed to delay your hearing until after your release if they need to do that in order to decide your case properly.⁹⁹

(c) Registration and Notification

Your risk level says how much information about you and your crime can be given to the public.¹⁰⁰

If you are classified as level 1 (low risk), local law enforcement is notified of your presence in the community and may release any information about you to the community generally or to specific institutions at its discretion.¹⁰¹ Information it may release includes a photograph, your zip code, background information (including the crime you were convicted of), the method of the crime, the type of victim, the name and address of any institution of higher education at which you are enrolled, work, attend, or reside, and any special conditions imposed on you (such as a condition that says you are not allowed to be around children).

If you are classified as level 2 (moderate risk), law enforcement is notified and may release the information above as well as your exact name and any aliases.¹⁰² Furthermore, law enforcement will keep a list of schools, parks, libraries, and other vulnerable areas and organizations, and will notify these organizations of your identity automatically.

If you receive a level 3 (high risk) designation, all of the information above, as well as your exact address and place of employment, can be given both to vulnerable institutions and to the public at large.¹⁰³

There are also phone numbers (1-800-262-3257), which the general public can call to find out whether someone is a registered sex offender.¹⁰⁴ These phone numbers include all registered sex offenders in New York (levels 1–3). A person calling this number will learn only that a level 1 offender is listed in the registry; far more detailed information is available about level 3 offenders. Callers must identify themselves and must also provide identifying information about the sex offender in order to secure information by telephone. They must know information about the sex offender such as his social security number, address, license number, and date of birth.¹⁰⁵

In addition, each police department in New York is required to have a publicly accessible record, the “Subdirectory of High-Risk (Level 3) Sex Offenders,” that people can look at online. The subdirectory provides detailed information about level 3 sex offenders residing in New York, including the offender’s address, photograph, and a description of the crimes he committed and how he committed them.¹⁰⁶

97. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-n(3) (McKinney 2014).

98. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-m (McKinney 2014).

99. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 168-l(8) (McKinney 2014).

100. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-l(6) (McKinney 2014).

101. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-l(6)(a) (McKinney 2014).

102. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-l(6)(b) (McKinney 2014).

103. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-l(6)(c) (McKinney 2014).

104. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-p (McKinney 2014). Division of Criminal Justice Services, available at <https://www.criminaljustice.ny.gov/nsor/800info.htm> (last visited Oct. 10, 2020).

105. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-p(1) (McKinney 2014).

106. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-q (McKinney 2014). The information of level 2 and 3 sex offenders is available online, and people may subscribe to email updates whenever a new or updated registration occurs in their geographic area.

The New York state sex offender registry is available online at <http://www.criminaljustice.ny.gov/nsor/>. Beyond the information law enforcement makes available, parent volunteers, from at least one private organization, compile additional information and have made it available in an online database.¹⁰⁷

(d) Amendments to SORA

Amendments that went into effect in March 2002 changed the definition of “sexually violent offender” and “sexual predator.” Currently, you are considered a “sexually violent offender” if you were convicted of a “sexually violent offense.”¹⁰⁸ Sexually violent offenses include crimes such as rape, criminal sexual acts (meaning forced anal or oral sexual contact), sexual abuse, aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse of a child, and predatory sexual assault against an adult or a child (meaning sexual assault involving physical injury, threat of injury, or repeated assaults).¹⁰⁹ You are considered a “sexual predator” if you were convicted of a sexually violent offense and you have a mental or personality disorder that makes you likely to commit predatory sexually violent offenses.¹¹⁰ If you are found to be a “sexually violent offender” or “sexual predator” you will automatically get a level 3 risk (high risk) classification. While the court has to look at each case individually, you can be classified as level 3 even if the crime you were convicted of is a misdemeanor, because risk level classification is based on how likely you are to repeat your offense.¹¹¹

Other amendments to SORA give sex offenders the right to a civil appeal after the court assigns them a risk level and a right to a lawyer in that appeal.¹¹² You also have the right to appointed counsel if you file a motion to have your sex offender classification changed, which you may do if your circumstances change.¹¹³

4. The Adam Walsh Act

(a) Generally

In July 2006, Congress passed The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act. Title I of the Act set out a national system for the registration of sex offenders called the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (“SORNA”).¹¹⁴ SORNA is a very complicated law, and states have had difficulty implementing it. Therefore, this Chapter will only discuss some key provisions, as it is unlikely your state has adopted all of SORNA. You must check your own state’s law carefully and see what, if any, parts of SORNA it has adopted.¹¹⁵

New York has not adopted SORNA (which sounds similar to, but is different from SORA, the New York State law). If you live in New York, you must register with the New York state registration system, SORA, described in Section G(2) of this Chapter. You may nonetheless have to register with SORNA if you travelled between states.¹¹⁶

107. The online data is available at <https://www.parentsformeganslaw.org/sex-offender-search/> (last visited Aug. 16, 2020).

108. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(7)(b) (McKinney 2014).

109. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(3) (McKinney 2014).

110. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-a(7)(a) (McKinney 2014).

111. New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services, Risk Level & Designation Determination, available at http://www.criminaljustice.ny.gov/nsor/risk_levels.htm (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

112. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-n(3) (McKinney 2014).

113. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-o(4) (McKinney 2014).

114. The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109–248, 120 Stat. 587 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 18, 28, 42 U.S.C.). SORNA created a new sex offender registry law at 34 U.S.C. §§ 20901–20962 and created new criminal offenses and penalties for failure to register at 18 U.S.C. § 2250.

115. For a list of state laws, see Part G(7), footnote 70, of this Chapter.

116. United States v. Guzman, 591 F.3d 83, 94 (2d Cir. 2010) (applying SORNA registration requirements to defendants, even though their state had not implemented the requirements).

If your state has adopted the SORNA system, SORNA applies to you if you have been convicted of a “sex offense” in your state.¹¹⁷ SORNA requires that certain juvenile offenders register as well. If you were fourteen years old or older at the time of the offense and were convicted or adjudicated “delinquent” for “aggravated sexual abuse” or a similar crime, or for an attempt or conspiracy to commit these crimes, you have to register.¹¹⁸

You need not register if you were convicted of a crime listed in SORNA before it existed. The Supreme Court recently reversed a Department of Justice rule to the contrary.¹¹⁹

Under the Attorney General’s guidelines for SORNA, some definitions of offenses may be broader than they are under other laws and may apply to you even if they had not before SORNA.¹²⁰

States have been resistant to SORNA because of how difficult and expensive it is to put into practice, and because parts of the law are different than states’ own laws.¹²¹

Just like under New York law (SORA), SORNA requires sex offenders to register either just before release, or right after sentencing if you are not in custody.¹²² SORNA, like SORA, divides sex offenders into three tiers based on the seriousness of their crime and places different restrictions on each. Tiers are assigned according to the length of imprisonment, the age of the victim of the offense, and the nature of the offense committed.¹²³

How long you have to register as a sex offender depends on what SORNA Tier you are in. Tier I offenders must register for fifteen years; Tier II offenders must register for twenty-five years; and Tier III offenders must register for their entire lives.¹²⁴

Under SORNA, you will also have to personally appear before the government to verify your registration information.¹²⁵ How often you have to appear before the government is determined by which Tier offender you are. Tier I offenders must appear in person at least once a year; Tier II offenders have to appear at least every six months; and Tier III offenders must appear at least every three months.¹²⁶

If anything changes during the period of time in which you are required to register, you must notify the government within three days of any changes to your name, address, employment, and student status.¹²⁷

Your state may adopt SORNA and use more strict classifications than those required by the Act, but it cannot adopt less strict classifications.¹²⁸

117. 34 U.S.C. § 20911.

118. 34 U.S.C. § 20911(8); 18 U.S.C. § 2241 (defining aggravated sexual assault).

119. Reynolds v. United States, 565 U.S. 432, 439, 132 S. Ct. 975, 980, 181 L. Ed. 2d 935, 942 (2012) (interpreting 28 C.F.R. § 72.3).

120. See 34 U.S.C. § 20914(a)(8), (b)(8); The National Guidelines for Sex Offender Registration and Notification, 72 Fed. Reg. 30210-01, 30217–30218 (May 30, 2007). See Abby Goodnough & Monica Davey, Effort to Track Sex Offenders Draws Resistance, N.Y. TIMES, February 8, 2009, at A1, available at <https://www.nytimes.com/2009/02/09/us/09offender.html> (last visited Oct. 10, 2020).

121. See Abby Goodnough & Monica Davey, Effort to Track Sex Offenders Draws Resistance, N.Y. TIMES, February 8, 2009, at A1, available at <https://www.nytimes.com/2009/02/09/us/09offender.html> (last visited Oct. 10, 2020).

122. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(b). If you are not in custody, you have three business days to register after being sentenced.

123. 34 U.S.C. § 2091.

124. 34 U.S.C. § 20915(a).

125. 34 U.S.C. § 20918.

126. 34 U.S.C. § 20918.

127. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(c). Within three business days of each change, you must appear in person in at least one jurisdiction where you are registered to inform that jurisdiction of any changes. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(c); see also United States v. Guzman, 591 F.3d 83, 86 (2d Cir. 2010) (upholding SORNA’s registration requirements for sex offenders).

128. 34 U.S.C. § 20912; The National Guidelines for Sex Offender Registration and Notification, 73 Fed. Reg. 38,030, 38,033–38,034 (July 2, 2008).

Keep in mind that even in states that have adopted SORNA, implementation and effectiveness can vary. For this reason, your state's regulations will probably influence your situation more than SORNA.

(b) Who can access this information and how?

Through local registries and law enforcement notification

All information you provide under SORNA will be put in your jurisdiction's registry. Most of the information contained in the registry will be available to the public.¹²⁹ In addition, law enforcement in your jurisdiction will have to provide your information to certain parties, including the federal Attorney General, and schools, public housing agencies and other vulnerable communities in your area.¹³⁰

There are some exceptions, however.¹³¹ States cannot post information about:

- (1) any victim's identity;
- (2) your social security number;
- (3) arrests that did not result in conviction; and
- (4) any other information that the Attorney General decides should not be released.¹³²

States can choose whether or not they want to include:

- (1) any information about a Tier I offender convicted of an offense other than a "specified offense against a minor;"
- (2) the name of your employer;
- (3) the name of any school where you are a student; and
- (4) any other information that the Attorney General decides should not be released.¹³³

Each state offender registry website must include directions on how to change information that you believe is incorrect.¹³⁴ Each website must also include a warning that any use of the site's information to "unlawfully injure, harass, or commit a crime" against any person named on the registry "could result in civil or criminal penalties."¹³⁵

Through the National Registry

Each convicted sex offender and any other person required to register will also be included on the National Sex Offender Registry maintained by the FBI.¹³⁶

The National Sex Offender Public Website is maintained by the Attorney General and includes "relevant information for each sex offender and other person listed on a jurisdiction's internet site," making "relevant information" publicly accessible.¹³⁷ The website can be found online at <http://www.nsopw.gov/>.

(c) Sentence Increases under The Adam Walsh Act

(i) Mandatory Minimums

A mandatory minimum sentence is the shortest, or least severe, sentence a court can give you if you are convicted of a certain crime. Title II of the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act established new mandatory minimums for a number of sexual crimes. These include:

-
129. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(a).
 130. 34 U.S.C. § 20923(b).
 131. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(b), (c).
 132. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(b).
 133. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(c).
 134. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(e).
 135. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(f).
 136. 34 U.S.C. § 20921.
 137. 34 U.S.C. § 20922.

- (1) New mandatory minimums for a “crime of violence against the person of an individual who has not attained the age of 18,” including murder, kidnapping, acts that result in serious bodily injury, and others;¹³⁸ and
- (2) New mandatory minimum of 15 years for sex trafficking accomplished through force, fraud, or coercion involving a minor under 14.¹³⁹

Mandatory Maximums

A statutory maximum is the longest, or most severe, sentence a court is allowed to give you if you are convicted of a certain crime. In addition to the mandatory minimums discussed above, Title II of the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act also established new statutory maximums (increasing the previous statutory maximums) for a number of sexual crimes.¹⁴⁰

(d) Statute of Limitations

The Act has gotten rid of the statute of limitations for certain crimes, which means that if you are accused of one of these crimes, you can be prosecuted at any time, no matter how long ago the crime was committed.

Under the Act, there is no longer a statute of limitations for any felony listed in Chapter 109A (Sexual Abuse), Chapter 110 (Sexual Exploitation and Other Abuse of Children),¹⁴¹ and Chapter 117 (Transportation for Illegal Sexual Activity and Related Crimes), or for charges under Sections 1201 (kidnapping of a minor) or 1591 (sex trafficking).¹⁴²

(e) Bail

The Act adds certain sex offenses to the list of those for which a court must hold a bail hearing (if the government moves for one). The offenses that require one of these bail hearings now include “any felony that is not otherwise a crime of violence that involves a minor victim or that involves the possession or use of a firearm or any dangerous weapon, or involves the failure to register [as a sex offender].”¹⁴³

(f) DNA Collection

The Adam Walsh Act lets the government collect the DNA of certain people, even if those people do not consent. Individuals who are facing charges may be compelled by the Attorney General to give a DNA sample. The category of people “facing charges” includes those who are currently charged by indictment, information, or complaint, but are not currently under arrest.¹⁴⁴ Individuals who are convicted also must give samples to the Attorney General. This category includes persons who are convicted of any offense—not only felonies or crimes of violence—but they must at least be “in custody.”¹⁴⁵

138. 18 U.S.C. § 3559(f)(1)–(3).

139. 18 U.S.C. § 1591(a), (b)(1)–(2).

140. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 2422(b) (stating that the maximum term of imprisonment for coercion and enticement is life imprisonment and the minimum term is ten years); 18 U.S.C. § 2423(a) (indicating that the maximum term of imprisonment for conduct relating to transportation of minors for prostitution is life imprisonment and the minimum term is ten years); 18 U.S.C. § 2242 (2019) (asserting that the maximum term of imprisonment for sexual abuse in prison can be up to life. There is no mandatory minimum term under this statute).

141. Except for violations of the record-keeping requirements set forth in sections 2257 and 2257A of Chapter 110, for which the statute of limitations still applies. 18 U.S.C. § 3299.

142. 18 U.S.C. § 3299.

143. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f)(1)(E).

144. 34 U.S.C. § 40702(a)(1)(A); see also DNA-Sample Collection and Biological Evidence Preservation in the Federal Jurisdiction, 73 Fed. Reg. 74,932, 74,936–74,937 (Dec. 10, 2008) (to be codified at 28 C.F.R. pt. 28) (“[T]he rule reflects a judgment that the implication of individuals in criminal activity to the extent of being arrested sufficiently supports the taking of certain identification information from such individuals.”).

145. 34 U.S.C. § 40702 (a)(1)(A)–(B), (a)(5), (d).

(g) Probation/Supervised Release

The Act creates a discretionary condition of probation or supervised release (meaning that the judge can choose to impose this condition but does not have to impose it).¹⁴⁶ If the judge does impose such a condition, you must submit yourself and your property, including your house, vehicle, computer, and electronic devices to a search any time a law enforcement officer has a “reasonable suspicion” that you have violated a condition of probation.¹⁴⁷ In this case, the officer does not need a warrant to search you or your property as long as the he is acting within his law enforcement duties.¹⁴⁸

(h) Sex Offender Management and Treatment Programs

The statute requires the Bureau of Prisons to make appropriate treatment available to sex offenders who need treatment and who are suitable for it.¹⁴⁹ Such programs include sex offender management programs¹⁵⁰ and residential sex offender treatment programs.¹⁵¹ Participation in this type of program can be very important for determining whether you are eligible for parole. Programs in New York State are discussed in Part C of this Chapter, which gives you an overview of the kinds of services available.

(i) Victim Rights

The Act now permits minor victims of sex crimes to initiate civil actions against the person who violated them, regardless of whether the victim actually suffered a physical injury while a minor.¹⁵² Furthermore, the Act raised the amount of money available to the victim from $50,000 to $150,000.¹⁵³

The Act also gives specific rights to victims in habeas corpus proceedings (see JLM, Chapters 13 and 21 for more information about habeas corpus): the right not to be excluded, the right to be reasonably heard, the right to proceedings free from unreasonable delay, and the right to be treated with fairness and respect for the dignity and privacy of the victim.¹⁵⁴

J. Civil Commitment

Civil commitment is the practice of confining someone without a criminal conviction because the person is determined to be dangerous. This confinement may be involuntary and indefinite. It may be imposed instead of a criminal sentence, or after a criminal sentence is completed. However, civil commitment requires a determination that you are likely to commit future sexually violent acts. Many states have a general civil commitment statute, which allows for the commitment of persons who fall into various categories of mental illness or dangerousness.

While some sexually violent individuals can be committed under more general civil commitment statutes, many cannot because their behavior often does not fit within the narrow definitions of “mental illness” used in these statutes. In response to these narrow definitions in general civil commitment statutes, many states have passed laws providing for the involuntary civil commitment of sex offenders.¹⁵⁵ The Supreme Court has said that involuntary civil commitment does not violate a person’s due process rights as long as the State can show that the person has a mental illness and

146. 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(23).

147. 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(23).

148. 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(23).

149. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(f)(1).

150. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(f)(1)(A).

151. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(f)(1)(B).

152. 18 U.S.C. § 2255(a).

153. 18 U.S.C. § 2255(a); The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109–248, § 707(b)(2), 120 Stat. 587, 650 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 18, 28, 42 U.S.C.).

154. 18 U.S.C. § 3771(b)(2)(A).

155. See, e.g., N.Y. MENTAL HYG. § 10.01 (McKinney 2020) (establishing standards and procedures for the involuntary commitment of dangerous sex offenders).

presents a risk of future danger to himself or to others.¹⁵⁶ In United States v. Comstock, the Supreme Court said that a federal law allowing district courts to commit an incarcerated person in civil commitment beyond the date that the incarcerated person would otherwise be released was constitutional (legal) under the Necessary and Proper clause.¹⁵⁷ In addition to these state laws, Congress, through the Adam Walsh Act, created the Jimmy Ryce Civil Commitment Program for Dangerous Sex Offenders, a federal civil commitment law discussed in detail in Part I(2)(b) below.

It is difficult to challenge civil commitment statutes, as courts have generally upheld them when the state can show that the person the state wants to confine is a danger to himself or to others. In Kansas v. Hendricks, the Supreme Court explained that civil confinement of a sex offender does not violate substantive due process, equal protection, or the double jeopardy provisions of the Constitution.¹⁵⁸ The Court determined that the Kansas statute was a civil remedy, which only applied to the “dangerously mentally ill,” and that the statute was not an additional criminal punishment for sex offenders.¹⁵⁹ Later, in Seling v. Young, the Court said that, if a commitment statute is civil (as opposed to criminal) in nature, it cannot be considered a punishment, and therefore it does not violate the Constitution.¹⁶⁰

It is important for you to know that the Supreme Court refined its decision in Kansas v. Hendricks, later setting a limit on the conditions under which states can keep convicted sexual predators in civil confinement after their criminal sentences have expired.¹⁶¹ In Kansas v. Crane, the Court said that states must prove not only that an offender remained dangerous and was likely to repeat a crime, but also that the offender had a psychiatric diagnosis which included a “serious difficulty in controlling behavior.”¹⁶² Therefore, each civil commitment case must be evaluated individually to see if it meets this standard. The Court decided to require this additional finding to make certain that a civilly confined offender was actually mentally ill and dangerous, not simply a “typical recidivist convicted in an ordinary criminal case.”¹⁶³ A recidivist, commonly called a “repeat offender,” is “someone who has been convicted of multiple criminal offenses, usually similar in nature.”¹⁶⁴

After Crane, civil commitment requires a psychiatric evaluation that an offender lacks control over his actions. Without such a determination, the practice would not be sufficiently different from criminal punishment. This reflects a shift towards using civil commitment statutes for treatment and not merely for detention of sex offenders. Those offenders who are civilly confined are now usually held in mental health facilities—either separate from a correctional facility or part of a larger correctional facility. Under New York law, these facilities must have staff from “the office of mental health or the office for people with developmental disabilities for the purposes of providing care and treatment to persons confined. . . .”¹⁶⁵

156. Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346, 357, 370, 117 S. Ct. 2072, 2079–2080, 2086, 138 L. Ed. 2d 501, 512, 520 (1997) (finding that the Kansas civil commitment act satisfied due process requirements because it unambiguously required a finding of dangerousness either to one’s self or to others as a prerequisite to involuntary confinement).

157. United States v. Comstock, 560 U.S. 126, 133–135, 130 S. Ct. 1949, 1956–1958, 176 L. Ed. 2d 878, 888–891 (2010).

158. Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346, 371, 117 S. Ct. 2072, 2086, 138 L. Ed. 2d 501, 521 (1997).

159. Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346, 363, 117 S. Ct. 2072, 2083, 138 L. Ed. 2d 501, 516 (1997).

160. Seling v. Young, 531 U.S. 250, 262–263, 121 S. Ct. 727, 734–735, 148 L. Ed. 2d 734, 746–747 (2001) (“For those individuals with untreatable conditions, however, we explained that there was no federal constitutional bar to their civil confinement, because the State had an interest in protecting the public from dangerous individuals with treatable as well as untreatable conditions.”).

161. Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 411, 413, 122 S. Ct. 867, 869–870, 151 L. Ed. 2d 856, 861–862 (2002) (finding that where a sexual offender suffered from both exhibitionism and anti-social personality disorder, the state was required to prove a serious difficulty in controlling behavior in order to commit sexual offender).

162. Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 413, 122 S. Ct. 867, 870, 151 L. Ed. 2d 856, 862 (2002).

163. Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 413, 122 S. Ct. 867, 870, 151 L. Ed. 2d 856, 863 (2002).

164. Recidivist, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

165. N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.03(o) (McKinney 2020).

Civil commitment will affect your life in many ways. As an example, sex offenders in civil commitment facilities are now no longer able to receive federal Pell grants to pay for their education.¹⁶⁶ You should do further research to determine how else civil commitment will change your rights and options.

1. Procedures

Civil commitment procedures vary by state, so be certain to check what statutes apply to you. Civil commitment of sex offenders typically occurs after you have completed your criminal sentence. Generally, the state attorney general's office and various other agencies will be notified when you are nearing release from prison. One or more state committees, usually composed of mental health experts, will review your records and will recommend confinement if they determine that you are a sexually violent predator.¹⁶⁷

After getting a recommendation for civil commitment, the state Attorney General, state prosecutors, or other state officials will file a petition alleging that you are a sexually violent predator. You will then have a trial in front of a judge or jury. In most states, you are entitled to assistance of counsel at all stages of these proceedings.¹⁶⁸ You may also be entitled to have a psychological expert of your choice examine you, at the state's expense.¹⁶⁹

If you are found to be a sexually violent predator, in most states you have the right to appeal that determination.¹⁷⁰ If you lose the appeal and are committed, you will likely be committed to a facility especially dedicated to the detention and treatment of sex offenders. You will be detained there indefinitely. Usually, your psychological health and danger to the community will be re-evaluated once a year in order to determine whether you should be released.¹⁷¹

Because of the wide variations in state civil commitment schemes, it is important that you consult your own state's criminal code to determine whether your state has a civil commitment statute, and to learn its specific details.

2. Statutes

(a) States generally

Following Hendricks and Crane, many states have adopted laws like the Kansas statute. The statutes have three main requirements that they share. To be committed, you must:

- (1) have engaged in some criminal sexual conduct;
- (2) have a specified mental condition; and
- (3) because of your mental disease or defect, be likely to engage in criminal sexual conduct in the future.¹⁷²

166. Higher Education Opportunity Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-315, 122 Stat. 3078 (2008) (amending 20 U.S.C. 1070a(b)(2)(A)), available at <https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/PLAW-110publ315/pdf/PLAW-110publ315.pdf> (last visited Aug. 16, 2020).

167. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 394.913 (2014) (describing the multidisciplinary team that evaluates your record); VA. CODE ANN. § 37.2-902 (2011) (stating that records are reviewed by committee); CAL. WELFARE & INST. CODE § 6601 (2013); TEX. HEALTH & SAFETY CODE ANN. §§ 841.022 to .023 (2013).

168. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 394.916 (2014) (stating person is entitled to counsel); VA. CODE ANN. § 37.2-901 (2013) (specifying person's right to counsel); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 30:4-27.29 (2013); 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 207/25 (2013); IOWA CODE ANN. § 229A.5(2)(d) (2013); TEX. HEALTH & SAFETY CODE ANN. § 841.005 (2013).

169. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 394.916 (2014) (stating that person may retain own professional); 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 207/25 (2013) (stating that person may appoint their own expert); N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.06 (McKinney 2020); VA. CODE ANN. § 37.2-907 (2013).

170. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 394.917 (2014) (specifying right to appeal determination); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 71.09.080 (2013) (providing that nothing in the chapter prohibits a person from exercising a right available elsewhere); 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 207/35 (2013); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 71.09.060 (2013).

171. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 394.918 (2014) (providing that individual will be evaluated yearly); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 36-3708 (2013) (same); 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 207/55 (2014); VA. CODE ANN. §§ 37.2-910-912 (2013).

172. See, e.g., CAL. WELFARE & INST. CODE § 6600(a)(1) (2013).

Although state statutes follow this general pattern, they differ in a number of ways. In finding “criminal sexual conduct” for the purposes of the first requirement, some states require a sex offense conviction, while others require only that a person be charged with a sex offense, and a few simply require that the person have “committed” an illegal sexual act.¹⁷³ States also vary on whether the case must be heard in front of a judge or jury and how much proof the state must provide of your condition and the danger you pose.¹⁷⁴ The statutes either require proof “beyond a reasonable doubt” or by “clear and convincing evidence.” “Beyond a reasonable doubt” is a high standard of proof and is used at criminal trials. “Clear and convincing evidence” is a slightly easier standard for the state to meet. If you are facing civil commitment, you must research your state’s laws and determine what sort of assistance you are entitled to.

(b) New York

Until April 2007, New York State did not have a civil commitment statute for sex offenders. Even without specific civil commitment legislation aimed at sex offenders, in some cases state officials had succeeded in civilly committing sex offenders under the regular civil commitment scheme. Some individuals who were civilly committed under the general scheme are entitled to have the issue adjudicated under the procedure set forth in New York’s Sex Offender Management and Treatment Act.¹⁷⁵ The civil commitment scheme is mainly used for the mentally ill.¹⁷⁶

In 2007, the New York Legislature passed The Sex Offender Management and Treatment Act, which can be found in Article 10 of the N.Y. Mental Hygiene Law. The Act lays out a procedure for the civil commitment of dangerous sex offenders, discussed below. The Court of Appeals of New York upheld the Act as applied to people charged with sex offenses, convicted of sex offenses, or people who were patients of a state mental hospital since September 1, 2005.¹⁷⁷

New York State’s civil commitment statute is similar to other states’ statutes. About 120 days before you are released from prison, the parole board will give notice to the commissioner on health, who will determine if you are a sex offender who requires civil commitment.¹⁷⁸ Then, the Attorney General may file a petition seeking commitment, which you can contest in a hearing.¹⁷⁹ If, after the hearing, the court decides that you are probably a sex offender requiring civil commitment, the court

173. See, e.g., KAN. STAT. ANN. § 59-29a02(a) (2013) (defining sexually violent predator as “any person who has been convicted of or charged with a sexually violent offense and who suffers from a mental abnormality or personality disorder which makes the person likely to engage in repeat acts of sexual violence.”).

174. See, e.g., KAN. STAT. ANN. § 59-29a06(d) (2013) (providing that a jury trial may be requested by one of the parties or the court, but if no jury is requested the trial will be before the court.).

175. State of N.Y. ex rel. Harkavy v. Consilvio, 8 N.Y.3d 645, 651, 870 N.E.2d 128, 131, 838 N.Y.S.2d 810, 813 (2007) (finding that certain individuals who were transferred without precommitment hearings, and thus were improperly committed under N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 9, were entitled to adjudication under the new N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10 procedures.)

176. See, e.g., Doe v. Pataki, 120 F.3d 1263, 1281, 1285 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that a statute requiring the involuntary commitment of “mentally abnormal” sex offenders pursuant to a civil commitment statute is valid). See generally N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW §§ 9.27–9.37 (McKinney 2020) (describing the procedure for involuntary hospital admissions for mental illness).

177. State of N.Y. ex rel. Joseph v. Superintendent of Southport Corr. Facility, 15 N.Y.3d 126, 132, 135 931 N.E.2d 76, 79, 81, 2010 N.Y.S.2d 107, 110, 112 (2010) (affirming that Article 10’s procedure is the appropriate standard for future civil commitment proceedings); State of N.Y. ex rel. Harkavy v. Consilvio, 8 N.Y.3d 645, 652, 870 N.E.2d 128, 132, 838 N.Y.S.2d 810, 814 (2007) (holding that the state must adhere to the procedural protections set forth in Article 10 of the N.Y. Mental Hygiene Law).

178. N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.05 (McKinney 2020).

179. N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.06 (McKinney 2020).

will conduct a trial to figure out if this is really the case.¹⁸⁰ If you are found to be a danger in this trial, you will be committed.¹⁸¹

(c) Federal Civil Commitment: The Adam Walsh Act

Under the Federal Jimmy Ryce Civil Commitment Program for Dangerous Sex Offenders, codified at 18 U.S.C. §§ 4247, 4248, the Attorney General, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, or anyone authorized by the Attorney General, can seek to civilly commit anyone in Bureau of Prisons custody (in federal prison) by “certifying” the offender as “sexually dangerous.” This is a very serious designation because, practically speaking, civil commitment may turn into a life sentence for those in custody.

(i) Under the Adam Walsh Act, who can be civilly committed?

Anyone in Bureau of Prisons custody (in federal prison) may be civilly committed—even if you were not incarcerated for a sexual offense. It is, however, most common for an incarcerated person convicted of a sexual crime to be considered for civil commitment. There is no competency or insanity requirement.

(ii) What is the definition of a “sexually dangerous person?”

According to the statute, a “sexually dangerous person” is “a person who has engaged or attempted to engage in sexually violent conduct or child molestation and who is sexually dangerous to others.”¹⁸² A person is “sexually dangerous to others” if he “suffers from a serious mental illness, abnormality, or disorder as a result of which he would have serious difficulty in refraining from sexually violent conduct or child molestation if released.”¹⁸³ Some of the key terms are not defined within the statute, such as “sexually violent conduct,” “child molestation,” and “serious difficulty.” The definition of “sexually dangerous person” has been criticized for being overly broad and overly inclusive.

(iii) What is the procedure for determining whether an incarcerated person is “sexually dangerous?”

The Bureau of Prisons (“BOP”) reviews all incarcerated people, and when they identify an incarcerated person they believe may be “sexually dangerous,” BOP staff members then conduct a full evaluation of that incarcerated person. An incarcerated person is not provided with an attorney at this point, and no Miranda warnings are given.¹⁸⁴

The incarcerated person is given a form to sign which states that (1) there will be an evaluation consisting of interviews, review of records, and testing; (2) he understands that it will be used to determine his eligibility for civil commitment as a sexually dangerous person after he serves his sentence; (3) he understands that the results will be related to BOP officials and “others with a need to know” including the court, the government, and his lawyer; and (4) the evaluation will be completed whether or not he

180. N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.07(f) (McKinney 2020) (“If the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent has a mental abnormality involving such a strong predisposition to commit sex offenses, and such an inability to control behavior, that the respondent is likely to be a danger to others and to commit sex offenses if not confined to a secure treatment facility, then the court shall find the respondent to be a dangerous sex offender requiring confinement.”).

181. N.Y. MENTAL HYG. LAW § 10.07(f) (McKinney 2020).

182. 18 U.S.C. § 4247(a)(5).

183. 18 U.S.C. § 4247(a)(6).

184. See Memorandum from Amy Baron-Evans & Sara Noonan to Defenders & CJA Counsel 4 (Sept. 10, 2007, as revised Sept. 25, 2007), available at <https://www.prisonlegalnews.org/news/publications/memo-to-cja-counsel-civil-commitment-report-2007/> (last visited Oct. 10, 2020).

participates. Incarcerated people have made statements during this process that were used to support a sexually dangerous certification.¹⁸⁵

- (iv) What happens after an incarcerated person is found to be “sexually dangerous?”

If the BOP certifies an incarcerated person as sexually dangerous, the certificate is filed with the court in the district in which the incarcerated person was confined.¹⁸⁶ The filing of the certificate “stays” the incarcerated person’s release (meaning that the release is delayed) until a decision is reached about the incarcerated person possibly being civilly committed. This is a particular concern because these certificates are often filed immediately before an incarcerated person is due to be released—often within days or even hours.

- (v) Can you challenge Federal civil commitment?

In United States v. Comstock, the United States Supreme Court overruled the North Carolina court and settled the issue for now. The Court concluded that it was within Congress’ power to enact 18 U.S.C. § 4248, and it was not an unconstitutional use of the Necessary and Proper clause.¹⁸⁷ The Court’s reasoning rested on the idea that the federal government had a special interest in protecting society from the incarcerated people who are committed and that the law only affected a small portion of the population of incarcerated people.¹⁸⁸

K. Conclusion

Sex offenders face special concerns both while they are in prison and after they are released. In prison, these issues include HIV testing, post-conviction DNA testing, protective custody, and the importance of attending sex offender counseling programs to receive good time credit. Upon release from prison, incarcerated people should be aware of special parole conditions, community registration laws, and the possibility of civil commitment to psychiatric hospitals.

185. See Memorandum from Amy Baron-Evans & Sara Noonan to Defenders, CJA Counsel 4 (Sept. 10, 2007, as revised Sept. 25, 2007), available at <https://www.prisonlegalnews.org/news/publications/memo-to-cja-counsel-civil-commitment-report-2007/> (last visited Oct. 10, 2020). Referenced evaluation form can be found in Appendix A below.

186. 18 U.S.C. § 4248(a).

187. United States v. Comstock, 560 U.S. 126, 149, 130 S. Ct. 1949, 1965, 176 L. Ed. 2d 878, 899 (2010) (holding that “the statute is a ‘necessary and proper’ means of exercising the federal authority that permits Congress to create federal criminal laws, to punish their violation, to imprison violators, to provide appropriately for those imprisoned, and to maintain the security of those who are not imprisoned but who may be affected by the federal imprisonment of others”).

188. United States v. Comstock, 560 U.S. 126, 148, 130 S. Ct. 1949, 1964, 176 L. Ed. 2d 878, 898 (2010).

APPENDIX A

BP-A1044

NOTICE OF PSYCHOLOGICAL EVALUATION

FEB 16

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
BUREAU OF PRISONS

FEDERAL

I, _____, understand that I am the subject of a psychological evaluation to be conducted by forensic psychology services staff to determine the existence of a diagnosis and perform a risk assessment prior to my release.

I understand that the forensic psychologist named below will perform this evaluation, and will conduct it in an impartial and objective manner.

I understand that this evaluation may be considered by the Bureau of Prisons when reviewing my case for possible civil commitment pursuant to Title 18 U.S.C. § 4248, whereby I may be committed to a suitable facility after the expiration of my criminal sentence.

I understand that this psychological evaluation may consist of individual clinical interviews, a review of official records, contact with persons involved in my case, and psychological testing.

I understand that the results of this evaluation may be documented in a written report that may be communicated to the Court, my legal counsel, and counsel for the Government. It is possible that this information may be revealed in open court proceedings.

I understand that I may agree to participate or refuse to participate, in whole or in part, in the interview or testing components of this evaluation, and that the evaluation will be completed whether or not I choose to participate in the evaluation process.

Examinee Name (printed & signed)

BOP Register Number

Evaluation Name (printed & signed)

Date

CHAPTER 37

RIGHTS UPON RELEASE*

This Chapter discusses many of the legal issues you may face after your release from prison. Part A discusses housing rights and registration laws. Part B discusses your eligibility for public benefits, Part C addresses employment, and Part D discusses child custody issues. Part E addresses your eligibility for military service when you have a criminal conviction, and Part F describes the effects of criminal convictions on your right to vote and other political rights. For the most part, these sections will discuss relevant federal and New York State law. The sections dealing with federal law will apply to you even if you do not live in New York State. However, if you do not live in New York, you should consult the appropriate state laws to learn your rights in the state in which you live. For more details about how your conviction may affect you in your state, visit the National Inventory of Collateral Consequences of Conviction website, at <https://niccc.nationalreentryresourcecenter.org/>.¹

A. Housing Rights and Registration

1. Private Housing

(a) Buying or Renting

If you are trying to buy or rent housing from a private party, your criminal conviction will probably make things more difficult for you. (If you want public housing assistance, see Section 2(a) below.) The federal Fair Housing Act² prevents public and private parties from discriminating against potential buyers or renters on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin. However, there is no law that prevents private parties from deciding not to sell or rent to you because of your criminal history. Although there is no law requiring you to report your criminal history when you fill out a rental application, the landlord may ask you to provide this information on the application. Further, your criminal record may show up if your landlord checks your credit history. In addition, a lender will also likely check your credit history before agreeing to give you a mortgage.

The Fair Housing Act also allows landlords to refuse to rent or sell “to an individual whose tenancy would constitute a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals or whose tenancy would result in substantial physical damage to the property of others.”³ Under this provision, as well as under some state laws, a landlord may decide that your criminal history poses a threat to others and their property, and refuse to sell or rent to you on that basis.⁴ The landlord or seller may refuse to rent or sell to you on these grounds even if you would otherwise be protected under the Fair Housing Act. For example, if you have a disability but your criminal history indicates that you would pose a threat to others, the landlord may choose not to rent to you. Since the exclusion is based on the landlord’s belief that you pose a threat because of your criminal history, not because of your actual disability, the exclusion does not violate the Fair Housing Act. If brought to court, a landlord who wants to exclude you on the basis of your criminal history will have to show “objective evidence that is sufficiently recent

* This Chapter was revised by Tomica Burke, based in part on previous versions by Leah Laben, Sara Manaugh, and Laura Kittross. Special thanks to J. McGregor Smyth from The Bronx Defenders, and Amanda Lockshin and Heidi Cain of the Legal Aid Society for their valuable comments.

1. Collateral Consequences Inventory, NATIONAL INVENTORY OF COLLATERAL CONSEQUENCES OF CONVICTION, available at <https://niccc.nationalreentryresourcecenter.org/> (last visited Nov. 27, 2020).

2. Discrimination in the sale or rental of housing and other prohibited practices, 42 U.S.C. § 3604.

3. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(9).

4. See Talley v. Lane, 13 F.3d 1031, 1034 (7th Cir. 1994) (finding under the Fair Housing Act that the landlord has the “discretion to find that individuals with a history of convictions for property and assaultative crimes would be a direct threat to other tenants and to deny their applications.”); see also Collins v. AAA Homebuilders, 175 W. Va. 427, 428, 333 S.E.2d 792, 793 (W. Va. 1985) (finding under West Virginia state law, “that a private landlord may consider all factors, including criminal convictions, which may affect the health, safety, or welfare of other tenants . . .”).

as to be credible, and not from unsubstantiated inferences, that [you] will pose a direct threat to the health and safety of others.”⁵

(b) Exception for Participants in Drug Rehabilitation Programs

There is a possible exception to the landlord's ability to reject your application based on your criminal history. If your conviction was for possession of drugs, and you no longer use drugs and you are in a drug rehabilitation program, then the landlord may not reject your application based on your criminal conviction. The Fair Housing Act outlaws discrimination against someone based on his handicap.⁶ In the Fair Housing Act, the term “handicap” is defined as “(1) a physical or mental impairment which substantially limits one or more of such person's major life activities, (2) a record of having such an impairment, or (3) being regarded as having such impairment.”⁷ “Handicap” does not include “current, illegal use of or addiction to a controlled substance.”⁸ However, a person's past drug dependency, together with his participation in a drug rehabilitation program is considered a handicap.⁹ If you are handicapped by your former addiction and are in a rehabilitation program, the landlord may not reject your application based only on your past drug possession conviction.

2. Subsidized Housing: Public Housing & Section 8

The federal government, through the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), regulates and helps fund state and local agencies that provide housing assistance to those in need. This assistance comes in various forms, including low-cost housing in public housing projects, subsidized rents for certain private rental units, Section 8 housing,¹⁰ and help with mortgages and down payments on homes.¹¹

5. United States v. Mass. Indus. Fin. Agency, 910 F. Supp. 21, 27 (D. Mass. 1996) (finding that the “direct threat” exemption from the Fair Housing Act should be narrowly construed, so that mere inferences of a threat are not sufficient for the landlord to refuse to sell or rent to you if you are otherwise protected under the Fair Housing Act); see also Oxford House-Evergreen v. City of Plainfield, 769 F. Supp. 1329, 1343 (D.N.J. 1991) (finding that speculative conclusions about the tenant (such as a speculation that increased vandalism was caused by the tenant) are not enough to show that the tenant poses a direct threat).

6. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(2).

7. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(h).

8. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(h).

9. See Peabody Prop. v. Sherman, 418 Mass. 603, 605–606, 638 N.E.2d 906, 908 (Mass. 1994) (holding that, although defendant's drug dependency coupled with his later participation in a drug rehabilitation program was considered a handicap, the term “handicap” did not include current, illegal use of drugs); see also United States v. S. Mgmt. Corp., 955 F.2d 914, 919 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding that recovering addicts came within the definition of “handicap” because they had an impairment that substantially limited a major life activity as a result of the attitudes of others toward such impairment). But see Mauerhan v. Wagner Corp., 649 F.3d 1180, 1185–1186 (10th Cir. 2011) (finding 30 days of sobriety to be insufficient under the safe harbor provision); Brown v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 246 F.3d 1182, 1186 (9th Cir. 2001) (finding that “the ‘safe harbor’ provision applies only to employees who have refrained from using drugs for a significant period of time”); Shafer v. Preston Mem'l Hosp. Corp., 107 F.3d 274, 277 n.4 (4th Cir. 1997) (suggesting that a person who had been drug-free for less than one year may not have a “handicap” under the Fair Housing Act, unlike the recovering addicts in United States v. S. Mgmt. Corp., 955 F.2d 914, 919 (4th Cir. 1992)).

10. Section 8 is the common name for the federal program that lets you find your own place to rent, and gives you vouchers to pay for all or part of the rent. You may also see the Section 8 program referred to as “Housing Choice Vouchers.” There are certain income limits set for Section 8 Housing. See 24 C.F.R. § 982.201(b) (2018); Rental Assistance – HUD, http://portal.hud.gov:80/hudportal/HUD?src=/topics/rental_assistance (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

11. See Buying a Home, U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), https://www.hud.gov/topics/buying_a_home (last visited Sept. 29, 2019); see also Appendix A of this Chapter to find out how to contact HUD by mail or phone.

(a) Federal Housing Restrictions

People with criminal convictions may be eligible to receive housing assistance. However, there are a number of public housing laws that will affect your eligibility. First, federal laws require that some individuals be denied housing assistance:

- (1) If you have been evicted from public, federally assisted, or Section 8 housing because of drug-related criminal activity, you are ineligible for public or federally assisted housing for three years.¹² However, the housing provider has the discretion to shorten the three-year period if you successfully complete a rehabilitation program approved by the local housing provider.¹³ The three-year period begins to run from the date of the eviction.¹⁴
- (2) If you are subject to a lifetime registration requirement under a sex offender registration program, you are permanently ineligible for public, Section 8, and other federally assisted housing. For more information on registration programs, see Section 3 below.¹⁵
- (3) If you have been convicted of methamphetamine production while living on public housing premises, you are permanently ineligible for public, Section 8, and other federally assisted housing.¹⁶
- (4) If you or a member of your household is currently abusing alcohol in a manner that may interfere with the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents, or if you or a member of your household is illegally using drugs, you are ineligible for public, Section 8 or other federally assisted housing.¹⁷ The housing provider may decide to admit you to housing or allow you to remain in your residence if you (or a member of your household, where applicable) demonstrate that you are not currently abusing alcohol or illegally using drugs and have been rehabilitated in any one of three ways: (1) completion of a supervised alcohol or drug rehabilitation program, (2) successful rehabilitation in some other manner, or (3) participation in a supervised alcohol or drug rehabilitation program.¹⁸
- (5) Finally, public housing assistance will be denied or revoked if you are fleeing to avoid prosecution, custody, or confinement on a felony charge or conviction,¹⁹ or if you are in violation of the conditions of your probation or parole under state or federal law.²⁰

The federal public housing law permits housing assistance to be denied to you if you have certain other kinds of criminal records.²¹ If you have engaged in (1) any drug-related criminal activity; (2) any violent criminal activity; or (3) any other criminal activity that would adversely affect the health, safety, or someone else's right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises, you may be denied public, Section 8, and other federally assisted housing.²² The public housing agency or owner of the housing can only deny you for these crimes if the crime occurred "reasonably" recently.²³ However, even if the criminal

12. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(a). "Drug-related criminal activity" means "the illegal manufacture, sale, distribution, use, or possession with intent to manufacture, sell, distribute, or use, of a controlled substance." 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)(9).

13. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(a).

14. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(a).

15. 24 C.F.R. § 5.856 (2018).

16. 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(f).

17. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b)(1).

18. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b)(2).

19. 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(d)(1)(B)(v)(I). (There is an exception for New Jersey "high misdemeanors." High misdemeanors refer to crimes of the first, second, or third degree and reference to the term "misdemeanor" shall mean all crimes).

20. 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(d)(1)(B)(v)(II).

21. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(c)(1). The unfortunate reality is that most public housing agencies will exclude individuals on the basis of most criminal records.

22. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(c).

23. There is no specific time period which is defined as "reasonable" in this context. The individual owner activity was not reasonably recent, the housing agency or owner may require you to show evidence that you have not engaged in any other criminal activity recently.²⁴

If you have engaged in any of the three categories of criminal activities listed in the above paragraph, the housing authorities may also choose to terminate your existing lease. In determining whether to end a lease for the above reasons, HUD encourages housing authorities to take into account individual circumstances such as the seriousness of the offending action²⁵, the extent of the involvement of the leaseholder²⁶, and whether the leaseholder took all possible steps to prevent the action from occurring, or has otherwise removed the offending person from the lease or banned him from the premises.²⁷

(b) Housing Restrictions Specific to New York City

The New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA) is one of the local agencies that provides housing assistance in New York City. NYCHA has a specific set of rules regarding whether and for how long someone with a criminal conviction is ineligible for public housing assistance. The following chart²⁸ shows how NYCHA applies the public housing laws to people with past convictions. The first column represents the conviction and the second column represents how long someone with that conviction remains ineligible for public housing assistance.

NYCHA Public Housing
Criminal Conviction	Years After Serving Sentence*
Subject to a lifetime registration requirement under a state sex offender registration program	Until the convicted person is no longer subject to a lifetime registration requirement
Felonies Class A, B, and C Class D and E	6 years 5 years
Misdemeanors Class A Class B or unclassified	4 years (5 years if 3+ convictions for Class A misdemeanors or felonies within last 10 years) 3 years (4 years if 3+ convictions for misdemeanors or felonies within last 10 years)
Violations or Infractions Violations or DWI	2 years (3 years if 3+ convictions for felonies, misdemeanors, violations, or DWI infractions within last 10 years)
Multiple Convictions	Ineligible for longest applicable period

* Sentence is served after completion of any probation or parole time and the payment of any fines.

of the housing, or the public housing authority, is allowed to make his own determination about what a reasonable amount of time is. 24 C.F.R. § 5.855 (2018). See also Screening and Eviction for Drug Abuse and Other Criminal Activity, 66 Fed. Reg. 28,776 (May 24, 2001) (stating that HUD “believes it would be too rigid for it to define a reasonable time period in a manner that covers every circumstance nationally”).

24. 42 U.S.C. § 13661(c)(2).

25. 24 C.F.R. § 5.852(a)(1) (2018).

26. 24 C.F.R. § 5.861 (2018).

27. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.852(e) (2018).

28. The chart was prepared by The Bronx Defenders. For more information about NYCHA, see <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/nycha/index.page> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

When you are applying for housing assistance, the housing assistance agency has the right to get your criminal record from the National Crime Information Center, police departments, and other law enforcement agencies.²⁹ If you are applying for Section 8 housing, the housing assistance agency can also get your criminal record and provide it to the building owner.³⁰ If the agency or owner decides to deny your application based on your criminal record, they must give you a copy of the criminal record that they got from the police and give you an opportunity to dispute the accuracy or relevance of the record.³¹ You also have a right to confidentiality. This means that the housing agency or owner who gets your criminal record for the purpose of your housing application cannot disclose the information in your record to anyone else not involved in the agency process, except if necessary during eviction proceedings.³²

Another agency that provides housing assistance is the New York City Department of Housing Preservation (HPD). The HPD only offers Section 8 vouchers to a targeted group of New Yorkers in need. To qualify, you must fall under the category of a “homeless household.” HPD defines a homeless household as (1) one in which your primary nighttime residence is either at a publicly or privately operated short-term living shelter, or (2) a household in which the person temporarily lives with another person in HPD’s jurisdiction AND has been classified as homeless by HPD’s Emergency Housing Services Bureau.³³

The New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal (DHCR) also offers Section 8 vouchers on a statewide level (including New York City) through its Housing Choice Voucher (HCV) program.³⁴

Both the New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development and the New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal have restrictions for individuals with criminal convictions, but they are not as specific and detailed as the NYCHA’s restrictions. Instead, these organizations use their discretion in deciding whether to give benefits to someone with a criminal record.³⁵ They also follow the federal regulations on housing mentioned in Section 2.

(c) Appealing Ineligibility for Housing Assistance

If the housing authority considers you ineligible for public housing or Section 8 assistance, you may ask for an informal hearing before an administrative hearing officer to appeal the housing authority’s decision.³⁶ At the informal hearing, the hearing officer will consider evidence of rehabilitation to determine if a person with a criminal conviction should be eligible for housing assistance. Evidence of rehabilitation can include evidence of participation in counseling programs, work records, job-training programs, and, for arrests involving drugs or alcohol, drug and/or alcohol treatment. However, level 2 (tier II) or level 3 (tier III) sex offenders are not eligible for housing

29. 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(q)(1)(A).

30. 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(q)(1)(B).

31. 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(q)(2).

32. 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(q)(5). If the agency does breach your confidentiality with regard to your criminal record, you have the right to bring a civil action for damages and other relief. 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(q)(7).

33. See Section 8 Eligibility, NYC Housing Preservation and Development, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/hpd/section-8/applicants-eligibility.page> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

34. See Section 8 - Housing Choice Voucher (HCV) Program, New York State Homes & Community Renewal, available at <https://hcr.ny.gov/section-8-housing-choice-voucher-hcv-program> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

35. See New York State Homes and Community Renewal, Know Your Rights: New Anti-Discrimination Guidance Affecting People with Criminal Histories (June 2016), available at <https://hcr.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2018/11/info-housing-applicants.pdf> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019) for more information on what housing operators should consider when deciding whether or not to grant you access to state-funded housing.

36. See Section 8 Eligibility, NYC Housing Preservation and Development, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/hpd/section-8/applicants-eligibility.page> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

assistance.³⁷ The next section explains the tier ratings for sex offenses. For NYCHA, if the hearing officer finds in favor of the applicant, the original application will be returned to the Department of Housing Applications for processing. The hearing officer's decision is final upon written notification to the applicant.³⁸ Both HPD and DHCR also have informal reviews available to challenge ineligibility determinations.³⁹

There is often a long waiting list for public housing assistance, so you will probably want to begin the application process as soon as possible. Begin by contacting your state or local housing authority to find out how to apply. A partial list of agencies that you can contact is included in Appendix A of this Chapter.

3. Registration Laws for Sexually Violent Offenses⁴⁰

If you are a registered sex offender, basically every state restricts your ability to live near schools, daycare centers, and/or other places children often go, such as playgrounds. Under New York State law, for example, level III sex offenders or sex offenders whose victims were under 18 at the time of the offense cannot live within 1000 feet of a school.⁴¹ School is defined broadly to include any part of the grounds of any public or private elementary, middle, or high school.⁴² Most states have similar laws that restrict where sex offenders can live. Cities and towns may also have their own laws concerning sex offenders. For New York State, however, state law controls where sex offenders can live, not city laws.⁴³ Other states may be different and it is your responsibility to make sure you do not live in a location that is illegal for you as a registered sex offender.

4. Registration and Public Access to Your Record

If you were convicted of a sex offense, you must register with the sex offender registry,⁴⁴ and you will have to comply with federal and local sex offender registry laws. The federal sex offender registry laws create three tiers of sex offenders: tier I, tier II, and tier III.⁴⁵ Factors relevant to your conviction and the potential sentence for that conviction determine which “tier” you fall into. You fall into tier III if your offense is punishable by more than one year, and is considered comparable or more severe than, for example, aggravated sexual abuse,⁴⁶ involves kidnapping a minor that is not your child, or occurs after you were already convicted of a tier II offense.⁴⁷ You fall into tier II if your offense is punishable by more than one year, your offense is not a tier III offense, and is considered severe.⁴⁸ You fall into tier I if you were convicted of a sex offense, but do not fall into the other two tiers (tier II and tier III).⁴⁹

37. See “Denial or Termination of Assistance,” Housing Choice Voucher (Section 8) Administrative Plan, Feb. 1, 2019, NYC Dept. of Housing Preservation and Development, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/assets/hpd/downloads/pdf/administrative-plan.pdf> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

38. See Grievance Procedures, New York City Housing Authority at 7, available at https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/nycha/downloads/pdf/grievance-procedure_040302.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

39. See “Informal Reviews, Conferences, and Informal Hearings,” Housing Choice Voucher (Section 8) Administrative Plan, Feb. 1, 2019, NYC Dept. of Housing Preservation and Development, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/assets/hpd/downloads/pdf/administrative-plan.pdf> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019); “Statewide Section 8 Voucher Program,” Section 8 Housing Choice Administrative Plan, Apr. 17, 2019, NYS Homes and Community Renewal, available at https://hcr.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/admin-plan-version-20191_1.pdf.

40. If you were convicted of a sex offense, you may want to read JLM Chapter 36, “Special Considerations for Sex Offenders.”

41. People v. Diack, 24 N.Y.3d 674, 681–682, 26 N.E.3d 1151, 1155–1156, 3 N.Y.S.3d 296, 301–302 (2015).

42. People v. Diack, 24 N.Y.3d 674, 681–682, 26 N.E.3d 1151, 1155–1156, 3 N.Y.S.3d 296, 301–302 (2015).

43. People v. Diack, 24 N.Y.3d 674, 681–682, 26 N.E.3d 1151, 1155–1156, 3 N.Y.S.3d 296, 301–302 (2015).

44. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(a).

45. 34 U.S.C. § 20911(1)–(4).

46. The full list of offenses includes an act, attempt, or conspiracy to commit aggravated sexual abuse, sex abuse, or abusive sexual contact against a minor under 13 years old. 34 U.S.C. § 20911(4).

47. See 34 U.S.C. § 20911(4) (stating all of the criteria to be considered a tier III sex offender).

48. See 34 U.S.C. § 20911(3) (stating all of the criteria to be considered a tier II sex offender).

49. 34 U.S.C. § 20911(2).

The length of time you are in the registry depends on the tier of your sex offense. The full registration for tier I, tier II, and tier III sex offenders are fifteen years, twenty-five years, and the rest of your life, respectively.⁵⁰

The federal sex offender registry laws require that each state have its own state-wide sex offender registry.⁵¹ If you were convicted of a sex offense, you are required to register in each state where you reside, are employed, or are a student.⁵² After you are released, you must keep your information current and updated. For example, if you change your name, residence, employment, or student status, you must update your registration information in person within three business days.⁵³ Each state has its own criminal sanctions for sex offenders who fail to comply with registry requirements.⁵⁴ You should make sure to check your state's specific penalties and registry requirements.

Federal law requires that both you and the state in which you register provide certain information to the registry. For example, you, as the offender, must include information such as your name and any aliases you may have, your Social Security number, and the addresses of all your residences.⁵⁵ Depending on the state, you may also need to provide more information. The state must provide information including, but not limited to, a current photograph of you, your criminal history, and your fingerprints.⁵⁶

You may have your registration period reduced if you have a clean record.⁵⁷ Different states have different criteria for what you must do to have a clean record. While you are in the registry, you must periodically meet with a state official, allow the state to take an updated photograph of you, and verify your registry information.⁵⁸ The frequency that you must meet with a state official depends on the tier of your sex-offense conviction. Tier I offenders must meet with a state official every year, tier II offenders must meet with a state official every six months, and tier III offenders must meet every three months.⁵⁹

Every state is required by federal law to make certain information about people convicted of sex offenses available on the internet to the public.⁶⁰ As a person convicted of a sex offense, this includes, but is not limited to, information such as your name, address, and offense. However, the state cannot disclose the identity of the victim of your crime, your Social Security number, and information about arrests that did not result in convictions.⁶¹ Each state's website will have information about how to correct errors on your public page.⁶² For example, if you seek to correct an error on the New York sex

50. 34 U.S.C. § 20915(a)(1)–(3).

51. 34 U.S.C. § 20912(a).

52. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(a).

53. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(c).

54. 34 U.S.C. § 20913(e).

55. 34 U.S.C. § 20914(a)(1)–(8). Other information includes “[t]he name and address of any place where the sex offender is an employee or will be an employee,” “[t]he name and address of any place where the sex offender is or will be a student,” “[t]he license plate number and description of any vehicle owned or operated by the sex offender,” “[i]nformation relating to intended travel of the sex offender outside the United States,” and “[a]ny other information required by the Attorney General.”

56. 34 U.S.C. § 20914(b). Other information includes “[a] physical description of the sex offender,” “[a] DNA sample of the sex offender,” “[a] photocopy of a valid driver’s license or identification card issued to the sex offender by a jurisdiction,” and “[a]ny other information required by the Attorney General.” 34 U.S.C. § 20914(b)(1)–(8).

57. 34 U.S.C. § 20915(b) (explaining how and for how long your registration period may be reduced).

58. 34 U.S.C. § 20918.

59. 34 U.S.C. § 20918(1)–(3).

60. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(a). New York’s sex offender registry can be accessed at <http://www.criminaljustice.ny.gov/nsor/>. To find your state’s sex offender registry, type in your state’s name and “sex offender registry” into a search engine, such as <http://www.google.com>.

61. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(b).

62. 34 U.S.C. § 20920(e).

offender registry, you must contact the New York Division of Criminal Justice Services via either mail or email.⁶³

Finally, the federal sex offender laws have created a notification program, whereby certain individuals will be notified when a sex offender registers in the registry or updates their information.⁶⁴ Updates are disclosed to individuals and organizations including, but not limited to, certain law enforcement agencies, volunteer organizations that work with minors or other vulnerable individuals, and social service organizations that protect minors in the child welfare system.⁶⁵ Because each state's specific requirements are different, you should consult your state's sex offender registration laws.

B. Eligibility for Public Benefits and Entitlements

Federal, state, and local governmental agencies provide a wide range of benefits to the people within their borders. Some benefits, such as having police officers or public parks, are available to everyone. Other benefits—including health care, educational assistance, housing, and cash assistance—are only available to those who meet certain requirements set by the government, such as lack of income, or age. Some public benefits may be unavailable to you because of your criminal history. However, for the most part, a criminal record is not enough to disqualify you from receiving benefits. One important exception is drug-related felonies. As the following section will explain, drug felonies may keep you from receiving benefits. The other main exception is that you may not be able to receive benefits if your criminal record involves public assistance fraud.⁶⁶ This section discusses the law governing the eligibility of people with criminal records for different categories of public benefits.

Be aware that, no matter what your conviction was for, if you were receiving certain types of public benefits before your conviction, you may have to reapply to start receiving them again. This is because the government probably stopped sending you benefits after your conviction. If you want or need public benefits, you can find more information at <https://www.usa.gov/benefits>.

1. Federal and State Financial Assistance

(a) Federal Programs

Various federal programs provide direct assistance to the poor, the disabled, and the elderly in the form of cash and food stamps. However, there are some restrictions on these programs that may affect you. These programs and restrictions that may affect you are described below.

(i) Welfare and Food Stamps

One important federal program, called Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), provides aid to families with children. This program may be helpful to you if you have children, and you either have not yet been able to find work, or you have a job that pays you a very low income. TANF works by giving federal funds to the states and giving the states flexibility to develop their own welfare programs. Since each state's program is different, you should contact your local TANF office for information on eligibility and how to apply. You should be aware that different states call their TANF program by different names, so you may not be able to find "the TANF office." However, all states have some form of TANF program. You should consult Appendix B for a partial listing of contacts for state human services agencies that will be able to give you information about your local TANF program. You can also get more information from the website of the American Public Human Services

63. More information on how to correct an error can be found at <https://www.criminaljustice.ny.gov/nsor/disclaimer.html>.

64. 34 U.S.C. §20923(b)(1)–(7).

65. See 34 U.S.C. §20923(b)(1)–(7) (listing more parties who may be notified when a sex offender registers in the state registry or updates his information).

66. For example, under New York state law, you will be prohibited from receiving public assistance or food stamps for ten years after being convicted in federal or state court for having made a false statement or representation with respect to your place of residence in order to receive public assistance, medical assistance, or food stamps simultaneously from two or more states, or supplemental security income in two or more states. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 131(12) (McKinney 2003).

Association at <https://aphsa.org/>, and from the TANF website at <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/ofa/programs/tanf>.

TANF is not an “entitlement.” That is, you do not have the right to receive assistance. As such, the federal government puts some restrictions and conditions on the money it gives to states. For example, states must often make sure that people who receive TANF benefits are working, looking for work, or being trained to work.⁶⁷ There is also a maximum time period during which you can receive assistance during your lifetime (usually five years).⁶⁸ In addition, federal law makes many non-citizens ineligible for benefits.⁶⁹ Some states, such as New York, have state funded programs that provide benefits beyond the time limits or to people who would not qualify for TANF under federal law.

There are three circumstances in which criminal activity may result in restrictions to your access to TANF funds: (1) if you are a fugitive from justice on a felony charge or conviction, (2) if you have violated parole or probation conditions, or (3) if you have a drug-related felony conviction. States may not give assistance to anyone who is a fugitive from justice on a felony charge or conviction, or who has violated parole or probation conditions.⁷⁰ Federal law does not define what “violation of probation or parole” means, or when ineligibility begins and ends. Each state has created its own specific policies dealing with these issues. If you think there might be something on your record that would prevent you from getting assistance, such as a violation of probation, you should check with your local TANF office to find out whether you are eligible. New York’s policies on this issue are discussed below in Section B(1)(b).

A drug-related felony conviction may also prevent you from getting cash assistance or food stamps through federal programs.⁷¹ Drug-related felonies are those involving the use, possession or distribution of illegal substances. The law—state or federal—under which you were convicted determines whether the offense was a felony.⁷² The ban only applies from the date when the law was passed. That is, if you have a drug-related felony conviction from before August 22, 1996, you may still be eligible for assistance under this section.⁷³

States are allowed to change this restriction against people with drug felony convictions by passing legislation making it clear that the state is choosing not to adopt the federal restriction. The state may also choose to modify the restriction.⁷⁴ The drug felon restriction does not apply to Medicaid or to non-federal assistance that the state provides on its own, such as public assistance for single adults.⁷⁵ The restriction also does not prevent you from receiving emergency Social Security medical services, emergency disaster relief, certain public health assistance, prenatal care, job training programs, or drug treatment programs.⁷⁶

67. 42 U.S.C. § 602(a)(1)(A)(i)–(iii); 42 U.S.C. § 607(d).

68. 42 U.S.C. § 608 (a)(7).

69. 8 U.S.C. § 1611; 7 U.S.C. § 2015(f); see 8 U.S.C. § 1641 (providing a definition of non-citizens who are not prohibited from receiving public assistance).

70. 42 U.S.C. § 608(a)(9) (TANF); 7 U.S.C. § 2015 (food stamps).

71. 21 U.S.C. §§ 862a(a)–(b).

72. 21 U.S.C. § 862a(a).

73. 21 U.S.C. § 862a(d)(2). Some federal courts have held that judges must warn defendants that a guilty plea to a drug felony may permanently prevent them from receiving federal benefits as a result of this provision. See, e.g., United States v. Littlejohn, 224 F.3d 960, 967 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that when a defendant is pleading guilty, he should be informed that he is becoming ineligible for certain food stamps and public assistance for the plea to be considered voluntary). However, even if the court fails to warn you of the consequences of a guilty plea in this situation, it is unlikely that your conviction could be overturned on this ground. See United States v. Littlejohn, 224 F.3d 960, 965 (9th Cir. 2000).

74. 21 U.S.C. § 862a(d)(1)(A). To learn more about the policy in each state, see SNAP Ban of Persons with Drug Felony Convictions, THE NETWORK FOR PUBLIC HEALTH LAW (Apr. 2020), available at <https://www.networkforphl.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/04/50-State-Survey-SNAP-Felony-Ban-Updated-1.pdf> (last visited Nov. 23, 2020).

75. For more information on health assistance, see “Medical and Mental Health Assistance,” Part B(2) below.

76. 21 U.S.C. § 862a(f).

(ii) Other Federal Programs

Supplemental Security Income (“SSI”) is a means-tested program for people who are blind, disabled, or elderly (over 65). If you were on SSI when you were arrested, benefits will be suspended for the month(s) in which you were incarcerated. Suspension of your SSI benefits will continue on a monthly basis for the duration of your incarceration, meaning that they may remain suspended for up to a month after your release. This is because you are a “resident of a public institution,” not because of the conviction. If the benefits stay suspended for 12 months, they end - meaning that you have to go through the application process again to get them back. Technically speaking, you are supposed to report your incarceration to Social Security Administration (SSA). For more information on Supplemental Security Income, go to <http://www.socialsecurity.gov/pgm/ssi.htm>.

There are a variety of other Social Security benefits. Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) benefits are an insurance-based program for workers who become blind or disabled, or for their disabled adult children. Social Security Survivors’ benefits are for family members of workers who die or become disabled. Social Security Retirement benefits are for people who are of retirement age. You can get Social Security Retirement benefits when you are 62, but your benefits will be lower than if you waited until reaching “full retirement age,” which depends upon your year of birth. If you are on Social Security Disability Insurance benefits, Social Security Retirement benefits, or other “Title II” benefits when you are arrested, your benefits should get suspended after you are both a) convicted of a criminal offense (or had your parole revoked), and b) confined to a penal institution for more than 30 continuous days.⁷⁷ (This may vary if you were incarcerated prior to April 1, 2000.) These benefits will remain suspended (rather than terminated) until you are released. So, all you need to do to get them back is visit an SSA office with copies of your release papers. If you have a wife or child who is getting benefits based on your work history, your family benefits should remain unchanged while you are incarcerated and after you are released.

You should be able to apply for SSI prior to your expected date of release from a correctional facility. Some facilities have agreements with SSA under which staff are expected to provide help with these applications, and particularly with SSI. In New York, for example, there is an agreement under which incarcerated people should be able to get help from facility Parole staff and/or from Office of Mental Health pre-release coordinators, depending on the nature of the individual’s application/disability.⁷⁸ You should be able to apply on your own as well by writing to your local SSA office with a note that gives your expected release date. Even though you should be able to apply on your own, you may need help for practical reasons. For example, if you are having issues contacting your local SSA office because of restrictions on the phone and mail in your prison. Also, sometimes your local SSA office might not know all the answers to your questions, so you may need to get help from someone at your facility.

Criminal convictions do not affect your eligibility for these benefits, although you generally cannot receive them while you are incarcerated. Federal law states that the fact that a disability stems from conduct that led to your conviction or was caused during a period of incarceration cannot be used in deciding whether you are eligible to receive federal disability benefits.⁷⁹

Your eligibility for assistance under these programs is not affected by a criminal conviction, but, as with TANF and food stamps, you cannot receive benefits under these programs if you are a fleeing felon or are in violation of probation or parole.⁸⁰

If you want to apply for Social Security, you should go to the Social Security webpage online, at <http://www.socialsecurity.gov>, or contact Social Security at their toll-free phone number, (800) 772-

77. See United States Social Security Administration, What Prisoners Need to Know, <https://www.ssa.gov/pubs/EN-05-10133.pdf> (last accessed Nov. 23, 2020).

78. Reentry Services, NYS DIVISION OF PAROLE, available at https://www.health.ny.gov/professionals/patients/discharge_planning/docs/2008-0508_efraley_parole_reentry.pdf (last accessed Sept. 27, 2019).

79. 42 U.S.C. § 423(d)(6).

80. 42 U.S.C. § 1382(e)(4). Eligibility is not terminated, but only suspended, under this provision; benefits are only withheld for the month or months during which the flight or violation takes place. 42 U.S.C. § 1382(e)(4).

1213. Use this number as well if you want to apply for SSI. The toll-free phone number is available from 8 A.M. to 7 P.M. Monday through Friday.

(b) New York State Programs

New York's two main forms of welfare are Family Assistance (FA) and Safety Net Assistance (SNA). FA is New York's version of the federal TANF program, and is subject to federal restrictions and conditions. SNA is a separate program administered by the state of New York and not subject to federal controls.

Families with children under eighteen (or under nineteen if the child is attending school regularly) and pregnant women are eligible for cash benefits under FA. Most of the federal restrictions on TANF apply to these benefits. You should note that New York has opted out of the federal restriction that denies welfare and food stamps to people with drug felony convictions. That means you can get FA even if you have a drug-felony conviction.

However, other restrictions remain on New York's FA program. As required by federal law, New York does not give cash assistance and food stamps to people evading prosecution, custody, or confinement for a felony charge or conviction, or to probation or parole violators.⁸¹ In New York, you are considered a probation or parole violator only if (1) you have a warrant issued for your arrest because of a violation of your probation or parole, (2) you have been found by judicial determination to have violated probation, or (3) you have been found by administrative adjudication by the division of parole to have violated parole.⁸² If you are considered a probation or parole violator, New York denies you FA benefits only until (1) you are restored to probation or parole supervision or released from custody, or (2) the end of your maximum period of imprisonment or supervision, whichever occurs first.⁸³ Finally, probation or parole violations include violations of conditions imposed under federal law, as well as violations of conditional release.⁸⁴

If you want to apply for FA, you should go to a welfare or job center.⁸⁵ The application may take thirty days to be processed, so you should apply as soon as possible.⁸⁶

Adults with no children, children not living with an adult relative, and certain categories of immigrants can receive cash benefits under SNA. People who have reached the federal time-limit for FA may also receive SNA. The amount you can receive in SNA benefits depends on the size of your household, the social services district in which you live, the amount you pay for housing, and whether or not heat is included in your rent. For this program, you must have lived in New York for at least one year.⁸⁷ If you came to New York from another state less than a year ago and are in need of public assistance you will only be able to receive half of the New York state benefit, or the benefit level of the state you came from, whichever is higher.⁸⁸

Non-cash benefits (in the form of vouchers for shelter and utilities) are available to families when the head of the household has reached the end of the SNA five-year limit, to individuals receiving drug or alcohol treatment and their families, and to families of those refusing the drug screening, 81. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 131(14)(a).

82. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 131(14)(b).

83. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 131(14)(b).

84. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 131(14) (a), (c)–(d).

85. For a list of job centers in New York City, see Free Job Placement and Education Training, NEW YORK CITY DEPT. OF HOMELESS SERVICES, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/hra/locations/job-locations.page> (last visited Sept. 27, 2019), or look in your phone book under the governmental listings, or “blue pages.”

86. See Temporary Assistance, NEW YORK OFFICE OF TEMPORARY AND DISABILITY ASSISTANCE, available at <http://otda.ny.gov/programs/temporary-assistance/> (last visited Sept. 27, 2019).

87. See Section 159 – Safety Net Assistance, THE NEW YORK STATE SENATE, available at <https://www.nysenate.gov/legislation/laws/SOS/159> (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

88. See Section 159 – Safety Net Assistance, TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE, available at <https://www.nysenate.gov/legislation/laws/SOS/159> (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

assessment, or treatment required to receive cash benefits under SNA.⁸⁹ There is no time limit on non-cash benefits as long as you continue to qualify.⁹⁰

If you want to apply for SNA, you must file an application in person at your local Department of Social Services center.⁹¹ In order to qualify, you will have to:

- (1) Complete and submit the application form,
- (2) Appear for the scheduled interview,
- (3) Provide proof of the statements made on the application/recertification form,
- (4) Comply with other eligibility requirements, which may include:
 - (a) Drug screening
 - (b) Fingerprinting
 - (c) Cooperation with child support requirements
 - (d) Looking for work and accepting a job when offered, and
 - (e) Complying with other employment requirements.

It usually takes forty-five days to process your application, so you should apply as soon as possible. If you need assistance more quickly than that, you should ask about receiving emergency assistance.⁹² You should be as specific as possible about your needs, especially if they are related to health or safety. For example, if you need a winter coat, rain boots, toiletries, underwear or other items, be sure to list them or even write them out for the case-worker. For more information about the New York state assistance programs, you can visit <http://otda.ny.gov/programs/>.

2. Medical and Mental Health Assistance

The federal government provides money for medical assistance through Medicaid and Medicare. Medicaid funds medical and mental health care for those who cannot afford to pay for it.⁹³ Medicaid, like TANF (discussed in Part B(1)(a)(i) above), is partly funded by the federal government, but is administered by state governments. Medicare is a program that covers medical and mental health care for people over the age of sixty-five, and some people with disabilities.⁹⁴ Medicare, like Social Security and SSI benefits (discussed in Part B(1)(a)(ii) above), is funded and administered by the federal government.

Medicaid eligibility in nearly every state is limited to children, pregnant women, families with dependent children, persons who are blind or disabled, and persons sixty-five or older. A few states cover single healthy adults within certain income guidelines.⁹⁵ Each state may have its own requirements for who can receive Medicaid, so you should check with your local Medicaid office to see if you are eligible.

You cannot receive Medicare or Medicaid benefits while you are in prison. However, you can receive them while on probation or parole. If you otherwise meet all of the requirements for Medicare

89. See Temporary Assistance, NEW YORK OFFICE OF TEMPORARY AND DISABILITY ASSISTANCE, available at <http://otda.ny.gov/programs/temporary-assistance/> (last visited Sept. 27, 2019).

90. See Temporary Assistance, NEW YORK OFFICE OF TEMPORARY AND DISABILITY ASSISTANCE, available at <http://otda.ny.gov/programs/temporary-assistance/> (last visited Sept. 27, 2019).

91. You can find a list of New York state Departments of Social Services online at <http://otda.ny.gov/workingfamilies/dss.asp> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020), or at <http://www.health.state.ny.us/nysdoh/medicaid/dss.htm> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

92. See Cash Assistance, NEW YORK CITY HUMAN RESOURCES ADMINISTRATION, available at <http://www.nyc.gov/html/hra/html/services/cash.shtml> (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

93. 42 U.S.C. § 1396-1396v.

94. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1395b-2 et. seq.

95. For example, in New York, a single person may be eligible for Medicaid if he makes less than $750 a month. For every additional person in your family, the maximum income level goes up. If you are blind, disabled, or over the age of 65, your Medicaid eligibility is determined based on the amount of financial resources you have available. For example, a single person in New York is eligible for Medicaid if he has less than $14,400 in available resources. You can also own a home, a car, and other personal property and still qualify. These numbers may change, so check with your local Medicaid office to see if you qualify, or see New York Department of Health, Medicaid in New York State, available at http://www.health.ny.gov/health_care/medicaid/ (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

or Medicaid eligibility, your criminal record will not disqualify you from receiving these benefits, even if you have a drug felony conviction. A violation of the conditions of your probation or parole will also not disqualify you.

If you want to apply for Medicare or Medicaid, you can get and submit an application at your local Medicaid or Medicare office, or through most hospitals, medical providers, and drug and alcohol treatment providers. Some states also let you apply on the Internet, by telephone, or at locations in the community, such as community health centers. You can find your state's contact information and more information about these benefit programs online, by using the "Find Local Help" tool at <https://localhelp.healthcare.gov/#/>. You can also look in your phone book in the governmental listings, sometimes known as "blue pages."

Some states provide additional help for people who enter prison with active Medicaid benefits, or for people with particular conditions such as mental illness. In New York, for example, people who are arrested after April 1, 2008, are held in state or local custody, and have active Medicaid when they are incarcerated will now have their Medicaid suspended (rather than terminated) so that it can be restarted as soon as they are released. In New York State there is also a Medication Grant Program for people with mental illnesses: this program provides a temporary benefit card that will pay for psychiatric medication and some medical appointments needed to prescribe medication upon release from prison.⁹⁶ Incarcerated people who enroll in the Medication Grant Program will also submit an application for Medicaid prior to their release.

3. Higher Education Assistance

The federal government provides financial aid in the form of grants and loans to people that attend an approved institution of higher education that awards degrees, certificates, or credentials.⁹⁷ However, if you were convicted under state or federal law for the sale or possession of controlled substances while you were receiving student financial aid, you are not eligible for student financial aid for a certain period of time.⁹⁸ This is only if the conviction is on your record. A conviction that was reversed, set aside, removed from your record, or a juvenile proceeding does not count.⁹⁹ If you have been convicted of selling or possessing drugs, the amount of time you are ineligible for educational aid depends on how many previous convictions for those offenses you have.¹⁰⁰ The law says the amount of time of ineligibility after the date of conviction is:

Duration of Ineligibility for Financial Aid
	Conviction for possession of a controlled substance	Conviction for sale of a controlled substance
First offense	One year	Two years
Second offense	Two years	Indefinite
Third offense	Indefinite	Indefinite

96. See Medication Grant Program Frequently Asked Questions, NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF MENTAL HEALTH, available at https://www.omh.ny.gov/omhweb/med_grant/faq.htm (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

97. The federal government outlines its specifications for approved institutions at 20 U.S.C. § 1094. Comprehensive rules for students' eligibility are contained in 20 U.S.C. § 1091.

98. 20 U.S.C. § 1091(r).

99. 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(a)(2).

100. Conviction of multiple counts of sale or possession count as a single conviction. 64 Fed. Reg. 57356 (Oct. 22, 1999).

The amount of time you are ineligible is not set in stone. You may be able to restore your eligibility before the stated period passes if you complete an approved drug rehabilitation program and pass two surprise drug tests.¹⁰¹ Approved rehabilitation programs are ones that are:

- (1) Funded (or are qualified to be funded) by federal, state, or local government programs;
- (2) Funded (or are qualified to be funded) by a federally or state-licensed insurance company;
- (3) Administered or recognized by a federal, state, or local government agency or court; or
- (4) Administered or recognized by a federally or state-licensed hospital, health clinic or medical doctor.¹⁰²

If you want to receive federal education assistance, you have to first apply and be accepted to the institution of higher education that you want to attend.¹⁰³ Once you are accepted, you should contact the financial aid office of that institution for more information on how to apply for federal education assistance.

C. Employment

One of the hardest parts of life after your release can be looking for a job with a conviction on your record. Getting a job after your release from prison is often difficult because some employers may not trust or fear individuals convicted of crimes. Many employers believe that ex-convicts will not be reliable employees. There is no federal or state law that stops employers from asking you in an interview or on a job application if you have ever been convicted of an offense. Also, there are some laws that do not allow people with certain kinds of criminal convictions from working in particular jobs or professions.¹⁰⁴ Please visit <https://ccresourcecenter.org/state-restoration-profiles/50-state-comparisoncomparison-of-criminal-records-in-licensing-and-employment/> to see whether your state follows a law that prevents you from obtaining the type of job you want.¹⁰⁵

However, while a criminal record may make your job search more difficult, it will not prevent you from finding work in many areas of employment. Federal and state laws contain some protections against employment discrimination for people with criminal records. Also, many states provide ways for you to remove or overcome barriers to certain jobs. This is because states want you to join the workforce and become financially self-sufficient.

The following sections describe the laws protecting you against discrimination and explain ways to defend yourself against discriminatory employment practices in New York State. If you are finding it difficult to obtain employment, you should strongly consider getting help from free civil legal aid providers, such as the Legal Aid Society. They can tell you whether certain crimes can be expunged from your records and which crimes you don't have to disclose when you apply for a job.

1. Federal Law

(a) Federal Laws Restricting Particular Jobs

There are many federal laws that restrict people with criminal records from holding particular jobs. Several federal laws bar people convicted of certain crimes from working for the federal government. However, a felony conviction does not necessarily disqualify a person from all federal

101. 20 U.S.C. § 1091(r)(2).

102. 34 C.F.R. § 668.40(d)(2)(i)–(iv) (2016).

103. 20 U.S.C. § 1091(a)(1).

104. For example, Congress has required a criminal-history investigation of any airport employee with access to airplanes or secure areas. 49 U.S.C. § 44936(a)(1)(A)(i)–(ii). Occasionally, the courts have struck down such laws. For example, in Nixon v. Commonwealth, 789 A.2d 376, 382 (2001), a Pennsylvania trial court struck down a state statute that disqualified people with criminal records from working in nursing homes. The court found that the law was “arbitrary and irrational,” which meant that it was not “rationally related” to a legitimate government purpose and was therefore unconstitutional. However, courts very rarely find that laws fail the “rational basis” test, so it is uncommon that these types of laws are declared unconstitutional.

105. 50-State Comparison: Criminal Record in Employment & Licensing, RESTORATION OF RIGHTS PROJECT, available at <https://ccresourcecenter.org/state-restoration-profiles/50-state-comparisoncomparison-of-criminal-records-in-licensing-and-employment/> (last visited Nov. 25, 2020).

jobs. But it is likely that an employer will consider your previous criminal convictions in deciding whether you are fit to work for the federal government.¹⁰⁶

If you are convicted of a criminal offense involving dishonesty, a breach of trust, or money laundering, you will be disqualified from working for banks or other financial institutions that are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.¹⁰⁷ Also, federal law forbids people with certain felony convictions from working in the insurance industry without first getting permission from an insurance regulator.¹⁰⁸ Some felony convictions may bar you from holding certain positions in unions or other organizations that manage employee benefit plans.¹⁰⁹ You may be barred for up to thirteen years after your conviction or the end of your imprisonment, whichever is later. Some of these barred positions include union officers and the director of the union's governing board.¹¹⁰ Federal law also forbids people convicted of certain crimes from providing healthcare services for which they will receive payment from Medicare,¹¹¹ or from working for the pharmaceutical industry.¹¹²

(b) Title VII Employment Discrimination

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 forbids private employers and state and local governments from discriminating in employment decisions on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.¹¹³ The Supreme Court has interpreted Title VII to prohibit employment practices that have a "disparate impact."¹¹⁴ An employment practice has a "disparate impact" when it appears to be neutral to all groups, but it affects one group more harshly than another and it cannot be justified by business necessity.¹¹⁵

Although people with criminal convictions are not a protected class under federal law, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) has interpreted Title VII to forbid employment policies that completely bar people just because they have a conviction record.¹¹⁶ This is because denying people jobs based on conviction records has a disparate impact on racial minorities.¹¹⁷ However, an employer has the right to deny you a job based on your criminal record if there is a "business necessity" for doing so. To show a "business necessity," the employer must show that the conviction on which they based

106. Federal Statutes Imposing Collateral Consequences Upon Conviction, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, OFFICE OF THE PARDON ATTORNEY, (2000), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/collateral_consequences.pdf (last visited Sept. 28, 2019).

107. 12 U.S.C. § 1829.

108. 18 U.S.C. § 1033(e).

109. 29 U.S.C. §§ 504, 1111.

110. 29 U.S.C. §§ 504, 1111.

111. 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7.

112. 21 U.S.C. § 335a.

113. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2.

114. Griggs v. Duke Power Company, 401 U.S. 424, 431, 91 S. Ct. 849, 853, 28 L. Ed. 2d 158, 164 (1971).

115. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k)(1)(A); see also Raytheon Co. v. Hernandez, 540 U.S. 44, 52, 124 S. Ct. 513, 519, 157 L. Ed. 2d 357, 365 (2003) (explaining what a disparate impact claim is); Griggs v. Duke Power Company, 401 U.S. 424, 431, 91 S. Ct. 849, 853, 28 L. Ed. 2d 158, 164 (1971) (finding that Title VII prohibits "not only overt discrimination but also practices that are fair in form, but discriminatory in operation" when there is no business necessity for the practice).

116. Green v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 523 F.2d 1290, 1294 (1975) (finding that a railroad's policy of excluding from consideration any job applicant with a conviction other than for a minor traffic offense discriminated against blacks and was not justified by business necessity).

117. The EEOC found that racial minorities are convicted at a rate disproportionately greater than their representation in the population, in part because they are arrested more frequently. Thus, a policy that excludes potential employees who have conviction records would unfairly affect racial minorities to a greater degree than non-minorities. EEOC Dec. No. 78-35, 2, 26 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 1755 (Jun. 8, 1978) (deciding that a civic center's choice to withdraw a job offer from a candidate on account of his rape, assault and battery, drunkenness, and firearm offense convictions was not a Title VII violation because it was justified by a business necessity); see also Green v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 523 F.2d 1290, 1294-1295 (1975) (finding that a railroad's policy of excluding from consideration any job applicant with a conviction other than for a minor traffic offense discriminated against blacks and was not justified by business necessity).

their decision to reject you involves conduct related to your ability to do the job competently and safely.¹¹⁸

Employers cannot reject you simply because you have any conviction. An employer must consider the following factors to determine whether there is a business necessity in denying you the job:

- (1) Nature and gravity of the offense or offenses,
- (2) Time that has passed since the conviction or completion of the sentence, and
- (3) Nature of the job.¹¹⁹

The first two factors listed above mean that, if you have committed a recent, serious offense, it is more “reasonable” for an employer to deny you the job. The third requirement means that if your offense is somehow related to the job you are applying for, the employer has more reason not to hire you. For example, a conviction for driving while intoxicated would be relevant to a job that involves driving a car, but would probably not be relevant to a job that does not require driving. Convictions for property crimes, such as theft, and violent offenses, such as assault, will often prevent you from getting a job where you handle valuable property or where you are put in a position of trust. This is because an employer can argue that these convictions show that you are not trustworthy or that you pose a danger to fellow employees or customers, and so denying you the position because of your conviction record is a matter of “business necessity”.¹²⁰

If the employer demonstrates a business necessity for denying your application, you can still win if you show that the employer could use a different practice (other than excluding all people with criminal convictions) to achieve its business and employment goals that will work just as well. However, if you try to show that the employer could use a different practice, you must consider the burdens on the employer, like the costs of the alternative practice.¹²¹

Additionally, even if you have a criminal conviction, federal law forbids employers from using a lie detector test as a basis for employment.¹²² You should also know that the federal law allows employers to have a policy of not hiring anyone who uses or possesses drugs. Employers are allowed to do this as long as the employer did not adopt this policy because they wanted to discriminate against someone based on their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.¹²³

118. Courts have defined “business necessity” in different ways. See Andrew C. Spiropoulos, Defining The Business Necessity Defense To The Disparate Impact Cause Of Action: Finding The Golden Mean, 74 N.C. L. Rev. 1479, 1486–1503 (1996) (reviewing the change in the definition of “business necessity” by the courts). The Civil Rights Act of 1991 says that an employer must demonstrate that an employment practice is job-related for the position in question and consistent with business necessity. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k). Lower courts have interpreted this to require that the practice be “reasonably necessary” to achieve important business objectives. Therefore, while the practice does not have to be essential to business operations, the employer must show that it serves more than merely a legitimate business purpose. See Donnelly v. Rhode Island Bd. of Governors for Higher Ed., 929 F. Supp. 583, 593–594 (1996) (finding that a university’s payment of different minimum salary to professors of different subjects, which had a disparate impact on women, was a business necessity because of the market differential in professors’ salaries in those subjects).

119. U.S. EQUAL EMP. OPPORTUNITY COMM’N., 915.002, ENFORCEMENT GUIDANCE ON THE CONSIDERATION OF ARREST AND CONVICTION RECORDS IN EMPLOYMENT DECISIONS UNDER TITLE VII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT (2012), available at <https://www.eeoc.gov/laws/guidance/enforcement-guidance-consideration-arrest-and-conviction-records-employment-decisions#IIIB> (last visited Nov. 25, 2020).

120. See, e.g., Richardson v. Hotel Corp. of America, 332 F. Supp. 519, 521 (E.D. La. 1971) (upholding hotel’s policy requiring bellmen to be free from convictions of serious crimes, because the job would give them access to hotel guests’ rooms and luggage).

121. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k).

122. See Employee Polygraph Protection Act of 1988 (EPPA), 29 U.S.C. § 2001-09; see also Veazey v. Commc’ns & Cable of Chi., Inc., 194 F.3d 850, 859 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that voice recordings could fall within the statutory definition of “lie detector” if used to determine truthfulness); Rubin v. Tournneau, Inc., 797 F. Supp. 247, 253 (1992) (holding that “employer” for purposes of the EPPA is any person or entity that exerts some degree of control over aspects of employment relating to compliance with the EPPA). Note that polygraph tests can, in rare circumstances, be given after you are already employed. Polygraphs can only be given if a specific incident has taken place, and if the employee receives written notice of the incident and the date, time, and location of the polygraph test at least 48 hours prior to being tested. 29 C.F.R. § 801.23 (2016).

123. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k)(3).

2. New York State Law¹²⁴

Article 23-A of the New York Correction Law says that you cannot be denied any public or private employment or be denied a job license just because of your past criminal convictions.¹²⁵ Under this law, you may only be denied a job or license due to your criminal history if the conviction:

- (1) Is directly job-related,¹²⁶ or
- (2) Indicates that you pose an unreasonable threat to people or property.¹²⁷

The law includes a set of factors that employers should consider in making this determination, including:

- (1) New York State's public policy of encouraging the hiring of people previously convicted;
- (2) The duties of the job you are applying for;
- (3) The relation of the crime(s) you were convicted of to those duties;
- (4) The length of time that has passed since the offense(s);
- (5) Your age at the time of the offense(s);
- (6) The seriousness of your offense(s);
- (7) The employer's legitimate interest in protecting property, employees, and the public; and
- (8) Any evidence of rehabilitation that you or someone else presents on your behalf.¹²⁸

The law also instructs employers to take into account whether you have a certificate of relief from disabilities or certificates of good conduct, which are discussed in section (a) below.

Under New York State Law, employers are allowed to ask you in an interview or on a job application if you have ever been convicted of an offense. Therefore, employers may legally take your conviction(s) into account when they make hiring decisions, as long as they follow the rules stated above. If you try to hide your conviction or misrepresent it, and the employer discovers your deceptions, the employer may fire you or decide not to hire you. In such a case, since the employer's decision would be based directly on your deceptive behavior and not on your criminal record, that decision would probably not be considered unlawful discrimination.¹²⁹

124. If you live in New York City, you should visit the NYC Commission on Human Rights website to learn more about city-specific protections from employment discrimination. For information on city-specific employment policies, see NYC Commission on Human Rights, Law, available at <https://www1.nyc.gov/site/cchr/law/the-law.page> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020). Additionally, you should read the City's Fair Chance Act Factsheet for Employees. See NYC Commission on Human Rights, Fair Chance Act Factsheet for Employees (10 July 2019), available at <https://www1.nyc.gov/site/cchr/media/fair-chance-act-factsheet-for-employees.page> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020). For information about how to file a complaint if you feel you have been discriminated against based on your criminal record or other protected status, see NYC Commission on Human Rights, Complaint Process, available at <https://www1.nyc.gov/site/cchr/enforcement/complaint-process.page> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

125. Art. 23-A is named "Licensure and Employment of Persons Previously Convicted of One or More Criminal Offenses." N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 750–755 (Consol. 2015).

126. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 752(1) (Consol. 2015). "Direct relationship" means that the criminal conduct for which you are convicted of has a direct effect on your "fitness or ability to perform one or more of the duties or responsibilities necessarily related to the license, opportunity, or job in question." N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 750(3) (Consol. 2015).

127. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 752(2) (Consol. 2015).

128. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 753(1) (Consol. 2015); see, e.g., La Cloche v. Daniels, 195 Misc. 2d 329, 333, 755 N.Y.S.2d 827, 830 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2003) (holding that the statutory factors must be taken into account before an applicant can be denied a license on the basis of his criminal record, and finding that it would violate state public policy to deny a license applicant who had taken a barbering vocational program while incarcerated). But, when an administrative agency makes a decision to deny a job license based on these factors, the courts will not overrule that decision unless it is arbitrary and capricious. See Klein v. Levin, 305 A.D.2d 316, 317–320, 760 N.Y.S.2d 462, 465–467 (1st Dept. 2003) (holding that when an administrative agency denies a job license based on an applicant's criminal history, but it is shown that the same agency previously granted a license to an applicant with almost the same history, it is an arbitrary and capricious decision that should be annulled).

129. See, e.g., Kravit v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., No. CV-92-0038, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19087 at *8 (E.D.N.Y. Dec. 4, 1992) (unpublished) ("It is well settled that a misstatement of a material fact on an employment application is a sufficient non-discriminatory ground for an employer's refusal to hire.") (citations omitted).

In New York City, however, most employers may not ask about your criminal record before making a job offer. This means that employers who do not need employees to pass a background check by law may not ask about your criminal history during the interview process or on job applications. However, employers may conduct a background check after they give you an offer, and may condition that offer on you passing a background check.¹³⁰ (See Subsection 3 below on Rap Sheets.) If your offer is revoked after an employer runs a background check, the employer must give you a copy of the criminal record that they relied on in deciding to revoke your offer and file a “fair chance act notice” with the city, explaining why they chose to revoke your offer.¹³¹ The city of Buffalo, New York also has a similar rule banning most employers from asking about criminal records in job applications or during interviews.¹³²

While employers are allowed to ask about your criminal convictions, under Article 23-A of New York State’s Correction Law, it is illegal for most public and private employers, job licensing agencies, employment agencies, and labor organizations to ask about arrests that did not result in a conviction.¹³³ If an employer does ask about arrests, the law of New York allows you to not tell them about your arrests that did not result in conviction.¹³⁴ Law enforcement agency employers are granted an exception to this rule. If you are applying for a police or peace officer job, the law enforcement agency employers can ask you about all arrests, and you must report all arrests if they ask about them.¹³⁵

There are some state and local laws and rules that prohibit employers from hiring people with criminal records. For a list of New York State laws that bar or restrict the employment of people with criminal records in certain occupations or professions, see Appendix C at the end of this Chapter. Some employers are not allowed to hire people with criminal convictions for certain jobs and are required to perform background checks before hiring a job applicant to make sure that they do not have a criminal conviction.¹³⁶ There are also laws that deny eligibility for certain licenses to people who have been convicted of certain crimes. These include licenses to sell liquor wholesale or retail,¹³⁷ licenses for real estate brokers and salespeople,¹³⁸ and positions as security guards¹³⁹ or private investigators.¹⁴⁰

These restrictions are some of a few exceptions made to the protections in Article 23-A of the Correction Law (discussed above). In some cases, the restrictions on licenses or employment can be removed if you can provide evidence that you have been rehabilitated. You can often supply this proof by obtaining a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities or a Certificate of Good Conduct, described in the next section.

(a) Certificates of Relief from Disabilities and Certificates of Good Conduct¹⁴¹

Certificates of Relief from Disabilities and Certificates of Good Conduct, commonly known as “certificates of rehabilitation,” are documents issued by the New York State Parole Board after your release from custody. These certificates can be evidence that you have been rehabilitated. These certificates do not prove that you have been reformed and do not guarantee that you will be free of all difficulties related to your criminal record. However, the certificates may restore some of your rights,

130. NYC Commission on Human Rights, Fair Chance Act, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/cchr/media/fair-chance-act-campaign.page> (last visited Sept. 19, 2019).

131. NYC Commission on Human Rights, Fair Chance Act, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/cchr/media/fair-chance-act-campaign.page> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

132. Buffalo, New York, CITY CODE § 154-25–29 (2014).

133. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 296(16) (Consol. 2015).

134. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 160.60 (Consol. 2015).

135. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 296(16) (Consol. 2015).

136. See, e.g., N.Y. COMP. OF CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 6654.17(k) (regulating in-home elder care); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 405.3(e)(iii) (regulating the reporting of information by health care providers about the criminal histories of their employees).

137. N.Y. ALCO. BEV. CONT. §§ 102(2), 126 (Consol. 2015).

138. N.Y. REAL PROP. § 440-a (Consol. 2015).

139. N.Y. GEN. BUS. §§ 89-g(3)(a), 89-h(5) (Consol. 2015).

140. N.Y. GEN. BUS. § 74(2) (Consol. 2015).

141. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 700–706 (Consol. 2015).

such as the right to serve on a jury (see Part F of this Chapter). Additionally, the certificates can be helpful tools in your employment search because they can make you eligible for employment in professions and industries from which you would otherwise be barred. The purpose of these certificates “is to permit an individual who has made mistakes but has been rehabilitated to begin afresh and become a productive member of society.”¹⁴²

You should apply for either a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities or a Certificate of Good Conduct, but not both. Which one you apply for depends mainly on your criminal record. Certificates of Relief from Disabilities are only available to those with a single felony conviction at most. You may have any number of misdemeanors and still be eligible.¹⁴³ Note that for the purposes of the Certificate of Relief from Disabilities, a plea to a felony that results in probation, a suspended sentence, conditional release, or unconditional release counts as a conviction.¹⁴⁴

(i) Certificate of Relief from Disabilities: Ex-Offenders with a Single Conviction

If you are eligible for a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities, you will need to apply for a separate Certificate for every offense that may bar you from employment or licensing. While some professions or licenses may only bar individuals with felony convictions, others bar misdemeanants as well. Because the certificate provides more evidence that you have made efforts to be rehabilitated, applying for certificates for any misdemeanors on your record may be helpful even if the job you are trying to get doesn't bar people with misdemeanors.

Either the court in which you were convicted or the New York Division of Parole can issue a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities, depending on where you were sentenced and what kind of sentence you received. If you were given a sentence of probation or conditional discharge, or if you were given a sentence that didn't include incarceration in any New York State prison, you can apply to the court in which you were convicted for your certificate.¹⁴⁵ The court may issue the certificate at the time the sentence is pronounced or at any time thereafter.¹⁴⁶ You should contact the court clerk for information on how to apply and information on the court's procedures for processing applications.

If you (1) served state time for a felony conviction, or (2) were convicted in a federal or out-of-state court, you may apply to the New York Division of Parole any time after your release.¹⁴⁷ The Division of Parole will usually consider issuing you a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities automatically when it considers you for early release. The certificate may be issued to you upon release from prison or after you have been out for several months, whether or not you served your maximum sentence. The certificate remains temporary while you are still under parole supervision, probation, or conditional release. Unless you receive another felony conviction or violate the conditions of your release, the certificate will become permanent upon your discharge from supervision.¹⁴⁸ To request an application from the Division of Parole, you should send a letter to the address at the end of this Section.

There is an important exception to the rule that a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities is appropriate for one-time felons and misdemeanants. In New York, jobs and licensures designated as “public offices,” including not only political officials, but also police officers, notaries public, and firefighters, have statutory bars against all people with felony records who have not been issued a 142. Rodgers v. N.Y.C. Human Res., 154 A.D.2d 233, 235, 546 N.Y.S. 2d 581, 582 (N.Y. App. Div. 1989) (holding that summary judgment was improper for an employer that had fired an employee because of an alleged good-faith failure to list his two misdemeanor convictions for which he had a certificate of relief from disability on his job application, because the certificates amounted to “badge[s] of rehabilitation”).

143. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 700(1)(a) (Consol. 2015). Technically, two or more felonies resulting from the same indictment count as one felony. Also, two or more convictions stemming from two or more separate indictments filed against you in the same court before you are convicted under any of them count as one felony. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 700(2) (Consol. 2015).

144. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 700(2)(c) (Consol. 2015).

145. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 700(1)(c), 702(1) (Consol. 2015).

146. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 702(1) (Consol. 2015).

147. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 703(1) (Consol. 2015).

148. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 703(4) (Consol. 2015).

Certificate of Good Conduct, and some even bar people with misdemeanor convictions.¹⁴⁹ Even if you have only one felony conviction on your record, or even if you have only misdemeanors, you may need to apply for a Certificate of Good Conduct if the job or license you are interested in is considered a public office. If you are not sure, you should ask the employer or licensing authority whether the job or license is a public office, and what bars exist for certain kinds of convictions.

(ii) Certificate of Good Conduct: Ex-Offenders with More than One Conviction

A Certificate of Good Conduct serves the same basic function as a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities. The Certificate of Good Conduct can be limited to one or more specific bars, or it may remove all the bars created by all of the offenses on your record.¹⁵⁰ You are able to apply for a Certificate of Good Conduct if you have been convicted of more than one felony or any number of misdemeanors. However, you will have to wait for a period of time (the “period of good conduct”) after your release before applying.¹⁵¹ When the most serious crime on your record is a misdemeanor, you have to wait one year. When the most serious crime on your record is a class C, D or E felony, you must wait three years. When the most serious crime on your records is a class B or A felony, you must wait five years.¹⁵²

To get an application for a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities or a Certificate of Good Conduct, visit <https://doccs.ny.gov/certificate-relief-good-conduct-restoration-rights>, or send a letter to:

New York State Division of Parole
97 Central Avenue
Albany, New York 12206
(518) 485-8953
Email: nyparole@nysnet.net

3. Rap Sheets¹⁵³

Getting a certificate of rehabilitation can be an important and valuable step toward restoring your rights and improving your employment prospects. However, these certificates do not seal or erase any part of your criminal record. Anyone who has ever been arrested and fingerprinted in New York State—even if no finding of guilt ever resulted from any arrest—has a permanent arrest record, or “rap sheet,” on file with the Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS). Many states have similar record-keeping systems. The rap sheet contains detailed information about arrests, outstanding warrants, criminal charges filed, the disposition of those charges (whether you were convicted, pleaded guilty, were acquitted, or had the charges dismissed), the sentence you received, any supervised release time, and whether you were issued a certificate of rehabilitation. Information about juvenile delinquency and youthful offender adjudications will not appear on any rap sheet that an employer will see. However, juvenile offender adjudications (meaning prosecutions and dispositions of serious crimes committed by minors) will appear on your sheet. Only information about your New York criminal history is included on your DCJS rap sheet. The FBI has its own record-keeping system that contains information about arrests in all states.

As explained in the previous subsection, laws that regulate certain areas of employment and professional activities may require that employers and agencies research your criminal history before giving you a job or a license. As a result, the information contained on your rap sheet is available, subject to important exceptions to be discussed below, to many employers and licensing agencies. In 149. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 701(1) (Consol. 2015) (specifying that Certificates of Relief from Disabilities do not remove bars to eligibility for public office).

150. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 703-a(1) (Consol. 2015).

151. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 703-b(1)(a) (Consol. 2015).

152. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 703-b(3) (Consol. 2015).

153. See Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., Your New York State Rap Sheet: A Guide to Getting, Understanding & Correcting Your Criminal Record (2013), available at http://lac.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/Your_New_York_State_Rap_Sheet_2013.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

New York, private employers including child care agencies,¹⁵⁴ hospitals,¹⁵⁵ museums, some private transportation companies, financial institutions, and home health care agencies all have the right to get copies of your rap sheet.¹⁵⁶ Public employers—including police and fire departments, the United States Postal Service, the New York City Transit Authority, the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, school districts, and the Department of Sanitation¹⁵⁷—can also obtain your record. Furthermore, state and local agencies that issue occupational licenses—for anything ranging from driving a taxi, to cutting hair, to selling real estate, to practicing medicine—may also get access to your criminal record, as can bonding agencies.¹⁵⁸ Foster care and adoption agencies are also required to inquire into the criminal history of anyone who is or wants to be a foster or adoptive parent, as well as anyone who lives with a present or prospective foster or adoptive parent (see Section 2 of Part D below).

Before applying for a license or a job, it is a good idea to get your own copy of your rap sheet so that you know what it says. Doing so will help you prepare for questions an employer may ask you about your rap sheet. You may want to contact a free civil legal aid provider to review your rap sheet and determine if any offenses can be erased.

You may also find it useful to review a copy of your rap sheet so that you can answer any questions on an application thoroughly, accurately, and honestly. Your rap sheet will be a valuable source of information if you have a lengthy criminal history, have forgotten the resolution of one or more of the crimes with which you were charged, or do not remember whether an offense you were convicted of was a felony or a misdemeanor. This is important since employers and agencies may reject your application if it contains any statements they discover to be false.

A final reason for getting a copy of your rap sheet—and a good reason to take steps to get it well before you begin seeking employment—is that mistakes and incomplete entries are common. They can even make your criminal record look worse than it actually is. Getting a copy of your rap sheet can help you correct these mistakes. You can begin the process of correcting your rap sheet before you are released. For example, a missing entry under the disposition of a particular charge may not correctly show the fact that that charge was dismissed, that you were acquitted, or that you were convicted of a less serious offense. A clerk's error could make it appear that you were convicted of a more serious offense than you actually were. Multiple entries for the same charge could falsely suggest that you were convicted more than once of the same crime. Finally, parts of your record that should legally be sealed may not have been.

The following Subsections briefly describe how to obtain your rap sheet, how to correct mistakes or fill in gaps in your record, and how to seal certain kinds of information. The following information applies only to New York State criminal records. Other states may follow different procedures for recording and making available your criminal record. You can also obtain and clean up your FBI rap sheet, which is a good idea if you have ever been arrested in another state. That process is explained in Section (d) of Part C of this Chapter.

154. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 837-n(2)(a) (Consol. 2015).

155. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 230 (10)(a)(vi) (Consol. 2015).

156. See Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., Your New York State Rap Sheet: A Guide to Getting, Understanding & Correcting Your Criminal Record (2013), available at http://lac.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/Your_New_York_State_Rap_Sheet_2013.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

157. N.Y. EDUC. LAW § 305 (30)(b), 3004-b (Consol. 2015); see also Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., Your New York State Rap Sheet: A Guide to Getting, Understanding & Correcting Your Criminal Record (2013), available at http://lac.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/Your_New_York_State_Rap_Sheet_2013.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

158. See Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., Your New York State Rap Sheet: A Guide to Getting, Understanding & Correcting Your Criminal Record (2013), available at http://lac.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/Your_New_York_State_Rap_Sheet_2013.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

(a) Obtaining Your Rap Sheet

(i) Obtaining Your Own Physical Copy of Your Rap Sheet

The process for getting your New York rap sheet depends on whether or not you are still incarcerated. If you are no longer incarcerated and you are not living in New York City or Erie County, there are two steps. These two steps are also the ones you should follow if you are incarcerated for fewer than forty-five days. First, you have to either call or write a letter to the Division of Criminal Justice Services and ask for a form called a "Request for Record Review." If you choose to call the Record Review Unit, their phone number is (518) 485-7675. If you choose to e-mail, send it to RecordReview@dcjs.ny.gov. If you choose to write, the letter should include your name and the address where you want the form sent. Send this letter to:

Record Review Unit
New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services
Alfred E. Smith Building
80 South Swan Street
Albany, NY 12210

Once you receive the form, fill it out and return it to the same address, along with a copy of your fingerprints (available from most law enforcement agencies, often for a fee) and a money order (from the U.S. Postal Service, American Express, or Traveler's Express only) in the amount of $25. The DCJS will waive the fee if you can prove that you cannot afford to pay it. A photocopy of your public assistance or Medicaid card will be considered proof that you cannot pay the fees.

(ii) Viewing Your Rap Sheet Only

If you are no longer incarcerated and you live in New York City, you can choose instead to view your rap sheet at One Police Plaza in Manhattan. After you submit your request to view your rap sheet and get fingerprinted, there is roughly a two-week waiting period before you can view your rap sheet. When you return to review your record you can take notes, but you cannot make photocopies of your record. If you prefer to have the printed record and can afford the extra time it may take, you can choose to request your rap sheet by following the steps described above in Section (i).

(iii) Living in Erie County

If you currently live in Erie County, the process is similar: you can call (716) 858-6760 to arrange an appointment at the Erie County Central Police Services, where you will fill out forms and wait for a follow-up appointment to view (but not receive a copy of) your rap sheet.

(iv) Currently Incarcerated

If you are incarcerated in a state or local facility in New York and will be there for at least forty-five days, you can obtain your rap sheet by sending a request letter directly to DCJS (at the address stated above). There is no fee to request your rap sheet if you are currently incarcerated. The letter you write should include any and all personal information that will help the DCJS track down your record, including your name, any aliases you may have used, date of birth, race, sex, and Social Security number. If you have a Department Identification Number (DIN) from the Department of Corrections, or a New York State Identification number (NYSID), you should include them as well. The letter should also state how long you will be incarcerated and the name and address of the facility in which you are incarcerated.

(b) Correcting Mistakes on Your Rap Sheet

Once you have your rap sheet, you can review it for errors. If you discover that your rap sheet contains errors or incomplete entries, you can correct them. The process of having your rap sheet corrected may take a long time. Thus, to avoid having errors on your rap sheet affect your job search, you should begin the correction process earlier rather than later.

For every mistake you find on your record, you need to obtain a “disposition slip,” or Certificate of Disposition, from the clerk of the court in which that case was heard. The disposition slip is far more likely to be accurate than the rap sheet (if the disposition slip is also inaccurate, you will need an attorney to help you sort this problem out). To obtain one or more disposition slips, write to the clerk or visit in person and provide the following information: your name, any aliases, the date of your arrest(s), and the docket or index number of the case(s) (which will ordinarily be included on the rap sheet). If you request a slip in writing, be prepared to wait several months for the clerk to process your request. While the court ordinarily charges a small fee for each disposition slip requested, the fee may be waived at your request if you are incarcerated, are on public assistance, or were represented by a Legal Aid Society lawyer or public defender.

Once you have received all the disposition slips relating to the mistakes you found on your rap sheet, you can send them to the DCJS (at the address stated above) along with a letter that explains that you want to correct your rap sheet and clearly explains how the information on the rap sheet differs from that on each disposition slip you submit. It is essential that you send the original, certified disposition slip, including the clerk’s or judge’s signature or seal, since the DCJS will not honor a photocopy. In your letter, you should also explain where you saw a copy of your criminal record and provide your New York State Identification Number (NYSID) if you know it. Instead of a letter, you may be able to fill out a form called a “Statement of Challenge” that the DCJS usually encloses when it sends you a copy of your rap sheet. It does not matter whether you send a letter or a statement of challenge as long as you provide all the necessary information and original disposition slips.

When your record has been corrected—usually within a few weeks—DCJS will notify you in writing. However, if you want to view your rap sheet again to make sure that all the corrections have been made, you must go through the same procedures described above to request another copy from DCJS.

(c) Sealing Cases

When you get a copy of your rap sheet, there may be information on it that not everyone who requests a copy of your rap sheet is entitled to see. Information about arrests that did not lead to conviction and arrests leading to convictions for most noncriminal offenses is sealable. That means most employers do not have access to it even though it has not been and cannot be permanently removed from your record. Only certain parties can view your entire record, including sealed cases. These include:

- (1) Agencies that issue weapon licenses or permits; any employer or potential employer for a job that requires you to carry a gun;
- (2) Your parole or probation officer, if you are arrested while still under supervision;
- (3) A prosecutor or other law enforcement official, if he can show that “justice requires” it;
- (4) Any prospective employer of a police officer or peace officer; and
- (5) Yourself.¹⁵⁹

When you see your own rap sheet, the portions of it that are sealed from most employers are marked “sealed.” If you see something on your rap sheet that you believe should be sealed but is not marked “sealed,” it probably has not been sealed. You can have those cases sealed, though the process is complicated. The process will also be different depending on when the case was decided, the court in which it was decided, and the reason why it should be sealed.

There are two New York State laws that govern which types of cases may be sealed. Section 160.50 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law provides that most dispositions other than a guilty plea or a conviction at trial are sealable.¹⁶⁰ In addition, a conviction for possession of a small amount of 159. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 160.50(1)(d), 160.55(1)(d) (Consol. 2019).

160. The dispositions that may be sealed under § 160.50 include the following: dismissal, acquittal, dismissal by grand jury, declined prosecution (also called “nolle prosequi”), and adjournment in contemplation of dismissal (“ACD”). N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 160.50(3) (Consol. 2019). Note that the above list does not include conditional or unconditional discharges. These dispositions do not make a case sealable under § 160.50, even if you never received a punishment. However, if the conviction was for certain violations, the case may be sealed under § 160.55. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 160.55(1) (Consol. 2008).

marijuana can be sealed. Section 160.55 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law provides that several violations (noncriminal offenses) and traffic infractions may also be sealed.¹⁶¹

If your record contains any dispositions or convictions of the kinds described here, and they appear not to have been sealed, you can apply to the court to have them sealed. If the case was decided after November 1991, it should have been sealed automatically. If it was not, you simply need to go to the court where the case was decided, get an official, original disposition slip from the court clerk, and send it to the DCJS Sealed Records Unit at the above address with a letter that explains that you want the case sealed based on either Section 160.50 or Section 160.55 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

If your case was decided before November 1991, the process is more complicated. In most cases, the clerk of the court where your case was heard needs to send a sealing order on your behalf to DCJS. Before the clerk can do this, you have to either write a letter or file sealing motion papers with the court. To find out what to do, call the court and ask the clerk how to go about getting a case sealed. If the clerk says you only need to write a letter, make sure you find out the office and address to which you should send the letter, the information you need to provide in it,¹⁶² and whether you need to send a copy of the letter to the district attorney (D.A.).

If the clerk tells you to file a sealing motion, you will need to prepare and file a Notice of Motion and an Affidavit.¹⁶³ After you prepare these papers, you should make two photocopies of each. Send or bring both the original and one copy of each to the D.A.'s office. The D.A. will keep the copy and mark the original "received" so that the clerk will know that you gave the D.A. a copy. If you are still incarcerated, you should send copies of the papers via certified mail and request a return receipt.

To file a sealing motion, you will have to submit the sealing papers to the court. The law imposes a five-day waiting period that must elapse after you give the papers to the D.A. before you submit the papers to the court. After the period has passed, you can present your papers to the court. This process is often something of a formality, but you may have to appear before a judge. You can ask the court clerk if this is the procedure. If it is, the clerk will tell you what the procedure is for getting assigned a date to appear in court. If you are still incarcerated and cannot appear in person, you should send your motion papers to the clerk via certified mail, return receipt requested. You should include an explanation to the clerk of why you cannot appear and also state that you have sent copies to the D.A.

If your case was heard in Manhattan Criminal Court, the process is easier: go to court, present identification and the docket number(s) to the clerk, and the clerk will file the necessary paperwork for you.

If the disposition of your case was "decline prosecution" or "nolle prosequi"—meaning that the prosecutor refused to bring charges after the arrest and before you saw a judge—you will have to go through the D.A.'s office to seal the record. Ask the D.A. to provide a letter or form (a "343 dismissal form") stating that the prosecutor did not pursue the case, and send it to the DCJS Sealed Records Unit at the above address along with a letter asking for the case to be sealed. Include in this letter your name, address, NYSID, and Social Security number.

161. The convictions that may be sealed under § 160.55 include the following: criminal solicitation in the fifth degree (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 100.00 (Consol. 2008)); trespass (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 140.05 (Consol. 2008)); unlawfully posting advertisements (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 145.30 (Consol. 2008)); failing to respond to an appearance ticket (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 215.58 (Consol. 2008)); unlawful possession of marijuana (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 221.05 (Consol. 2008)); disorderly conduct (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 240.20 (Consol. 2008)); harassment in the second degree (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 240.26 (Consol. 2008)); appearance in public under influence of narcotics or a drug other than alcohol (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 240.40 (Consol. 2008)); exposure of a person (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 245.01 (Consol. 2008)); promoting the exposure of a person (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 245.02 (Consol. 2008)); and offensive exhibition (N.Y. PENAL LAW § 245.05 (Consol. 2008)). N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 160.55 (1) (Consol. 2008).

162. This information will include the docket number of the case. Sometimes a court will assign more than one docket number to a single arrest. Make sure that you include all of the docket numbers associated with the arrest that you want to seal. If you do not do so, you might not succeed in sealing that part of your record.

163. See Legal Action Center of the City of New York, Inc., Your New York State Rap Sheet: A Guide to Getting, Understanding & Correcting Your Criminal Record (2013), available at http://lac.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/Your_New_York_State_Rap_Sheet_2013.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

Sealing your records may take DCJS several months. As with correcting mistakes on your rap sheet, the best way to determine whether the sealing was accomplished is to request another copy of your rap sheet.

(d) Getting Your FBI Rap Sheet

The process of getting your FBI rap sheet is quite similar to the process of getting your rap sheet in New York. It may be a good idea to do so if you have any criminal history outside the state of New York. To request your rap sheet from the FBI, write to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Criminal Justice Information Services Division-Record Request
1000 Custer Hollow Road
Clarksburg, WV 26306

In your letter, state that you are requesting your criminal history under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).¹⁶⁴ Include in your letter your name, address, birth date, and fingerprints. The FBI charges a processing fee of $18, which is payable to the “Treasury of the United States” by money order or certified check. If you cannot afford to pay the fee, you can request a fee waiver. To request a fee waiver, write a notarized letter or affidavit explaining why you can’t pay the fee, and mail it to the FBI with the request for your rap sheet.

You cannot apply directly to the FBI to seal any records included on your rap sheet. You need to go through the DCJS or through the equivalent agency in any other state in which you have sealable cases, and the FBI will seal the record when the state agency tells it to do so.

D. Child Custody

Chapter 33 of the JLM, “Rights of Incarcerated Parents,” contains detailed information regarding the federal and New York State law governing your legal relationship with your child before and during your incarceration. Chapter 33 also explains the procedures that New York State follows with custodial parents who are incarcerated.¹⁶⁵ That includes the procedures that you are required to follow in making arrangements for the care of your child,¹⁶⁶ the rights and continued obligations that you have as an incarcerated parent,¹⁶⁷ and the things you can do while incarcerated to defend yourself against the state’s involuntary termination of your parental rights.¹⁶⁸ If you are hoping to have your parental rights restored upon your release, it is extremely important that you understand the information in that chapter.

This Part explains what your parental rights and obligations are upon your release under New York State law, assuming that the state did not terminate (end) your rights during your incarceration and that you did not surrender (give up) those rights by giving your child or children up for adoption. This Part also explains the law governing the right of people with criminal convictions to serve as foster or adoptive parents. If your child is not living in New York State upon your release, a different body of law will govern, and may differ significantly from what is described below, so you should be sure to check the laws of the state where your child is living.

164. 5 U.S.C. § 552. See JLM Chapter 7, “Freedom of Information,” for more information. You can also visit the FBI’s website at: <https://www.fbi.gov/services/cjis/identity-history-summary-checks> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

165. See JLM Chapter 33, “Rights of Incarcerated Parents.”

166. See JLM Chapter 33, “Rights of Incarcerated Parents,” Parts B and C.

167. See JLM Chapter 33, “Rights of Incarcerated Parents.”

168. See JLM Chapter 33, “Rights of Incarcerated Parents,” Part D(2).

1. Reestablishing Custody

Even if your children were voluntarily or involuntarily placed in foster care upon your incarceration,¹⁶⁹ or you granted temporary custody to a friend or relative,¹⁷⁰ you should be able to reassert your parental rights upon your release as long as the State did not terminate your parental rights and you did not surrender those rights.

Re-establishing custody is usually easier if you have voluntarily placed your children in foster care or with a friend or relative. For voluntary foster care placements, the Voluntary Placement Agreement that you made with social services will usually name a date when the department will return your children. The Voluntary Placement Agreement may also specify an event, such as your release, or your completion of certain post-release conditions, that will cause the social services department to return your children.¹⁷¹ On that date or when that event happens, the foster care agency must return your children to you.

There is an exception to the foster care agency's duty to return your children. If the agency (or another party) has gotten a court order that prevents your children from being returned to you,¹⁷² then your children will not be returned. Usually this type of court order is issued only if the state, the foster parents, or the legal guardians of the children have initiated proceedings to terminate your parental rights prior to your release.¹⁷³ Ordinarily, you will have had notice of these proceedings and an opportunity to attend and participate in hearings before any such order is entered.¹⁷⁴

If you wish to have your children returned to you before the date or event specified in your Voluntary Placement Agreement, you can submit a written request to the foster care agency that your children be returned to you. Once you have submitted this request, the foster care agency must return your children or else must notify you within ten days that your request is denied.¹⁷⁵ If the agency denies your request or fails to respond to it, you may file a petition in family court for the return of your children and an order to show cause for the agency's failure to comply with your request. Alternatively, you can file a writ of habeas corpus in the family court or New York Supreme Court.¹⁷⁶

If there is no return date specified in the Voluntary Placement Agreement, you can make a request to the foster care agency. The agency must then return your children to you within twenty days.¹⁷⁷ However, the agency may refuse to return your children if a court order has already been issued in a case brought by the foster care agency or another party for the termination of your parental rights.¹⁷⁸

If your children have been living with a friend or relative during your incarceration, and you have not involved the state in making these arrangements, you have not relinquished any of your parental rights permanently.¹⁷⁹ If the agreement you entered into with the friend or relative said that your children are to be returned to you after your release, you should be able to be reunited with them. However, there is once again the possibility that if a court order has terminated your parental rights, the children may not be returned to you.¹⁸⁰ If the friend or relative does not return your children to you upon your request, you can file a petition in family court for an order that they be returned to you.

169. See JLM Chapter 33, "Rights of Incarcerated Parents," Part C.

170. See JLM Chapter 33, "Rights of Incarcerated Parents," Part B.

171. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008).

172. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008); see also N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-b (Consol. 2008).

173. JLM Chapter 33, "Rights of Incarcerated Parents," provides detailed information on what you can do if someone initiates proceedings to have your parental rights terminated. This information is particularly useful while you are still incarcerated. However, this type of proceeding may be brought after you are released from custody as well.

174. See JLM Chapter 33, "Rights of Incarcerated Parents," Part D.

175. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008).

176. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008).

177. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008).

178. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-a(2)(a) (Consol. 2008).

179. See JLM Chapter 33, "Rights of Incarcerated Parents," Part B.

180. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 384-b (Consol. 2008).

(a) Preventive Services

When you are reunited with your children, you may be able to receive supportive and rehabilitative help from the Department of Social Services. Such help, called “preventive services,” is provided to help return your children from foster care more quickly, or to prevent your children from having to return to foster care.¹⁸¹ Depending on your situation, preventive services may include case management, case planning, casework contacts (e.g., regular meetings with your case worker), daycare, homemaker services, housekeeper/chore services, family planning, home management services, clinical services, parent aide services, day services to children, parent training, transportation services, emergency cash or goods, emergency shelter, housing services, intensive home-based family preservation services, outreach activities, and respite care and services.¹⁸²

A social services official will decide whether you need these services, and that decision is reviewed first after you and your children have received services for six months, and then every six months after that.¹⁸³ If your children have been given back to you from foster care and you are receiving preventive services, New York State regulations require that the Department of Social Services, or the foster care agency, make twelve contacts with you in each six month period that you are receiving preventive services.¹⁸⁴ Of these twelve contacts, four must be individual face-to-face meetings with you and/or your children, and two must take place in your children’s home.¹⁸⁵

The Department of Social Services must provide you with preventive services if the Department believes that you would not be able to adequately take care of your children without help.¹⁸⁶ Such services are not likely to be provided to you and your family long-term because, if you need these services long-term, the Department may think that you are not able to provide a stable home for your children. If the social services official believes that you are not able to provide a stable home, the official may recommend placing your children in foster care again. For this reason, you should plan to use these services only temporarily (for a short time) to help your family get back on its feet.

2. Becoming a Foster or Adoptive Parent

New York State, in compliance with the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997 (ASFA),¹⁸⁷ has a law that restricts the ability of people with criminal histories to be adoptive or foster parents, or even to live in households with foster or adopted children.¹⁸⁸ This section only applies to you if you are looking to become a foster parent, you are applying to adopt a child, or if you are planning to live in a household with foster or adopted children. If you were an adoptive parent before conviction, you have the same rights as a biological parent. New York Social Services Law Section 378-a provides that all current and potential foster and adoptive parents, as well as all adults over the age of eighteen living in the homes of foster or adoptive children, must both be fingerprinted and undergo a criminal history check.¹⁸⁹

Certain felony convictions in your criminal history will (1) result in the denial of your application to be a foster or adoptive parent,¹⁹⁰ (2) result in the denial of your application for renewal if you are a

181. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 409 (Consol. 2011).

182. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.2(b)(1)–(19) (2019).

183. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 409-a(1)(b) (Consol. 2010); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.4(b)(1) (2019).

184. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.4(c)(ii)(d) (2019).

185. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 423.4(c)(ii)(d)(2)(i) (2019).

186. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 430.9(c) (2019).

187. Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997, Pub. L. 105–89, 111 Stat. 2115 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 42 U.S.C.).

188. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 378-a (Consol. 2010).

189. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 378-a(2)(a)–(b) (Consol. 2010).

190. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW§ 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A)–(B) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

current foster parent,¹⁹¹ (3) result in the revocation of your certification if you are a current foster parent,¹⁹² and (4) result in the revocation of your approval to be an adoptive parent if you have not completed the adoption process.¹⁹³ These felony convictions are:

- (1) Child abuse or neglect;¹⁹⁴
- (2) Spousal abuse;¹⁹⁵
- (3) A crime against a child, including child pornography;¹⁹⁶ or
- (4) A crime involving violence, including rape, sexual assault, or homicide, other than a crime involving physical assault or battery.¹⁹⁷

Furthermore, a felony conviction in the last five years for physical assault, battery, or drug-related offenses will have the same result.¹⁹⁸

If any of the above-listed felony convictions appear on your record, you can try to show two things to prevent your application from being denied and/or your approval of certification from being revoked: (1) that denial or revocation will create an unreasonable risk of harm to the physical or mental health of the child, and (2) that approval of the application will not place the child's safety at risk and will be in the best interests of the child.¹⁹⁹ You will only be successful if you can prove to the court that, because of these two things, § 378-a(2)(e)(1) is unconstitutional as applied to you.²⁰⁰

The Office of Children and Family Services may also decide to deny your application for certification or approval to be an adoptive or foster parent if (1) you have any criminal charges or

191. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(4) (Consol. 2010).

192. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(5) (Consol. 2010).

193. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(5) (Consol. 2010).

194. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A)(i) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

195. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A)(ii) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child). Furthermore, “spousal abuse” may not be a disqualification if the Department of Social Services finds that the offense called “spousal abuse” was committed by a victim of physical, sexual, or psychological abuse, and that the victimization was a factor in causing the potential foster or adoptive parent to commit the offense. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(j) (Consol. 2004).

196. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A)(iii) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

197. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A)(iv) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx Cty. 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

198. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(B) (Consol. 2010). But see In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx Cty. 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

199. In re Adoption of Abel found that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child. The court allowed petitioner and his wife to adopt the child because denial would have created an unreasonable risk of harm to the child and granting adoption would have been in the child's best interest and not have placed his safety in jeopardy. In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011).

200. This is called an “as applied” challenge to a statute. In an “as applied” challenge, you are not arguing that the statute is always unconstitutional. Arguing that a statute is always constitutional is called a “facial challenge,” because you are arguing the statute is unconstitutional “on its face” (meaning, from the text of the statute). Instead, in an “as applied” challenge, you are arguing that the statute cannot be applied to you because applying the statute to you would violate your constitutional rights. To learn more about facial versus as-applied challenges, read the definition of the word “facially” in JLM, Appendix V, Definitions of Words Used in the JLM.

convictions at all on your record,²⁰¹ or (2) if you live with someone over the age of eighteen who has been charged with, or convicted of, any crime.²⁰² In addition, if you have any pending criminal charges, your application will be suspended until the matter is resolved.²⁰³

If the record of any foster or adoptive parent, or of anyone living in the same household above the age of eighteen, contains any criminal charges or convictions, the foster care agency or adoption agency is required by law to perform a safety assessment of the home. In performing this assessment, the agency must determine the following:

- (1) Whether the person with this record resides in the household;
- (2) How much contact the person with this record may have with foster children or other children residing in the household; and
- (3) The status, date and nature of the criminal charge or conviction.²⁰⁴

After this assessment, the agency may remove the child from your home if the child is currently living there. For example, if the assessment reveals that the health and safety of the child is at risk, the agency may decide to remove the child. On the other hand, if your approval or certification is revoked, or your application denied, for one of the reasons already discussed in this section, the agency must remove the child from your home if the child is currently living there.²⁰⁵

If your application to be a foster or adoptive parent is denied, the Office of Children and Family Service must tell you the reasons why.²⁰⁶ The Office must also tell you about its review and remedial procedures.²⁰⁷ The same is true if your current approval or certification is revoked. You can also request a hearing in family court in order to present evidence that the child's best interests would be served by having the certification granted or continued.²⁰⁸ If you officially completed the adoption process prior to your conviction, despite the above, you have full parental rights that can only be terminated through formal legal proceedings.

If you want to become an adoptive or foster parent, you should make sure your criminal record is as clean and as accurate as possible. Additionally, you should make sure that the criminal record of anyone who lives with you is also as clean and as accurate as possible. For more information on how to clean up your record or rap sheet, please consult Part C(3) above.

E. Military Service

1. The Draft

Virtually all men living in the United States are required by federal law to register for the Selective Service (commonly known as "the draft") within thirty days of their eighteenth birthday.²⁰⁹ If you fail to register for the draft, you may be turned down for benefits like federal student loans and grants, job training, government jobs, and citizenship (if you are not yet a citizen). In addition, many states and municipalities have laws that tie registration with the Selective Service to education, training, employment opportunities, and even driver's licenses. Indeed, failure to register is a felony punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of $250,000.²¹⁰

201. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(A) (Consol. 2010).

202. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(B) (Consol. 2010).

203. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(e)(2)(A)–(B) (Consol. 2010).

204. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(h) (Consol. 2010).

205. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(h) (Consol. 2010).

206. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(g) (Consol. 2010). See also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 421.27(e) (2019) (explaining the procedures if your application is denied).

207. N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 378-a(2)(g) (Consol. 2010). See also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 18, § 421.27(e) (2019) (explaining the procedures if your application is denied).

208. See In re Adoption of Abel, 33 Misc.3d 710, 717–718, 931 N.Y.S.2d 829, 834–835 (N.Y. Fam. Ct. Bronx County 2011) (finding that § 378-a(2)(e)(1) was unconstitutional as applied to the petitioner because it violated his due process right to an individualized determination of whether he should be able to adopt a child).

209. Selective Service System, Who Must Register, available at <https://www.sss.gov/Registration-Info/Who-Registration> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

210. Selective Service System, Why Register? Benefits and Penalties, available at <https://www.sss.gov/Registration/Why-Register/Benefits-and-Penalties> (last visited Sept. 29, 2019).

The Selective Service Act (that is, the federal law that requires you to register for the draft) states that “[n]o person shall be relieved from training and service under this title ... by reason of conviction of a criminal offense, except where the offense of which he has been convicted may be punished by death, or by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year.”²¹¹ In other words, the government may choose to exempt you from the draft because of a felony conviction. Note that you are not automatically exempt because of a felony conviction, and that you will never be exempt because of a misdemeanor conviction.²¹² Also, if the draft is ever reinstated, a felony conviction will not automatically exempt you from military service.

2. Voluntary Service

If you are considering a career in the military, you should know that it is a very different sort of employment than the types discussed above in Part C. First of all, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which guarantees that all individuals are treated equally with respect to civilian employment (see Part C(1)(b) above), does not apply to uniformed members of the military.²¹³ Further, once you are in the military, you will give up some of your rights because the courts generally respect and uphold military rules and regulations. The Supreme Court has said that “the military is, by necessity, a specialized society separate from civilian society” and that “the essence of military service is the subordination of the desires and interests of the individual to the needs of the service.”²¹⁴

If you decide to try to enlist, it is a good idea to get a copy of your rap sheet and make sure it is accurate. For more information on rap sheets, see Part C(3) above. You will be asked about your criminal record by the recruiter, and the recruiter is very likely to run a background check on you. You should be careful not to make false statements on your application. It is a violation of federal law to make false statements on your application.²¹⁵

No branch of the U.S. armed forces will automatically deny admission to anyone with misdemeanor convictions, but some branches may choose to deny admission based on a misdemeanor. A drug offense is particularly likely to get you barred from any service. A felony conviction, on the other hand, typically makes someone ineligible for any military service, although the Secretary of each branch can make exceptions in “meritorious cases.”²¹⁶ Indeed, each branch of the military has its own recruiting standards, and decides differently whether or not to accept someone with a criminal conviction. Even within a single branch, recruiting officers will often make case-by-case decisions based on the number and nature of your convictions, how much time has passed since your last conviction, and other factors.

211. 50 U.S.C. 3806(m) (2015).

212. Korte v. United States, 260 F.2d 633, 637 (9th Cir. 1958) (holding that a felon may, but not necessarily shall, be excused from military service, while those convicted of misdemeanors are not categorically excused from service).

213. See Overton v. N.Y. State Div. of Military & Naval Affairs, 373 F.3d 83, 88–89 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that lawsuits against military employers are barred “if the injuries for which a plaintiff seeks to recover arise out of or are in the course of activity incident to the plaintiff’s military service.”) (internal citations omitted); see also Baldwin v. United States Army, 223 F.3d 100, 101 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that uniformed members of the armed service cannot bring claims under Title VII). If you are not a “uniformed” member of the armed service, but a civilian who works for the armed services, you can bring Title VII claims against your military employer. 42 USC § 2000e-16(A) (2012). See Roper v. Dept. of Army, 832 F.2d 247, 248 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding that Title VII applies only to civilian employees and not to uniformed members of the armed services).

214. Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503, 506, 106 S. Ct. 1310, 1312–1313, 89 L. Ed. 2d 478, 483 (1986) (holding that the “First Amendment did not prohibit application of air force regulation to prevent wearing of yarmulke by plaintiff while on duty and in uniform”) (internal citations omitted), superseded in part by statute, 10 U.S.C. § 774(a)–(b) (2012) (stating that “a member of the armed forces may wear an item of religious apparel while wearing the uniform of the member’s armed force...[unless]...the wearing of the item would interfere with the performance of the member’s military duties; or if the Secretary determines...that the item of apparel is not neat and conservative”).

215. 10 U.S.C. § 907 (2019); 10 U.S.C. § 904(a) (2019).

216. 10 U.S.C. § 504(a) (2012); see also 32 C.F.R. § 96.4 (2019) (stating that it is the policy of the Department of Defense and Military Services to investigate the background of each applicant to identify those whose backgrounds raise questions as to their fitness for service or those who cannot enlist without a waiver).

The Army, for example, has publicly stated how it decides whether to enlist people with criminal histories: it requires them to request waivers.²¹⁷ In general, the Military Services have a policy against allowing people with criminal records to enlist because they feel that doing so might cause disciplinary problems or present security risks.²¹⁸ However, the Army may issue waivers to allow people to join when it decides that their criminal history does not make them a disciplinary risk.²¹⁹ These waivers are required for people who have been convicted of felonies.²²⁰

If you apply for a waiver, you have the burden to prove both that you can overcome the reason for your disqualification and that it would be in Army's best interest to accept you.²²¹ You will have to undergo a "suitability review" if you have been accused of a serious offense or even for some lower-level offenses if you have more than one.²²² Depending on the seriousness of the offense, different levels of review will be appropriate.²²³ You may also be required to apply for a waiver if you have certain

217. 32 C.F.R. § 571.3 lists the basic criteria and processes for obtaining waivers, which are generally necessary for people with criminal records. See also Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Chapter 4: Enlistment Waivers (Waiverable and Nonwaiverable Criteria and Administrative Instructions) (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (prescribing documents necessary for waiver requests and defining waiverable and nonwaivable disqualifications).

218. U.S. Dept. of Def., Instruction 1304.26, Qualification Standards for Enlistment, Appointment, and Induction, Part E3(2)(h), at 9-10 (23 Mar. 2015, modified 26 Oct. 2018), available at <https://www.esd.whs.mil/Directives/issuances/dodi/> (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (discussing necessity of enlisting those with good moral character in the Armed Forces).

219. U.S. Dept. of Def., Instruction 1304.26, Qualification Standards for Enlistment, Appointment, and Induction, Part E3(2)(h)(2), at 9 (23 Mar. 2015, modified 26 Oct. 2018), available at <https://www.esd.whs.mil/Directives/issuances/dodi/> (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (listing a "significant criminal record" as a possible disqualification for service, but also providing for a waiver in that circumstance).

220. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, ch. 4-7 (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) ("A waiver is required for any applicant who has received a conviction or other adverse disposition for a major misconduct offense, or any offense considered a felony under local law.") Additionally, note that any criminal history, including arrests, will require you to undergo a suitability review. Ch. 4-2(e)(1); U.S. Dept. of Def., Instruction 1304.26, Qualification Standards for Enlistment, Appointment, and Induction, Part E3(2)(h)(2), at 9 (23 Mar. 2015, modified 26 Oct. 2018), available at <https://www.esd.whs.mil/Directives/issuances/dodi/> (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) ("Except as limited by paragraph (3) [conviction of various sex offenses] below, persons convicted of felonies may request a waiver to permit their enlistment. The waiver procedure is not automatic, and approval is based on each individual case.").

221. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-2(c) (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585 (last visited Oct. 27, 2019).

222. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-2(e)(1)(a), (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585 (last visited Oct. 27, 2019). Serious offenses include, but are not limited to, such crimes as aggravated assault, burglary, domestic violence, forgery, kidnapping, larceny, murder, narcotics, rape, and robbery. Ch. 4-11. For some offenses and conditions, however, you will not be able to get a waiver. You cannot enlist if you are on probation or parole, or if you are on the sex offender registry. Ch. 4-22(h) and (j). For instance, if you have been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, you cannot enlist and a waiver will not be approved. Ch. 4-7(c)(2).

223. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Chs. 4-2(e) and 4-4 (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019). (describing types of charges that require a suitability review, the level of command that conducts that review, and the evaluation guidelines).

non-criminal offenses on your record, such as traffic violations,²²⁴ or other offenses for which you received penalties other than prison.²²⁵

In order to apply for a waiver, you will need, among other documents, police checks, court documents, documents from probation or parole officers, and documents from your correctional facility.²²⁶ Make sure to obtain all of these if you plan to apply for a waiver. You may also be asked to provide letters of recommendation from community leaders such as school officials, ministers, or police officers.²²⁷ Additionally, keep in mind that there may be a waiting period following your release before you can submit your waiver.²²⁸

While the Air Force, the Navy, and the Marine Corps do not have published regulations, they may use a similar approach to potential enlistees with criminal histories. However, the military has a lot of discretion in deciding whether to allow someone with a criminal history to enlist. This makes it difficult to accurately predict whether you will be allowed to enlist. If you are interested in joining one of the branches of the armed forces, you should call or visit the recruiter in your area and ask what standards are applied in evaluating applicants with a criminal background.

F. Voting Rights

The Supreme Court has held that it is constitutional if states pass laws that “disenfranchise” (take away the right to vote) individuals who have been convicted of a felony.²²⁹ However, this does not mean that you will necessarily be denied the right to vote, because different states have different laws about the voting rights of people with criminal convictions. For both federal and state elections, your right to vote is controlled by the law of the state where you live, not the state where you were convicted. If you move to another state after your release from prison, your rights may be affected differently than in your previous home state. The impact of a criminal conviction on the right to vote varies widely from state to state and many states rewrite their voting laws frequently. Most states have placed some restrictions on the right to vote for people who have been convicted of a crime. It is unlikely that you will be disqualified from voting solely because of a misdemeanor conviction. In some states, your criminal conviction does not affect your voting rights at all.²³⁰ Before registering, you must determine 224. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-6(a), (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019).

225. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-6 (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019), (requiring waivers for applicants who have had a certain number of civil court convictions or dispositions that are not serious criminal misconduct).

226. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-28(e) (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (laying out waiver approval procedures).

227. U.S. Dept. of Def., Instruction 1304.26, Qualification Standards for Enlistment, Appointment, and Induction, Part E4(1)(c), at 11 (23 Mar. 2015, modified 26 Oct. 2018), available at <https://www.esd.whs.mil/Directives/issuances/dodi/> (last visited Oct. 27, 2019).

228. Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-32(b) (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (laying out waiting periods for different amounts of confinement); see also Army Publishing Directorate, Reg. 601-210, Regular Army and Reserve Components Enlistment Program, Ch. 4-7(a) (31 Aug. 2016), available at https://armypubs.army.mil/ProductMaps/PubForm/Details.aspx?PUB_ID=1000585, (last visited Oct. 27, 2019) (noting that for serious criminal misconduct, applicants have a 24-month wait from the date of conviction prior to waiver processing).

229. Richardson v. Ramirez, 418 U.S. 24, 56, 94 S. Ct. 2655, 2670, 41 L. Ed. 2d 551, 570 (1974) (holding that the exclusion of convicted felons from the vote is not a violation of any provision of the Constitution).

230. See, e.g., VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 17, § 2121–2122 (2012); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 21-A, §§ 111, 112(14) (2012).

whether you are eligible to vote lawfully. If you vote when you are ineligible or if you make false statements on a voter registration form, you could face criminal penalties.²³¹

If you are incarcerated and are entitled to vote through an absentee ballot, it may still be difficult to obtain an absentee ballot, as prisons are unlikely to have them on hand. The town clerk, the registrar of voters, or the board of elections in the municipality where you are registered will generally send an absentee ballot to any registered voter who writes to request one. You may also be able to request a ballot by telephone. In order to fulfill your request, the clerk or registrar will likely need to know both the address where you are registered and your date of birth. However, even if the law of the state in which you are registered does not restrict the right of incarcerated persons to vote, you will still probably face obstacles in getting election officials to send you an absentee ballot. If an official does not understand the law regulating to your right to vote, he or she might refuse to send you a ballot even if you are entitled to one. For this reason, you may want to find out if your state election law allows third parties, such as family members, to obtain a ballot and send it to you.

1. Restoring Your Right to Vote²³²

If you live in a state where you will be able to exercise some of your voting rights, you will want to find out how to get your rights restored. Some states automatically restore your right to vote after you are released from jail or prison;²³³ others do so only after you have completed your entire sentence, including any parole or other supervision.²³⁴ In some states you must petition the sentencing court or the governor's office in order to have your civil rights restored, including your right to vote.²³⁵ (Courts have generally held that civil rights include not only your right to vote, but also your right to serve on a jury and your right to hold public office).²³⁶ Several other states require you to ask for and be granted

231. For example, under New York law, “[a]ny person who . . . knowingly votes or offers or attempts to vote at any election, when not qualified . . . is guilty of a felony.” N.Y. ELEC. LAW § 17-132(1) (McKinney 2018). California law provides that “[e]very person who willfully causes, procures, or allows himself or herself or any other person to be registered as a voter, knowing that he or she or that other person is not entitled to registration, is punishable by imprisonment . . . for 16 months or two or three years, or in a county jail for not more than one year.” CAL. ELEC. CODE § 18100(a) (West 2011). In Florida, “[w]hoever, knowing he or she is not a qualified elector, willfully votes at any election is guilty of a felony of the third degree.” FLA. STAT. ANN. § 104.15 (2012). Connecticut law provides that “[a]ny person who procures such person or another to be registered after having been disfranchised by reason of conviction of crime . . . and any person who votes at any election after having forfeited such privileges by reason of conviction of crime and confinement, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not more than one year.” CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 9-45(b) (2012). While some states seem to criminalize only registration by people who know they are unqualified, others, like Connecticut, make it a crime for unqualified voters to register even if they do not know they are unqualified. Since different states have different rules, and these rules frequently change, you should make sure that the state in which you live makes you eligible to vote before you register.

232. The National Conference of State Legislatures publishes a website with state-by-state information about how to restore your right to vote after a felony conviction. See National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

233. Some states allow formerly incarcerated people to vote once they are released, even if they are still on probation or parole. For more information, see National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

234. For more information, see National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

235. For more information, see National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

236. Your civil rights sometimes also include your right to hold certain licenses, such as occupational licenses or handgun licenses. The laws governing how, if at all, political rights can be restored to people with criminal convictions may differ a great deal from state to state. In New York, for example, while the law defines in detail the ways convicted felons are to be excluded from the voting rolls, and how they can be restored, there is a pardon by the governor of your state (or in some cases, from a separate state board that deals with pardons) before your voting rights and other civil rights can be restored.²³⁷ In some states these pardons are issued as long as you have remained crime-free for a certain period of time after fulfilling the conditions of your sentence. In others, however, the need to obtain a pardon is almost like a lifetime ban on voting, because pardons are granted only in highly unusual circumstances. Furthermore, in some states, including New York, you may be issued a restricted pardon that does not restore all of your political rights.²³⁸ Finally, some states may revoke your voting rights until you have served your full sentence or had your civil rights restored, or they may revoke your voting rights permanently for certain specific convictions.²³⁹

However, voting law is not always clear, and it changes frequently. Therefore, upon your release, you should (1) consult the election law in your state, and (2) contact your local or state board of elections to determine your eligibility to vote and the procedures necessary for regaining your eligibility. Currently the American Civil Liberties Union hosts a website that answers basic questions you may have about voting rights.²⁴⁰ Similarly, the National Conference of State Legislatures provides information regarding voter restoration online.²⁴¹ Remember that if you move to a different state, the laws governing the right to vote for people with felony convictions in your new state will determine whether you may vote, and they may differ from your previous home state.

In most states, the rules governing the right to vote are the same whether you have been convicted of a federal crime or a state crime, and regardless of the state in which you were convicted. However, if the state where you live requires a pardon in order to regain your voting rights, you may have to contact the governor's office in the state where your conviction occurred. If you were convicted of a federal crime you may have to contact the federal government.²⁴²

no statute that either specifically disqualifies a felon from holding office or describes how the right to hold office can be restored. N.Y. ELEC. LAW § 5-106 (McKinney 2018). Further, while a felony conviction is a bar to serving on a jury, you can often remove this bar by applying for and receiving a Certificate of Good Conduct or a Certificate of Relief from Disabilities (described in detail in Part C(2) of this Chapter). By contrast, Connecticut has statutes stating that voting rights and the right to hold or run for office can be restored once you have been released and have finished any parole, but you cannot serve on a jury until seven years have passed following your conviction of a felony. CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. §§ 9-46, 9-46a, 51-217 (2008).

237. For more information, see National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

238. An advisory opinion issued by New York's Attorney General's office states that the pardon of a felony is not sufficient to restore all the rights of citizenship. 1930 N.Y. Op. Att'y Gen. 279, 284 (1930).

239. In Delaware, if you are convicted of murder, manslaughter (except vehicular homicide), any felony that is a sexual offense, or improper influence or abuse of office you cannot have your voting rights restored. For other offenses, your right to vote may be restored once you are pardoned or have finished serving your sentence, whichever comes first. DEL. CONST. ART. V, § 2 (2012). Missouri permanently disqualifies from voting those convicted of certain crimes related to voting. For other offenses, you maybe be deprived of the right to vote while you are serving your sentence and permanently barred from serving as a juror. MO. REV. STAT. 561.026 (2012). The Missouri statute does allow for an exception if your conviction has been successfully expunged under MO. REV. STAT. 610.140 (2012). The Florida Constitution was recently amended so that most people with felony convictions will regain the right to vote once they have completed their sentence, including any term of parole or probation. There is an exception for people convicted of murder and felony sex offenses who cannot vote until their civil rights are restored. FLA. CONST. ART. VI, § 4 (2018). There has been ongoing litigation about whether or not someone who has not paid all their fines and fees will be considered to have served their whole sentence. It may be best to check with a local legal aid organization before registering to vote.

240. American Civil Liberties Union, Know Your Voting Rights: Voting Rights, available at <https://www.aclu.org/know-your-rights/voting-rights/> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

241. National Conference of State Legislatures, Felon Voting Rights (1 Oct. 2020), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/elections-and-campaigns/felon-voting-rights.aspx> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020).

242. For more information about federal pardons, you can visit the website of the Office of the Pardon Attorney of the Department of Justice at: <https://www.justice.gov/pardon> (last visited Nov. 22, 2020). You can contact the Office of the Pardon Attorney to ask for additional information. The Office prefers to be contacted by email: USPardon.Attorney@usdoj.gov. You can also contact the Office by mail: U.S. Department of Justice, Office

If you believe you are eligible to vote and have difficulty registering, contact the appropriate state agency, usually the state's Board of Elections. You may also contact your state agency to obtain information about the latest changes to election law in your state. The federal website www.usa.gov provides contact information for each state election agency. If this agency is unable to help you, or if you want to report a problem, you may contact:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
Voting Section
950 Pennsylvania Avenue AV NW
4CON 8th Floor
Washington, DC 20530

Phone: (202) 307-2767; (800) 253-3931 (toll-free)

Fax: (202) 307-3961

Email address: voting.section@usdoj.gov

<http://www.justice.gov/crt/voting-section>

G. Conclusion

There are many legal issues you may face after your release from prison. For instance, it may be difficult to obtain housing. Some laws may permit or require that you to be denied public housing assistance based on your criminal conviction. There are also restrictions on public benefits that may affect you because of your conviction. In addition, getting a job after you are released can be difficult. Federal or state laws may restrict you from holding certain jobs, but in general you should be able to find work in most areas.

Other issues that may be affected by your criminal conviction include child custody, your ability to serve in the military, and your ability to vote. Almost all of these areas are governed by both federal and state laws, so you should be sure to familiarize yourself with the state law applicable to you. This will help you to navigate the different issues that will arise upon your release.

APPENDIX A

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR HOUSING ASSISTANCE AGENCIES

For information regarding federal public housing assistance:

U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)
451 7th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20410
Phone: (202) 708-1112
TTY: (202) 708-1455
<http://www.hud.gov>

For a directory of state and local housing authorities, agencies, and organizations nationwide:

The Public Housing Authorities Directors Association
http://www.phada.org/ha_list.php

New York State Housing and Urban Development Offices

New York City

Jacob K. Javits Federal Building
(Broadway between Duane & Worth Streets)
26 Federal Plaza, Suite 3541
New York, NY 10278-0068
Phone: (212) 264-8000
Fax: (212) 264-0246
Email: NY_Webmanager@hud.gov

Albany

52 Corporate Circle
Albany, NY 12203-5121
Phone: (518) 464-4200
Fax: (518) 464-4300
Email: NY_Webmanager@hud.gov

Buffalo

Lafayette Court
465 Main Street, 2nd Floor
Buffalo, NY 14203-1780
Phone: (716) 551-5755
Fax: (716) 551-5752
Email: NY_Webmanager@hud.gov

For information about public housing assistance in New York City:

(NYCHA)
250 Broadway
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 306-3000
<http://www.nyc.gov/html/nycha/html/home/home.shtml>

For information about and applications for Section 8 housing in New York City, contact a NYCHA application office:

Bronx/Manhattan

478 East Fordham Road (1 Fordham Plaza), 2nd Floor

Bronx, NY 10458

Phone: (718) 707-7771

Brooklyn/Staten Island

787 Atlantic Avenue, 2nd Floor

Brooklyn, NY 11238

Phone: (718) 707-7771

Queens

90-27 Sutphin Boulevard, 4th Floor

Jamaica, NY 11435

Phone: (718) 707-7771

For emergency shelter:

There are five drop-in centers run by the New York City Department of Homeless Services. The drop-in centers are located throughout the City. They provide hot meals, showers, laundry facilities, clothing, medical care, recreational space, employment referrals, and other social services. Staff can also help you find a safe and secure place to sleep. Some drop-ins operate twenty-four hours a day; others operate from 7:30am to 8:30pm. Dial 311 to contact any drop-in center, receive directions, or obtain other information.

Manhattan

Olivieri Center for Women (7:30am to 8:30pm)

257 West 30th Street

New York, NY 10001

Mainchance (24 Hours)

120 E. 32nd Street

New York, NY 10017

Bronx

The Living Room (24 Hours)

800 Barretto Street

Bronx, NY 10474

Brooklyn

The Gathering Place (7:30am to 8:30pm)

2402 Atlantic Avenue

Brooklyn, NY 11233

Staten Island

Project Hospitality (7:30am to 8:30pm)

25 Central Avenue

Staten Island, NY 10036

APPENDIX B

STATE HUMAN SERVICES DEPARTMENTS/ ASSISTANCE FOUNDATIONS

Alabama

Alabama Department of Human Resources

Family Assistance Division

50 North Ripley Street

Montgomery, AL 36130

Phone: (334) 242-1773

http://dhr.alabama.gov/services/Family_Assistance/Family_Assistance_Program.aspx

Alaska

Alaska Temporary Assistance Program

P.O. Box 110640

Juneau, AK 99811-0640

Phone: (907) 465-3347

Fax: (907) 465-5254

<http://dhss.alaska.gov/dpa/Pages/atap/default.aspx>

Arizona

Arizona Department of Economic Security

Family Assistance Administration

1717 W. Jefferson Street

Phoenix, Arizona 85007

Phone: (855) 432-7587

<https://des.az.gov/>

Arkansas

Arkansas Department of Human Services

Donaghey Plaza

P.O. Box 1437

Little Rock, AR 72203-1437

Phone: (501) 682-1001

<http://humanservices.arkansas.gov/Pages/default.aspx>

California

California Department of Social Services

744 P Street

Sacramento, CA 95814

Phone: (916) 445-6951

<http://www.dss.cahwnet.gov/cdssweb/>

Colorado

Colorado Works

1575 Sherman St.

Denver, CO 80203-1714

Phone: (303) 866-5700

Fax: (303) 866-4047

<http://www.cdhs.state.co.us/>

Connecticut

State of Connecticut
Department of Social Services
25 Sigourney Street
Hartford, CT 06106-5033
Phone: (800) 842-1508 (toll-free)
<http://www.ct.gov/dss/site/default.asp>

Delaware

The Division of Social Services
1901 N. Du Pont Hwy., Lewis Building
New Castle, DE 19720
Phone: (302) 255-9668
Fax: (302) 255-4433
<http://dhss.delaware.gov/dhss/>

District of Columbia

Department of Human Services
Income Maintenance Administration
64 New York Avenue, NE, 6th Floor
Washington, DC 20002
Phone: (202) 671-4200
Fax: (202) 671-4325
<http://dhs.dc.gov/>

Florida

Work Force Florida
1580 Waldo Palmer Lane, Ste. 1
Tallahassee, FL 32308
Phone: (850) 921-1119
Fax: (850) 921-1101
<http://www.workforceflorida.com>

Georgia

Georgia Department of Human Resources
Division of Family & Children Services
2 Peachtree Street, N.W. Suite 18-486
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
Phone: (404) 651-9361, or (877) 423-4746
<http://dfcs.dhr.georgia.gov>

Guam

Department of Public Health and Social Services
Bureau of Social Services Administration
194 Hernan Cortez Avenue,
Terlaje Professional Building, 3rd Floor, Ste. 309
Hagatna, Guam 96932
Phone: (671) 475-2653 or (671) 475-2672
Fax: (671) 477-0500
<http://www.dphss.guam.gov/>

Hawaii

Department of Human Services
1390 Miller Street, Room 209
Honolulu, HI 96813
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 339
Honolulu, HI 96809-0339
Phone: (808) 586-4997
Fax: (808) 586-4890
<http://www.hawaii.gov/dhs>

Idaho

Idaho Department of Health & Welfare
450 W. State Street #9
Boise, ID 83720-0036
Phone: (208) 334-5500
<http://www.healthandwelfare.idaho.gov>

Illinois

Department of Human Services
401 S. Clinton St.
Chicago, IL 60607
Phone: (800) 843-6154 (toll-free)
<http://www.dhs.state.il.us>

Indiana

Indiana Family and Social Services Administration
P. O. Box 7083
Indianapolis, IN 46207-7083
Phone: (800) 457-8283 (toll-free)
<http://www.in.gov/fssa>

Iowa

Iowa Department of Human Services
Family Investment Program
Hoover State Office Building
1305 E. Walnut Street
Des Moines, Iowa, 50319
Phone: (800) 972-2017 (toll-free) or (515) 281-5454
Fax: (515) 281-4980
<http://www.dhs.state.ia.us>

Kansas

Kansas Department for Children and Families
915 SW Harrison St.
Topeka, KS 66612
Phone: (888) 369-4777
<http://www.dcf.ks.gov/services/ees/Pages/default.aspx>

Kentucky

Cabinet for Health and Family Services
Office of the Secretary
275 East Main Street
Frankfort, KY 40621
Phone: (800) 372-2973 (toll-free)
<http://chfs.ky.gov>

Louisiana

Department of Children & Family Services
627 N. Fourth St.
Baton Rouge, LA 70802
Phone: (888) 524-3578
<http://www.dcfsls.la.gov/>

Maine

Office for Family Independence
11 State House Station
19 Union Street
Augusta, ME 04333
Phone: (207) 624-4168
Fax: (207) 287-5096
<http://www.maine.gov/dhhs/ofi/services/home.html>

Maryland

Department of Human Resources
Constituent Services Unit
311 West Saratoga Street
Baltimore, MD 21201
Phone: (800) 332-6347 (toll-free)
<http://www.dhr.state.md.us>

Massachusetts

Health and Human Services
Department of Transitional Assistance
One Ashburton Place, 11th Floor
Boston, MA 02108
Phone: (617) 573-1600
<http://www.mass.gov/eohhs/>

Michigan

Department of Human Services
235 S. Grand Avenue
P.O. Box 30037
Lansing, MI 48909
Phone: (855) 275-6424
<http://www.michigan.gov/dhs>

Minnesota

Department of Human Services
444 Lafayette Road North
Saint Paul, MN 55155
Phone: (651) 431-2000
<http://mn.gov/dhs/>

Mississippi

Department of Human Services
Division of Economic Assistance
750 North State Street
Jackson, MS 39202
Phone: (800) 345-6347 (toll-free)
<http://www.mdhs.state.ms.us/ea.html>

Missouri

Department of Social Services
Broadway State Office Building
P.O. Box 1527
Jefferson City, MO 65102-1527
Phone: (573) 751-4815
Fax: (573) 751-3203
<http://www.dss.mo.gov>

Montana

Department of Public Health & Human Services
111 North Sanders St.
Helena, MT 59601
Phone: (406) 444-5622
<http://www.dphhs.mt.gov/>

Nebraska

Department of Health & Human Services
301 Centennial Mall South
Lincoln, NE 68509-5044
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 95026, Lincoln
Nebraska 68509-5026
Phone: (402) 471-3121
<http://dhhs.ne.gov/Pages/default.aspx>

Nevada

Human Resources, Division of Welfare and Supportive Services
1470 College Parkway
Carson City, NV 89706
Phone: (775) 684-0500
Fax: (775) 684-0646
<http://dwss.nv.gov/>

New Hampshire

Department of Health and Human Services
Division of Family Assistance
129 Pleasant Street
Concord, NH 03301-3857
Phone: (603) 271-9700
<http://www.dhhs.state.nh.us>

New Jersey

Department of Human Services
222 South Warren Street
P.O. Box 700
Trenton, NJ 08625-0700
Phone: (609) 292-3717
<http://www.state.nj.us/humanservices/>

New Mexico

Human Services Department
P.O. Box 2348
Santa Fe, NM 87504-2348
Phone: (505) 827-7130
<http://www.hsd.state.nm.us/>

New York

Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance
40 North Pearl Street
Albany, NY 12243
Phone: (800) 342-3009 (toll-free)
<http://www.otda.state.ny.us>
New York City Human Resources Administration
Phone: 718-557-1399

North Carolina

Department of Health and Human Services
Division of Social Services
2401 Mail Service Center
Raleigh, NC 27601
Phone: (919) 733-3055
Fax: (919) 334-1018
<http://www.dhhs.state.nc.us/dss>

North Dakota

Department of Human Services
Economic Assistance Policy Division
600 E. Boulevard, Dept. 325
Bismarck, ND 58505-0250
Phone: (800) 755-2716 (toll-free)
<http://www.nd.gov/dhs/services/>

Ohio

Department of Job and Family Services
Office of Family Stability
30 E. Broad St., 32nd Floor
Columbus, OH 43215-3414
Phone: (614) 466-4815
Fax: (614) 466-1767
<http://jfs.ohio.gov/ofam/index.stm>

Oklahoma

Department of Human Services
Family Support Services Division
P.O. Box 25352
Oklahoma City, OK 73125
Phone: (405) 521-3646
<http://www.okdhs.org/>

Oregon

Department of Human Services
500 Summer St. NE
Salem, OR 97301-1063
Phone: (503) 945-5944
Fax: (503) 945-6214
<http://www.oregon.gov/DHS>

Pennsylvania

Department of Public Welfare
P.O. Box 2675
Harrisburg, PA 17105-2675
Phone: (800) 692-7462 (toll-free)
<http://www.dpw.state.pa.us>

Puerto Rico

Department of the Family
P.O. Box 11398
Hato Rey, PR 00917
Phone: (787) 294-4900
<http://www.familia.gobierno.pr/>

Rhode Island

Department of Human Services
Louis Pasteur Building #57
600 New London Ave.
Cranston, RI 02920
2001 Mail Service Center
Raleigh, NC 27699-2001
Phone: (919) 855-4800
<http://www.ncdhhs.gov/>

South Carolina

Department of Social Services
P.O. Box 1520
Columbia, SC 29202-1520
Phone: (803) 898-7601
<https://dss.sc.gov/>

South Dakota

Department of Social Services
700 Governors Drive
Pierre, SD 57501
Phone: (605) 773-3165
<http://dss.sd.gov>

Tennessee

Department of Human Services
400 Deaderick Street, 15th Floor
Nashville, TN 37243-1403
Phone: (615) 313-4700
FAX: (615) 741-4165
<https://www.tn.gov/humanserv/>

Texas

Health and Human Services Commission
4900 North Lamar Blvd.
Austin, TX 78751-2316
Phone: (512) 424-6500
<http://www.hhsc.state.tx.us>

Utah

Department of Human Services
195 North 1950 West
Salt Lake City, UT 84116
Phone: (801) 538-4171
FAX: (801) 538-4016
<http://www.hs.utah.gov/>

Vermont

Economic Services Division
Department for Children and Families
103 South Main Street, Osgood 3
Waterbury, VT 05671-2401
Phone: (802) 241-2131
<http://dcf.vermont.gov/esd/>
Phone: (401) 462-5300
<http://www.dhs.ri.gov>

Virginia

Department of Social Services
801 E. Main St.
Richmond, VA 23219-2901
Phone: (800) 552-3431 (toll-free)
<http://www.dss.state.va.us>

U.S. Virgin Islands

Department of Human Services
1303 Hospital Ground Knud Hansen Complex Building A
St. Thomas, VI 00802
Phone: (340) 774-0930
<http://www.dhs.gov.vi>

Washington

Department of Social and Health Services
Constituent Services
P.O. Box 45130
Olympia, WA 98504-5130
Phone: (800) 737-0617 (toll-free)
<http://www.dshs.wa.gov>

West Virginia

Department of Health and Human Resources
One Davis Square, Ste. 100 E.
Charleston, WV 25301
Phone: (304) 558-0684
Fax: (304) 558-1130
<http://www.wvdhhr.org>

Wisconsin

Department of Workforce Development
P.O. Box 7946
Madison, WI 53707-7946
Phone: (608) 266-3131
<http://www.dwd.state.wi.us>

Wyoming

Department of Family Services
3rd Floor Hathaway Building
2300 Capitol Avenue
Cheyenne, WY 82002-0490
Phone: (307) 777-7561
FAX: (307) 777-7747
<http://dfsweb.wyo.gov/home>

APPENDIX C*

TABLE OF SELECTED NEW YORK STATE LAWS THAT BAR OR RESTRICT PEOPLE WITH CRIMINAL RECORDS FROM WORKING IN CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS

Industry or Career	Law	Restriction or Bar the Law Creates on Employment of People with Criminal Convictions
Banking	N.Y. BANKING LAW § 592-a (Consol. 2013)	§ 592-a gives the Superintendent the power to deny a certificate of registration as a mortgage broker if the applicant has been convicted of certain felonies. For a business applying for one if a director, officer, partner, agent, employee, or substantial stockholder has been convicted of certain felonies.
State Civil Service jobs	N.Y. CIV SERV. LAW § 50(4)(d) (Consol. 2013)	§50 allows the state civil service department to refuse to allow a person who has been found guilty of a crime to take any civil service examination or, if the person has already taken a civil service examination, to refuse to certify that person as eligible to take a civil service job.
Corrections	N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 22-a (Consol. 2013)	§22-a bars anyone who has been convicted of a felony from serving as a corrections officer. It also gives the commissioner the discretion to bar the appointment of anyone who has been convicted of a misdemeanor if the employment of that person would not be “in the best interest of the department.”
Notary Public	N.Y. EXEC. § 130 (Consol. 2013)	§ 130 bars the appointment of notaries public who have been convicted of a wide range of felonies. It also allows the secretary of state to suspend or remove from office, for misconduct, notaries public who have been convicted of those felonies.
Security System Installation and Maintenance	N.Y. GEN. BUS. LAW § 69-q(5) (Consol. 2013)	§ 69-q requires employers of those who will install, service, or maintain security or fire alarm systems to submit fingerprints of all employees to the government so that the Division of Criminal Justice Services can perform a criminal background check for each employee. It also bars any employee that was convicted of a felony from being employed to install, service, or maintain security or fire alarm systems.
Private Investigators, Bail Enforcement Agents, and Private Security Agencies	N.Y. GEN. BUS. § 81(2)(d) (Consol. 2013)	§81 prohibits employers who are licensed as private investigators, bail enforcement agents, or private security agencies from hiring persons convicted of any felonies and certain misdemeanors.
Security Guards	N.Y. GEN. BUS. LAW § 89-g(3)(a) (Consol. 2013);	§ 89-g makes it unlawful for security guard companies to hire persons convicted of “serious offenses” to work as security guards and gives the secretary discretion to bar hiring of misdemeanants to work as security guards in cases where the misdemeanor of which the

	N.Y. GEN. BUS. LAW § 89-1(2)(a) (Consol. 2013)	person was convicted of committing “bears such a relationship to the performances of the duties of a security guard, as to constitute a bar to employment.” §89-1 authorizes the secretary to suspend or revoke a security guard’s registration card if the security guard is convicted of a felony or certain misdemeanors. The security guard may request a hearing to contest the suspension.
Child Care	N.Y. SOC. SERV. LAW § 390-b (3)(a) (2013)	§390-b (3)(a) requires the office of Children and Family Services to reject a person’s application to be an operator of a child day care center, school age child care program, group family day care home, or family day care home if that person has been convicted of a felony that is a sex offense, a felony against a child, a felony involving violence, or a felony within the five years prior to the application for a drug-related offense unless the office determines, in its discretion, that approving the application will not in any way jeopardize the health, safety or welfare of the children in the center, program or home. It also allows the office of Children and Family Services to reject a person’s application to be an operator of a child day care center, school age child care program, group family day care home, or family day care home if that person has been convicted of any other crime.

* This table does not provide a complete list of the bars against employment for people with criminal convictions imposed by New York State law – there are over 100. The law is always changing, so you should check the law that applies to the particular jobs you want.

APPENDIX D

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR EX-OFFENDER ASSISTANCE ORGANIZATIONS

Legal Action Center

Phone: (800) 223-4044 (toll-free)

<http://www.lac.org>

New York:

225 Varick Street

New York, NY 10014

Phone: (212) 243-1313

Phone: (800) 223-4044 (toll-free)

E-mail: lacinfo@lac.org

District of Columbia:

236 Massachusetts Avenue NE., Suite 505

Washington, DC 20002-4980

Phone: (202) 544-5478

E-mail: lacdc@lac.org

Office of Community Outreach Services: Correctional Facilities and Ex-Inmates

The New York Public Library

455 Fifth Avenue

New York, NY 10016

Phone: (212) 340-0812

<http://www.nypl.org/help/community-outreach/correctional-services>

The Fortune Society

29-76 Northern Blvd.

Long Island City, NY 11101

Phone: (212) 691-7554

E-mail: info@fortunesociety.org

<http://www.fortunesociety.org>

Community Resources for Justice

355 Boylston Street

Boston, MA 02116

Phone: (617) 482-2520

E-mail: crj@crjustice.org

<http://www.crjustice.org/>

Offender Aid and Restoration

1400 North Uhle Street, Suite 704

Arlington, VA 22201

Phone: (703) 228-7030

Fax: (703) 228-3981

Email: Info@OARonline.org

<http://www.oaronline.org>

The Osborne Association

809 Westchester Avenue
Bronx, NY 10455
Phone: (718) 707-2600
Fax: (718) 707-3102
<http://www.osborneny.org>
175 Remsen Street, 8th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
Phone: (718) 637-6560
Fax: (718) 237-0686

25 Market St., 6th Floor
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
Phone: (845) 345-9845
Fax: (845) 849-0621

Center for Community Alternatives

39 West 19th St, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10011
Phone: (212) 691-1911
<http://www.communityalternatives.org>

Brooklyn Office
25 Chapel Street, 7th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
Phone: (718) 858-9658
Fax: (718) 858-9670
E-mail: ccachapel@communityalternatives.org

Syracuse Office
115 E. Jefferson Street, Suite 300
Syracuse, NY 13202
Phone: (315) 422-5638
Fax: (315) 471-4924
Email: cca@communityalternatives.org

Rochester Office
228 South Plymouth Avenue
Rochester, NY 14608
Phone: (585) 328-8230
Fax: (585) 328-8232
Email: cca-rochester@communityalternatives.org

East New York Office
100 Pennsylvania Ave., 2nd Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11207
Phone: (929) 234-3636
E-mail: cca-eny@communityalternatives.org

Exodus Transitional Community

2271 3rd Avenue, 2nd Floor

New York, NY 10029

Phone: (917) 492-0990

E-mail: info@etcny.org

<http://www.etcny.org>

Center for Employment Opportunities

32 Broadway, 15th Floor

New York, NY 10004

Phone: (212) 422-4430

<http://www.ceoworks.org>

CHAPTER 38

RIGHTS OF YOUTH IN PRISON*

A. Introduction

1. Goals of this Chapter

This chapter discusses the rights and treatment of young people in state and federal prison or juvenile detention facilities.

First, this Chapter will discuss the different ways that young people are categorized and convicted of crimes. It will then talk about the rules the government must follow when it tries to convict young people accused of crimes and what you should do if the government did not follow those rules.

Second, this Chapter will tell you about your rights while you are in prison. When the government puts you in prison, it has to obey certain rules to make sure that your rights are protected. If these rules are not being followed, you can file a special complaint (a type of lawsuit): either a Section 1983 claim when filed against a state government,¹ or a Bivens claim when filed against the federal government.² If you convince a court that you are not being treated properly, the court may issue an “injunction,” which is an order that will force your caretakers to provide you with better treatment.

2. Are you a “juvenile”?

The first thing you need to know is whether you were tried as a “juvenile”. Majority age (the age when you legally become an adult) will depend on the specific rules of the state in which you were convicted. In many states, the law says you are an adult when you are seventeen or eighteen. If you were accused of committing a crime before you reached majority age, then you were likely tried as a “juvenile”. Even if you were tried as an adult, the law may give you certain young people protections, such as placement in a “juvenile facility”. This Chapter will provide you with information about the specific legal protections that you have.

If you were accused of breaking a federal law before you turned eighteen, then you were likely tried as a “juvenile”. However, there are a few exceptions to this rule, which this Chapter will discuss below.

If you were accused of breaking a state law, then you need to know the particular laws of your state on “juveniles”. In some states, you may be considered an adult before you reach eighteen, depending on the type of offense and your age. For example, in North Carolina, you are considered an adult if you commit a crime when you are sixteen or older. Similarly, you are considered an adult if you commit a crime when you are seventeen or older in Georgia, Michigan,³ Missouri, Texas, and Wisconsin.⁴ In all other states, you are generally considered a “juvenile” for crimes you committed before you turned eighteen, unless you are moved to adult court for a special reason. This Chapter will discuss some of these special reasons below.

* This Chapter was rewritten by Kristin Lieske, based in large part on previous versions written by Kat Stoller and Valentina M. Morales.

1. For a detailed description of a Section 1983 claim, see JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

2. The Bivens cause of action, which generally has the same standards as a Section 1983 claim, was established by the Supreme Court in Bivens v. Six Unknown Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 397, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 2005, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619, 627 (1971).

3. As of October 21, 2021, 17-year-olds in Michigan will be tried as “juveniles.” See S.B. 102, 2019 Leg., Reg. Sess. (Mi. 2019).

4. See Anne Teigen, Juvenile Age of Jurisdiction and Transfer to Adult Court Laws, NAT’L CONF. OF STATE LEGISLATURES, (Jan. 11, 2019), available at <https://www.ncsl.org/research/civil-and-criminal-justice/juvenile-age-of-jurisdiction-and-transfer-to-adult-court-laws.aspx> (last visited Mar. 10, 2020). You should also note that for status offenses, abuse, neglect, and dependency matters, you may be tried as a juvenile in many states.

3. Why are young people treated differently than adults?

Laws treat young people differently from adults for a few reasons. First, because young people are not considered to be as mature as adults, young people cannot understand why their actions were wrong the same way adults can. Also, young people may be more influenced by peer pressure. Second, people think young people are less dangerous to the public than adults. Third, people think it is easier to teach young people to follow the law in the future. Finally, the government thinks that young people can be taught why the crimes they committed are wrong. Therefore, the goals of the “juvenile justice system” are to hold you responsible for your actions and provide you with treatment and education.⁵

4. Differences between the Adult Criminal System and “Juvenile” Delinquency System

First, the adult criminal justice system is punitive, which means it focuses on punishing people for breaking the law. Adult offenders are put in prison as punishment for their actions and to protect the community. The “juvenile” delinquency system is usually “rehabilitative,” which means that it focuses on teaching young people who commit criminal offenses to follow the law. This means the “juvenile” system focuses on fixing criminal behavior and improving a young person’s life.⁶ Some states, however, also include punishment as a goal.

Second, the adult criminal justice system focuses on the crime, not the offender. For example, in adult criminal cases, the only question is whether you committed the crime. If a jury finds that you committed the crime, then you will be punished. The “juvenile” system, however, places greater emphasis on the offender. The court is interested in whether you committed the crime, why you committed the crime, and what can be done to prevent you from committing a crime in the future.

Third, young people sometimes have different constitutional rights than adults. Defendants in the adult criminal system have certain constitutional rights, such as a right to a jury trial and to a lawyer. Young people do not have all of the same constitutional rights as adults.⁷ For example, young people do not always have the rights to a speedy trial⁸ or to a jury trial.⁹

Fourth, in the adult criminal system, all proceedings are open to the public unless the judge orders that they are closed for some special reason. A proceeding is an appearance in court in which you, the judge, and lawyers are all present. The proceedings include the trial and events before the trial. However, in most states’ “juvenile” delinquent systems, proceedings are confidential. This means the courtrooms are not open to the public and the full names of accused young people are kept private.

5. See Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551, 569, 125 S. Ct. 1183, 1196, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21–22 (2005) (discussing general differences between youth and adult offenders, that, when taken together, demonstrate that “juvenile offenders” cannot reliably be classified as among the worst offenders); see also Thompson v. Oklahoma, 487 U.S. 815, 835, 108 S. Ct. 2687, 2698, 101 L. Ed. 2d 702, 718 (1988) (holding that the differences between youth and adult offenders indicate that less culpability should attach to a crime committed by a young person than to a comparable crime committed by an adult). But see, e.g., Mendez-Alcaraz v. Gonzales, 464 F.3d 842, 843 (9th Cir. 2006) (declining to consider the defendant’s age at the time of the offense in determining his status under a federal law requiring deportation for the commission of certain offenses).

6. See Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 541, 554, 86 S. Ct. 1045, 1054, 16 L. Ed. 2d 84, 93–94 (1966) (describing the role of the Juvenile Court); see also Enrico Pagnanelli, Note, Children as Adults: The Transfer of Juveniles to Adult Courts and the Potential Impact of Roper v. Simmons, 44 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 175, 175–176 (2007).

7. See In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 14, 31–58, 87 S. Ct. 1428, 1436, 1445–1460, 18 L. Ed. 2d 527, 538, 548–563 (1967) (discussing the basic due process rights young people have in court); O’Brien v. Marshall, 453 F.3d 13, 17–18 (1st Cir. 2006) (holding that the Fifth Amendment is not applicable in “juvenile” court transfer hearings).

8. Sadler v. Sullivan, 748 F.2d 820, 827 (3d Cir. 1984) (holding that a young person does not have a constitutional right to a speedy trial until he loses the protections of the juvenile court system and becomes subject to penalties faced by adults); United States v. Hill, 538 F.2d 1072, 1077 (4th Cir. 1976) (young people do not have a Sixth Amendment claim for right to speedy trial).

9. See United States v. Torres, 500 F.2d 944, 948 (2d Cir. 1974) (finding no constitutional right to jury trial); Cotton v. United States, 446 F.2d 107, 110 (8th Cir. 1971) (finding no constitutional right to jury trial); United States v. King, 482 F.2d 454, 455–456 (6th Cir. 1973) (finding no constitutional right to jury trial); United States v. James, 464 F.2d 1228, 1230 (9th Cir. 1972) (finding no constitutional right to jury trial).

Also, the judge may order a young person's record to be sealed. This means that once you are an adult, your "juvenile offenses" will not be part of a permanent criminal record.¹⁰

Fifth, when you are found guilty as an adult in the adult criminal system, your sentence is based on your crime and criminal record. You cannot be forced to serve more time than the maximum punishment decided by the judge unless you commit another crime.

However, when you are found guilty as a young person in the "juvenile" delinquency system, you are given a "disposition" instead. A disposition is the time you must serve at a facility or in a program for the crime. A disposition is based on many things, including why you committed the crime, how serious the crime was, and whether you have committed crimes before. Dispositions are "indeterminate" (not given for a set amount of time) because the exact amount of time you have to serve may not be decided all at once and is not based on the specific crime for which you are convicted. Instead, it depends on your "rate of rehabilitation," which means the amount of time the court thinks you need to correct your behavior. The court can extend the amount of time you have to serve if the judge thinks that you have not corrected your behavior at the end of your disposition.

Young people who commit criminal offenses are not always sent to detention facilities. There are other programs, often run by juvenile courts, called "alternatives to incarceration" or "ATIs," as well as community- and residential-based programs, where young people may be sent. You will learn more about these later in this Chapter.

When you are charged with a crime, there are rules that the government and its lawyers (the prosecutors) must follow. These rules create rights for people who have been accused of crimes (the defendants). If the government breaks these rules and violates your rights, then you can file an appeal and ask a higher court to review your conviction based on the specific mistake the government made. Part B of this Chapter explains the rules that the government must follow when it accuses you of breaking a federal law. Part C of this Chapter explains the rules that the government must follow when it accuses you of breaking a New York State law.

B. The Federal System

1. Procedure in the Federal System

The federal government must follow the rules in the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (or "JJDP") in cases involving juvenile defendants. You can find the JJDP rules in Section 18 of the United States Code, Sections 5031–5042 (2006). If you are considered a "juvenile" and the government prosecutor did not follow one of the JJDP rules in your case, you may be able to appeal your conviction. If your appeal succeeds, you may have your conviction vacated (reversed).¹¹ Read the rules below and think about whether the government followed them in your case. If you think the government broke any of the JJDP rules, you should tell your lawyer.

According to the JJDP, a "juvenile" is:

- (1) Anyone who is not yet eighteen years old; or
- (2) Anyone who is not yet twenty-one and who is accused of committing an act of "juvenile delinquency" before he was eighteen.¹²

10. However, it may be possible for "juvenile records" to be accessed for future use under limited circumstances. See, e.g., United States v. Washington, 706 F.3d 1215, 1219 (10th Cir. 2012) (holding that under state law, prior juvenile adjudications may be used for sentencing and other purposes); United States v. Carney, 106 F.3d 315, 318 (10th Cir. 1997) (holding that under state law, a federal court can use a defendant's sealed "juvenile records" when sentencing him as an adult for manslaughter). Moreover, in New York, family court proceedings are open to the public and you must make a motion to seal court records after a finding of delinquency if you want your records to be sealed. N.Y. FAM. CT. §375.2 (McKinney 2008).

11. United States v. Juvenile Male, 595 F.3d 885, 906 (9th Cir. 2010), (instructing district court to vacate defendant's convictions if a violation of JJDP procedure was found); United States v. Chambers, 944 F.2d 1253, 1260–1261 (6th Cir. 1991), superseded by statute on other grounds, (vacating defendants' convictions where the Attorney General did not complete the JJDP procedures until after defendants were convicted).

12. See 18 U.S.C. § 5031.

If you fit one of these two definitions of a “juvenile”, then the JJDPa probably applies to your case. The JJDPa does contain some complicated exceptions if you are in New York, which are explained in Part C(1) below.

The JJDPa contains two sets of rules the government must follow. The first covers the “certification” of your case. The second covers “determining the status” of your case.

The first thing the federal government must do when prosecuting a juvenile is to “certify” the case. This means that the prosecutor representing the government must provide a document¹³ to the court that states that:

- (1) There is a substantial “federal interest” in the case; and
- (2) The state where the crime happened does not have or refuses to exercise jurisdiction; or
- (3) The state with jurisdiction does not have adequate programs or services for juveniles; or
- (4) The offense charged is a violent felony, a drug trafficking or importation offense, or a firearms offense.¹⁴

If you live in New York and are on trial in a federal court for a federal crime, the first thing the government must do is explain why there is a “federal interest” in your case. This means that the government must explain why your crime is dangerous to people in your home state and to people in other states, too. If you were accused of selling drugs in New York, for example, the government would probably say that there is a federal interest in prosecuting your case because the drugs you sold might end up in another state, where they could hurt other people. It is not always clear why some things are considered federal interests and others are not.

Next, the government must explain why the federal court should hear your case instead of the state court. The government can do this in a few different ways. It can say that the state court does not want to hear your case, that the state does not offer the programs and services you will need if you are convicted (like a juvenile detention center), or that your crime involved violence, drugs, or guns. The federal government does not need to do much to establish a federal interest in your case as long as it meets these minimal requirements of the JJDPa.

Unfortunately, it is very hard to challenge certification mistakes. The majority of federal circuit courts believe that as long as there was “substantial” good faith compliance with the certification requirements (that the prosecutor did his best to follow the rules), you may not appeal certification mistakes. This means that most courts will not review certification mistakes unless the government made no effort at all to comply with the JJDPa’s certification requirements.¹⁵

You will have the best chance of challenging certification if your case was brought in the Fourth Circuit.¹⁶ The Fourth Circuit includes all federal courts in Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. Although all federal courts generally follow the same rules, the federal courts in these states are especially willing to listen to complaints about certification from incarcerated youth. The courts in other circuits, which cover other regions of the United States, have not, and

13. These documents do not have to be detailed. An example of a proper certification is a piece of paper saying: “Comes now Joseph L. Famularo, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Kentucky, who, after investigation, and pursuant to the provisions of Title 18, United States Code, § 5032, hereby certifies to this court that the offenses for which this juvenile, [John Doe], is charged herein by information, include a crime of violence, that is a felony under the laws of the United States, and that there is a substantial federal interest in the case and the offense to warrant the exercise of federal jurisdiction.” United States v. Doe, 226 F.3d 672, 677 n.2 (6th Cir. 2000).

14. This fourth condition is more specific in the statute: “[T]he offense charged is a crime of violence that is a felony or an offense described in section 401 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. [§] 841), or section 1002(a), 1003, 1005, 1009, or 1010(b)(1), (2), or (3) of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. [§§] 952(a), 953, 955, 959, 960(b)(1)(2)(3)), § 922(x) or section 924(b), (g), or (h) of [Title 18 U.S.C.], and that there is a substantial Federal interest . . . to warrant the exercise of Federal jurisdiction.” 18 U.S.C. § 5032.

15. See United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1369 (2d Cir. 1994). But see Impounded (Juvenile I.H.), 120 F.3d 457, 461 (3d Cir. 1997) (concluding that the JJDPa mandates strict and literal compliance with the certification rules).

16. United States v. T.M., 413 F.3d 420, 424 (4th Cir. 2005) (“[T]he Fourth Circuit is the only circuit that requires a more searching review of the government’s assertions in its § 5032 certifications.”); see, e.g., United States v. C.A.M., 251 F. App’x 194, 195 (4th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (ordering of transfer vacated and remanded).

probably will not hear certification appeals.¹⁷ Therefore, if you think the government did not follow the rules in certifying your case and you are in one of the states in the Fourth Circuit, then you should immediately tell your lawyer about the mistake. If you think there was a certification mistake and you are not in one of those states, then you should still check with your lawyer. However, you probably will not be able to challenge your conviction on certification grounds unless the government did not even try to follow the requirements.

The second set of rules the federal government must follow under the JJDPa relates to “determining status.” Your “status” refers to whether you are a juvenile or an adult. Although the government will usually consider you a juvenile if you committed the crime before your eighteenth birthday, there are some complicated rules on this. “Determining your status” means applying the rules to determine whether you will be tried as a juvenile or an adult.

After the federal government has certified your case, there are four things that can happen:

- (1) You may be tried as a “juvenile”;
- (2) You may agree to be tried as an adult;
- (3) The law may require that you be tried as an adult; or
- (4) The judge may decide to try you as an adult, even if the law does not require it.¹⁸

You should know which of these options the government followed in your case. The rest of this Section will explain the rules the government must obey when proceeding with any of these options. As you read, if you see a rule that you think the government did not obey in your case, then you should tell your lawyer.

2. Being Tried as a Juvenile in the Federal System¹⁹

(a) That Apply Before Your Hearing

Generally, youth offenders must be brought to trial within thirty days and can only be held in certain types of places while waiting for trial.²⁰ This “speedy trial” rule means that your trial must

17. See, e.g., United States v. Female Juvenile A.F.S., 377 F.3d 27, 32 (1st Cir. 2004) (agreeing with other circuits that the United States Attorney’s “certification of a substantial federal interest is an act of prosecutorial discretion that is shielded from judicial review”) (citing United States v. Smith, 178 F.3d 22, 25 (1st Cir. 1999)); United States v. F.S.J., 265 F.3d 764, 771 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that “the United States Attorney’s certification of a ‘substantial federal interest’ under § 5032 is not subject to judicial review except for such formalities as timeliness and regularity (e.g., signed by the proper official) and for allegations of unconstitutional prosecutorial misconduct”); United States v. Doe, 226 F.3d 672, 678 (6th Cir. 2000) (holding that “Congress did not intend that the Attorney General’s certification of the existence of a substantial federal interest be subject to judicial review for the sufficiency of the underlying facts”); United States v. Jarrett, 133 F.3d 519, 538 (7th Cir. 1998) (“We agree with the Government, as well as with the majority of courts to consider this question, that we cannot substantively review the Attorney General’s certification of a substantial federal interest”); United States v. Juvenile Male J.A.J., 134 F.3d 905, 909 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that certification of a substantial federal interest is an unreviewable act of prosecutorial discretion).

18. Additionally, under some state laws, after the entry of a guilty plea a young person may be sentenced as either a “juvenile” or an adult. See, e.g., Gonzales v. Tafoya, 515 F.3d 1097, 1107, 1128 (10th Cir. 2008) (where a 14-year-old was sentenced as an adult under New Mexico state law after pleading guilty to murder).

19. For a discussion of changing views regarding juvenile delinquency and the impact this has had on the treatment of young people in the federal system, see Juan A. Arteaga, Note, Juvenile (In) Justice: Congressional Attempts to Abrogate the Procedural Rights of Juvenile Defendants, 102 COLUM. L. REV. 1051 (2002).

20. 18 U.S.C. §§ 5035, 5036 (stating that while waiting for trial, young people can only be detained in a juvenile facility or other appropriate place, not with adult criminals; young people must be tried within 30 days of detention, unless the “interest of justice” creates an exception; courts cannot use the excuse of having too many cases to hear). See United States v. Female Juvenile A.F.S., 377 F.3d 27, 34 (1st Cir. 2004) (recognizing that the 30 day speedy trial period begins to run on the date a juvenile is taken into federal custody and continues to run, subject to certain exceptions, until the delinquent is “brought to trial.”); United States v. Baker, 10 F.3d 1374, 1397 (9th Cir. 1993) (holding that extensions of time applied for by defendant are excluded from calculation of delay and that delay in this particular case is acceptable in the interest of justice), overturned on other grounds by United States v. Nordby, 225 F.3d 1053 (9th Cir. 2000); see also United States v. Juvenile Male, No. 96–1270, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 28663, at *6 (2d Cir. Nov. 1, 1996) (unpublished) (holding that the time between the begin within thirty days of the date you were arrested.²¹ If you are not brought to trial within thirty days, your case might be dismissed.²²

However, the courts have restricted thirty-day appeals, and it may be difficult to bring this type of claim successfully. For instance, many courts have said that if you caused the delay, or if you agreed to the delay, then you gave up your right to a speedy trial. A delay might also be okay if the court believes it is in the “interest of justice.”²³ Additionally, your case will not be dismissed if the delay was only because of the court’s busy schedule. In that situation, a judge with many cases to hear is allowed to hear your case after the thirty-day deadline. In addition, time taken for transfer hearings does not count toward the thirty days. Therefore, if the trial does not start until thirty-five days after your arrest because the transfer hearing took five days, those five days do not count and your speedy trial right has not been violated.²⁴

(b) Rules That Apply During Your Hearing

If you are tried as a “juvenile”, then you are given a “delinquency hearing” instead of a formal trial. In a juvenile delinquency hearing, the court must decide if you are “delinquent.” “Delinquent” is a word used to describe individuals younger than eighteen years old who have broken a United States law, which would be a crime if committed by an adult.²⁵ Note that there are fewer due process (constitutional) protections in a delinquency hearing (described in Section A(4) of this Chapter) than in the adult system.²⁶ However, there are a number of rules that the government must follow.

First, the hearing may not be open to the public.²⁷ Second, there will not be a jury at your hearing. The judge will make the decision by their self.

(c) At the End of Your Hearing

After deciding whether you are “delinquent” (whether you broke the law), the judge gives the “disposition,” which means the final status of the case. The judge has three choices: (1) give you probation, which is a period of release outside of prison supervised by a probation officer; (2) order you to be placed in a correctional facility, which may also include an order of a period of supervision after detention in the facility; or (3) suspend the findings of “juvenile delinquency” (decide not to impose any punishment). The judge may also order you to pay money to the victim to make up for the crime.²⁸ government’s filing of a motion to transfer to adult status and the court’s ruling on the motion is excluded from the 30 day requirement); United States v. Romulus, 949 F.2d 713, 716 (4th Cir. 1991) (finding that delay caused by defendant’s misrepresentation of age does not violate speedy trial requirement).

21. See, e.g., United States v. Female Juvenile, A.F.S., 377 F.3d 27, 38 (1st Cir. 2004); United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1371 (2d Cir. 1994). See also United States v. Romulus, 949 F.2d 713, 716 (4th Cir. 1991) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 5036 (1985) to illustrate the 30-day requirement).

22. 18 U.S.C. § 5036.

23. See United States v. Doe, 49 F.3d 859, 865—866 (2d Cir. 1995) (acknowledging that if a miscarriage of justice would result, the district judge may decline to follow the 30 day requirement and that this decision would be reviewable on appeal only for an abuse of discretion) (citing United States v. Marrero, 705 F.2d 652, 656 n.6 (2d Cir. 1983)); United States v. Juvenile Male, 595 F.3d 885, 896 (9th Cir. 2010). See also United States v. Doe, 571 F. App’x 656, 659 (10th Cir. 2014) (unpublished).

24. See, e.g., United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1371 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that the speedy trial rule was not violated when the government filed a motion on the 30th day of detention); United States v. Romulus, 949 F.2d 713, 716 (4th Cir. 1991) (finding that the delay between the government’s filing of a motion to transfer and the court’s approval of the motion was properly excluded from the speedy trial rule in the interest of justice).

25. 18 U.S.C. § 5031.

26. There are fewer ways for a young person to claim that the procedure of a juvenile court violates his constitutional rights, but there are certain due process rights that apply even in juvenile court. For a discussion of the basic due process rights that young people have in court, see In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 31—58, 87 S. Ct. 1428, 1445—1460, 18 L. Ed. 2d 527, 548—563 (1967).

27. However, in some instances the district court has been granted discretion to permit public access to delinquency hearings on a case-by-case basis. See, e.g., United States v. A.D., 28 F.3d 1353, 1361 (3d Cir. 1994); In re Washington Post Motion to Open Juvenile Detention Hearing, 247 F.Supp.2d 761, 762—763 (D. Md. 2003).

28. 18 U.S.C. § 5037(a).

Dispositions may be different depending on your age. If you are under eighteen years old, then you may be given probation or put in a facility until you are twenty-one years old. If you are between eighteen and twenty-one years old, then you may get probation for up to three years or get put in prison for up to five years.²⁹

(d) After Your Hearing

First, no matter what happened, the government must seal all records after your hearing.³⁰ This means that people who were not involved in your case will not be able to see the records.³¹

Second, if the government did not follow any of the above rules at your hearing, then you have the right to appeal in two ways. The first way you can appeal is to use the government's mistake to appeal your entire conviction. If your appeal works, then you may have your conviction overturned or erased. The second way you can appeal is to challenge the mistake in order to get better living conditions. You can complain that you are not being treated fairly based on the rules that the government must follow for juveniles. If this challenge works, you may be able to switch to better living conditions or get into a new incarceration program. This challenge is described in detail in Part C below. If possible, try to get a lawyer or an adult to assist you with any legal papers. You should talk to your lawyer about your options and the type of appeal that would be most likely to help you.

The most important part of your appeal is the way you describe the facts of your case. Especially in juvenile cases, judges have a lot of power and can make decisions "in the interests of justice" in ways they cannot for adults. For example, this could mean the judge may ignore any mistakes made by the government and refuse to overturn the conviction if the facts of your crime make you sound like a dangerous threat to the community. As a result, you should be very careful about how you talk about your crime and yourself. You should also help the judge understand any circumstances or facts that might work in your favor. You should never lie to a judge because that is a crime, but you do not need to draw attention to the most serious parts of your crime either. You need to show the judge that you have "rehabilitative potential." This means you have to show that you want to change your life and that you will not commit crimes in the future. A judge looking at your case will try to figure out which is greater: your rehabilitative potential or the seriousness of your offense.

29. 18 U.S.C. § 5037(b).

30. Unlike regular criminal records, which anyone can get, you can only get "juvenile records" with special permission or procedures. See 34 U.S.C. § 11186; 18 U.S.C. § 5038. In some jurisdictions, including New York, "juvenile convictions" can be used to calculate a later adult sentence. See, e.g., United States v. Franklyn, 157 F.3d 90, 99–100 (2d Cir. 1998) (considering prior "juvenile convictions" for putting the defendant in a higher sentence category, because his criminal history score did not show the seriousness of his criminal history since his convictions as a youth had not been counted for the score); U.S. v. Matthews, 205 F.3d 544, 548 (2d Cir. 2000) (at sentencing, trial judge could consider defendant's conviction as a youth under New York's youthful offender statute). Courts have mixed opinions about whether adult convictions or adult sentences are most important when figuring out a later sentence. Some courts have said that a young person must have received an adult sentence in order for that conviction to count when figuring out a later adult sentence. See United States v. Mason, 284 F.3d 555, 562 (4th Cir. 2002) (holding that defendant's prior conviction led to sentencing as a youth and so could not be counted as a predicate felony for purposes of figuring out if he was a "career offender," which would have led to a higher sentence). But see United States v. Gregory 591 F.3d 964, 967 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that when deciding whether a conviction from before counts as a predicate felony, the most important factor is whether the defendant was convicted as an adult, not whether he was sentenced as an adult); United States v. Jones, 415 F.3d 256, 264 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that when deciding career offender status, a youthful offender decision could count as an adult conviction if the defendant had pleaded guilty in an adult forum and had received and served a sentence of over a year in an adult prison); U.S. v. Cruz 136 F. App'x 386, 388–389 (2d Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (prior conviction from when defendant was a young person counts toward deciding if he was a career offender, when defendant had been convicted in an adult court and received and served an adult sentence, even though under state law, he was classified as a "youthful offender"); U.S. v. Gregory, 591 F.3d 964, 968 (7th Cir. 2010) (stating that a prior conviction counted for figuring out a future sentence because the defendants' sentences were for adult convictions even though they had served time in a youth, not in an adult prison).

31. State statutes (laws) may also require the sealing of "juvenile records." See Donohue v. Hoey, 109 F. App'x 340, 365 (10th Cir. 2004) (unpublished) ("[c]ourts have recognized that a state statute can seal records, thus creating a legitimate privacy expectation for a juvenile").

3. Being Tried as an Adult in the Federal System

(a) Agreeing to be Tried as an Adult

You may agree to be tried as an adult as part of a “plea agreement” in order to get a shorter sentence.³² In plea agreements, you and the prosecutor make a deal in which you plead guilty to a specific crime. In return for pleading guilty, the government recommends a lesser sentence than what you would face if you went to trial and were found guilty.

You should know, however, that you will not always get a shorter sentence by agreeing to being tried as an adult. Usually you need to have the right background. The sentencing guidelines in the federal system can sometimes be harsh for young people. They do not usually consider the defendant’s age as a reason for giving a shorter sentence. To be sure that you are making the right choice for yourself, speak with your lawyer.

To agree to be tried as an adult, you must go in front of the court and tell the judge that you know what you are doing and fully understand the legal results of being tried as an adult. Before you do this, you should talk to your lawyer and make sure that you really understand and that this is something you definitely want to do. If you do not understand, you should let the judge know that you are confused or need more information. The decision about whether to be tried as an adult is very important and impacts your future. Remember, being tried as an adult could affect future convictions and sentencing decisions you may face. It is your lawyer’s job to be your voice in court and to make sure that you understand what is going on so that you can make informed decisions. Do not be afraid to ask a lot of questions and speak up when you do not understand something.

In order for the government to try you as a “juvenile”, you must agree to that in writing. However, to be tried as an adult, you must give up your right and knowingly refuse to agree to be tried as a “juvenile.” In order for you to properly give up your right, the government has to meet certain requirements.³³

If you did not know that you had a right to be tried as a “juvenile”, then you probably did not agree to be tried as an adult.³⁴ Similarly, just because you did not agree to be tried as a “juvenile” does not mean there is enough evidence for the government to prove that you knowingly said you did not want to be tried as a “juvenile.” It also does not mean there is enough evidence to prove you gave up that right.³⁵

If you did not agree to be tried as an adult in front of a judge, or if you did not fully understand what you were doing, then you may be able to challenge your conviction for those reasons.

(b) Mandatory Transfer to Adult Status

Under the JJDPa, some young people in federal court must be tried as adults, whether or not they agree to it. According to the JJDPa, you must be tried as an adult if the alleged crime happened after you turned sixteen, the alleged crime involved physical force, and you were previously convicted of certain crimes listed in the statute. This is called mandatory transfer to adult status. As one court explained it, transfer of young people to adult status is mandatory “for purposes of prosecution where:

- (1) a young person, after his sixteenth birthday, allegedly commits an offense that would be a felony if committed by an adult;
- (2) the offense involved the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force, or, by its very nature, involved a substantial risk that physical force would be used in committing the offense; and

32. See, e.g., Hernandez v. United States, 839 F. Supp. 140, 145 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (noting that a young person consented to trial as an adult as part of a plea agreement).

33. 18 U.S.C. § 5032.

34. See, e.g., United States v. Williams, 459 F.2d 903, 904 (2d Cir. 1972) (holding that in order to make an intelligent waiver of his right to be tried as a “juvenile”, the young person must in some manner be fully apprised of his rights and respective consequences of proceeding as an adult).

35. See United States v. Williams, 459 F.2d 903, 907 (2d Cir. 1972).

- (3) the young person ‘has previously been found guilty of an act which if committed by an adult would have been’ one of the enumerated offenses supporting discretionary transfer.”³⁶

Whether you have been convicted in the past is important when figuring out whether you will be transferred to adult status. If the government is arguing that you have to be transferred to adult status, the government is only allowed to bring up convictions that happened before the crime you are being accused of in your trial.

If your mandatory transfer was made because of a crime you were convicted of after you committed the crime that you are now being charged with, then you can appeal your transfer for this reason.³⁷ Also, if your transfer was made without a hearing, you can use this rule to challenge your transfer.³⁸

(c) Discretionary Transfer to Adult Status in the Federal System

Even if you do not agree to being tried as an adult and the government does not have enough evidence to make your transfer mandatory, your case might still be transferred to adult court. The discretionary parts of the JJDPa allow judges to transfer you to adult status in certain circumstances aside from the rules for mandatory transfer.³⁹ This means that a judge can still decide to try you as an adult even though he does not have to. When the government asks the judge for a discretionary transfer, there must be a separate, “discretionary transfer hearing” to decide whether you can be transferred to adult status.⁴⁰

(i) Discretionary Transfer Hearing

At the hearing, your record will have to be certified and then the court will look at certain things. The Attorney General must certify any “juvenile records” that you may have. This means that if you have gone to court for crimes as a youth before, the Attorney General must make sure the court has a copy of those records. If this certification has not happened yet, you can challenge the transfer. After certification, the court will decide whether or not to transfer you to adult status. The court should only transfer you if it is “in the interest of justice.”⁴¹ The court will consider the following factors to decide:

- (1) your age and social background (for example, where you grew up, your lifestyle, whether you were in foster care, your economic status, and whether you were the victim of physical or emotional abuse);
- (2) the nature of the crime you were accused of (e.g., whether the crime involved violence or whether someone was killed);
- (3) your prior “juvenile record” (e.g., whether you have been convicted of any crimes in the past and, if so, how many);
- (4) your present intellectual development and maturity (e.g., your current school year, whether you can read, whether you have any learning disabilities, whether you suffer from a psychological condition like schizophrenia or depression, and whether you can understand your actions and the effects they have on others);
- (5) your response to past treatments and the nature of those treatments (e.g., whether you have been treated in the past for similar problems and whether such treatment has worked); and

36. United States v. Juvenile Male, 844 F. Supp. 2d 333, 338 n. 5 (E.D.N.Y. 2012) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 5032).

37. See 18 U.S.C. § 5032; see also United States v. Doe, 74 F. Supp. 2d 310, 314 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).

38. United States v. Rivera, 912 F. Supp. 70, 73–74 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (vacating criminal proceedings and forcing the government to start over when the government did not follow the steps required by the JJDPa).

39. 18 U.S.C. § 5032.

40. See 18 U.S.C. § 5032. For a list of factors that a judge must consider in deciding whether to approve a discretionary transfer, see United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185, 192 (3d Cir. 2002).

41. United States v. Male Juvenile E.L.C., 396 F.3d 458, 461 (1st Cir. 2005) (requiring discretionary transfers to be in the interest of justice).

- (6) the availability of programs to treat any “behavioral problems” (whether there are treatment programs that can help you change).⁴²

The court will analyze these factors. Then, the court will weigh how likely your “rehabilitation” (changing your ways) is against your potential danger to the community (how much of a threat you are to the people around you).⁴³ The court will look at your entire situation. One single factor will probably not determine your chances.

(ii) Trying to Keep Your “Juvenile Status” at the Discretionary Transfer Hearing

Before your transfer hearing, you should tell your lawyer any information about your situation that is related to these six factors. Tell your lawyer as much about yourself and your history as you can. Let your lawyer know what you were thinking and why you behaved the way you did. You may also tell your lawyer that you really do not remember why you acted a certain way. Let them know if you have any problems with drugs or alcohol, if your life at home has been very difficult, or if you have problems learning in school.

It may be a good idea to get tested for a learning disability. If you have a history of poor performance in school, the judge might think you are unlikely to change. If you show that your poor performance is due to a learning disability, this may help you keep your “juvenile status.” If you keep your “juvenile status,” you can stay out of adult criminal court.

At the hearing, the judge can also consider any crimes you committed after the offense at issue but before the transfer hearing. So, you should do your best to avoid problems with the law during that time. It will help you during the hearing if you are on your best behavior. You should try to show signs that you can improve your behavior.

(iii) Challenging Your “Discretionary Transfer”

Generally, you can have your conviction vacated (reversed) if there was no discretionary transfer hearing and you were wrongly treated as an adult. You should not have been treated as an adult if you were under eighteen years old at the time of the alleged crime and under twenty-one years old when the prosecution began.⁴⁴

If there was a discretionary transfer hearing, then it may be hard to challenge the transfer. One way to challenge the transfer is to convince a court that the government did not show everything it was supposed to. The government has to prove by a “preponderance of the evidence” (evidence which is more credible and convincing than that presented by the government) that the reasons for transferring you to adult status outweighed the reasons for keeping your “juvenile status.”⁴⁵ There is

42. United States v. Doe, 113 F. Supp. 2d 604, 605 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (describing the factors that a judge must consider in deciding whether to ask for a discretionary transfer).

43. United States v. A.C.P., No. 04–159(PG), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11306, at *5–6 (D.P.R. Apr. 28, 2005) (quoting United States v. Male Juvenile E.L.C., 396 F.3d 458, 461 (1st Cir. 2005)) (“The purpose of the juvenile delinquency process is to ‘remove juveniles from the ordinary criminal process in order to avoid the stigma of a prior criminal conviction and to encourage treatment and rehabilitation.’ The court must balance these important interests against ‘the need to protect the public from violent and dangerous individuals.’”).

44. United States v. Rivera, 912 F. Supp. 70, 73–74 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (vacating criminal proceedings and forcing the government to start over when the government did not follow the steps required by the JJDPa).

45. Rosado v. Corr., 109 F.3d 62, 63 (1st Cir. 1997) (adopting a preponderance of evidence standard for transfer to adult status in agreement with the 2d, 6th, and 11th circuits); United States v. Doe, 113 F. Supp. 2d 604, 605 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (“Juvenile adjudication is presumed appropriate unless the government establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that prosecution as an adult is warranted.”); preponderance of the evidence here means that the government’s reasons for transferring you to adult status must be more likely true and convincing than not true. In other words, more than 50% of their evidence must support their case. This standard is lower than standards of evidence used in other contexts, including “clear and convincing” evidence and “beyond a reasonable doubt.”

a statutory presumption in favor of treatment as a “juvenile” (meaning the court will begin the process assuming you will be tried as a “juvenile”).⁴⁶

Although you must convince the judge that your rehabilitation is “likely,”⁴⁷ the government must still make its case. This means that the government must show that you are a bad candidate for rehabilitation. They may do this by showing, for example, that you are not likely to change even after help. The government may use this to argue that you should be charged as an adult because the rehabilitation services you need are not available to young people. The government must demonstrate “that it has investigated various options but it is still unable to find a suitable and available program” for your behavior problem.⁴⁸ This means that the government must have tried many times to find a program but could not find one that was good for you. If the government did not show this in your transfer hearing, you can appeal the transfer.

Courts do not usually overturn transfer decisions. Higher courts usually trust the lower courts’ decisions, and will only overturn decisions where there was an “abuse of discretion.” An “abuse of discretion” means the decision was completely unreasonable and obviously wrong. Because this is a very difficult standard to meet, higher courts generally do not overturn lower court decisions.

(d) Making Sure You Get JJDPa Protections if You Are Eligible

In the federal system, if you committed a crime before your eighteenth birthday and you are under twenty-one years old, you are a “juvenile.” Once you turn twenty-one years old, you are not a “juvenile” and the JJDPa does not protect you.

If you are currently older than eighteen years old and you are accused of committing a crime sometime after your eighteenth birthday, then you are not a “juvenile.” The JJDPa does not apply to you. However, if you are between eighteen and twenty-one years old and you are being charged for a crime that happened when you were younger than eighteen years old, then you are a “juvenile” under the JJDPa.

After your twenty-first birthday, the JJDPa no longer applies to you, even if the crime happened before your eighteenth birthday.⁴⁹ For this reason, prosecutors may try to delay your trial until after 46. United States v. A.F.F., 144 F. Supp. 2d 797, 801 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (“[t]here is a statutory presumption in favor of treating the offender as a juvenile”). A court should deny a motion to transfer “where, all things considered, the juvenile has a realistic chance of rehabilitative potential in available treatment facilities during the period of his minority.” However, a “realistic chance” involves more than a futile or empty gesture toward rehabilitation. United States v. E.K., 471 F. Supp. 924, 932 (D. Ore. 1979).

47. United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185, 193, (2d Cir. 2002) (determining that when a crime is especially serious, this may be given greater weight by the court than the other transfer factors); United States v. L.M., 425 F. Supp. 2d 948, 954 (N.D. Iowa 2006) (recognizing that under the JJDPa, a court may consider in transfer proceedings the young person's background, intellectual development, and emotional maturity as they relate to the possibility of rehabilitation).

48. United States v. Nelson, 68 F.3d 583, 591 (2d Cir. 1995); see also United States v. Doe, 113 F. Supp. 2d 604, 609 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (stating that the government must do more than “merely assert the unavailability of an appropriate juvenile rehabilitation program . . . to carry its burden of persuading the court that no such programs exist.”).

49. United States v. Wright, 540 F.3d 833, 839 (8th Cir. 2008) (stating that a defendant accused of committing a crime before his 18th birthday may not claim the protections of the JJDPa if criminal proceedings begin after the defendant reaches the age of 21); United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185, 191 (2d Cir. 2002) (observing that “courts have uniformly concluded that the applicability of the JJDPa is determined by the defendant’s age at the time of filing the [charges for crimes of ‘juvenile delinquency’]”); United States v. Araiza-Valdez, 713 F.2d 430, 432–433 (9th Cir. 1980) (finding that filing the complaint is not sufficient to begin proceedings under the JJDPa); United States v. Doe, 631 F.2d 110, 112–113 (9th Cir. 1980) (allowing treatment of a defendant over 21 years old as a “juvenile” where both charges and indictment were filed before defendant’s 21st birthday); United States v. Hoo, 825 F.2d 667, 669–670 (2d Cir. 1987) (explaining that defendant who is alleged to have committed a crime before his 18th birthday may not invoke the protection of the JJDPa if criminal proceedings begin after the defendant reaches the age of 21); In re Martin, 788 F.2d 696, 697–698 (11th Cir. 1986) (noting that the date of the indictment, not the complaint, determines the start date of criminal proceedings for the purpose of calculating age and application of JJDPa).

your twenty-first birthday.⁵⁰ The JJDPa does not always require that prosecution for acts that happened before your eighteenth birthday begin before your twenty-first birthday.⁵¹ In other words, if you are charged after your twenty-first birthday, you do not have an unconditional right to the protections of the JJDPa.⁵² The judge might decide to try you as an adult if the delay is your fault—for example, if you skipped bail or ran away.⁵³

You may be able to challenge this delay. Some courts may consider the delay to be a violation of your due process rights. To bring this challenge, you can show that the delay was due to “unjustifiable government conduct” or to “illegitimate prosecutorial motives” (when the prosecutor illegally wants to make things more difficult for you).⁵⁴ However, it is hard to prove this type of behavior on the part of the prosecutor, which is also called “prosecutorial misconduct.” Sometimes ongoing investigations delay prosecutions, and courts will usually accept this as a valid reason for prosecutor bringing the case late.⁵⁵

To challenge delays on the basis of prosecutorial misconduct, you must prove that:

- (1) The prosecutor delayed bringing your case on purpose. They did this to gain an unfair advantage or to serve an unlawful purpose;⁵⁶
- (2) Your case was hurt or “prejudiced” by this delay;⁵⁷ and

50. United States v. Smith, 851 F.2d 706, 709–710 (4th Cir. 1988) (saying that once a defendant is proceeded against as a “juvenile delinquent,” he may still be tried as a “juvenile” at the age of 21 if there are delays caused by the government, even if the delays are not in bad faith); United States v. Doe, 631 F.2d 110, 113 (9th Cir. 1980) (saying that intentional government delay of bringing charges until suspect may be 21 years old is unconstitutional).

51. United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1367 (2d Cir. 1994); In re Martin, 788 F.2d 696, 697–698 (11th Cir. 1986); United States v. Araiza-Valdez, 713 F.2d 430, 432–433 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. Doe, 631 F.2d 110, 112–13 (9th Cir. 1980).

52. United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185, 192 (2d Cir. 2002) (explaining that the JJDPa doesn’t apply to persons indicted after they turned 21); United States v. Hoo, 825 F.2d 667, 671 (2d Cir. 1987) (noting that a defendant charged two weeks after 21st birthday was not entitled to protection of JJDPa for offenses committed prior to 18th birthday, even though delay was through no fault of his own); United States v. Wai Ho Tsang, 632 F. Supp. 1336, 1339 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (noting that there is no guarantee of JJDPa treatment and no automatic presumption against delays resulting in changed status).

53. United States v. Araiza-Valdez, 713 F.2d 430, 432–433 (9th Cir. 1980) (explaining that through voluntary actions and ignoring the proceedings, the defendant had “outgrown” his status under JJDPa).

54. See United States v. Scala, 388 F. Supp. 2d 396, 399 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (stating that in order for due process concerns to exist, there must have been (1) substantial prejudice to the defendant, and (2) delay was used intentionally as a tactical device); United States v. Gross, 165 F. Supp. 2d 372, 377–378 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (explaining that dismissal is proper in situations where allowing the trial to proceed would be so unfair as to violate “fundamental conceptions of justice”) (citing United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 790, 97 S. Ct. 2044, 2049, 52 L. Ed. 2d 752, 759 (1977)); United States v. Wai Ho Tsang, 632 F. Supp. 1336, 1339 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (holding that delay could violate the Due Process Clause if delay was due to unjustified conduct of the government or illegitimate motives of the prosecution); see also United States v. Davilla, 911 F. Supp. 127, 130 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (stating that plaintiff could not simply allege improper delay, but must make some affirmative showing of an improper prosecutorial motive in the delay).

55. See, e.g., United States v. Persico, 10-CR-147 (S-4) (SLT), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67881, at *23–25 (E.D.N.Y. 2012) (unpublished) (no violation of due process where defendant fails to meet “heavy burden” of proving improper motive for the delay); United States v. Hoo, 825 F.2d 667, 671 (2d Cir. 1987) (“due process clause does not require that decisions to prosecute be subjected to pre-indictment judicial inquiry simply because the timing of the decision affects the availability of juvenile procedures” without showing of improper prosecutorial motive); United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 791, 97 S. Ct. 2044, 2049, 52 L. Ed. 2d 752, 759 (1977) (affirming prosecutorial discretion in timing the indictment). But see United States v. DeCologero, 530 F.3d 36, 78 (1st Cir. 2008) (citing United States v. Soto-Beniquez, 356 F.3d 1, 25 (1st Cir. 2003) (acknowledging that generally the statute of limitations provides the primary protection of a defendant’s due process rights in the context of delay)).

56. See United States v. Scala, 388 F. Supp. 2d 396, 399 (S.D.N.Y. 2005); United States v. Hoo, 825 F.2d 667, 671 (2d Cir. 1987).

57. See United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 324, 92 S. Ct. 455, 465, 30 L. Ed. 2d 468, 481 (1971) (holding that the Due Process Clause requires the dismissal of an indictment because of pre-indictment delay in this case only when the delay causes “substantial prejudice to appellees’ rights to a fair trial and that the delay was an

- (3) The delay was the prosecutor's fault. The prosecutor cannot show that the delay was due to your actions or the actions of your attorney.⁵⁸

If you are under eighteen and tried as an adult, you are still protected by the JJDPa until you turn eighteen. When you turn eighteen, the JJDPa protections no longer apply to you. For example, once you turn eighteen, you can be held in a cell with other adults.

If you are under the age of majority and you are not transferred to adult status, you can only be convicted of "juvenile delinquency." You cannot be convicted of any other crime. That means that the JJDPa protections will extend to you until you are twenty-one years old. This means that if you are prosecuted as a "juvenile," you will still be separated from the adult incarcerated people⁵⁹ until your twenty-first birthday. Even if you turn twenty-one during the prosecution of your case, you are still protected by the JJDPa.⁶⁰

C. Procedure in New York State⁶¹

1. Who is considered a "juvenile" in New York State?

The rules in New York State courts are not as clear as the rules in federal court. In New York, youth who are accused of committing crimes fall into four categories: (1) adult, (2) "Juvenile Delinquent," (3) "Juvenile Offender," and (4) "Adolescent Offender."⁶²

If you were eighteen or older when the crime happened, then you will be treated as an adult and the rest of this Section will not apply to you. But if you were younger than eighteen when the crime happened, you need to figure out whether you are considered a "juvenile delinquent," "juvenile offender," or "adolescent offender." Your age at the time the crime was committed is the one that determines how you will be tried.

If you were eighteen years old or older when you committed a crime, then New York State considers you an adult. As an adult, the State will charge you with crimes and punish you as an adult in adult court. If you were seventeen years old or younger when the crime happened, you will be tried as a "juvenile" in Family Court (as long as you are not a "Juvenile Offender" or "Adolescent Offender"). This is true even if you are now eighteen or older.

(a) "Juvenile Delinquent" ("JD")

You are considered a "Juvenile Delinquent" if you are over 7 years old, but under 18 years old, and commit an act that would be a crime if it had been committed by an adult. Specifically, 16 and 17-year-olds charged with misdemeanors are considered "Juvenile Delinquents." If you are considered a intentional device to gain tactical advantage over the accused." But see United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 789, 97 S. Ct. 2044, 2048–2049, 52 L. Ed. 2d 752 (1977) (holding that a good faith investigative delay in prosecution, even if it prejudices the defendant, does not necessarily violate due process rights); United States v. DeCologero, 530 F.3d 36, 78 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that "substantial prejudice" requires more than mere inconvenience to the defendant and must involve a demonstration of actual prejudice, where the unavailability of witnesses or evidence may not be sufficient).

58. See United States v. Doe, 49 F.3d 859, 866 (2d Cir. 1995) (excusing the government's delay because of the defendant's own lies about his age and other bad conduct); United States v. Chambers, 944 F.2d 1253, 1260 (6th Cir. 1991), superseded by statute on other grounds, (excusing the delay because the defense was at fault for failing to raise the issue of juvenile status).

59. If you are either younger than 18 or were treated as a "juvenile" and are younger than 21, and you have not been separated from the adult incarcerated people, you can bring a Section 1983 motion in court to enforce your rights. For more information, see Part D of this Chapter.

60. United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185, 190 (2d Cir. 2002) ("JDA continues to apply to the prosecution of a defendant who has attained the age of twenty-one during the pendency of the criminal proceedings."); United States v. Leon H., 365 F.3d 750, 753 (9th Cir. 2004) (finding that the Act applies if the defendant filed the case before turning twenty-one) (citing United States v. Doe, 631 F.2d 110, 112–113 (9th Cir. 1980)).

61. For a history of the development of the New York State system, see Michael A. Corriero, Juvenile Sentencing: The New York Youth Part as a Model, 11 FED. SENT. R. 278 (1999).

62. New York State most recently changed its categories for offenses committed by youth in the 2017 legislative session. See Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §722).

“Juvenile Delinquent,” your case is handled in a confidential Family Court proceeding. The court will decide if you need supervision, treatment or placement through the local department of social services or the New York State Office of Children and Family Services. “Juvenile Delinquents” do not have criminal records, and in some instances your case can be sealed (kept confidential).

If you are being treated as a “juvenile delinquent,” then you are being treated under the delinquency procedures. These can be more favorable to you than adult criminal procedures. The rest of this Section will not apply to you.

(b) “Juvenile Offender” (“JO”)

You are considered a “juvenile offender,” or “JO,” if you committed a “serious” crime when you were thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen.⁶³ Your case will be heard in the Youth Part of the Supreme or County Court.⁶⁴ If you are convicted as a JO, you will have a permanent criminal record unless the Court grants you Youth Offender status.⁶⁵ As a JO, your case can be transferred to Family Court where you will be considered a “Juvenile Delinquent.” Your case will only be transferred to Family Court if the Youth Part of the Supreme or County Court determines that the transfer would be in the interests of justice.⁶⁶

You will be prosecuted as a JO if you are charged with the following crimes at the designated ages:

- (1) 13-year-olds charged with murder or a sexually motivated felony; and
- (2) 14- and 15-year-olds charged with: murder (including attempted), kidnapping (including attempted), arson, assault, manslaughter, rape, a criminal sexual act, aggravated sexual abuse, burglary, robbery, or weapon possession.⁶⁷

(c) “Adolescent Offender” (“AO”)

The “Adolescent Offender” category was created by the 2017 Raise the Age law.⁶⁸ You are considered an “Adolescent Offender” (AO) if you are 16 or 17 years old and are charged with a felony. Your case would start in the Youth Part of the Supreme or County Court.⁶⁹ As an AO, your case can be transferred to Family Court where you will be considered a “Juvenile Delinquent” if the Court determines that the transfer is in the interests of justice. If you stay in the Youth Part as an AO, you will be treated as an adult, but the judge will consider your age when deciding your sentence at the sentencing phase.⁷⁰

If your trial was in Family Court, you were tried as a “juvenile delinquent.” If your trial was in the Youth Part of a criminal court, you were tried as a JO or AO. If you will be treated as a JO or AO, there are ways for your case to be transferred from adult court to Family Court. Transferring to Family Court comes with some benefits. You should talk to your defense attorney about requesting this “removal.”⁷¹

63. N.Y. PENAL LAW 10.00(18)(1)–(2) (McKinney 2009).

64. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §722.10).

65. See Part C(2)(c) of this chapter.

66. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.22).

67. N.Y. PENAL LAW §10.18(2) (McKinney 2009).

68. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §1.20).

69. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §722.20(1)).

70. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §722.20(1)).

71. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 180.75 (McKinney 2007); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.23 (McKinney 2011). See People v. Roe, 74 N.Y.2d 20, 28, 542 N.E.2d 610, 614, 544 N.Y.S.2d 297, 301 (N.Y. 1989) (acknowledging that if a young person tried as an adult is convicted of only a lesser offense for which he is not criminally responsible by reason of infancy, that conviction is vacated and replaced by a “juvenile delinquency” fact determination and the matter removed to Family Court).

If you are being treated as a JO or AO, then the government must follow some rules. The rest of this Section explains some of those rules for JOs and AOs. If you think that the government did not follow any of these rules in your case, you should talk to your lawyer. You may have a reason to appeal.

2. Being Tried as a “Juvenile Offender” (“JO”)

(a) Transferring to Family Court

There are several advantages to transferring your case from criminal court to Family Court. If you are transferred to Family Court, you will probably have better facilities while you are detained. If you are convicted, the judge will have more flexibility to lower your sentence. Also, you will not have a criminal conviction on your permanent record. Family Court records are automatically sealed (kept secret) if you win your case. If you lose your case, then you will have to apply to get the court to keep your records sealed.

If you are being treated as a JO, there are three ways to have your case transferred to Family Court: (1) the district attorney asks for your case to be transferred, (2) you make a motion to transfer your case, or (3) the court believes that there is “reasonable cause” that you do not fit in the JO category.

The district attorney can always ask that your case be transferred to family court if doing so would be in the interests of justice.⁷² You should talk to your lawyer to see if the prosecutor in your case is willing to do this for you.

You can also make a motion to transfer your case to Family Court. You can only do this if you did not waive your felony hearing and if the hearing has not started yet. The transfer must also be in the interests of justice.⁷³ If you do not know if you waived your hearing or if it has started, talk to your lawyer.

After receiving your motion to be transferred, the court will look at what you are charged with and will examine:

- (1) The seriousness and circumstances of the offense;
- (2) How much harm the crime caused;
- (3) The evidence of guilt against you, even if it will not be admitted in trial;
- (4) Your history, character, and condition;
- (5) The sentence the court can impose on you for the offense;
- (6) Whether removing your case to Family Court will hurt the safety or welfare of the community;
- (7) Whether removing your case to Family Court will hurt the public’s trust in the criminal justice system;
- (8) The way the victim feels about removing your case to Family Court; and
- (9) Any other relevant fact that might mean that convicting you in criminal court would serve no useful purpose.⁷⁴

You must convince the court that you are open to rehabilitation and are not a threat to the community. Talk to your lawyer about how to best convince them.

It might be harder to get transferred to Family Court if you were charged with a “serious offense.” If you are charged with second degree murder, first degree rape, a first-degree criminal sexual act, or an armed felony, you can argue that you should be transferred to Family Court because it is in the interests of justice. However, the district attorney must agree, and you also have to convince the court that one of the following three reasons applies to your case:

- (1) There are “mitigating circumstances,” which means that something unique to you or to your case suggests that you should be treated less harshly;
- (2) Other people were involved in the crime and your participation was minor (although not so minor that you should not have been charged in the first place); or

72. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.22(a) (McKinney 2011).

73. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.22(a) (McKinney 2011).

74. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.22(a) (McKinney 2011).

- (3) There is not enough evidence or there is something wrong with the evidence being used to prove that you committed the crime.⁷⁵

If you waived your felony hearing or if your hearing has already started, then you cannot make a motion to remove your case to Family Court. However, the court will remove your case to Family Court anyway if, after the hearing, the court finds reasonable cause to believe that you are a “juvenile delinquent” and not a JO.⁷⁶ A juvenile delinquent is a child between seven and sixteen years old who committed an act that would be criminal if an adult committed it but is not able to be charged because of their age.

If you are younger than eighteen and are charged with both JO and non-JO crimes (charges that would have been heard in Family Court without the JO charges), and you are only found guilty of non-JO crimes, then you have to be sentenced in Family Court. This is true even if your case was heard in criminal court.⁷⁷ If this happens and you are in detention, the Family Court has ten days to make its decision unless you agree to give the court more time.⁷⁸

You also will be sentenced in Family Court if you reach a plea agreement on a non-JO offense. This is only true if you were in County Court (not Supreme Court) before being removed.⁷⁹ If you were sentenced for a non-JO crime in criminal court, you can appeal your sentence and have it vacated (eliminated).

After your case is in Family Court, problems with “juvenile delinquency petitions” may influence your disposition and punishment.⁸⁰ However, New York courts may not allow you to move back into adult criminal court.⁸¹ But if you are tried in adult court, you may still be able to get yourself declared a “youthful offender” even after entering a plea or after a jury finds you guilty (see (g) below).

(b) Sentencing for JOs

If you have been convicted of a JO crime, then you have a criminal record and can receive a range of sentences.⁸² The sentence that you receive depends on how your crime is classified. For a Class A Felony of murder in the first degree, the maximum sentence is life imprisonment.⁸³ For other Class A Felonies of arson or kidnapping in the first degree, the sentence is twelve to fifteen years.⁸⁴ For a Class B Felony the longest sentence is ten years, for a Class C Felony the longest is seven years, and for a Class D Felony the longest is four years.⁸⁵

If you were convicted as a JO and received a sentence longer than those listed, you may be able appeal your sentence. You should tell your lawyer that you think your sentence is too harsh.

75. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 722.20(4)(a) (McKinney 2011).

76. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW §722.21).

77. See, e.g., In re Williams, 120 Misc. 2d 257, 258, 465 N.Y.S.2d 949, 950 (Fam. Ct. Onondaga County 1983) (removing a case to Family Court).

78. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 350.1 (McKinney 2008). See, e.g., In re Julu LL, 217 A.D.2d 749, 751, 629 N.Y.S.2d 507, 508 (3d Dept. 1995) (dismissing proceeding for failing to hold a dispositional hearing within 10 days).

79. See People v. Statton, 156 Misc. 2d 778, 781, 594 N.Y.S.2d 580, 582 (Nassau Cnty. Ct. 1992) (“The removal to Family Court is mandated after a juvenile pleads to a crime for which he is not criminally responsible”).

80. In re Michael M., 3 N.Y.3d 441, 448, 821 N.E.2d 537, 542, 788 N.Y.S.2d 299, 304 (2004) (observing that the N.Y. Court of Appeals has “consistently viewed petitions failing to satisfy Family Court Act § 311.2(3) as exhibiting a nonwaivable jurisdictional defect”). A jurisdictional defect means that some element is missing and the court does not have the power to rule on your case.

81. See Rodriguez v. Myerson, 69 A.D.2d 162, 170–171, 418 N.Y.S.2d 936, 941 (2d Dept. 1979) (finding that a criminal indictment by a grand jury will not justify removal back to criminal court); People v. Gregory C., 158 Misc. 2d 872, 880, 602 N.Y.S.2d 492, 497 (Sup. Ct. Erie Cnty. 1993) (removing a case to Family Court after a grand jury indictment).

82. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 60.10, 70.05 (McKinney 2009).

83. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.05(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

84. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.05(2)(b) (McKinney 2009).

85. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.05(2)(c)–(e) (McKinney 2009).

(c) Youthful Offender Treatment

(i) Qualifying as a “Youthful Offender” (“YO”)

If you were tried as a JO, you may be eligible for “youthful offender” status. A “youthful offender” is the term for someone younger than nineteen years old in adult court.⁸⁶ As a youthful offender (“YO”), you may receive special protections. For example, protections may shorten your sentence or seal your criminal record.⁸⁷

To qualify for YO status, you must: (1) have been under nineteen years old when the alleged crime was committed, (2) meet the eligibility requirements, (3) pose no threat to the community; and (4) show commitment to rehabilitation. The seriousness of the crime is the most important thing that the court will look at.⁸⁸

If you meet the requirements, you can qualify as a YO unless one of the following conditions applies to your case. First, you will not be considered a YO if your conviction was for one of the following: (i) a Class A-I or Class A-II felony, (ii) an armed felony involving violence, including possessing or displaying a firearm, or (iii) rape in the first degree, criminal sexual act in the first degree, or aggravated sexual abuse. Second, you cannot be considered a YO if you have been convicted of a felony in the past. Third, you will not be considered a YO in your current case if the court decides that you were a YO for an earlier felony conviction. Finally, you will not be considered a YO if the court decides that you were a “juvenile delinquent” who was found guilty of a certain felony on or after September 1, 1978.⁸⁹ If none of these apply to you, then you may be eligible for YO status.

There is a way to become eligible for YO treatment even if you have been convicted of an armed felony or one of the other felonies listed above.⁹⁰ Your felony must involve mitigating circumstances. Mitigating circumstances are special factors that make your conduct more understandable,⁹¹ or show that your role was small (for example, if you were a look-out or follower instead of a main actor in a crime).⁹²

Your attorney will usually speak with the judge and/or the prosecutor to decide on your YO status. You do not receive YO status until after you are prosecuted and found guilty in the adult system.⁹³

86. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.10 (McKinney 2011); see also People v. Drayton, 39 N.Y.2d 580, 584, 350 N.E.2d 377, 379, 385 N.Y.S.2d 1, 3 (1976) (“The youthful offender provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law emanate from a legislative desire not to stigmatize youths between the ages of 16 and 19 with criminal records triggered by hasty or thoughtless acts which, although crimes, may not have been the serious deeds of hardened criminals.”).

87. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.20(1) (McKinney 2011); see also People v. Drayton, 39 N.Y.2d 580, 584, 350 N.E.2d 377, 379, 385 N.Y.S.2d 1, 3 (1976).

88. People v. Drayton, 39 N.Y.2d 580, 584, 350 N.E.2d 377, 379, 385 N.Y.S.2d 1, 3 (1976).

89. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.10(2) (McKinney 2011) (listing certain disqualifying felonies).

90. Essentially, this includes rape in the first degree, criminal sexual acts in the first degree, aggravated sexual abuse or any armed felony.

91. See, e.g., People v. Cruickshank, 105 A.D.2d 325, 334, 484 N.Y.S.2d 328, 337 (3d Dept. 1985), aff’d sub. nom. People v. Dawn Maria C., 67 N.Y.2d 625, 499 N.Y.S.2d 663, 490 N.E.2d 530 (1986) (giving “youthful offender” treatment to a defendant who had shot her father because of the mitigating circumstance that she had been abused); see also People v. Shrubsall, 167 A.D.2d 929, 931, 562 N.Y.S.2d 290, 292 (4th Dept. 1990) (granting defendant a new sentence of a shorter length after the court determined parental abuse of the defendant was the driving force behind the crime the defendant committed).

92. See, e.g., People v. Marquis A., 145 A.D.3d 61, 68–69, 40 N.Y.S.3d 609, 615–616 (3d Dept. 2016) (finding that lack of injury to others and willingness to cooperate with the police warranted treating defendant as a youthful offender, despite his conviction of armed robbery in the first degree); People v. John “B.”, 93 A.D.2d 957, 957, 463 N.Y.S.2d 275, 276 (3d Dept. 1983) (finding mitigating circumstances included the facts that the defendant was not a ringleader of the crime, defendant did not carry a gun, and defendant was pressured by older participants to take part in the crime). People v. Thomas R.O., 136 A.D.3d 1400, 1402, 25 N.Y.S.3d 766, 768 (4d Dept. 2016) (finding mental illness to be a mitigating circumstance for purposes of youthful offender determination).

93. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.20(1) (McKinney 2011).

Once found guilty, the sentencing court must consider whether to sentence you as a YO.⁹⁴ The court must consider this even if you do not request to be considered a YO.

If the sentencing court does not consider treating you as a YO, you might be able to appeal the decision to deny you YO treatment.⁹⁵ This is true even if you did not request that the court consider you a youthful offender. This is also true even if you waived your right to appeal generally as part of your plea agreement.⁹⁶

Even if your attorney did not raise your eligible status at sentencing, courts can still decide that you should have been granted YO status. Therefore, the court may change your sentence later.⁹⁷ For example, one court changed a sentence after both the court and defense lawyer made a mistake and did not realize that the child was eligible for YO status until after sentencing.⁹⁸

(ii) Consequences of “Youthful Offender” Treatment

First, if you are declared a “youthful offender,” your conviction in adult court is replaced by a “youthful offender finding.” As a result, no conviction for that offense should appear on your criminal record.⁹⁹

Second, there are different penalties for YOs than for people convicted in adult court. For example, YOs who have committed felonies are sentenced like adults convicted of an E-class felony, which is the lowest form of felony. Note that there is one exception for controlled substances crimes.¹⁰⁰ Under E-class felonies, sentences are usually shorter, and probation is available. Once you are considered a YO, that determination cannot be taken away from you without your consent. The court has also found that if the sentence you received in adult court is longer than what you would have received as a YO, the sentence must be overturned.¹⁰¹

94. People v. Rudolph, 21 N.Y.3d 497, 501, 997 N.E.2d 457, 458, 974 N.Y.S.2d 885, 886 (2013).

95. People v. Rudolph, 21 N.Y.3d 497, 501, 997 N.E.2d 457, 458, 974 N.Y.S.2d 885, 886 (2013).

96. People v. Pacherille, 25 N.Y.3d 1021, 1024, 32 N.E.3d 393, 395, 10 N.Y.S.3d 178, 180 (2015) (noting that a valid waiver of the right to appeal is not enforceable in the face of a failure to consider youthful offender treatment.).

97. See, e.g., People v. Griffin, 17 A.D.3d 927, 927, 793 N.Y.S.2d 649, 650 (3d Dept. 2005); People v. Harrington, 281 A.D.2d 748, 748–749, 721 N.Y.S.2d 709, 710 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding that, though a defendant’s waiver of the right to appeal normally eliminates his challenge to a denied request for YO treatment, defendant’s challenge survives when the Court fails to consider YO treatment at all because YO consideration is mandated by statute).

98. People v. Torres, 238 A.D.2d 933, 934, 661 N.Y.S.2d 153, 154 (4th Dept. 1997).

99. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.35 (McKinney 2011); see, e.g., People v. Cruz, 38 A.D.3d 740, 740, 833 N.Y.S.2d 527, 528 (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that “[o]nce the defendant was adjudicated a youthful offender, his conviction was deemed vacated and replaced by a youthful offender finding, and thus, it may not later be used as a prior felony conviction for a sex crime”). There are a number of other benefits to having a “youthful offender” finding instead of a criminal conviction. See, e.g., People v. Gray, 84 N.Y.2d 709, 712, 646 N.E.2d 444, 445, 622 N.Y.S.2d 223, 224 (1995) (noting that a YO finding cannot be used to impeach a defendant’s credibility on cross-examination because a YO finding is not considered a criminal conviction); State Farm Fire and Cas. Co. v. Bongiorno, 237 A.D.2d 31, 35–36, 667 N.Y.S.2d 378, 381 (2d Dept. 1997) (holding that a YO finding can be kept confidential from an insurance company forced to indemnify the YO in a civil suit); Nielson v. United Parcel Serv. Inc., 210 A.D.2d 641, 642, 619 N.Y.S.2d 844, 845 (3d Dept. 1994) (acknowledging a probation department’s finding that it was not improper for the plaintiff, who claimed he had been denied a promotion based on his YO status, to deny having a criminal record on his application). However, there are some circumstances where your YO finding will not remain confidential. See, e.g., N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 720.35 (McKinney 2011); In re Dillon, 171 Misc. 2d 665, 671, 655 N.Y.S.2d 322, 326 (Nassau Cnty. 1997) (holding that YO records could be unsealed where prosecutor demonstrated compelling need for use of records in criminal prosecution of YO’s attorney).

100. Courts cannot impose a sentence of conditional discharge if the YO is convicted of a felony relating to the possession, sale, or use of controlled substances. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 60.02 (McKinney 2009).

101. People v. Calderon, 79 N.Y.2d 61, 65–66, 588 N.E.2d 61, 63–64, 580 N.Y.S.2d 163, 165–166 (1992) (finding that where a “youthful offender” finding has been properly made, the court is “statutorily required to sentence defendant pursuant to the mandates of the youthful offender law” and has no authority to revoke its finding that defendant is youthful offender).

Third, YOs may have to pay money to a victim for what the victim lost in the crime (“restitution”) or other fees. One example of a required fee is a DNA databank fee.¹⁰²

Fourth, as a YO, if you are convicted of another felony in the future, you will not be considered a “predicate felon.” A “predicate felon” is someone with a prior felony conviction who thus receives much harsher sentences.¹⁰³ However, if you are convicted of a felony in another state that does not grant YO status (or if another state court decided not to give you YO status), your prior conviction may be used against you in future sentencing.¹⁰⁴ This is important if you have been convicted before in other places. A court can use those convictions to find out if you are a repeat felony offender.

(iii) Alternatives to Incarceration Programs

Instead of deciding your YO status before sentencing, a court can issue a deferred sentence. As part of a deferred sentence, the court will order you to participate in an Alternative To Incarceration (“ATI”) program. If you complete the program successfully, then you will be granted YO status.

A court can order you to participate in an ATI program in any criminal sentencing in New York.¹⁰⁵ However, an ATI order is especially likely if you are seeking YO status. Because the YO status decision must be made before sentencing, participation in the ATI is not officially part of your sentence. Instead, your sentence is finalized after a progress report from the ATI program.

3. Being Tried as an “Adolescent Offender” (“AO”)

(a) Transferring to Family Court

If you are an “Adolescent Offender” charged with a non-violent felony, you will be sent to the Family Court unless the District Attorney files a motion within 30 days requesting that the court keep the case in the Youth Part due to “extraordinary circumstances.”¹⁰⁶ If the District Attorney files this motion, you have the chance to oppose the motion. You or the District Attorney can request a hearing at this point. The Judge will decide if the case should be sent to the Family Court within 5 days of the hearing or motion.¹⁰⁷ If you are an Adolescent Offender charged with a violent felony, you can also have your case sent to the Family Court unless your charges include any of the following:

- (1) Displaying a firearm or deadly weapon,
- (2) Causing significant physical injury, or
- (3) Engaging in unlawful sexual conduct.¹⁰⁸

If your case involves any of the above elements, you must remain in the Youth Part unless the District Attorney agrees to remove your case to Family Court.¹⁰⁹ If your case does not involve any of these

102. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 60.35 (McKinney 2009).

103. People v. Elliott, 99 Misc. 2d 794, 795, 417 N.Y.S.2d 191, 192 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1979) (finding that “a youthful offender adjudication cannot be used as the basis for a finding that a defendant is a predicate felon”).

104. See People v. Coolbaugh, 259 A.D.2d 781, 782, 687 N.Y.S.2d 737, 738 (3d Dept. 1999) (quoting People v. Arroyo, 179 A.D.2d 393, 394, 577 N.Y.S.2d 843, 844 (1st Dept. 1992)) (holding that “[w]here youthful offender treatment is not accorded in a foreign jurisdiction, the fact that the defendant would have been eligible for youthful offender treatment had the offense been committed in New York does not preclude the use of such conviction in New York as a predicate felon for enhanced sentencing”); People v. Meckwood, 86 A.D.3d 865, 866, 927 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730–731 (3d Dept. 2011) (holding that defendant’s prior felony conviction in another state qualified defendant as a “predicate felon” even though that felony would have made him a “youthful offender” in New York State).

105. See, e.g., United States v. Flowers, 983 F. Supp. 159, 170, 173 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (applying Alternative sentences to incarceration for drug trafficking conviction).

106. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 722.23).

107. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 722.23).

108. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 722.23).

109. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § elements, you will remain in the Youth Part if the judge agrees with the District Attorney's motion that "extraordinary circumstances" exist.¹¹⁰ Vehicle and Traffic Law misdemeanor charges cannot be sent to Family Court.¹¹¹

D. Prison Conditions

There are special rules when the government puts juveniles in prison. The government has to keep you away from adults even if you are in an adult prison. If you are disabled, the government has to give you education. This section explains how these rules work. This section explains federal law in Part D(1) and explains New York State law in Part D(2).

1. Federal Laws About Conditions of Incarceration

(a) Separation from Adults Required by the JJDPa

First, the JJDPa keeps young people in a federal prison away from adults.¹¹² This law applies everywhere in the federal system. It also applies to any person treated as a "juvenile" in a state system. The JJDPa only protects you if the state is treating you as a "juvenile" and not as an adult.¹¹³ The JJDPa does not apply to young people who are treated as adults within a state system.¹¹⁴

The JJDPa says there has to be "sight and sound" separation between incarcerated youth and incarcerated adults in the federal system. That means incarcerated people who are eighteen years old or younger have to be kept away from those who are older than eighteen years old.¹¹⁵ No sight contact means incarcerated adults and incarcerated youth should not be able to see each other. No sound contact means young people and incarcerated adults should not be able to speak directly to one another in the prison.

The building you are in has to keep incarcerated adults away from JOs in all secure areas. This includes admissions, sleeping quarters, and shower and toilet areas. Other areas might be included too. Contact that happens for a short time by accident does not always break the law. But that is only true when you are in a place that is not just for JOs and is nonresidential. Places where contact might not break the law includes areas for hallways and dining, recreation, education, training for a job, health care, or entry areas. In an area of the prison that is only for young people, any contact between incarcerated youth and incarcerated adults breaks the law and you can report it.¹¹⁶

If you are not being kept away from adults, you could have a federal claim under the JJDPa.¹¹⁷ You may also be able to file a Section 1983 claim of violation of your rights under either the Fourteenth Amendment or the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution.¹¹⁸ You should talk to your lawyer about these options.

722.23).

110. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 722.23).

111. Assemb. B. 3009-C, 2017-18 Leg., 2017 Sess. (N.Y. 2017) (to be enacted in N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 722.23).

112. 42 U.S.C. § 5633(a)(13).

113. These rules governing prison conditions are different from the rules discussed earlier in the Chapter, which discussed how the government must follow different rules depending on whether you were convicted under federal or state law. See Part B of this Chapter.

114. Bureau of Justice Assistance, Dept. of Justice, Publ'n. No. NCJ 182503, Juveniles in Adult Prisons and Jails: A National Assessment, 14 (2000), available at www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/bja/182503.pdf (last visited Dec. 7, 2016).

115. 42 U.S.C. § 5633(a)(13); 28 C.F.R. § 31.303(d)(1)(i).

116. 28 C.F.R. § 31.303(d)(i).

117. See Horn by Parks v. Madison Cnty. Fiscal Court, 22 F.3d 653, 658 (6th Cir. 1994) (holding that a violation of the JJDPa creates a Section 1983 action for rights protected under the JJDPa); James v. Jones, 148 F.R.D. 196, 199 (W.D. Ky. 1993) (holding that the JJDPa extends enforceable federal rights to young people who are incarcerated); Grenier v. Kennebec Cnty., 748 F. Supp. 908, 913 (D. Me. 1990) (holding that an incarcerated youth could use Section 1983 to seek relief for alleged infringement of his rights under JJDPa).

118. For a detailed description of a Section 1983 claim, see JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law." See also Doe v. Borough of Clifton Heights, 719 F. Supp. 382, 384

Although young people in adult prisons must be kept away from incarcerated adults, this does not mean that prison officials can isolate you or keep you out of programs. If they do, that might be a violation of your civil rights. If you think you have been unfairly kept out of adult prison programs, you should speak with your lawyer.

(b) Incarcerated Youth with Disabilities

(i) Before Incarceration

If you have a disability, you may be eligible for some protections under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA).¹¹⁹ The disability can be a physical, emotional, or learning disability.¹²⁰ Sometimes a court will consider disabilities when deciding if they will send your case to Family Court. If your parent or guardian asks, you can get tested for a disability under IDEA and your home school district has to pay for the test. You can use the information from the test to argue for being treated as a “juvenile” in court. Talk to your lawyer to find out how this is done, because different jurisdictions have different ways for asking for a test.

If you are evaluated and found to have a disability, it is important to tell the court. Some studies say that as many as seventy percent of incarcerated youth suffer from a disability. Some disabilities are invisible. For example, learning or emotional disabilities often lead to problems with other people. Proper evaluation and treatment can make rehabilitation easier, and treatment can also help make education and other programs more helpful.

If you have already been diagnosed with a disability but your previous Individualized Education Program (“IEP”) was not followed while you attended school, you should tell your lawyer. For instance, if you were diagnosed with a learning disability and your IEP required you to have a tutor, but your school never gave you a tutor, the school system’s failure to follow the IEP could help you explain to the judge why you may have had trouble with rehabilitation programs before. If your lawyer can convince the judge that this is true, you may receive a lighter sentence.

(ii) Special Education While You are Incarcerated

The government must give you free special education if you have a disability until you are twenty-one years old.¹²¹ Anyone in a correctional facility who would normally need special education services

(E.D. Pa. 1989), aff’d, Doe v. Borough of Clifton Heights, 902 F.2d 1558 (3d Cir. 1990) (requiring showing of deliberate indifference to establish an Eighth Amendment challenge); see also Baker v. Hamilton, 345 F. Supp. 345, 352 (W.D. Ky. 1972) (concluding that punitively treating young people as adults and not according them due process violates the Fourteenth Amendment).

119. 20 U.S.C. §§ 1400–1482.

120. 20 U.S.C. § 1401(26)(A). IDEA requires that the school develop an Individualized Education Plan (IEP) every year for children with disabilities to make sure that the child is receiving a free, appropriate public education. IDEA describes how an IEP is designed and who must be involved in creating it (parents, teachers, etc.). The IEP can include a range of services, from vocational training, transition services and psychological counseling to special tutoring which will assist the student in overcoming learning problems.

IDEA lists a number of disabilities that allow students to obtain special services. This list includes: intellectual disability, hearing impairment, speech or language impairment, visual impairment, emotional disturbance, orthopedic impairment, and specific learning disabilities. A “specific learning disability” is defined as a “disorder in one or more of the basic psychological processes involved in understanding or in using language, spoken or written,” and may show itself in an “imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell, or do mathematical calculations.” 20 U.S.C. § 1401(30)(A); 34 C.F.R. § 300.8(c)(10)(i). This may include conditions such as perceptual disabilities (disabilities in seeing, hearing, feeling, or in other ways sensing things), brain injury, minimal brain dysfunction, dyslexia and developmental aphasia, but does not include a learning problem that is primarily the result of visual, hearing, or motor disabilities, of intellectual disabilities, of emotional disturbance, or of environmental, cultural, or economic disadvantage. 20 U.S.C. § 1401(30)(B)–(C); 34 C.F.R. § 300.8(c)(10)(i)–(ii).

For general information about IDEA rights during incarceration, see Special Education and the Juvenile Justice System, Juvenile Justice Bull. No. NCJ 179359 (Office Of Juvenile Justice & Delinquency Prevention, Dept. of Justice), (Jul. 2000), available at <http://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/ojjdp/179359.pdf> (last visited Dec. 7, 2016).

121. See Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, 20 U.S.C. §§ 1400–1482. However, some courts are outside of prison must also receive them during their time in prison.¹²² The IDEA applies to almost all the people who would get special education services outside prison.¹²³ However, there are three exceptions:

- (1) In some states, the government does not have to provide public education to children who are between three and five years old or between eighteen and twenty-one years old. In those states, the prison is not required to provide special education services to incarcerated youth who are between three and five or between eighteen and twenty-one;¹²⁴
- (2) In some states, if you are ages eighteen to twenty-one and were not identified as disabled before going to prison, or if you did not receive a personal education program at your old school, the prison does not have to provide you special education services;¹²⁵ or
- (3) If a state gives early intervention services to a child with disabilities, then the state does not have to give free special education to that child.¹²⁶

Unless one of the exceptions above applies to you, you are entitled to a free appropriate public education (“FAPE”), even while you are incarcerated. You can request a review if your IEP is not being followed. If your IEP is not being followed or you are not getting FAPE, then you first must try to resolve your problem through administrative methods (contact the state Department of Education to find out more about administrative remedies) and, if that fails, through state court. You can sue in federal court only after administrative and state remedies have failed. The only reason your FAPE can be denied is for prison security. Students and parents also have the right to challenge any changes made to an IEP.

2. New York State Laws Regarding Conditions of Incarceration

Similar to the federal laws explained above, New York state laws keep juveniles separate from adults and provide for the education of juveniles in New York state prisons.

(a) Juveniles and Adults Must be Separated

The federal law JJDPA also applies to New York state prisons. The JJDPA requires that all states must have sight and sound separation between adults and youth in jails and prisons.¹²⁷ more willing than others to find that incarcerated youth have a constitutional right to education and treatment. Compare Santana v. Collazo, 714 F.2d 1172, 1176–1177 (1st Cir. 1983) (holding that rehabilitative training is desirable but institutionalized young people have no constitutional right to such treatment); Morales v. Turman, 562 F.2d 993, 998 (5th Cir. 1977) (distinguishing between the commitment of the mentally ill and the confinement of youth offenders and rejecting the argument that youth offenders have a comparable constitutional right to treatment) with Nelson v. Heyne, 491 F.2d 352, 360 (7th Cir. 1974) (holding that incarcerated youth have a constitutional right to treatment which includes the right to individualized care); Alexander S. v. Boyd, 876 F. Supp. 773, 798 (D.S.C. 1995) (recognizing the right of young people to minimally adequate training, including special education for incarcerated youth).

122. This claim is somewhat complicated because various states have constitutions or statutes giving their residents a right to an education even if they are not disabled, but there is no federal right to a general education. See San Antonio Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 35, 93 S. Ct. 1278, 1297, 36 L. Ed. 2d 16, 44 (1973) (holding that education is not afforded explicit constitutional protection).

123. 20 U.S.C. § 1412(a)(1)(A); 34 C.F.R. § 300.102(a)(2).

124. 20 U.S.C. § 1412(a)(1)(B)(i); 34 C.F.R. § 300.102(a)(1).

125. 20 U.S.C. § 1412(a)(1)(B)(ii); 34 C.F.R. § 300.102(a)(2)(i). See Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. v. Garcia, 58 Cal. 4th 175, 184, 314 P.3d 767, 772 (2013) (finding that the individual in question had met both prongs even though the established standard was to 20 U.S.C. § 1412(a)(1)(B)(2), whose text specifies that either prong may be satisfied).

126. 20 U.S.C. § 1412(a)(1)(C); 34 C.F.R. § 300.102(a)(4).

127. 42 U.S.C. § 5633.

In New York, adulthood begins at age eighteen for the purposes of prosecution,¹²⁸ and the JJDPa does not apply if you are a young person but were tried as an adult by the state.¹²⁹ As a result, JJDPa sight and sound protections do not apply in New York if you were tried as an adult, even if you were only sixteen.¹³⁰

If you were tried as a “juvenile” and are not being separated from the adults in your prison or lock-up, you can sue under Section 1983.¹³¹ If you bring a lawsuit, you must direct it against the state or local agency rather than the police or corrections officers.

There are some special protections for “Juvenile Offenders” (“Jos”) in New York. Remember, JOs are technically classified as different from “juveniles.” JOs are kept in juvenile facilities before they reach age 18.¹³² Under New York law, these separate facilities should have services more appropriate for juveniles than the services in adult prisons.¹³³

(i) Rules for Transferring from a “Juvenile Offender” to Adult Facility

There are some circumstances where you can be transferred to adult Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) facilities if you are a “juvenile offender” between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one years old.¹³⁴ First, you may be transferred if there is no substantial likelihood that you will benefit from the programs offered by “juvenile offender” facilities.¹³⁵ Second, there are rules called “transfer guidelines” that provide possible reasons that you may be transferred to an adult facility.¹³⁶ For example, you may be transferred if you are a danger to yourself or others, if you refuse to participate in programs, if you are in possession of any contraband (things you are not allowed to have in prison), or if you violate parole.¹³⁷

There are three rules that New York must follow in deciding whether to transfer you to a DOCCS facility. First, if you are older than twenty-one, you must be transferred to a DOCCS facility.

Second, if you are older than eighteen but younger than twenty-one, you can be transferred to a DOCCS facility by the Office of Children and Family Services Commissioner (“OCFS”).¹³⁸ OCFS is required to explain its reasons for transfer, and the director of the division must review these reasons and issue a “certification,” or authorization, to DOCCS.¹³⁹ However, if it is “necessary to ensure the health and safety of [other] individuals” in your facility and if you are a juvenile offender eighteen years of age or older, you can be transferred to DOCCS facilities with only a verbal certification.¹⁴⁰ In this situation, OCFS is not required to provide a written certification, but it must submit written 128. See N.Y. CRIM. PRO. LAW § 510.15 (McKinney 2019) (Effective on December 1, 2019, 16 and 17-year-olds charged with misdemeanors are considered “juveniles” and will have cases decided in the Family Court; 16 and 17-year-olds charged with traffic misdemeanors are considered adults and will have cases decided in the local criminal court; 16 and 17-year-olds charged with felonies are considered “Adolescent Offenders” (“AO”) and their cases begin in the Youth Part of the Supreme or County Court).

129. See N.Y. CRIM. PRO. LAW § 510.15 (McKinney 2019).

130. Individuals who are 16 and 17 years old must be separated from those 18 and older in county correctional facilities. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 500-b (McKinney 2014). State regulations require separate housing for individuals in this age range. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7013.4 (2020).

131. For a detailed description of a Section 1983 claim, see JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

132. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.15 (McKinney 2017); see also 83 N.Y. JUR. 2d Penal and Correctional Institutions § 57, West (database updated 2019) (“The Office of Children and Family Services (OCFS) must maintain secure facilities for the care and confinement of juvenile offenders. . . . The [OCFS] may apply to the sentencing court for permission to transfer a youth not less than 16 nor more than 18 years of age to the Department of Corrections . . .”).

133. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 508(1) (McKinney 2020).

134. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.2 (2020).

135. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.2 (2020).

136. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.3 (2020).

137. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.3 (2020).

138. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.2 (2020).

139. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.4 (2020).

140. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.5 (2020).

confirmation and reasons for the quicker transfer within one business day after the transfer occurs.¹⁴¹ You can ask for a copy of your transfer documents any time within seven days after you are transferred. You also have the right to appeal in writing within thirty days after you are transferred.¹⁴² The director of the division must decide on your written appeal within ten days of receiving your appeal.¹⁴³ You can also ask a court to review these decisions through filing an Article 78 petition.¹⁴⁴

Third, sixteen and seventeen year-olds can be transferred to a DOCCS facility when it is unlikely that the young person will benefit from the Division of Youth Development and Partnerships for Success's services.¹⁴⁵ If you are sixteen or seventeen, you can only be transferred to a DOCCS facility after both the deputy director for residential services and the director of the division have reviewed the reasons given for the need for transfer, and the director has determined that you should be transferred.¹⁴⁶ The director must decide whether to transfer you within five business days after receiving the documents about your transfer, and you must be told within seven days of the decision.¹⁴⁷

The OCFS oversees all detention facilities for incarcerated youth in New York State.¹⁴⁸ In New York City, the Administration for Children's Services runs "juvenile" pre-trial facilities.¹⁴⁹ You can use the OCFS and Administration for Children's Services websites (provided in the footnotes below) to find the addresses, visiting hours, and regulations of detention centers, as well as annual reports and other information.

(b) Your Right to an Education under New York State Law

Incarcerated youth in New York have rights to education in addition to those provided by IDEA under federal law. First, the New York Constitution guarantees all children an education.¹⁵⁰ This means that you have a right to an education until your twenty-first birthday, including while in prison and pre-trial detention, until you earn a high school diploma or an equivalent degree (such as a GED).¹⁵¹ This applies whether or not you have a disability. Second, DOCCS has a policy goal that all incarcerated people receive a high school diploma or its equivalent.¹⁵²

All incarcerated youth should be offered at least three hours of daily instruction, five days per week, by qualified teachers, in an environment that facilitates learning.¹⁵³

141. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.5 (2020).

142. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.7(a)–(b) (2020).

143. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.7(c) (2020).

144. See JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," for more information about Article 78 proceedings.

145. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.2 (2020).

146. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 175-4.6(a)–(c) (2020).

147. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. TIT. 9, § 175-4.6(c)–(e) (2020).

148. Information about the OCFS (for New York State) is available online at <http://www.ocfs.state.ny.us/main/> (last visited March 10, 2020).

149. Information about the Administration for Children's Services' "juvenile" justice services is available online at <https://www1.nyc.gov/site/acs/justice/juvenile-justice.page> (last visited March 1, 2020).

150. N.Y. CONST. art. XI, § 1. See Mitchell C. v. Bd. of Ed. of City Sch. Dist. of City of N.Y., 67 A.D.2d 284, 288, 414 N.Y.S.2d 923 (2d Dept. 1979) ("[W]here a State or subdivision thereof undertakes to provide free education to all its students, it must recognize an individual student's legitimate entitlement to a public education as a property interest protected by the due process clause" (citation omitted)).

151. N.Y. EDUC. LAW § 3202 (McKinney 2015) ("A person over five and under 21 years of age who has not received a high school diploma is entitled to attend the public schools maintained in the district in which such person resides without the payment of tuition."); see also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7070.2 (2020); Mitchell C. v. Bd. of Ed. of City Sch. Dist. of City of N.Y., 67 A.D.2d 284, 288, 414 N.Y.S.2d 923, 926 (2d Dept. 1979).

152. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4804, Academic Education Program Policies (2015), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4804.pdf> (last visited March 1, 2020). In addition, incarcerated people can be sanctioned if they have not obtained a diploma or its equivalent and have reading or math skills below a 9.0 level. According to the directive, incarcerated people can be denied good behavior allowances under N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803 (McKinney 2014).

153. The regulations in New York require: (1) instruction on the same days it is available in the local school

If you are not receiving the kind of education described above, you may request it.¹⁵⁴ In New York City, the court has upheld the right of incarcerated people to access special education.¹⁵⁵ If you request an evaluation for special education in New York, the evaluation must be made within ten school days following receipt of your request.¹⁵⁶ Recommendations for your education must be made within twenty days of receiving your request.¹⁵⁷ However, this only applies if you have not been evaluated within the last three years.¹⁵⁸ If you have been evaluated within the last three years, that evaluation can be used instead of a new one.¹⁵⁹

E. Conclusion

If you are a young person who is considered a “juvenile,” “juvenile offender,” or “youthful offender,” federal laws and New York state laws give you various rights and protections with respect to the legal process and the conditions of your incarceration. To receive these protections, you must first make sure you fit the eligibility requirements described above. Then, speak with your lawyer about the next steps to take, including a possible appeal of your case or bringing a separate lawsuit if your rights have been violated.

district; (2) not less than three hours a day of schooling; and (3) that the instruction shall begin within eleven days of the district's receipt of your request for educational services. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.4 (2020); see also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7070.6 (2020).

154. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7070.4(f) (2020); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.5 (2020) (“Within 10 days after admission . . . youth shall be apprised . . . of the availability of educational services. If the youth requests, the correctional facility shall submit a request for such educational services to the school district in which the facility is located, which request shall include, but need not be limited to, the following information: a) the youth's name; b) the name and location of the facility; c) the last school grade completed by the youth as indicated by the youth; d) the anticipated duration of the incarceration; and e) the address of the last known residence of the youth at the time of the child's commitment to custody.”).

155. Handberry v. Thompson, 92 F. Supp. 2d 244, 245–249 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (finding that incarcerated people ages 16–21 without high school degrees were denied special education services in violation of IDEA and general education services in violation of New York law, and ordering DOCCS to find a way to make sure that the rights of incarcerated people are respected and that they receive the education they deserve), judgment limited by Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 356 (2d Cir. 2006) (vacating the decision of the district court insofar as the injunction is based on state law, excessively burdensome, violated the parental consent provision of the IDEA and where it makes little sense within the context of prison regulation).

156. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.3(a) (2020).

157. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.3(a) (2020).

158. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.3(b) (2020).

159. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 8, § 118.3(b) (2020).

APPENDIX A

GLOSSARY OF LEGAL TERMS¹⁶⁰

Appeal: When a person asks a higher court to review the decision made in his case by a lower court with the hope that the higher court will find mistakes and overturn that decision.

Arraignment: When someone who has been accused of a crime is brought to court for the first time. This is when the court (i) tells you what crime you are being accused of and (ii) asks you to enter an initial or first plea of “guilty,” “not guilty,” or “no contest.”

Burden of proof: The level of proof the prosecutor must reach for a person to be convicted or found delinquent. In a criminal case, the burden of proof is “beyond a reasonable doubt,” which means that no juror or judge should have any reasonable doubt that the person being tried is actually guilty. If the jury has a reason to believe the defendant did not commit the crime, then it must find him not guilty.

Defense Attorney: The person who defends you in court is called a defense attorney. You are entitled to have a defense attorney in a criminal trial where you are at risk of going to jail or being committed to an institution.¹⁶¹ If your family is unable or refuses to hire an attorney to defend you, the court will assign you an attorney, often known as a public defender or “legal aid.” When the court assigns you a lawyer, make sure you write down his name, telephone number, and license number so you can contact him when you need him.

District Attorney: The lawyer who represents the Government in criminal trials; see “prosecutor.”

Guardian ad litem: Depending on the type of case, a guardian ad litem can mean different things. Usually in the criminal and delinquency courts, if you do not have parents or guardians that can help you, or if your parents’ interests are different from yours, the court will choose someone to be your guardian for the purpose of your trial and/or proceedings. This is especially true in the federal system.¹⁶² This person will usually be a lawyer, but if you are in foster care, it might be your social worker or someone else who is very familiar with your case.

Incarcerate: To order that a person be placed in a prison or other lock-down facility for a period of time. If you are “incarcerated,” it means that you are in prison.

Indictment: A formal document written by a grand jury accusing someone of a crime. It is presented to the court as the reason for prosecuting someone.

Jurisdiction: Jurisdiction has two separate definitions. First, it is the power of a court to decide a case. If a court has the power to decide your case, we say the court has “jurisdiction.” Second, it is a geographic area in which a court may exercise its power to decide a case. For example, New York and New Jersey are different “jurisdictions” because New York courts only have authority to decide cases brought in New York.

Plea bargain: When the accused person makes an agreement with the prosecutor to plead guilty to a lesser crime in exchange for the possibility of a lower sentence. When you accept a plea bargain, you give up your right to a trial.

Prosecutor: The attorney who works for the state or federal government who is in charge of preparing the case against you. Prosecutors usually work for the District Attorney in the state system or the U.S. Attorney in the federal system. Your lawyer and/or parent/guardian should be with you whenever you speak to the prosecutor. You have a right to have your lawyer present to help you with any questions that the prosecutor may ask. If your lawyer is not present for a meeting, you have the right to ask for your lawyer and to not speak to the prosecutor until your lawyer arrives.

160. All definitions are adapted and paraphrased from those listed in BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

161. The Supreme Court has said: “We conclude that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that in respect of proceedings to determine delinquency which may result in commitment to an institution in which the juvenile’s freedom is curtailed, the child and his parents must be notified of the child’s right to be represented by counsel retained by them, or if they are unable to afford counsel, that counsel will be appointed to represent the child.” In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 41, 87 S. Ct. 1428, 1451 18 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1967).

162. 18 U.S.C. § 5034.

Transfer: When your case is moved to a different court. In order to be tried as an adult, your case must be transferred to criminal court and must meet the rules or requirements for transfer.

Trial: When the court formally examines the evidence and legal claims brought by the prosecutor against the accused person.

“Waive your right”: When you waive a legal right it means you voluntarily give it up. Some rights are not waivable. To waive a right, you must know the facts and intend to give up the right. Otherwise the waiver will not be valid.

Vacate: When a court of appeals cancels a decision that was made by a lower court. Once the court vacates a decision, it might make its own decision or send the case back to the lower court to review the case again. Sending the case back to the lower court is called “remanding.”

CHAPTER 39

TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAMS*

A. Introduction

If you are incarcerated in New York State, this Chapter will help you understand many temporary release programs that you may be eligible for. In general, this Chapter tells you about the different types of temporary release programs in New York State, summarizes the application procedures you must follow, and explains your rights regarding temporary release programs. Part B explains the temporary release programs available. Part C addresses eligibility requirements. Part D discusses how to apply for temporary release programs. Part E concerns what you must do if your temporary release request is either denied or revoked. Finally, Part F describes the parts of state and federal temporary release programs that the Second Chance Act of 2007 changed. Previous editions of the JLM had a special chapter for New York City temporary release programs, but as of January 1, 1995, New York City has stopped all of its temporary release programs. Therefore, this Chapter deals only with New York State provisions.

New York State temporary release programs allow incarcerated people to leave the prison for short periods of time before they are paroled or serve their full sentence. There are several programs. Each program has a specific purpose and there are separate rules to qualify. The laws allowing the State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision to create release programs can be found in the New York Correction Law (N.Y. Correct. Law) Sections 851 to 861 and 870 to 879. You can find regulations establishing the specific programs in the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules and Regulations of the State of New York (N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs.), title 7, Chapter XII (parts 1900–04).

The superintendent of each New York State correctional institution and a Temporary Release Committee (“TRC”) oversee the day-to-day operations of the various programs. The TRC is made up of a chairperson and two staff members. It represents the parole, program services, and security departments. The superintendent nominates the TRC members and three alternates, and the Commissioner of Corrections approves them. The TRC must meet at least once a week to consider temporary release applications.

B. Overview of Temporary Release Programs

First, you should know that not all facilities have temporary release programs. Those facilities that do offer temporary release may not have every type of program. You should ask at your facility to see what programs it offers. You may be transferred to another facility to take part in a temporary release program.¹

There are both short-term release programs and continuous temporary release programs. The short-term programs allow incarcerated people to leave the facility for only a specific period of time (often for seven days or less) and only for certain limited purposes. The continuous temporary release programs allow incarcerated people to leave the facility for up to fourteen hours per day until the purpose of the program has been fulfilled.

You should also be aware that getting into these programs is hard. Acceptance into these programs depends on which program you are interested in and your particular criminal history. Between 2008 and 2018, the percentage of applicants accepted into all of the temporary release programs in the state has dropped from about seven to five percent.² Also, the total number of participants in these programs

* This Chapter was written by Anna Moody based in part on a previous version by Judith M. Shampanier. Special thanks to Bill Gibney of The Legal Society of New York City, Special Litigation Unit for reviewing this Chapter.

1. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(a) (2020).

2. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE has dropped almost every year since 2004, when there were 4,028 incarcerated people participating in these programs.³ In 2018, the number was just 1,239.⁴

1. Short-Term Temporary Release Programs

There are three types of short-term temporary release programs: (a) leaves of absence, (b) community service programs, and (c) furloughs. Participation in a community service program may be short-term or continuous.

(a) Leaves of Absence

Leaves of absence are different from other release programs. You do not need to be within two years of eligibility for release on parole in order to qualify for the program. You may be granted a leave of absence to leave the facility for a certain period of time for one of three reasons:

- (1) If death may happen soon, you may leave to visit your spouse, child, brother, sister, grandchild, parent (natural or legally adoptive), grandparent, or ancestral aunt or uncle during their last illness;
- (2) To attend a funeral of such individual; or
- (3) To receive surgery or to receive medical or dental treatment not available at the facility, only if it is absolutely necessary to your health and well-being.⁵

The Commissioner or his or her representative must approve the third type of leave.⁶ This approval depends on your criminal history and your institutional behavior. The Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS) uses a point system to determine your eligibility for programs. The point system is discussed in Part D(2)(a) below. You will need thirty points to participate in a short-term program and thirty-two points to participate in a continuous program. Even if you have the necessary number of points, you still may not be allowed to participate. But, you must be considered. Leaves of absence are available at all facilities in the state except shock incarceration facilities.⁷ However, it is important to know that leaves are fairly uncommon. They are uncommon mostly because very few incarcerated people apply for them. In 2018, eight leaves were granted out of thirteen applications.⁸

One deathbed visit may be allowed for each terminally ill relative. If you have already had one escorted visit, you will not get another visit to the same person. The facility will confirm the facts of your case and may contact the patient's doctor or funeral home director. Once the TRC is sure you have a relative who is ill or deceased, it will make a decision. If it approves your leave, the superintendent must also do so in order for you to get the leave of absence. You will be given only the PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 13 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

3. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 13 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

4. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 13 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

5. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a) (2020).

6. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a) (2020).

7. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 5 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

8. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 16 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

shortest length of time necessary to accomplish the purpose of the leave. Out-of-state leaves of absence will be granted only with the Commissioner's approval.⁹

If you have applied for a medical or dental leave, you must be willing to get such treatment nearby and from a doctor selected by the institution. You must get TRC Form 4188 filled out and signed by the facility Health Services Director.¹⁰ The temporary release committee must:

- (1) have a plan that predicts the number of visits you will need for treatment;
- (2) have you examined by your prison's dentist or physician after each visit to the outside doctor to make sure you actually got treated; and
- (3) make sure that your leaves of absence for dental or medical treatment are never more than a "reasonable number of hours" within a single day (unless a longer leave is medically necessary).¹¹

Your bounds of confinement must state that you will proceed directly to the dentist's or physician's office upon release and return directly to your institution once your visit is done.¹² All medical or dental leaves longer than one day, even when you are not a Central Review case, require approval from the Director of Temporary Release Programs.¹³ See Part D(2)(c) of this Chapter for an explanation of Central Review.

(b) Community Service Programs

Under the community service program, eligible incarcerated people may leave the facility for up to fourteen hours on any day to volunteer at nonprofit organizations or public agencies (for example, hospitals or charities). These organizations must have an established volunteer program with a job description outlining the duties and responsibilities of a volunteer. You may not fill a position ordinarily taken by a paid worker. Participants in a volunteer work program will receive an allowance from the facility's Temporary Release Program appropriations.¹⁴ You may also be allowed to participate in religious services and athletic or cultural events if they are not available at your facility.¹⁵

(c) Furloughs

A furlough program allows eligible incarcerated people to leave an institution for up to seven days in order to:

- (1) Solve family problems or maintain family ties,
- (2) Attend a short educational course,
- (3) Look for a job, or
- (4) Seek post-release housing.¹⁶

Thus, if you can convince the TRC that you need to see your family (for example, because you have children, or because your parents are going through a divorce), you may be allowed to take a furlough only for this narrow purpose. You may not take an out-of-state furlough.¹⁷

Furloughs are available at all facilities throughout the state except for shock incarceration locations.¹⁸ Be aware, though, that furloughs are rarely granted. For example, 100% of applications

9. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a)(1)(i)(e) (2020).

10. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a)(2)(v)(a) (2020).

11. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a)(2)(v) (2020).

12. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a)(2)(v)(e) (2020).

13. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a)(2)(iv) (2020).

14. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(b)(1)–(3) (2020).

15. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(b)(6)–(7) (2020).

16. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c) (2020).

17. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c) (2020).

18. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 5 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

have been rejected in some years.¹⁹ In both 2013 and 2014, there were 34 applications for furlough and none were granted.²⁰

General confinement incarcerated people who have been accepted for previous furloughs may apply with these limitations:

- (1) You cannot take more than twenty-eight days in any furlough year,
- (2) You cannot take more than fourteen days in the first six months of any furlough year, and
- (3) You cannot take more than seven days in any twenty-eight day period.
- (4) A furlough year begins on the day you take your first furlough and ends 365 days later.
- (5) No furlough can be longer than seven days.²¹

If you apply and do not fit into this timing, the TRC may hold onto your application.²² Please note that if you want to take a furlough during a holiday season, you must submit your application at a time set by the Director of Temporary Release at your facility.²³

(i) Family-Tie Furlough

If you are applying for a family-tie furlough, you must go to an approved residence. An approved residence must be the home of a relative by blood or legal adoption, a legal guardian, or a spouse. If your family lives out-of-state, you may request that the TRC and Central Office approve a different in-state location.²⁴ You will still be allowed to meet with your family to maintain family ties even if your family lives out-of-state. However, the meeting must take place in the state in which you are imprisoned and at an approved residence.

(ii) Job-Search and Post-Release Housing Furloughs

The job-search furlough and the post-release housing furlough are available to incarcerated people preparing for release from prison. There is no pre-approved residence requirement for a one-day furlough. For a longer furlough, you must meet the same residence requirements (home of a relative by blood or legal adoption) as for the family-tie furlough. If that is not available, you must go to a legal and verifiable residence.²⁵

(iii) Short Educational/Vocational Training Course Furlough

The short educational/vocational training course furlough program serves one of two purposes:

- (1) One-day rehabilitation therapy in order to provide the incarcerated person with counseling and therapy for problems such as drug, alcohol, or gambling addictions; or
- (2) An educational furlough to take an entrance exam or attend an educational conference, short course, or seminar.

19. See, e.g., N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF CORR. & CMTY. SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2013 ANNUAL REPORT 17 (2014), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2013.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020); N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF CORR. & CMTY. SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2014 ANNUAL REPORT 15 (2015), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2014.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

20. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2013 ANNUAL REPORT 17 (2014), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2013.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020); STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2014 ANNUAL REPORT 15 (2015), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2014.pdf> (last visited Jun. 24, 2020).

21. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.3(c)(2) (2020).

22. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.3(c)(2)–(3) (2020).

23. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c)(2)(iv)(b)(3)(ii) (2020).

24. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c)(2)(i)(a)–(b) (2020).

25. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c)(2)(ii)–(iii) (2020).

This program can be for one day or for a longer period of time. Educational furloughs require Central Office approval.²⁶

All furlough approvals will last continuously unless the decision says that the furlough is for a specific period of time. After the first furlough, the superintendent will schedule later requests as long as the TRC says that you are still qualified. If you are only approved for a furlough, though, you are not approved for any other temporary release program.²⁷

If you have a pending transfer to a work release or educational release program facility, you will be eligible for a furlough from the transferring facility after Central Office approval. Remember that furlough approval, like approval for other temporary release programs, is entirely up to the prison officials. If the Commissioner of Corrections approves you for a work or educational furlough, the superintendent of the prison facility can postpone the furlough in the interest of “the efficient and orderly operation of the transferring facility.”²⁸

2. Short-Term Temporary Release Procedures

As soon as you are approved for a short-term temporary release program, you will be notified so that you may make the arrangements necessary to complete the program. If the TRC feels that there is not enough information about your requested residence, whom you will be staying with, or any other part of your case, it will investigate the problem. If the result of the investigation is negative, you will be notified and you may be denied that residence.²⁹

You will usually be allowed to bring no more than $100 over and above your transportation costs on a short-term release. If you cannot afford transportation, your release may be postponed until you have the money. If you leave on short-term release, you must pay for the entire trip. In exceptional cases, the facility may grant you an advance to cover the costs of the trip.³⁰

You will receive a photo identification card to carry during your temporary release. This card must be with you at all times when you are out of the facility.³¹ You will also be required to sign a “Memorandum of Agreement” before you leave. It lists the rules and regulations that you must follow while on temporary release. It also includes any special conditions that apply specifically to you.³² You will not be allowed to return to the facility with any item that you did not take out with you.³³ The law requires that you be supervised by a parole officer during your short-term temporary release.³⁴

3. Continuous Temporary Release Programs

There are four different types of continuous temporary release programs. These releases allow incarcerated people to leave prison grounds for up to fourteen hours a day on a continuous basis. They are granted to let incarcerated people work, volunteer for community service, get educational or vocational training, or attend an industrial training leave program. If the Central Office approves you for any long-term temporary release program, that approval also implies that you are approved for all other temporary release programs. However, this implied approval is at the discretion of the TRC and the facility superintendent. There are no out-of-state continuous release programs.³⁵ Not every 26. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(c)(2)(iv)(b)(1) (2020).

27. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 1901.1(d)(1), (9) (2020).

28. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(d)(7)–(8) (2020). See Part D(2)(c) of this Chapter for more information.

29. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.2(a)(2) (2020).

30. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.2(a)(6) (2020).

31. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.2(a)(7)(i) (2020).

32. For a copy of a typical Memorandum of Agreement, see N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. TIT. 7, § 1902.1 (2020).

33. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.2(a)(7)(ii) (2020).

34. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.2(b)(2)(i) (2020).

35. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1 (2020).

institution offers each release program. Where programs are offered, the number of available spots may be limited. You will need to check this at your facility.

(a) Work Release

The work release program allows an eligible incarcerated person to leave a facility for up to fourteen hours in a day to work, get on-the-job training, or do any activity that will make employment possible, like shopping for work clothes. One of the purposes of work release is to make it possible for you to accumulate savings before your release on parole, in the hope that this will make your return to the community easier.

Incarcerated people are expected to secure their own employment.³⁶ Work release is by far the most popular temporary release program. This popularity is shown in both the number of applications and the number of incarcerated people who are approved. In 2018, work release figures show 23,611 applications were received, and 1,154 incarcerated people were approved.³⁷ To participate in this program, you must be physically, mentally, and emotionally capable of finding and keeping a steady job. You must also satisfy the other temporary release eligibility requirements outlined below in Part C.³⁸

(b) Educational Leave

The educational leave program allows incarcerated people to leave a facility for up to fourteen hours in any day to attend school or vocational training. Before you can apply for an academic college release program in New York City, Long Island, Westchester, or Rockland County you must have completed six semester hours of college level study with a passing grade. You must also have applied to a college within commuting distance of a participating facility. However, you do not have to complete six credit hours of college level study to participate in an educational release program from an upstate correctional facility or in a vocational training program upstate or in the New York metropolitan area. For either program, you must submit your temporary release application to the facility TRC by July for the fall semester, November for the spring semester, and April for the summer semester.

Educational leave is one of the rarest of the temporary release programs. In 2018, for example, only ten incarcerated people applied, and no one was approved.³⁹ This should not discourage you from applying if you are qualified, but you should be aware that it may be difficult to get.

If you are approved to participate in an educational release program and are transferred to a correctional facility in New York City to take part in such a program, but your application for admission is rejected by the college, you will be considered approved for the work release program as long as you are physically capable of keeping a job.⁴⁰

(c) Community Services Program

As described in Part B(1)(b) above, the community services program allows incarcerated people to leave the facility for up to fourteen hours a day in order to participate in religious services, athletic events, volunteer work, or cultural events not offered at the facility. An example of the volunteer work that is available is the work done by incarcerated people in Fishkill. They commute to the surrounding areas and work with community organizations on projects like arts festivals and the Special

36. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(d)(2) (2020) (discussing procedures for those prisoners granted work release to search for a job and the support a correction counselor or temporary release parole officer must give to those prisoners).

37. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 16 (2018), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

38. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1(a) (2019).

39. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 16 (2018), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

40. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1(b) (2019).

Olympics.⁴¹ The advantage of participating in the continuous community services program is that once accepted, you will not have to reapply in order to get released. That is, so long as your disciplinary record remains the same, you will be able to leave your facility for up to fourteen hours a day, week after week. The short-term program has fewer benefits (for example, you can only leave the facility for a maximum of seven days at a time before reapplying for temporary release privileges). But, as discussed in Part C below, it has less strict requirements.⁴² The short-term version of this program is almost never used. Statistics for 2018 show that not a single incarcerated person applied for it. Fifty incarcerated people did apply for the continuous version in that year. One of those applicants was approved.⁴³

(d) Industrial Training Leave

This program allows an eligible incarcerated person to leave the facility for up to fourteen hours in any day to participate in an industrial training program. An industrial training program assigns an incarcerated person to the supervision of a federal, state, county, or local government employee, who is not a corrections officer, to help that employee in performing his job.⁴⁴ You must have either a high school diploma or a GED to qualify for this program.⁴⁵

Currently the only location with industrial training programs is the Hudson Correctional Facility.⁴⁶ The incarcerated people participating in this program work at the DOCS warehouses located in Menands.⁴⁷ Incarcerated people accepted into this program will work and learn how to take inventory, complete bills of lading, operate forklifts, and repair furniture. Others will work in the office learning business procedures.⁴⁸ This program allows incarcerated people to develop good work habits, to acquire job skills and become familiar with the distribution industry that can be a great help after release from prison.⁴⁹

4. Continuous Temporary Release Procedures

In order to qualify for a continuous temporary release, you must first apply and be approved at the facility level. If you are approved, you may be transferred to a different correctional facility that has the temporary release program you applied to. When you arrive at the new facility, you will be

41. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 7 (2018), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

42. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1(c) (2019).

43. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 16 (2018), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Feb. 28, 2020).

44. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1(d) (2019).

45. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM, available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/industrial-training-program> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

46. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM, available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/industrial-training-program> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

47. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM, available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/industrial-training-program> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020); see also Corcraft Products, available at <http://www.corcraft.org/> (last visited Feb. 28, 2020).

48. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM, available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/industrial-training-program> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020); NEW YORK STATE DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM: 2018 ANNUAL REPORT 7 (2018), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Jun. 27, 2020).

49. New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Temporary Release Program: 2013 Annual Report 8 (2014), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/09/TempReleaseProgram2018.pdf> (last visited Feb. 28, 2020).

interviewed by a corrections counselor and a temporary release parole officer. You will participate in an orientation program that will introduce you to the facility and to the program.⁵⁰

If you have no money when you arrive at the program facility, prison administrators may give you part of your salary in advance. You can use the advanced money to cover the costs of your job search, tuition or related expenses, transportation costs for a weekend furlough, or an emergency leave of absence. You must repay the advanced money as soon as possible. Incarcerated people in a work release program will earn money. All other incarcerated people may receive an allowance, or the equivalent, provided they perform their institutional duties well. All the money you make while you are in a continuous temporary release program must be given to the facility processing officer to be deposited into your account. If you are in a work or educational release program, you must pay for all expenses related to participation in that program. If you do not have money or other educational funds (like a scholarship), you will not be allowed to enroll in college.⁵¹

Just as with short-term temporary release programs, you must have a photo identification card and a signed "Memorandum of Agreement." You must carry the identification card at all times.⁵²

There are many restrictions on the types of jobs you may take. If you are accepted into a work release program, the facility will help you determine what job you may accept. If necessary, you may be granted an eight-hour, non-continuous job search furlough. You may be removed from the program if you have not found employment within six weeks after orientation and the TRC decides you are unwilling or unable to secure a job.⁵³

5. Family Reunion Program

If you do not qualify for either the leave of absence for funeral/deathbed visits, or the furlough family-ties programs, you may still have another chance to visit your family. The Family Reunion Program allows some incarcerated people and their families to meet privately for an extended period of time.⁵⁴ This program has nothing to do with the temporary release program. It is part of visitation. It is only available if you are not eligible for the temporary release program. You may apply if your location offers the program.⁵⁵ Twenty-two locations currently offer the program: Albion, Attica, Auburn, Bedford Hills, Clinton, Collins, Downstate, Eastern, Elmira, Fishkill, Great Meadow, Green Haven, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Southport, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Washington, Wende and Woodbourne.⁵⁶

The rules state that to be eligible, you:

- (1) Must have been in the department's custody for at least six months, must be living for at least thirty days at the facility that offers the program;⁵⁷ and
- (2) Must have shown good behavior, and have not recently had any major bad behavior problems, nor a long history of bad behavior.⁵⁸

You must also maintain good behavior while applying and visiting.⁵⁹ Further, you are not eligible for the Family Reunion Program if you:

- (1) Are eligible for the Temporary Release Program, unless your application for temporary release has been denied;
- (2) Require more security than allowed at the program site;

50. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(b)(2) (2019).

51. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(f)(1)(ii) (1999).

52. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(c)(8) (1999).

53. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.2(d)(2)(vi) (1999).

54. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.1 (2013).

55. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2 (2013).

56. New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Family Reunion Program, available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/family-reunion-program> (last visited Feb. 29, 2020).

57. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2(a)(1) (2013).

58. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2(a)(2) (2013).

59. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2(a)(2) (2013).

- (3) Are assigned to special housing for bad behavior; or
- (4) Have violated the Family Reunion Program rules within six months from the date of the bad behavior hearing finding.⁶⁰

Applicants who have violated Family Reunion Program rules in the past must be approved and reviewed by the Central Office.⁶¹ For more information about which family members may participate in the program, the procedures for applying, and the instructions for visiting, please see N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 220.

C. Eligibility Requirements for Temporary Release Programs

If you were ever convicted of any of the following offenses, you are ineligible for temporary release:

- (1) Escape—first, second, or third degree;
- (2) Absconding—first or second degree; and
- (3) Absconding from furlough or from a community treatment facility.⁶²

If you are currently serving a sentence for one of these crimes, you are ineligible for temporary release:

- (1) Criminally negligent homicide;
- (2) Vehicular manslaughter—first or second degree;
- (3) Manslaughter—first or second degree;
- (4) Aggravated manslaughter—first or second degree;
- (5) Murder—first or second degree;
- (6) Aggravated murder;
- (7) Abortion—first or second degree;
- (8) Self-abortion—first or second degree;
- (9) Issuing abortifacient articles;
- (10) Sexual misconduct;
- (11) Rape—first, second, or third degree;
- (12) Criminal sexual act—first, second, or third degree;
- (13) Forcible touching;
- (14) Persistent sexual abuse;
- (15) Sexual abuse—first, second, or third degree;
- (16) Aggravated sexual abuse—first, second, third, or fourth degree;
- (17) Course of sexual conduct against a child—first or second degree;
- (18) Female genital mutilation;
- (19) Facilitating a sex offense with a controlled substance;
- (20) Sexually motivated felony;
- (21) Predatory sexual assault;
- (22) Predatory sexual assault also against a child;
- (23) Aggravated harassment of an employee by an inmate;
- (24) Incest—first, second, or third degree;
- (25) Use of a child in a sexual performance;
- (26) Promoting or possessing an obscene sexual performance by a child;
- (27) Promoting or possessing a sexual performance by a child;
- (28) Attempting to get or providing support for an act of terrorism—first or second degree;
- (29) Making a terrorism threat;
- (30) Committing an act of terrorism;
- (31) Hindering prosecution of terrorism—first or second degree;

60. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2(b)(1)–(4) (2013).

61. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 220.2(b)(4) (2013).

62. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(2)(i) (2018). “Absconding” refers to failing to report to your parole officer or moving without informing your parole officer.

(32) Criminal possession of a chemical weapon or biological weapon—first, second, or third degree;

(33) Criminal use of a chemical weapon or biological weapon—first, second, or third degree⁶³

Also, you will not be eligible for temporary release if your conviction was for a crime that involved either the use or threatened use of a deadly weapon or a dangerous instrument, or the crime involved causing someone serious physical injury.⁶⁴ However, if you can show the Temporary Release Committee Chairperson a document from the court or Office of the District Attorney that the crime you were convicted of did not include: “being armed with, the use of or threatened use of, or the possession with the intent to use unlawfully against another of, a deadly weapon or a dangerous instrument or the infliction of a serious physical injury as defined in the Penal Law,” you will be eligible for temporary release.”⁶⁵

You are eligible to participate in temporary release programs (short-term or continuous) only if you are within twenty-four months of your next scheduled appearance before the parole board.⁶⁶ If you have been held by the parole board, you must be within twenty-four months of your parole date (except for leaves of absence).⁶⁷ If you are serving an indeterminate sentence, you will be considered eligible for temporary release if you have served the minimum period of imprisonment set by either the court or the parole board.⁶⁸

You will not be eligible for a temporary release program if:

- (1) You have an outstanding warrant;⁶⁹
- (2) You have been committed to a local, state, out-of-state, or federal jurisdiction currently or in the past;⁷⁰
- (3) You have an outstanding charge;⁷¹

63. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(2)(ii) (2018).

64. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(1)(iii) (2018).

65. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(1)(iii) (2018).

66. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 851(2) (McKinney 2014).

67. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(1)(i) (2018).

68. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 851(2) (McKinney 2014).

69. Any of the following warrants (from any jurisdiction) will make you ineligible: (1) family court warrant (except alimony, child support, or paternity); (2) out-of-state or federal criminal detainer; (3) felony arrest warrant for a crime which is not barred by the statute of limitations, as provided by N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW, § 30.10; (4) misdemeanor arrest warrant for a crime committed on or after your current conviction, and which is not barred by the statute of limitations, as provided by N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW, § 30.10; (5) bench warrant; (6) probation violation warrant in or out of state, or out-of-state parole warrant; (7) immigration warrant; (8) military warrant; (9) securing order; or (10) if there is an indication of an active warrant and the warrant has not been filed at the facility, the interviewer must contact the issuing agency to determine the status of the warrant. If no response is received within 30 days, the warrant will be considered inactive, and the prisoner will not be barred from temporary release. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(7)(i)(a)–(j) (2018).

70. You will be eligible, however, if the sentencing court has indicated in writing that there is no objection to your being in a temporary release program. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 1900.4(c)(7)(ii)(a)–(c) (2018).

71. Your interviewer must write to the correct court to make sure that the charge is still outstanding. If the court does not reply within thirty days, it will be assumed that the charge is no longer outstanding. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(7)(iii)(c) (2018).

- (4) You are the subject of a Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE)⁷² deportation proceeding;⁷³
- (5) You were eligible for the shock incarceration program and either chose not to participate or failed to complete it;⁷⁴ or
- (6) In the eight weeks before your application, you engaged in particularly bad behavior.⁷⁵

Repeat parole violators (“RPVs”) must serve at least six months after their most recent return before they can apply for temporary release.⁷⁶

Each incarcerated person receives a certain number of points depending on his criminal history and institutional behavior. You must meet the minimum number of points needed for any program you want to do. The scoring system will be explained in Part D(2)(a) below. You will not have to worry about how many points you have if you were only convicted as a youthful offender. Youthful offenders are treated as if they have scored the right number of points that each program needs. Youthful offenders will simply appear before the TRC. They will then make the decision.⁷⁷

Temporary release is a privilege. Approval can be taken away at any time. To remain approved, you must show continuing good behavior from the time conditional approval is given until the time you begin the period of temporary release. Conditional approval will be taken away if:

- (1) After the conditional approval, you are found guilty at a disciplinary or superintendent’s hearing;
- (2) You do not do well in your program; or
- (3) If the TRC finds out something very negative about you.

If your conditional approval has been taken away, you may re-apply right away unless you have recently shown particularly bad behavior. In that case, you may not re-apply for eight weeks. If your eligibility for temporary release changes, your new application will be processed as if it were the first one you had submitted.⁷⁸

If you are approved for a continuous temporary release program, you are also approved for all other temporary release programs. This approval is at the will of the TRC and facility superintendent.⁷⁹ This means that if you have been approved for any continuous program (like a continuous educational release program) and you wish to do a different program, there is no formal way to change programs. Once you have been approved for one continuous release program, you may be eligible for a different one as long as the TRC and the superintendent agree.⁸⁰

72. ICE is the agency formally known as the Immigration and Naturalization Service or INS. ICE is the main investigative arm of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and the second largest investigative agency in the federal government. It is mainly responsible for identifying, investigating, and getting rid of weaknesses having to do with the nation's border, economic, transportation, and infrastructure security. See the JLM Supplement on Immigration and Consular Access for more information on immigration agencies.

73. You will not be considered for temporary release if ICE shows: (1) that deportation proceedings are underway; (2) a show cause order for deportation has been issued; and (3) there is an actual ICE warrant on file. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(7)(iii)(d)(3) (2018). Your prison facility must write to ICE asking it about your alien status. If ICE does not respond within thirty days, your facility will assume that ICE does not plan to deport you. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(7)(iii)(d)(2) (2018).

74. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(6) (2018).

75. Serious bad behavior problems include all those that make you lose good-time credit, lead to being placed in special housing unit (“SHU”), or lead to being placed in keep lock for more than 30 days. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(8) (2018).

76. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(10)(iii) (2018).

77. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(12) (2018).

78. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(d)(6) (2012).

79. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(d)(9) (2012).

80. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(d)(9) (2012).

D. How to Apply for Temporary Release Programs

1. Application Procedures

To participate in a temporary release program, ask your counselor or parole officer for information about the types of programs your facility offers. Also, ask for a form called the “Notification to the TRC.” When you complete this form, you must indicate the type of program you are applying to and explain your reasons for applying. If you are physically unable to submit your application, the facility health services director or other staff person may submit the application for you.⁸¹ You should be as specific as possible in explaining what type of release you are seeking and why that particular program fits your needs and qualifications. You should apply as early as possible because the application process takes a while.

If your application is denied, you must wait at least eight weeks from the date it was turned down before re-applying for the same type of release.⁸² The eight-week waiting period does not apply to leaves of absence.⁸³

2. How the Department Handles Applications

(a) The Point System

If you are not a youthful offender (the point system does not apply to youthful offenders),⁸⁴ you must have a certain number of points to qualify for a particular program, even after you have met all the other requirements. The point system was developed to provide a standard way to measure your willingness to comply with the rules of temporary release. The system rewards good behavior in prison and in prison programs. It is also partly based on your criminal history and the crime for which you have been convicted. Still, if you have a good disciplinary record in prison, or if you are granted a temporary release and follow the rules, your chances of getting a release in the future are better.

After you have filled out your application, it will go to an interviewer. The interviewer will score the application. There are eleven items in the point system scoring. Six are based on your criminal history, and five are based on your behavior while in prison.⁸⁵ At the end of Part D(2)(a) of this Chapter, there is a chart that summarizes this point system and the points that may be gained or lost. You can use this chart to easily add up your score. However, it is important to read through these more detailed explanations first because the chart does not include every detail. Pay special attention to the time periods for each section, as some items extend as far back as ten years while others only apply to things that have happened in the last year. The more points you have, the better.

The items in the point system are scored as follows:

(i) Criminal History⁸⁶

a. Previous Sentences⁸⁷

You will get one point (+1) if, in the ten years before you started your current sentence, you were not in prison at all because of a conviction. You will get zero points (0) if in the last ten years you were in prison for only misdemeanor or youthful offender convictions. You will lose one point (-1) if in the last ten years you were in prison because of a felony conviction. If you were sentenced to time served, this counts as incarceration after adjudication.

81. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(a) (2018).

82. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(11) (2018).

83. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(11) (2018).

84. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(c)(12) (2018).

85. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e) (2018).

86. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1) (2018).

87. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(i) (2018).

b. Number of Felony Convictions⁸⁸

If you were convicted of a felony before or during your current prison sentence, you will get fewer points. It will be harder for your application to be approved. If the sentence you are serving is your only felony conviction in the last ten years, you will get two points (+2). If, during the last ten years, you were convicted of only one other felony, you will get zero points (0). If on top of your current conviction and that one other conviction, you have also been arrested for any other felonies, and those arrests have ended in conviction, even if you were convicted of these other felonies while you are serving your current sentence, you will lose two points (-2). If you have never previously been convicted of a felony and were convicted of your only felony during your current prison sentence, you will get zero points (0). If you were convicted of two or more felonies during your current prison sentence, you will lose two points (-2).

c. Number of Misdemeanor Convictions⁸⁹

If you were convicted of a misdemeanor before or during your current prison sentence, you will get fewer points. It will be harder for your application to be approved. If you were not convicted of a misdemeanor in the last ten years, you will get one point (+1). If you were convicted of three or fewer than three misdemeanors in the last ten years, including the one you are serving time for now, you will get zero points (0). If you were convicted of four or more misdemeanors in the last ten years, including the one you are serving time for now, you will lose one point (-1). If you were convicted of your first misdemeanor during the sentence you are serving, you will get zero points (0).

d. Outstanding Warrants⁹⁰

If you have outstanding warrants, you will get fewer points. It will be harder for your application to be approved. You will get two points (+2) if you have no outstanding warrants. You will get zero points (0) if you have one or more outstanding criminal warrants. A criminal warrant does not include alimony, child support, or a paternity warrant. If you can clearly show that the outstanding warrant against you was cleared because there was no evidence or there was a mistake, then that warrant will not count against you.

e. Parole or Probation Violations⁹¹

If in the last ten years, or after you started your current prison sentence, your parole or probation was never revoked because of a technical violation or because you were arrested, you failed to report to your Parole Officer, or you moved without telling your Parole Officer ("abscondance"), you will get two points (+2). If your parole or probation was revoked one or more times, you will get zero points (0).

f. Nature of Prior, Current, and Subsequent Convictions⁹²

This category is about the kind of crimes you committed in the last ten years. The more serious the crime, the more points you will lose. If you are not in prison for any of the crimes listed below, you will get zero points (0). In this point system, attempted crimes are counted the same as completed crimes. If you have been convicted of more than one of these crimes, you will be scored according to the most serious of them. If you also were convicted as a youthful offender, that conviction will not be included in the point score.

88. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(ii) (2018).

89. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(iii) (2018).

90. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(iv) (2018).

91. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(v) (2018).

92. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1)(vi) (2018).

You will lose six points (-6) if you were convicted of any of the following crimes in the last ten years: murder—first or second degree; kidnapping—first or second degree; rape—first, second, or third degree; sodomy—first, second, or third degree; sexual abuse—first degree; incest; use of a child in sexual performance; or promoting a sexual performance by a child (including an obscene sexual performance).

You will lose four points (-4) if you were convicted of any of the following in the last ten years: assault—first degree; manslaughter—first or second degree; arson—first or second degree; burglary—first degree; robbery—first degree; sexual misconduct; sexual abuse—second or third degree; or endangering the welfare of a child.

You will lose two points (-2) if in the last ten years you were convicted of any of the following: criminal trespass—first degree; robbery—second or third degree; criminally negligent homicide; assault—second or third degree; possession of firearms and other dangerous weapons; menacing; reckless endangerment—first degree; unlawful imprisonment; coercion—first degree; riot—first degree; arson—third or fourth degree; vehicular assault; or vehicular manslaughter.

If you have been convicted of more than one of these crimes during the last ten years, then you will lose points only for the most serious one. So if you have been convicted of kidnapping (-6) and vehicular assault (-2), you will only lose six points (-6) in total.

(ii) Institutional Behavior⁹³

Participation months are used to add up the score that describes your behavior in prison. A participation month is a thirty-day period of regular participation. The participation month only counts if you did it within the last two years before you apply for temporary release. Regular participation means that you are taking part in the activity at least once either in the morning, afternoon, or evening, for five days per week and for four weeks per month. The participation month must be in either a program or a work assignment. It must be supervised by a certified instructor or teacher. If you are in involuntary protective custody ("IPC"), and you have no chance to do a work assignment or participate in any programs, you will get one point (+1) for every six months you spent in IPC during the last two years before you apply for temporary release.

a. Program Participation I⁹⁴

In this category, you can get as many as sixteen points (+16), but no more than sixteen points, for participating in programs and/or work assignments. For each three-month period, you can get one point (+1) for doing a work assignment and one point (+1) for doing a program, for a total of two points (+2) for the three months.

b. Program Participation II⁹⁵

In this category, you can get only one point (+1). You can only get this extra point if you have been in prison for longer than twenty-four months. You can get this extra point if you did a program or a work assignment for eight months in the twenty-five to thirty-six months leading up to your application for temporary release. In other words, you get up to sixteen points for the programs and/or work assignments you did in the two-years before you apply for temporary release (Program Participation I). You only get one extra point for anything you did before these two years (Program Participation II).

c. Discipline I⁹⁶

In this category, the longer you go with little or no disciplinary proceedings, the more points you get and the more likely it is that your application will be approved. You can get no more than four

93. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2) (2018).

94. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2)(i) (2018).

95. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2)(ii) (2018).

96. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2)(iii) (2018).

points (+4) in this category. The disciplinary proceeding decisions that count against you are if you lose your privileges for fourteen days or more, or if you are put into special housing or keeplock. Room and dorm restrictions count as keeplock. If you did not have any of these disciplinary proceeding decisions in the last three months before you apply for temporary release, you will get one point (+1). If you had one or none of these disciplinary proceeding decisions in the last six months, you will get one point (+1). If you had two or fewer decisions in the last nine months, you will get one point (+1). If you had three or fewer decisions in the last twelve months, you will get one point (+1).

d. Discipline II⁹⁷

In this category, you can only get one point. You can get this extra point only if you have been in prison for longer than twenty-four months. If you had three or fewer disciplinary proceedings in the twelve to twenty-four months before your application, you get one point (+1). The types of disciplinary proceedings that count are the same as above.

e. Temporary Release Record⁹⁸

This section only applies if you were previously on temporary release. If you were convicted or arrested for a crime while on temporary release in the past year, you will lose six points (-6). If you were removed from work release or educational leave for disciplinary reasons other than re-arrest in the last year, you will lose three points (-3). If you were convicted or arrested while on temporary release in the twelve to twenty-four months before your application, you will lose three points (-3). If you returned late or under the influence of drugs or alcohol, or broke any temporary release program rules in the last six months, you will lose two points (-2). If you successfully finished your last temporary release and it was within the last year, you will gain two points (+2). If your two most recent releases in the last year were successful, you will get four points (+4).

You will get zero points (0) if: none of the above applies to you; your last release was over a year ago, or if it was an escorted or supervised group activity; or you have had your parole revoked since your last successful participation in temporary release.

Anyone found to be an absconder (failing to report or moving without telling your Parole Officer) will not be approved for temporary release.

(iii) Total Score⁹⁹

After you have finished scoring, you should add twenty-six points (+26) to your score to make sure that your score is not negative.¹⁰⁰ You need thirty points (30) to participate in a short-term temporary release program.¹⁰¹ You need thirty-two points (32) to participate in a continuous program.¹⁰² So, while you could participate for one day in a community service program with a score of thirty, a score of thirty-two lets you participate on a daily basis.¹⁰³

However, having the right number of points is only a requirement. Just because you have scored at least thirty points (30) does not mean that you automatically get the release. Having enough points only means that you can meet with the interviewer.¹⁰⁴

97. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2)(iv) (2018).

98. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2)(v) (2018).

99. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(3) (2018).

100. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(3)(i) (2018).

101. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1901.1(a) (2012).

102. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1903.1(c), (d) (2020) (requiring 32 points for participation in community services leave program and industrial training leave program).

103. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.3(b) (2020).

104. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(f) (2020).

a. Point System Chart

As you go through this chart, write the points that apply to you in the right-hand column. Remember to refer back to the previous sections if you do not understand the short-hand explanations included here. This chart is meant to make the process of calculating your own score faster and easier. It is not supposed to replace the in-depth explanations in Part D(2)(a)(iv) and Part D(2)(a)(v) of this Chapter.

(iv) Criminal History¹⁰⁵

	Possible Points available	Your Point subtotal per each category
Previous Sentences (last ten years only)
No prior incarceration due to conviction	+1
Prior incarceration due to misdemeanor or youthful offense only	0
Incarcerated due to a felony conviction	-1
Number of Felony Convictions (last ten years only)
Current sentence is your only felony conviction	+2
First felony conviction was for act committed during your current incarceration	0
One previous felony conviction	0
Two or more felony convictions	-2
Number of Misdemeanor Convictions (last ten years only)
No misdemeanor convictions	+1
Three or fewer misdemeanor convictions, including your current sentence	0
First misdemeanor conviction was for an act committed during your current incarceration	0
Four or more misdemeanor convictions	-1
Outstanding Warrants
No outstanding warrants	+2
One or more outstanding warrants	0
Previous Arrests (last ten years only)
You have never had parole or probation revoked due to re-arrest, absconding, or violating program rules	+2
You have had parole or probation revoked one or more times	0
Nature of Convictions (last ten years only; apply only the most severe)
Convicted of murder (1 st or 2 nd degree), kidnapping (1 st or 2 nd degree), rape (1 st , 2 nd , or 3 rd degree), sodomy (1 st , 2 nd , or 3 rd degree), sexual abuse (1 st degree), incest, use of a child in a sexual performance, or promoting a sexual performance by a child (including an obscene sexual performance)	-6
Convicted of assault (1 st degree), manslaughter (1 st or 2 nd degree), arson (1 st or 2 nd degree), burglary (1 st degree), robbery (1 st degree), sexual misconduct or sexual abuse (2 nd or 3 rd degree), or endangering the welfare of a child	-4

105. The following point computations for Criminal History can be found at: N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(1) (2020).

Convicted of criminal trespass (1 st degree), robbery (2 nd or 3 rd degree), criminally negligent homicide, assault (2 nd or 3 rd degree), possession of firearms and other dangerous weapons, menacing, reckless endangerment (1 st degree), unlawful imprisonment, coercion (1 st degree), riot (1 st degree), arson (3 rd or 4 th degree), vehicular assault, or vehicular manslaughter	-2
WRITE YOUR TOTAL HERE FOR (i) Criminal History:

(v) Institutional Behavior¹⁰⁶

Program Participation I (last two years only)	Points Available	Your Points
Each three-month period of participation in a work assignment (max. of +2)	+1
Each three-month period of participation in a program (max. of +2)	+1
Each six months in involuntary protective custody (IPC) in which you have not had the chance to participate in a program or work assignment	+1
Program Participation II
Eight months of participation in a program or work assignment in the twenty-five to thirty-six-month period prior to application	+1
Discipline I (max. of +4)
No disciplinary proceedings in the last three months	+1
One or no disciplinary proceedings in the last six months	+1
Two or fewer disciplinary proceedings in the last nine months	+1
Three or fewer proceedings over the last twelve months	+1
Discipline II
Three or fewer disciplinary proceedings in the twelve to twenty-four months prior to application	+1
Temporary Release Record
Convicted or arrested for crime while on temporary release during the last year	-6
Convicted or arrested for a crime while on temporary release during the thirteen to twenty-four-month period prior to application	-3
Removed from work release or educational leave during the last year for other disciplinary reasons	-3
Returned late or under the influence or violated any other temporary release rules within the last six months	-2
Successfully completed your last temporary release within the last year	+2
Successfully completed your last two temporary releases within the last year	+4
None of the above apply	0
WRITE YOUR TOTAL HERE FOR (ii) Institutional Behavior:
GRAND TOTAL after combining (i) Criminal History; (ii) Institutional Behavior; and an additional +26 points:

Once you have added up the scores from both the Criminal History and Institutional Behavior sections of the chart, add another twenty-six points (+26) to find your GRAND TOTAL score. Remember that short-release programs require thirty points (30), and continuous programs require a score of thirty-two points (32). Remember also that no score alone guarantees that your application will be granted.

106. The following point computations for Institutional Behavior can be found at: N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(e)(2) (2020).

(b) Department Procedures for Considering Your Application

After scoring the application, the interviewer will conduct a preliminary review.¹⁰⁷ The interviewer will review the information in your application and determine if you are eligible based on your point score, your crime, and any other factors that were discussed in Part C above.¹⁰⁸ After the interview, you will have two work days to challenge the information used in the point score.¹⁰⁹ Once any challenges have been resolved, the interviewer will refer the scored application to the Temporary Release Committee ("TRC") chairperson.¹¹⁰ See Part E of this Chapter on appeals for further information on challenging scoring information.

The TRC chairperson will review your file and check to see if you have either low-point status or are included in a special review category.¹¹¹ If you are considered a low-point incarcerated person, you may be considered for release by the TRC when one of the following conditions applies:

- (1) You have been given community preparation open date status by the parole board, and central office approval has been obtained;
- (2) You are a graduate of the shock incarceration program;
- (3) You are a graduate of the CASAT annex program; or
- (4) You are a first felony offender, who legally would have been eligible to get a sentence of probation instead of the sentence of imprisonment that was actually imposed.¹¹²

You will be notified of your official point score, the range into which it falls, and when you will appear before the TRC.¹¹³ If you are in either the regular consideration or low-point range, the TRC will interview you and then decide whether or not to approve your application.¹¹⁴

If you receive a score of forty (40) or more, your application for furlough (temporary release) will automatically be forwarded to the superintendent (without a TRC recommendation) for review as long as:

- (1) You are not serving a sentence for a crime involving infliction of serious physical injury upon another, a sex offense involving forcible compulsion, or any other offense involving the use or threatened use of a deadly weapon;
- (2) You are not designated as a CMC (central monitoring case);
- (3) Yours is not a "low-O.D. case" (defined in Part D(2)(d) below); and
- (4) You are not in a special review category (see Part D(2)(d) below).¹¹⁵

Once your application has gone to the TRC and has been reviewed, the TRC will schedule a personal interview with you. After the committee members have met with you, they will approve or deny your application. At least two of the three committee members must support a decision to approve. In making its decision, the TRC must look at your score on the eleven items in the point system, your interview, and the other factors used to evaluate incarcerated people. These other factors include recommendations of the professional staff. The committee can also consider aspects of your record that are not addressed by the point system. These other aspects include the quality of your performance in programs or on work assignment. In addition, the TRC must consider what it sees as

107. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(g) (2020).

108. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(b)–(c) (2020).

109. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(i) (2020).

110. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(i) (2020).

111. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(j) (2020).

112. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(j)(1)(i)–(iv) (2020).

113. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(k) (2020).

114. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 1900.4(j)(3), (l) (2020).

115. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(j)(4) (2020).

your ability to benefit from participating in temporary release against any risk to the community or program from your participation.¹¹⁶

All applications for temporary release submitted to the TRC will be forwarded to the superintendent for review. Each application will be accompanied by either:

- (1) A statement of reasons for its denial by the TRC, or
- (2) A memo setting out the proposed temporary release program, stating the bounds of confinement, and including any other relevant information.

If the superintendent rejects the application or rejects the specific program that the TRC approved, he or she must give reasons for doing so in writing. You will get a copy of the reasons. Another copy will go to the Central Office for immediate review by the Commissioner. You will not have to make any other appeals. The Commissioner will tell you whether he accepts the superintendent's decision.¹¹⁷ If you are denied, see Part E below for legal remedies that may be available to you.

(c) Applications that Require Central Office Approval

The Central Office must review and approve all applications for temporary release.¹¹⁸ There are several categories that your application might fall under. One of these categories requires special review. Special review means that the Commissioner doesn't need to approve those applications. The Director of temporary release will make the final decision.¹¹⁹ The first application category is the statutory review category. This category includes incarcerated people serving time for:

- (1) Possession, use, or threatened use of a weapon;
- (2) A case resulting in prolonged physical injury, disability, or death of the victim; or
- (3) A sexual offense involving force.¹²⁰

The Commissioner gives final approval for this category of applications.¹²¹

The second category of application is "central monitoring cases" ("CMCs"). Generally, central monitoring cases are incarcerated people convicted of sophisticated or highly publicized criminal activity, whose release would pose special monitoring problems.¹²² Incarcerated people found to be CMCs require approval of the Commissioner for correctional facilities.¹²³

Incarcerated people considered to have a "low-O.D." must also have the Commissioner approve their applications. Low-O.D. cases are those cases where incarcerated people receive the lowest point score possible, but are given an O.D. or community preparation open date status by the parole board. If the parole board has given you O.D. status, you will have a better chance of getting approval, even though your point score is the lowest possible.¹²⁴

The fourth group of incarcerated people requiring Central Office approval is the Special Review category. This category includes incarcerated people who have:

- (1) Any convictions for arson;
- (2) Any convictions for sex-related felonies;
- (3) Any convictions for conspiracy, criminal facilitation, or criminal solicitation in a statutory case;
- (4) Three or more felonies (including any youthful offender adjudications);

116. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(l)(1)–(5) (2020).

117. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(m) (2020).

118. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n) (2020).

119. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n)(1) (2020).

120. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n)(1) (2020).

121. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n) (2020).

122. See Pugliese v. Nelson, 617 F.2d 916, 918–919 (2d Cir. 1980) (discussing central monitoring cases); see also In re Smith v. Goord, 43 A.D.3d 1236, 1237, 843 N.Y.S.2d 468, 469 (3d Dept. 2007) (holding petitioner's designation as CMC was not arbitrary or capricious based on the nature of his crimes because he was convicted of a robbery that involved a significant amount of cash).

123. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n)(2) (2020).

124. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(j)(1)(i), (n)(3) (2020).

- (5) Any parole or temporary release violations;
- (6) A history of mental instability;
- (7) Any kidnapping convictions; or
- (8) Victim(s) or bystander(s) who were physically injured as a result of the instant offense, and the instant offense doesn't fall under the statutory review category discussed above.¹²⁵

If you fall into any of these categories, your chances of being granted temporary release are much lower. Your entire application must be reviewed by the Central Office and approved by the Commissioner¹²⁶ (except for Special Review applications, which only need final approval from the Director of Temporary Release).¹²⁷ In general, the more people who review your application, the less likely you are to receive approval.

E. What to Do if Your Temporary Release Application Is Denied or Revoked

1. Denial of Temporary Release

(a) Appeals Within the Department

You can appeal your point score if the interviewer disqualified you because he added up your point score incorrectly. The interviewer can also be disqualified if the information he used was wrong. You can also appeal the decision of the TRC or the decision of the Central Review Office. To appeal your point score or the TRC's decision, you must submit Form 4145 and any other relevant information to the director of central office temporary release programs. You must submit this within ten working days of the date that the notice of denial of your application was sent. The director must receive your completed appeal within thirty days of the denial. If your appeal application is made within the thirty-day limit, the chairperson will send your appeal package to the Central Office. The appeal package will include any information not available in the Central Office files.¹²⁸ The Central Office reviewer will notify you and the TRC of his findings.¹²⁹

If you think the disapproval by the Central Review Office was unfair or unreasonable, you may appeal the decision. You can appeal by applying to the Director of the Central Office to review your case. You should only do this when TRC accepted your application, but then the Central Office denies it. As explained in Part D(2)(b) above, all denials by the superintendent must be referred directly to the Central Office for an automatic Commissioner review. You do not have to do anything in this case.¹³⁰

If the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner denies your application at any point in the proceeding, your administrative remedies are exhausted, and you cannot appeal this decision.¹³¹ If your case has been designated a "central monitoring case" ("CMC"), you may only appeal by using existing departmental policy. Central Office temporary release staff do not handle CMC appeals.¹³²

You cannot re-apply for the same program until the appeals process on a prior application is complete. You may withdraw a pending appeal at any time.¹³³

(b) Other Forms of Review if Your Application is Denied

If your application is denied, you can appeal to the courts under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules ("C.P.L.R."). See JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative 125. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7 § 1900.4(n)(4)(i)-(viii) (2020).

126. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 1900.4(n)(1)–(3) (2020).

127. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n)(4) (2020).

128. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.4(n) (2020).

129. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6 (2020).

130. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6(a)(2), (c) (2020).

131. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6(c) (2020).

132. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6(e) (2020).

133. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6(f) (2020).

Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules” for guidance on appealing. However, New York courts have addressed this question often and now apply a test that makes it difficult for a claim to be successful. The Second Department has said that because participation in temporary release programs is a privilege and not a right, courts will only look at claims where either the temporary release committee violated a statutory requirement (such as failing to give you an interview if you have the right amount of points, or failing to inform you of the committee’s decision), or if the committee’s decision was affected by “irrationality, bordering on impropriety.”¹³⁴ Because the TRC has such enormous discretionary power, it is very difficult to convince a court that its decision was irrational and unfair. The TRC only has to say that it thinks you might pose a threat to society. The TRC could also say that it does not think you will work hard. The court will accept the TRC’s findings. If you have not yet participated in the temporary release program, you also do not have the right to challenge the legislature or executive’s decision to make you ineligible for temporary release. The legislature or executive’s decision is based upon the crime for which you were convicted.¹³⁵

However, it is possible to win, as seen in Lopez v. Coughlin.¹³⁶ In that case, an HIV-positive incarcerated person applied for work release. The TRC approved the application because the facility doctor, who was familiar with the incarcerated person’s condition, said his medical condition would not affect his ability to be on temporary release. The Central Office reversed and denied the application solely on the basis of the incarcerated person’s condition. The Albany County Supreme Court held that this was completely irrational since the doctor had already given his approval for temporary release. The court said that the Central Office’s findings “were based on generalizations and possibly inaccurate assumptions.” The court ordered the TRC to reevaluate its decision.¹³⁷

2. Revocation of Temporary Release

(a) How Your Temporary Release Can Be Revoked

The superintendent or director of your correctional institution upon recommendation of the TRC, the Commissioner of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, or the chairman of the board of parole may suspend or revoke your temporary release.¹³⁸ This suspension or revocation can be made at any time if the Superintendent or Director has information that:

- (1) Your continued participation in the program is not in the interest of community safety or goes against your best interests; or
- (2) Based on your conduct, there is a substantial likelihood that you cannot successfully complete the temporary release program.¹³⁹

Some factors that will be considered indicators that you are unsuited for temporary release include:

- (3) Arrests and/or convictions for crimes committed while participating in the program;
- (4) Absconding, or attempting to abscond, from the program;

134. Grant v. Temp. Release Comm., 209 A.D.2d 617, 617, 619 N.Y.S.2d 106, 106 (2d Dept. 1994) (citing Young v. Temp. Release Comm., 122 A.D.2d 606, 606, 505 N.Y.S.2d 279, 280 (4th Dept. 1986)).

135. See Lee v. Governor of N.Y., 87 F.3d 55, 59–60 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding no constitutional violation when the class of prisoners excluded from participation in programs based on their crime was expanded to include petitioners while they were incarcerated); see also Romer v. Morgenthau, 119 F. Supp. 2d 346, 358 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that prisoner did not have a liberty interest in participating in work release programs); In re Cody v. Pataki, 24 A.D.3d 1058, 1059, 805 N.Y.S.2d 726 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that prisoners have no right to compel Commissioner of Correctional Services to provide temporary release program).

136. Lopez v. Coughlin, 139 Misc. 2d 851, 529 N.Y.S.2d 247 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1988); see also Flaherty v. Coughlin, 713 F.2d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 1983) (reversing dismissal of prisoner’s claim because evidence suggested he may have been denied temporary release privileges in retaliation for filing a class action lawsuit challenging state prison policies).

137. Lopez v. Coughlin, 139 Misc. 2d 851, 854, 529 N.Y.S.2d 247, 249 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1988).

138. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.1(a) (2020).

139. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.1(b) (2020).

- (5) Violations of departmental, institutional, or temporary release program rules;
- (6) Threats made by you against yourself or others;
- (7) Threats made against you that require protective custody;
- (8) Changes in your physical or mental status that result in your inability to successfully complete the program;
- (9) Poor attitude on your part as shown by a failure to participate successfully;
- (10) Your lack of motivation;
- (11) Significant change in employment or student status;
- (12) Failure to get a job six weeks after orientation in a work release program;
- (13) Your refusal to repay the advance;
- (14) Your refusal to repay the weekly work release charge;
- (15) You have outstanding warrants or your immigration status changes;
- (16) Your presence in the community places you at risk.¹⁴⁰

Any employee of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision who is assigned to the facility of your confinement and has firsthand knowledge of your unsatisfactory or worsening progress in the temporary release program can help remove you from the program. The employee who thinks you are not doing well in your program may file a written statement to the Chairperson of the facility's TRC. This statement may request that the Temporary Release Committee to review your unsatisfactory or worsening adjustment to the program. The TRC will then evaluate your progress.¹⁴¹ If you have not been transferred from the temporary release facility because of disciplinary problems, the TRC will make a recommendation to the superintendent. This recommendation states whether you should continue in temporary release.¹⁴² The superintendent will then either approve or reject the recommendation of the TRC. If the superintendent approves the recommendation of removal from the program, your temporary release is revoked.¹⁴³

If your unsatisfactory progress appears to be caused by departmental, institutional, or temporary release rule violations, these rule violations must be referred to in either a disciplinary hearing or a superintendent's hearing. If you do something to be considered a security risk, you can be transferred to a more secure facility before the TRC has time to review the complaint.¹⁴⁴

If a temporary release participant is charged with misbehavior, the hearing disposition cannot recommend removal from the temporary release program as a disciplinary penalty. The TRC cannot use a report as a reason for recommending that you be removed from a temporary release program. However, the TRC can do this if you are found guilty at a disciplinary hearing.¹⁴⁵

(b) How to Appeal a Revocation of Your Temporary Release

Once you have been granted temporary release, you have a constitutionally protected interest in ensuring that your liberty is not deprived and that you are not re-incarcerated without fair procedures. That is, if you have not violated any rules, and your temporary release is still revoked, you may be protected under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. You may also be protected under the state laws governing your confinement. Due Process, under the Fourteenth Amendment, means that the government must follow certain procedures—including giving you notice and an opportunity to be heard—before it can take away your liberty earned through the temporary release program. You can be removed from the program only if the facility's temporary release administrators follow the required procedures. Note, however, that the Supreme Court's decision in Sandin v. Conner makes it rather difficult for you to prove that your removal from the

140. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.1(c)(1)–(14) (2020).

141. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(a) (2020).

142. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(a) (2020).

143. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 1904.2(i)–(k) (2020).

144. For a list of factors that are considered security risks, see N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(c) (2020).

145. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(g) (2020).

program has caused you harm that is “atypical” of what you should expect as an incarcerated person.¹⁴⁶ The Second Circuit, however, has held that temporary release programs and work release programs are liberty interests protected by the U.S. Constitution for New York State incarcerated people.¹⁴⁷

Unfortunately, the regulations governing temporary release leave much discretion to the facility’s temporary release administrators. They will be able to make many decisions as they see fit. These decisions will stand as long as they are considered fair and unbiased. If your temporary release is denied, you will only be entitled to the minimum due process requirements. The Dutchess County Supreme Court stated in Roman v. Ternullo that correctional facility superintendents were required to extend the procedural due process safeguards outlined by the Supreme Court in Wolff v. McDonnell and discussed in detail in the New York Code to proceedings regarding work release programs.¹⁴⁸ These requirements include a hearing, an electronic recording of the hearing, prior notice of the hearing, and a written statement of the decision made and the reasons relied on at the hearing.¹⁴⁹ If you are in a special housing unit or keeplock, there are also provisions made to assist you in your defense.¹⁵⁰ At the hearing, you are able to call witnesses, produce evidence and may be able to cross-examine adverse witnesses.¹⁵¹ The Second Circuit has applied the due process requirements set out by the Supreme Court to release revocation hearings.¹⁵² These requirements include:

- (1) written notice of the claimed violations of parole;
- (2) disclosure to the parolee of evidence against you;
- (3) opportunity to be heard in person and to present evidence;
- (4) the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses;
- (5) a “neutral and detached” hearing body such as a traditional parole board; and
- (6) a written statement by the fact-finders as to the evidence relied on and their reasons for revoking parole.¹⁵³

146. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486–87, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301–02, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431–32 (1995) (holding that a prisoner is not deprived of a liberty interest when he is removed from the general prison population and placed in segregated confinement for 30 days because discretionary discipline by prison officials in response to misconduct falls within the expected boundaries of the prisoner’s sentence).

147. See Anderson v. Recore, 446 F.3d 324, 328 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that a prisoner has a liberty interest in continuing his participation in his temporary release program); Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84–85 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that due process protections apply to the revocation of work release participation); Gutierrez v. Joy, 502 F. Supp. 2d 352, 357 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (affirming that the Second Circuit recognizes that due process protects a prisoner’s liberty interest in continued participation in temporary release programs).

148. Roman v. Ternullo, 81 Misc. 2d 1023, 1024–1025, 367 N.Y.S.2d 197, 198 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess Cnty. 1975); Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 563–566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2978–2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 955–957 (1974) (finding that due process safeguards applied to a prisoner’s interest in disciplinary proceedings); see also Marciano v. Goord, 38 A.D.3d 217, 218, 830 N.Y.S.2d 552, 553 (1st Dept. 2007) (discussing a prisoner’s due process rights and the requirements for removal of a prisoner from a temporary release program, including requirements of prior hearing, notice, and opportunity to be heard); MacCowan v. Cummings, 99 Misc. 2d 914, 916, 417 N.Y.S.2d 366, 367 (Sup. Ct. Orleans Cnty. 1978) (holding that “any removal [of the prisoner] from the [work release] program should be as a result of a hearing following the rationale and procedures set forth in Wolff v. McDonnell”). See Chapter 32 of the JLM, “Parole,” for a more detailed explanation of the due process rights guaranteed under Wolff. The U.S. Supreme Court has also held that due process requires certain procedural protections for prisoners participating in a state-created pre-parole conditional supervision program. See Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 146–147, 117 S. Ct. 1148, 1151, 137 L. Ed. 2d 270, 276 (1997).

149. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(h) (2020).

150. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(h)(4) (2020).

151. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1904.2(h)(5)–(6) (2020).

152. Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84–85 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that the due process requirements of Morrissey v. Brewer have been extended to revocation of probation and loss of good-time credits and therefore should be extended to work release revocation) (citing Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 489, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972)); Kroemer v. Joy, 2 Misc. 3d 265, 268, 769 N.Y.S.2d 357, 360 (Sup. Ct. Yates County 2003) (applying the procedural due process requirements of Morrissey, including the right to confront adverse witnesses, to a Temporary Release Program revocation hearing).

153. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 489, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2604, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 499 (1972).

However, in order to succeed on appeal, you must be able to prove that the wrong conclusion was reached in your TRC hearing and that the procedure was incorrect.¹⁵⁴

If you believe your rights have been violated in a revocation of temporary release, you can file a lawsuit. In order to do this, you must base your complaint on a particular statute or law that will give a judge power to hear how the prison authorities have treated you. If you are in New York, there are two different ways that you can do this: (1) Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules (called Article 78 of the C.P.L.R.) in New York state courts, or (2) 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (called Section 1983) in either state or federal court. Both of these statutes will be explained in further detail below.

(i) Article 78 of the C.P.L.R.

If you think that prison officials used either improper procedures or obviously incorrect information in deciding your case, you should bring a state court proceeding under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules. A proceeding is a courtroom or related matter that occurs during the course of a dispute or lawsuit, or any individual courtroom or related event that takes place during the course of the dispute or lawsuit. Bringing a state court action can have advantages over a federal action. It is easier for a state court judge to order a state agency to correct its actions than it is for a federal court judge to do the same. A state court action is the most common and best way to fight to get reinstated in a temporary release program. If you choose to proceed under Article 78, however, you will not be awarded money damages. Money damages refers to the money awarded by a court to a person who has suffered loss, injury, or harm, either to the person's body or to property. Something else to keep in mind is that Article 78 claims are less complicated than federal Section 1983 claims. If you are going to file pro se (without a lawyer), Article 78 proceedings will be much easier for you to file than a Section 1983 claim. It will be easier to file Article 78 proceedings because of the complicated federal court procedure needed for Section 1983 claims. For more information on Article 78 proceedings, see JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules." If you are not in New York, you should research any similar statutes in your state.

(ii) Section 1983¹⁵⁵

Your second option is to bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 ("Section 1983"). This claim can only be used if an officer or agent of the government violates one of your rights protected by the Constitution or violates a federal statute.¹⁵⁶ Section 1983 allows you to be awarded money damages if you win your case. Remember that you must first try the prison's administrative remedies before using Section 1983.¹⁵⁷ Section 1983 can also be used only if you are not asking to be released completely from prison. Even if you are on temporary release, you are still considered to be in prison. Please see JLM Chapter 16 on using Section 1983, as well as JLM Chapter 14 on the Prison Reform Litigation Act ("PLRA"), for more information. Remember, however, that the court strongly considers the TRC. The TRC is 154. See Roucchio v. Coughlin, 29 F. Supp. 2d 72, 79–80 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding that a due process claim for damages was not valid when the inmate failed to show that his removal from the work release program was invalidated).

155. If you would like to file a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim, read Chapter 14 of the JLM, which discusses the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). Under the PLRA, prisoners must satisfy certain requirements before filing § 1983 actions in federal court. For more information about § 1983 claims, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

156. Please note that some officials cannot be sued under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law" for more information.

157. See Hill v. Chalanor, 419 F. Supp. 2d 255, 257 (N.D.N.Y. 2006) (holding that no action challenging prison conditions can be brought under federal law by a prisoner until all available administrative remedies are exhausted); Francis v. Zavadill, No. 06 Civ. 249 (SAS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79323, at *14 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 30, 2006) (unpublished) ("Failure to exhaust is an absolute bar to an inmate's action in federal court."); Garcia v. Payne, 97 Civ. 0880 (DAB), 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1274, at * 9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 6, 1998) (unpublished) (dismissing prisoner's claims for the failure to pursue state remedies prior to filing).

given substantial discretion to remove “unsuitable” incarcerated people from the temporary release program. As long as the TRC follows procedural due process guidelines (as outlined in *Wolff*¹⁵⁸) and its decision is found to be rational, the courts will not overturn its decision.

F. The Second Chance Act of 2007 and Federal Bureau of Prisons Temporary Release Programs

The Second Chance Act of 2007¹⁵⁹ made some important changes to temporary release programs. It expanded the types of opportunities available to incarcerated people upon release. It also improved existing programs in prisons and modified how incarcerated people can serve sentences in community facilities. It allows government agencies and nonprofit groups to receive grants of money from the federal government in order “to assist offenders reentering the community from incarceration to establish a self-sustaining and law-abiding life by providing sufficient transitional services.”¹⁶⁰ However, these agencies and groups must apply for the money to receive it. They must also comply with certain requirements to receive the grant money.¹⁶¹ This section will discuss, as established by the Second Chance Act, (1) The Federal Prisoner Reentry Program and Services, (2) Drug Treatment Programs, and (3) Alternatives to Incarceration.

1. Federal Prisoner Reentry Program and Services

The Second Chance Act created a federal prisoner reentry program under the Bureau of Prisons to help you adjust to life outside prison.¹⁶² This program is meant to provide you with information regarding health and nutrition, employment, literacy and education, personal finance and consumer skills, community resources, personal growth and development, as well as release requirements and procedures.¹⁶³ Once you are released, the Re-entry Courts, at the state and local level, will monitor you and help you access support programs. Such programs include drug and health counseling, case management, and “any other service or support needed for reentry” after your release.¹⁶⁴ Nonprofit organizations may also provide programs to help you after your release. There may also be mentoring and transitional services programs run by nonprofit organizations (as opposed to the state or the Bureau of Prisons itself) available to you during your incarceration.¹⁶⁵ These mentoring programs can give you mentoring services, services to help you transition to life after your release. Transitional services programs offer education, literacy, and job training.¹⁶⁶ These services take place during incarceration and post-release.¹⁶⁷ The Second Chance Act requires that the Bureau of Prisons allow anyone who provided you with mentoring services during your incarceration to continue those services after your release.¹⁶⁸ Remember, it is not yet clear which nonprofit organizations or government agencies will be receiving grant money and how the programs will function.

Before you leave prison, the Bureau of Prisons is required to help you prepare for your release. The Bureau of Prisons is required to ensure your eligibility for state and federal benefits such as Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and Veterans benefits, and to support parent-child relationships. Where the law permits, the Bureau must also help you secure those benefits you are eligible for before

158. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 563–566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2978–2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 955–957 (1974).

159. Second Chance Act of 2007, Pub. L. No. 110-199, 122 Stat. 657 (codified at 34 U.S.C. § 60501).

160. 34 U.S.C. § 60501.

161. 34 U.S.C. § 10631.

162. 34 U.S.C. § 60541.

163. 18 U.S.C. § 4042(a).

164. 34 U.S.C. § 10631(f)(3)(C).

165. 34 U.S.C. § 60531.

166. 34 U.S.C. § 60531(b)(2).

167. 34 U.S.C. § 60531(b).

168. 34 U.S.C. § 60533(a).

release.¹⁶⁹ For the three years before you are released from prison, you may have access to programs that would train you for jobs and careers.¹⁷⁰ Earlier in your incarceration, the Bureau of Prisons is required, if it has enough funding, to offer a program to assess your skill level in various areas. It also is required to help you to improve in certain areas, including academic, health, and interpersonal skills.¹⁷¹ It will determine whether you have any special reentry needs and help you maintain relationships with your family and children during your imprisonment.¹⁷² This program will also help you obtain an official form of photo identification, a social security card, and/or a birth certificate as your release nears.¹⁷³

2. Drug Treatment Programs

The First Step Act allows state and local prosecutors to set up full drug-treatment programs during your time in prison or jail, as well as while you are on parole or under court supervision.¹⁷⁴ Depending on what state you are in, there may be drug treatment programs where you can get treatment for drug dependence or addiction.¹⁷⁵ If you are in a community confinement center rather than a regular prison, the Bureau of Prisons is required to ensure that you have any necessary medical care, mental health care, and medicine.¹⁷⁶

The Second Chance Act provides for Prison-Based Family Treatment Programs.¹⁷⁷ To be eligible for a Prison-Based Family Treatment Program, you must be pregnant or have a child under 18 years of age and you must have been convicted of a nonviolent drug-related felony.¹⁷⁸ These programs require that you serve your term in prison, and they provide substance abuse treatment, child early intervention services, family counseling, legal services, medical care, mental health services, nursery and preschool, parenting skills training, pediatric care, physical therapy, prenatal care, sexual abuse therapy, relapse prevention, transportation, and vocational or GED training.¹⁷⁹ The Second Chance Act also changed the Residential Substance Abuse Treatment for State Offenders Program ("RSAT"), which provides drug treatment in a facility set apart from the general prison population.¹⁸⁰ If you are involved in an RSAT program, the state may be required to give you a wide range of support services after your release from prison. This may include case management services.¹⁸¹

3. Alternatives to Incarceration

Though you do not have an absolute right to do so, you may be able to spend some or all of the last twelve months of your sentence in a community confinement facility, or under other conditions that help you adjust to release.¹⁸² You also may be able to spend six months or ten percent of your sentence, whichever is shorter, in home confinement.¹⁸³ Courts, however, are not allowed to require or guarantee that your sentence be served in a civil confinement facility. Therefore, only the Bureau of Prisons can make this decision.¹⁸⁴ Again, it is unclear how this will work in practice.

169. 18 U.S.C. § 4042(a)(6).

170. 34 U.S.C. § 60511(b).

171. 34 U.S.C. § 60541(a).

172. 34 U.S.C. § 60541(a)(1)(F).

173. 34 U.S.C. § 60541(b)(1).

174. 34 U.S.C. § 60521(a).

175. 34 U.S.C. § 60521.

176. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(i).

177. 34 U.S.C. § 10591.

178. 34 U.S.C. § 10596.

179. 34 U.S.C. § 10596.

180. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(1)–(e)(6).

181. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(1)–(e)(6).

182. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(c)(1).

183. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(c)(2).

184. See 18 U.S.C. § 3621(b) ("The Bureau of Prisons shall designate the place of the prisoner's imprisonment.").

G. Conclusion

Each temporary release program has its own set of requirements for eligibility, as well as many different rules for participating. The law treats participation in these programs as a privilege, not a right. The Department of Corrections and Community Supervision is not required to create release programs, and the eligibility and approval rules are strict. The Constitution protects you against discrimination or an unfair denial of access to temporary release. This protection does not mean that you must be allowed to participate. Instead, it means that the temporary release officials must show that they have a good reason for not allowing you to participate or for removing you from participation. The officials must also follow the standards of due process, which the New York courts have ordered them to provide.¹⁸⁵ However, because your participation is deemed a privilege and not a right, it is very difficult to successfully appeal a decision regarding a temporary release program.

¹⁸⁵. Roman v. Ternullo, 81 Misc. 2d 1023, 1025, 367 N.Y.S.2d 197, 198–199 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1975).

CHAPTER 40

PLEA BARGAINING*

A. Introduction

Most criminal cases in the United States court system end in guilty pleas.¹ This Chapter addresses the plea bargaining process and how to appeal a conviction based on a plea.

A plea bargain is a deal in which the prosecutor reduces your charges or sentence in return for a guilty plea. Because a guilty plea is basically the same as a conviction (but without the trial),² if you plead guilty you are giving up many important constitutional rights associated with the trial process, and you are also giving up multiple grounds to appeal. You should carefully consider the consequences of any plea deal before agreeing.

The government must follow certain procedures and it must meet specific legal requirements before entering into a plea bargain agreement with you. If you have already accepted a plea agreement, entered a guilty plea before a judge, or were sentenced and incarcerated, but the government did not meet the legal and procedural requirements, you may be able to appeal or challenge your conviction or sentence. Depending on your claim, convictions based on a guilty plea may be challenged on direct appeal, in a state or federal habeas corpus petition, or under Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.³

This Chapter focuses specifically on New York State law⁴ and on federal law. If you have been sentenced in a state court outside of New York, the laws governing your ability to appeal from a guilty plea may be different from the New York laws and the federal laws described here. Although many states have modeled their plea bargaining systems on federal law, the system in each state is unique to that state. You should do research in your law library on the relevant statutes and court decisions on plea bargaining in your state.

Part B of this Chapter lists many important points to consider before accepting or challenging a plea. Part C describes the process of negotiating a plea bargain with the prosecutor. Part D explains the legal and constitutional requirements that courts must meet when accepting a plea bargain. Part E discusses how to withdraw from a guilty plea prior to sentencing and also discusses what you must do to preserve some claims after sentencing.

B. Plea Bargaining Considerations

In order to convince you to plead guilty, the prosecutor may offer various sentencing benefits including: reducing or dropping some of the charges, or recommending a particular sentence to the court. Plea bargaining may benefit both you and the prosecutor. Plea bargaining is usually faster than going to trial, which may benefit you. The speedier process also usually helps the prosecutor avoid

* This Chapter was written by Bryan Hull and revised by Syed Wasim.

1. Nearly 97% of criminal cases in the federal court system and 94% in the state systems result in guilty pleas. See John L. Kane, “Plea Bargaining and the Innocent,” The Marshall Project (Dec 26, 2014), available at <https://www.themarshallproject.org/2014/12/26/plea-bargaining-and-the-innocent> (last accessed Feb. 2, 2020). In New York, the courts recognized plea bargaining as necessary due to the overcrowded justice system. People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 7, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1024, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 970 (1989). The Supreme Court has also held that plea bargaining is an essential component of the administration of justice. Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 260, 92 S. Ct. 495, 498, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 432 (1971).

2. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 1.20(13) (McKinney 2018); Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 242, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1711–1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279 (1969).

3. See JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence”; JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus”; and JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

4. The New York statute providing for plea bargaining is N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW Sec. 220.10 (McKinney 2014).

having to spend time and resources preparing for trial. A plea bargain establishes your guilt for a specific criminal charge against you, which removes the uncertainty about how the trial would turn out. In addition, accepting a plea agreement often reduces the risk that you could receive the maximum sentence. Sometimes the plea agreement will include the terms of a sentence, meaning it is unlikely that you or the prosecutor will be surprised by a lesser or greater sentence.

Although there may be benefits to accepting a plea agreement, there are many things you should consider when deciding whether or not to accept a plea bargain. You are never required to accept a plea bargain that a prosecutor offers, and you always have the right to go to trial without fear of vindictiveness.⁵ It is your choice, and only your choice, whether to accept a plea bargain.

When you accept a plea bargain, you give up important constitutional rights in exchange for a possibly more favorable sentence than you would receive if convicted after trial. The constitutional rights that you waive (give up) when you enter a guilty plea include: the right to a trial by jury,⁶ the right to testify or not to testify at trial,⁷ the privilege against self-incrimination (meaning the right to not reveal information about criminal acts that you may have committed),⁸ the right to confront your accusers,⁹ the right to plead “not guilty,”¹⁰ the right to require the prosecution to prove your guilt beyond a reasonable doubt by an undivided verdict of the jurors, the right to compel favorable witnesses,¹¹ and the right to present any available defenses at trial. If you decide to plead guilty, you cannot later challenge your conviction, or appeal your case, by arguing you were not given these rights.

Once you have accepted a plea bargain, your ability to challenge a conviction resulting from that guilty plea will be very limited. New York courts have stated that a guilty plea “marks the end of a criminal case” and does not provide a “gateway to further litigation.”¹² A guilty plea communicates that you do not intend to challenge the issue of your guilt.¹³ The conviction is based on the sufficiency of your plea and not the constitutional or legal sufficiency of the proceedings.¹⁴ By pleading guilty, you waive claims that you were deprived of your rights in the proceedings prior to entering the plea.¹⁵ Your

5. U.S. CONST. amend. VI; See Bordenkircher v. Hayes, 434 U.S. 357, 363, 98 S. Ct. 663, 668, 54 L. Ed. 2d 604, 610–611 (1978) (citing Chaffin v. Stynchcombe, 412 U.S. 17, 32–33, n. 20, 93 S. Ct. 1977, 1986, 36 L. Ed. 2d 714, 727) (“To punish a person because he has done what the law plainly allows him to do is as due process violation of the most basic sort and for an agent of the State to pursue a course of action whose objective is to penalize a person’s reliance on his legal rights is ‘patently unconstitutional.’”); N.Y. CONST. art. 1, § 2 (McKinney 2016).

6. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279–280 (1969); see also Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 11(b)(1)(c) (2020).

7. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279–280 (1969).

8. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279–280 (1969); Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964) (holding that the privilege against self-incrimination applies in state criminal trials). See also U.S. CONST. amend. V.

9. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279 (1969); see also Pointer v. Texas, 380 U.S. 400, 406, 85 S. Ct. 1065, 1069, 13 L. Ed. 2d 923, 928 (1965) (extending the constitutional right to confront one’s accusers to state criminal defendants); U.S. CONST. amend. VI.

10. U.S. CONST. amend. V; N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(1) (McKinney 2014); see also FED. R. CRIM. PRO. 11(b)(1)(F) (2020).

11. U.S. CONST. amend. VI. See Washington v. Texas, 388 U.S. 14, 19, 87 S. Ct. 1920, 1923, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1019, 1023 (1967) (affirming the right to compel favorable witnesses to testify in state criminal cases).

12. People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985).

13. People v. Campbell, 73 N.Y.2d 481, 486, 539 N.E.2d 584, 586, 541 N.Y.S.2d 756, 758 (1989).

14. People v. Di Raffaele, 55 N.Y.2d 234, 240, 433 N.E.2d 513, 515–516, 448 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450–451 (1982).

15. Tollett v. Henderson, 411 U.S. 258, 267, 93 S. Ct. 1602, 1608, 36 L. Ed. 2d 235, 243 (1973) (“When a criminal defendant has solemnly admitted in open court that he is in fact guilty of the offense with which he is charged, he may not thereafter raise independent claims relating to the deprivation of constitutional rights that occurred prior to the entry of the guilty plea. He may only attack the voluntary and intelligent character of the guilty plea...”); see also People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 230, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 (2000) (holding that “a defendant who in open court admits guilt of an offense charged may not later seek review of claims relating to the deprivation of rights that took place before the plea was entered.”); People v. Di Raffaele, 55 N.Y.2d 234, 240, 433 N.E.2d 513, 515, 448 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450 (1982) (“Where defendant has by his guilty plea also waives the right to challenge the underlying conviction,¹⁶ and the ability to appeal any non-jurisdictional defects in the case.¹⁷

There are a couple of defects, or errors in the legal proceedings, that you can still challenge after pleading guilty. Such defects include:

- (1) Jurisdictional defects, meaning that the particular court you were in did not have authority to convict you, no matter what evidence may have been presented against you at trial;
- (2) Defects that go directly to the guilty plea itself; or
- (3) Defects in relation to the sentence subsequently imposed which was not part of the plea agreement.

There are a number of examples that fall under these categories. One is if the indictment (or other accusatory instrument) did not charge an offense.¹⁸ Another is if the prosecutor knows the conviction or indictment is only supported by false evidence.¹⁹ Another is if the conviction was based on an unconstitutional statute (to which you have the right to challenge on appeal).²⁰ Another example is a guilty plea that was not entered voluntarily, knowingly, or intelligently, (such as if you were forced to plead guilty or did not understand the plea agreement).²¹ More examples include proceedings that did plea admitted commission of the crime with which he was charged, his plea renders irrelevant his contention that the criminal proceedings preliminary to trial were infected with impropriety and error;" his conviction rests directly on the sufficiency of his plea, not on the legal or constitutional sufficiency of any proceedings which might have led to his conviction after trial."). But see Schmidt v. State, 909 N.W.2d 778, 789 (Iowa 2018) (holding that convicted defendants can attack their pleas when claiming actual innocence even if the attack is extrinsic to those pleas as well as overruling cases that do not allow defendants to attack their pleas based on extrinsic grounds when they claim innocence.)

16. People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 8, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1025, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 971 (1989) ("[A] defendant, by pleading guilty, forfeits the right to challenge the underlying conviction and loses many privileges and protections granted defendants by courts.").

17. See United States v. Broce, 488 U.S. 563, 569, 109 S. Ct. 757, 762, 102 L. Ed. 2d 927, 935 (1989) (holding that defendants, convicted based on guilty pleas, can challenge only the constitutionality of the conviction; in other words, the only issues are whether the plea was both "counseled and voluntary"); People v. Thomas, 74 A.D.2d 317, 319–320, 428 N.Y.S.2d 20, 23 (2d Dept. 1980) ("[O]nly those issues fully disclosed in the record which relate either to the exercise of jurisdiction by the court or to the voluntary and knowing nature of the plea are appealable after a plea of guilty.").

18. See Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 618–619, 118 S. Ct. 1604, 1609, 140 L. Ed. 2d 828, 837 (1998) (stating that a plea would be constitutionally invalid if the record revealed that a defendant, his counsel and the court had not correctly understood the "essential elements of the crime with which he was charged"); People v. Iaonnone, 45 N.Y.2d 589, 600, 384 N.E.2d 656, 664, 412 N.Y.S.2d 110, 117–118 (1978) (holding that an indictment is jurisdictionally defective "only if it does not effectively charge the defendant with the commission of a particular crime"); People v. Guerrero, 28 N.Y.3d 110, 117, 65 N.E.3d 51, 57, 42 N.Y.S. 3d 80, 86 (2016) ("Insufficiency of an indictment's factual allegations, however, does not constitute a jurisdictional defect that is reviewable by [the] Court, and, once a guilty plea has been entered 'the sufficiency of the evidence before the Grand Jury cannot be challenged.'"); People v. Case, 42 N.Y.2d 98, 100, 365 N.E.2d 872, 873, 396 N.Y.S.2d 841, 842 (1977) (holding that a defendant can challenge the substantive sufficiency of information in the indictment because sufficiency is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the conviction); People v. Alejandro, 70 N.Y.2d 133, 511 N.E.2d 71, 517 N.Y.S.2d 927 (1987) (holding that a defendant may challenge an informational as facially insufficient after being convicted at trial if there are no non-hearsay allegations for each element of the crime in the charging document).

19. People v. Pelchat, 62 N.Y.2d 97, 108, 464 N.E.2d 447, 453, 476 N.Y.S.2d 79, 85 (1984).

20. People v. Lee, 58 N.Y.2d 491, 493, 448 N.E.2d 1328, 1329, 462 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1983).

21. See People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 11–12, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1026–1027, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972–973 (1989) (finding that defendants had validly waived their right to appeal in their plea bargains because the pleas were reasonable, voluntary, knowing, and intelligent); see also Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243 n.5, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712 n. 5, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 280 n.5 (1969) (stating that if defendant's plea was not entered voluntarily and knowingly, "it has been obtained in violation of the Due Process Clause and is therefore void").

not meet the standards of a constitutional speedy trial,²² an illegal sentence,²³ an excessively harsh or severe sentence,²⁴ or ineffective assistance of counsel in the plea bargaining process.²⁵ Because these issues are not waived by a guilty plea, you cannot waive these claims simply by pleading guilty and you may challenge your conviction based on one of these claims at a later time.

By pleading guilty, however, you do waive certain rights. Entering a plea of guilty likely means you will not be able to challenge or appeal any issues which relate to trial or pretrial rights because these rights only protect you at trial.²⁶ Some issues which you may not appeal or use to challenge your sentence and conviction include: no probable cause for arrest;²⁷ illegally obtained confession;²⁸ problems with the form of the accusatory instrument;²⁹ improperly failing to provide a bill of particulars;³⁰ insufficient factual allegation in the indictment (unless it had been preserved by a previous on the record motion);³¹ the composition of the grand jury;³² the sufficiency of grand jury minutes;³³ a denial of a motion to dismiss the indictment in the interests of justice;³⁴ the correctness of a denial of a motion for a separate trial;³⁵ challenges to the underlying facts of the plea;³⁶ the racial

22. People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 314, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 461–462 (1974).

23. People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 203, 269 N.E.2d 794, 798, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 80 (1971).

24. People v. Coleman, 30 N.Y.2d 582, 583, 281 N.E.2d 845, 845, 330 N.Y.S.2d 797, 798 (1972); see also People v. Mayham, 272 A.D.2d 951, 709 N.Y.S.2d 265 (4th Dept. 2000) (holding that harshness of a sentence may be challenged if the defendant is not informed of the possible lengths of incarceration). But see People v. Hidalgo, 91 N.Y.2d 733, 737, 698 N.E.2d 46, 48, 675 N.Y.S.2d 327, 329 (1998) (holding that defendant who was informed of possible sentencing options could not challenge the harshness of the sentence).

25. See People v. Gonzalez, 171 A.D.2d 413, 413, 566 N.Y.S.2d 639, 639 (1st Dept. 1991) (finding that an evidentiary hearing was necessary to determine if counsel had coerced defendant to enter a guilty plea). On this issue, a motion should first be made to withdraw the plea or vacate the judgment under N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 (McKinney 2005). See JLM Chapter 20 for information on Article 440 motions, and JLM Chapter 12 for information about ineffective assistance of counsel.

26. People v. Thomas, 74 A.D.2d 317, 321, 428 N.Y.S.2d 20, 24 (2d Dept. 1980); People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 218, 486 N.E.2d 813, 814, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 956 (1985) (holding that defendant forfeited right to challenge the trial court's adverse ruling on her statutory previous prosecution claim when she pleaded guilty to a reduced charge).

27. People v. Smith, 34 N.Y.2d 758, 759, 314 N.E.2d 875, 875, 358 N.Y.S.2d 135, 135 (1974) ("Defendants' claim that no probable cause existed for their arrest on the charge of loitering was waived when they pleaded guilty to that charge.")

28. People v. Nicholson, 11 N.Y.2d 1067, 1068, 184 N.E.2d 190, 191, 230 N.Y.S.2d 220, 221 (1962); People v. Dobson, 124 A.D.2d 744, 745, 508 N.Y.S.2d 246, 246 (2d Dept. 1986) (holding that a knowing and voluntary guilty plea prevents a defendant from appealing issues of illegally obtained confessions, when the defendant had never moved to suppress the confession prior to guilty plea). But see McMann v. Richardson, 397 U.S. 759, 767, 90 S. Ct. 1441, 1447 (1970) (holding that a guilty plea is "properly open to challenge ... where the circumstances that coerced the confession have abiding impact and also taint the plea."). But see People v. Berger, 9 N.Y.2d 692, 693, 173 N.E.2d 243, 243, 212 N.Y.S.2d 425, 425 (1961) (where defendant was allowed to appeal denied application for writ of error coram nobis for claims of coercion in the procurement of a confession used in guilty plea to a lesser charge).

29. See People v. Iannone, 45 N.Y.2d 589, 600, 384 N.E.2d 656, 664, 412 N.Y.S.2d 110, 117 (1978).

30. People v. Hendricks, 31 A.D.2d 982, 982, 297 N.Y.S.2d 838, 839 (3d Dept. 1969).

31. People v. Iannone, 45 N.Y.2d 589, 600, 384 N.E.2d 656, 663–664, 412 N.Y.S.2d 110, 117–118 (1978).

32. See People v. Siciliano, 40 N.Y.2d 996, 997, 359 N.E.2d 700, 700, 391 N.Y.S.2d 106, 106 (1976); People v. Green, 146 A.D.2d 281, 283, 50 N.Y.S.2d 95, 96, (4th Dept. 1989) ("Numerous other rights of both constitutional and non-constitutional dimension, however, have been held not to survive, including:...[a] challenge based on allegedly discriminatory composition of the grand jury")

33. People v. O'Neal, 44 A.D.2d 830, 830, 355 N.Y.S.2d 21, 22 (2d Dept. 1974); People v. Thomas, 74 A.D.2d 317, 321, 428 N.Y.S.2d 20, 24 (2d Dept. 1980) ("If the defendant's complaint relates to the loss of trial and pretrial rights and safeguards, a plea of guilty surrenders both the constitutional and nonconstitutional protections. Thus...the sufficiency of Grand Jury minutes...[is] effectively waived by a guilty plea.")

34. People v. Travis, 205 A.D.2d 648, 648, 613 N.Y.S.2d 252, 254 (2d Dept. 1994); People v. Merlo, 195 A.D.2d 576, 576, 600 N.Y.S.2d 494, 494 (2d Dept. 1993).

35. People v. Smith, 41 A.D.2d 893, 894, 342 N.Y.S.2d 513, 514 (4th Dept. 1973).

36. People v. Pelchat, 62 N.Y.2d 97, 108, 464 N.E.2d 447, 453, 476 N.Y.S.2d 79, 85 (1984).

composition of prospective jury pool (which includes peremptory challenges, or objections to jurors without explicit explanation why);³⁷ of speedy trial rights under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30;³⁸ violation of your double jeopardy rights under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 40.20³⁹ or the Constitution;⁴⁰ statutory or transactional immunity (blanket immunity for crimes related to testimony);⁴¹ statute of limitations;⁴² and improper interpretation or application of a statute.⁴³

Because a guilty plea is largely equivalent to a conviction in a trial, you will face the same consequences as if you had been convicted of the charge.⁴⁴ For example, you should consider the effects a conviction will have on your parole, probation, immigration status, and employment status. The side effects resulting from a conviction are often called “collateral effects.” Your lawyer may not be obligated to advise you about these side effects.⁴⁵ However, if you are not an American citizen, your attorney must advise you that your conviction could have collateral effects on your immigration status.⁴⁶

The collateral effects are specific to you as an individual and generally result from actions taken by agencies (such as parole boards and employers).⁴⁷ Therefore, you should ask about these effects before you enter a guilty plea, and do research on your own. Even if the court or your attorney misinforms you about the collateral effects of your conviction, you may not be able to challenge your conviction on these grounds later.

37. People v. Green, 75 N.Y.2d 902, 904–905, 553 N.E.2d 1331, 1332, 554 N.Y.S.2d 821, 822 (1990).

38. People v. O'Brien, 56 N.Y.2d 1009, 1010, 439 N.E.2d 354, 355, 453 N.Y.S.2d 638, 639 (1982).

39. People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 219, 486 N.E.2d 813, 815, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 957 (1985).

40. See People v. Muniz, 91 N.Y.2d 570, 574–575, 696 N.E.2d 182, 185–186, 673 N.Y.S.2d 358, 361–362 (1998) (holding that waiver of a constitutional double jeopardy claim is implied in a general appeals waiver; however, if defendant does not waive the right to appeal, the constitutional double jeopardy claim is maintained).

41. People v. Flihan, 73 N.Y.2d 729, 731, 532 N.E.2d 96, 535 N.Y.S.2d 590 (1988).

42. People v. Dickson, 133 A.D.2d 492, 494, 519 N.Y.S.2d 419, 421 (3d Dept. 1987) (stating that a guilty plea forfeits the defense of Statutory of Limitations) (“In our view, since defendant failed to raise the Statute of Limitations as a defense (see, CPL 210.20 [1][f]), he waived this challenge upon entry of his plea of guilty”).

43. People v. Levin, 57 N.Y.2d 1008, 1009, 443 N.E.2d 946, 457 N.Y.S.2d 472 (1982).

44. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 1.20(13) (McKinney 2018); Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 242, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1711–1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279 (1969).

45. See, e.g., United States v. Ayala, 601 F.3d 256, 270 (4th Cir. 2010) (“[Defendant’s] plea was not invalid simply because he was not informed of the possibility that it might be used against him in a subsequent federal prosecution.”); Ruelas v. Wolfenbarger, 480, F.3d 403, 404 (6th Cir. 2009) (“[A] defendant need not know all the possible consequences of his plea, like the loss of his right to vote or own a gun, or the effect of future sentence ...”); Virsnieks v. Smith, 521 F.3d 707, 721 (7th Cir. 2008) (“The [sex offender] registration order was a collateral consequence about which the State was not required to inform him.”); Moore v. Hinton, 513 F.2d 781, 782–783 (5th Cir. 1975) (“[A] defendant need not be informed, before pleading guilty to a charge of driving while intoxicated, that as a collateral consequence of his conviction, his driver’s license will be suspended.”); Meaton v. United States, 328 F.2d 379 (5th Cir. 1964) (“There was no abuse of discretion in the refusal of the court to grant leave to withdraw the plea of guilty because the appellant failed to understand the collateral effects such as the loss of civic rights [which, in this case, included voting and foreign travel].”). But see Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356, 360, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1478, 176 L. Ed. 2d 284, 290 (2010) (“We agree with Padilla that constitutionally competent counsel would have advised him that his conviction for drug distribution made him subject to automatic deportation.”); Bauder v. Dept. of Corr., 619 F.3d 1272, 1275 (11th Cir. 2010) (“Even if one could argue that the law was unclear, the Supreme Court has noted that when the law is unclear a criminal defense attorney must advise his client that the ‘pending criminal charges may carry a risk of adverse [collateral] consequences.’” (citing Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356, 369, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1483, 176 L. Ed. 2d 284, 296 (2010))).

46. See Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356, 368–369, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1483, 176 L. Ed.2d 284, 295–296 (2010) (holding that when the immigration consequences of pleading guilty are clear, attorneys must notify clients about these consequences. If the immigration consequences (such as deportation) are not clear, the lawyer must tell the client that there may be immigrant consequences to pleading guilty).

47. United States v. Sambro, 454 F.2d 918, 920 (D.C. Cir. 1971); see also People v. Ford, 86 N.Y.2d 397, 403, 657 N.E.2d 265, 267–268, 633 N.Y.S.2d 270, 272–273 (1995) (holding that a court is not under an obligation to inform defendant of many collateral consequences), overruled in part by People v. Peque, 22 N.Y.3d 168, 3 N.E.3d 617, 980 N.Y.S.2d 280 (2013) (noting that a court’s failure to advise a defendant of potential deportation does affect the validity of the defendant’s plea).

C. Plea Bargaining Agreements

There is no constitutional right to a plea bargain which means that the prosecutor has no obligation to negotiate with you for a reduced sentence.⁴⁸ If you wish to plead guilty, the prosecutor might require that you plead guilty to all of the charges against you. If the prosecutor has not consented (agreed) to a plea, the court can only accept a guilty plea to the entire indictment (all the charges brought against you initially).⁴⁹ The prosecutor also has the discretion to decide what plea bargain to offer you, as long as the offer does not violate the law.⁵⁰ In New York, state statutes limit the kinds of plea bargains that prosecutors can offer you. They cannot offer a lower sentence than is required for the type of charge, or for a person who has committed multiple felonies.⁵¹ The prosecutor can require certain terms and conditions before agreeing to a plea bargain,⁵² as long as the terms and conditions are reasonable⁵³ and do not deny basic fairness.⁵⁴

Plea bargains in the federal system are governed by Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.⁵⁵ New York does not have an equivalent rule, so you must look to past court decisions to understand how plea agreements are dealt with by prosecutors and courts in New York.

1. Types of Plea Agreements

There are many different types of plea agreements you may be offered in the course of a negotiation. A prosecutor may allow you to plead to a lesser charge or drop certain charges in exchange for a guilty plea.⁵⁶ This type of agreement is sometimes called a “charge agreement.” The prosecutor may propose a specific sentence or agree not to oppose your attorney’s recommended sentence. However, you should remember that the actual sentence that you may be charged with is up to the judge.⁵⁷ Even if the prosecutor offers to agree to a specific sentence if you plead guilty, the judge is not

48. Weatherford v. Bursey, 429 U.S. 545, 561, 97 S. Ct. 837, 846, 51 L. Ed. 2d 30, 43 (1977); see also People v. Cohen, 186 A.D.2d 843, 843–844, 588 N.Y.S.2d 211, 212 (3d Dept. 1992) (finding that where the policy differences were based on different caseloads and staffing, defendant was not denied right to equal protection by district attorney’s policy not to accept pleas to less than top count of indictment, though other counties had different plea-bargaining policies).

49. People v. Antonio, 176 A.D.2d 528, 529, 574 N.Y.S.2d 718, 719 (1st Dept. 1991); see also People v. Melo, 160 A.D.2d 600, 600, 554 N.Y.S.2d 530, 531 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding that the trial court did not deny due process in refusing to accept defendant’s plea to a lesser charge prior to trial; defendant had right to plead guilty only to the entire indictment and could plead guilty to lesser-included offense only with permission of court and consent of the People).

50. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(3), (4) (McKinney 2013); People v. Antonio, 176 A.D.2d 528, 529, 574 N.Y.S.2d 718, 719 (1st Dept. 1991) (explaining that the prosecutor may dictate the terms under which he or she will consent to accept a plea).

51. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(5) (McKinney 2013). Thus, if you agree to plead guilty to specific charges, the prosecutor cannot offer you a sentence below the minimum required for the charged crime. Additionally, if you have prior felony convictions, the charged crime may require an enhanced sentence, and the prosecutor must comply with these statutory requirements.

52. People v. Antonio, 176 A.D.2d 528, 529, 574 N.Y.S.2d 718, 719 (1st Dept. 1991) (“The prosecutor is free to dictate the terms under which he or she will agree to consent to accept a guilty plea, and where such terms are not met, consent may be withheld. Further, the withholding of such consent, by statutory mandate, renders the court without authority to accept a plea to anything less than the entire indictment.”).

53. See People v. Grant, 99 A.D.2d 536, 536, 471 N.Y.S.2d 325, 326 (2d Dept. 1984).

54. See People v. White, 32 N.Y.2d 393, 399–401, 298 N.E.2d 659, 663–664, 345 N.Y.S.2d 513, 519–520 (1973) (finding that the prosecutor’s requirement that defendant plead guilty before the court decided defendant’s speedy trial claim was coercive and denied defendant’s fundamental right to a speedy trial); People v. Grant, 99 A.D.2d 536, 536, 471 N.Y.S.2d 325, 326 (2d Dept. 1984).

55. FED. R. CRIM. P. § 11.

56. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(3), (4) (McKinney 2014); FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(c)(1)(A).

57. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(c)(1)(B); United States v. Norris, 486 F.3d 1045, 1047 n. 1 (8th Cir.2007) (en banc) (plurality opinion) (“The plea agreement was made in accordance with Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(B), under which a sentencing ‘recommendation or request does not bind the court.’”); United States v. Gomez, 326 F.3d 971, 975 (8th Cir. 2003) (involving a plea agreement that did not bind the court).

required to follow this agreement and may choose not to accept the prosecutor's recommended sentence.⁵⁸ However, it is rare for a judge to find the prosecutor's recommended sentence unacceptable.

Another type of agreement the prosecutor may offer is a "cooperation agreement," in which you agree to cooperate with the government. For example, you may be asked to testify against another defendant in exchange for a reduced sentence or dropped charges. This type of plea bargain may require your cooperation for a long period of time, and your case may not be settled until you have completed your side of the agreement.

A "conditional plea" may allow you to enter a guilty plea without waiving the right to appeal certain pretrial motions.⁵⁹ For example, if the court rules that certain essential evidence is admissible at trial, but you believe the appellate court may reverse that decision and rule that the evidence cannot be introduced, you can enter a conditional plea of guilty, which preserves your right to appeal the evidentiary issue. If you appeal and the appellate court later rules that the evidence was not admissible, you have the right to withdraw your guilty plea and then either go to trial or enter into another plea bargain. A conditional plea cannot be made without the approval of the court and the prosecutor.⁶⁰ Note that conditional pleas are not valid in many states and most federal appeals courts.⁶¹ In these jurisdictions, even if the trial court allows you to enter a conditional plea, appellate courts have held that conditional pleas are invalid on appeal, because a guilty plea automatically forfeits the right to appeal any non-jurisdictional (outside of your court's area of control) issue, such as an evidentiary error.⁶²

Keep in mind that it is riskier for you to bargain for a specific sentence than it is for you to bargain for reduced charges. This is because when you bargain for a plea to a lesser offense, you immediately receive the benefit of the plea, but when you bargain for a specific sentence, there is a chance that the judge might not agree to the prosecutor's recommendation.

New York generally refuses to enforce off-the-record promises that a defendant claims were made by the prosecutor.⁶³ Therefore, if prosecutor makes a promise with you about your claims, make sure the promise was an on-the-record promise.⁶⁴ If you accept a plea offer, make sure your agreement is in writing and is as thorough as possible, describing in specific detail your obligations and the 58. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(c)(1)(B); People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 242, 318 N.E.2d 784, 794, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 639 (1974).

59. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(a)(2).

60. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(a)(2).

61. People v. Thomas, 53 N.Y.2d 338, 343, 424 N.E.2d 537, 539, 441 N.Y.S.2d 650, 654 (1981) (noting that states and federal circuits are "about evenly divided on the acceptability of such pleas" and that the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Ninth Circuits have disapproved such pleas (citing United States v. Sepe, 486 F.2d 1044 (5th Cir. 1973); United States v. Cox, 464 F.2d 937 (6th Cir. 1972); United States v. Benson, 579 F.2d 508 (9th Cir. 1978))); see also People v. Di Donato, 87 N.Y.2d 992, 993, 665 N.E.2d 186, 187, 642 N.Y.S.2d 616, 617 (1996) (stating that conditional pleas are generally not allowed in New York); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §710.70[2]. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 710.70(2) (McKinney 2011) maintains that denial of a motion to suppress evidence may be reviewed upon appeal from a conviction judgement even if that judgement is entered upon a guilty plea.

62. See People v. Di Raffaele, 55 N.Y.2d 234, 240–241, 433 N.E.2d 513, 515–516, 448 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450–451 (1982) (In this case, the court saw no reason to disagree with People v. Thomas where the issue was the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the charge against the defendant.); see also People v. Thomas, 74 A.D.2d 317, 324–325, 428 N.Y.S.2d 20, 26 (2d Dept. 1980) (interpreting case law as not allowing conditional pleas that try to preserve issues which no longer matter to the case after the defendant admits that he actually did the crime he is accused of doing).

63. See Siegel v. New York, 691 F.2d 620, 624 (2d Cir. 1982) (stating that, "with the exception of unusual cases, off-the-record promises made by the prosecutor or the court are a nullity and, accordingly, the defendant may not reasonably rely upon them; the defendant is entitled to rely only on recorded promises.").

64. See People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 244, 318 N.E.2d 784, 795, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 639 (1974) (articulating the "desirability of having as complete a record as possible of the agreements and promises which have led to a guilty plea").

prosecutor's obligations.⁶⁵ The written agreement should contain every term that you have agreed upon.⁶⁶ Your agreement should also describe what will happen if you or the prosecution breaks the agreement. Make sure you completely understand every part of the agreement and have read the agreement closely. You also have a right to help from your attorney.⁶⁷

2. Rights Waivers

Many prosecutors will require you to say that you waive certain rights in your plea bargain, and the courts will enforce your waivers.⁶⁸ Some prosecutors require you to waive your right to appeal your conviction, and the courts will generally uphold this waiver, provided it was accepted voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently.⁶⁹ If you waive your right to appeal when you accept a plea bargain, not only will you lose the claims that are automatically forfeited by entering a guilty plea, but you will also waive the right to appeal based on many of the claims that were not initially waived by the guilty plea. An appeals waiver, however, does not completely prevent your right to appeal, and you still can challenge the constitutionality of your sentence.⁷⁰

65. See generally State v. Frey, 817 N.W.2d 436, 343 Wis.2d 358, (Wis. 2012) ("The plea agreement should be reduced to writing if at all possible"); Booth v. State, 174 P.3d 171, 179 (Wyo. 2008) ("It is, unfortunate, if not inexcusable, that a plea bargain of this magnitude ... was not reduced to writing so that its perimeters could be better understood").

66. See generally State v. Frey, 817 N.W.2d 436, 343 Wis.2d 358, (Wis. 2012) ("The plea agreement should be reduced to writing if at all possible"); Booth v. State, 174 P.3d 171, 179 (Wyo. 2008) ("It is, unfortunate, if not inexcusable, that a plea bargain of this magnitude ... was not reduced to writing so that its perimeters could be better understood").

67. Missouri v. Frye, 566 U.S. 134, 143–144, 132 S. Ct. 1399, 1407–1408, 182 L. Ed. 2d 379, 389–390 (2012) (holding that the Sixth Amendment guarantees a defendant the right to counsel at all critical stages of the criminal proceeding, including the plea-bargaining phase); Lafler v. Cooper, 566 U.S. 156, 165–167, 132 S. Ct. 1376, 1385–1387, 182 L. Ed. 2d 398, 408–410 (2012) ("Its protections are not designed simply to protect the trial, even though 'counsel's absence [in these stages] may derogate from the accused's right to a fair trial.'"); see U.S. CONST. amend. VI.

68. See Schick v. United States, 195 U.S. 65, 72, 24 S. Ct. 826, 828, 49 L. Ed. 99, 103 (1904) (stating that accused can waive any right if there is no constitutional or statutory mandate and no public policy prohibits it), cited in People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 7, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1024, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 970 (1989). These waivers are enforced with the understanding that the defendant bargained away these rights, in addition to the right to a trial, in order to receive a more favorable sentence. Once the more favorable sentence is received, the defendant must uphold his end of the bargain. See also United States v. Mezzanatto, 513 U.S. 196, 201, 115 S. Ct. 797, 801, 130 L. Ed. 2d 697, 704 (1995) ("A criminal defendant may knowingly and voluntarily waive many of the most fundamental protections afforded by the Constitution."). This case also stands for the proposition that rights guaranteed to defendants under the Federal Rules of Evidence are waivable. See also Ricketts v. Adamson, 483 U.S. 1, 10, 107 S. Ct. 2680, 2685, 97 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11–12 (1987) (finding that the double jeopardy defense is waivable by pretrial agreement); Newton v. Rumery, 480 U.S. 386, 394, 107 S. Ct. 1187, 94 L. Ed. 2d 405 (1987) (stating that a defendant may knowingly and voluntarily waive their right to bring a § 1983 action pursuant to a plea agreement); Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279 (1969) (knowing and voluntary guilty plea waives privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, right to jury trial, and right to confront one's accusers); Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 465, 58 S. Ct. 1019, 1023, 82 L. Ed. 1461, 1467 (1938) (holding that Sixth Amendment right to counsel may be waived).

69. United States v. Bushert, 997 F.2d 1343, 1351 (11th Cir. 1993) (holding that in most circumstances a judge must specifically discuss rights waiver with defendant for the defendant's waiver to be knowing and voluntary); People v. Moissett, 76 N.Y.2d 909, 911, 564 N.E.2d 653, 654, 563 N.Y.S.2d 43, 44 (1990) (upholding appeals waiver that was accepted knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently).

70. See People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 9–10, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1026, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972 (1989) (holding defendant can still challenge the legality of the sentence or the voluntariness of the plea even after waiving the right to appeal).

Additionally, you cannot waive certain rights because of “society’s interest in the integrity of criminal process.”⁷¹ These non-waivable rights include the constitutional right to a speedy trial,⁷² the right to challenge the legality of the sentence,⁷³ or the right to be examined to determine if you are competent to stand trial.⁷⁴ However, even if you explicitly waived these rights in your plea agreement, the courts will not enforce the waiver, and you can challenge your case if one of these rights was violated.

3. Prosecutorial Discrimination in Plea Bargaining

Because there is no constitutional right to a plea bargain, prosecutors have wide discretion to decide whether or not to negotiate with you. Prosecutors are not required to offer you the same bargain they offer another defendant who was charged with the same crime under similar circumstances. However, prosecutors cannot treat you differently from other defendants because of an “impermissible classification,” such as race, gender, religion, or ethnicity.⁷⁵ Unfortunately, challenges to convictions based on discrimination in plea bargaining are not often successful. This is because it is difficult to prove the decision was based on an impermissible classification rather than any other reason.⁷⁶ If you believe the prosecutor has discriminated against you in the plea bargaining process, you should raise this issue before the trial begins and not while you are being sentenced. You should provide precise and specific evidence to support your discrimination claim.⁷⁷

D. Court Acceptance of a Plea Bargain

Once you reach a plea agreement with the prosecutor, it must be approved by the court.⁷⁸ The judge may accept one of the three possible forms of sentencing agreements in a plea bargain. In an open plea, the judge will not make any sentencing promises but has the ability to impose any punishment that is allowed for the charges to which you are pleading guilty. In a “cap plea,” the judge will agree not to exceed a certain maximum punishment if you plead guilty. In a “sentence agreement plea,” the judge agrees to impose the sentence that you and the prosecutor agreed upon in the plea bargain. However, although the prosecutor may not ask for a different sentence than the one you agreed upon, the judge has the power to impose a different sentence if he thinks that sentence you and the prosecutor agreed upon is inappropriate.⁷⁹ Whether the judge accepts the prosecutor’s sentence

71. People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 111, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 49 (1992).

72. People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 314–315, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764–765, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 462 (1974) (holding that a defendant cannot waive his right to a speedy trial).

73. People v. Francabandera, 33 N.Y.2d 429, 434 n.2, 310 N.E.2d 292, 294 n.2, 354 N.Y.S.2d 609, 612 n.2 (1974); People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 203, 269 N.E.2d 794, 798, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 80 (1971).

74. See People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 332 N.E.2d 870, 874, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 697 (1975).

75. United States v. Bell, 506 F.2d 207, 221–222, 165 U.S. App. D.C. 146, 160–161 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (stating that defendants must show a disparity in plea offers based on a constitutionally-suspect standard, such as race, gender, or religion).

76. See United States v. Alcaraz-Peralta, 27 F.3d 439, 444 (9th Cir. 1994) (reversing District Court’s determination that prosecutor discriminated in plea bargaining when defendant showed similarly situated female defendants received a significantly lesser sentence bargain than males, because defendant failed to meet burden of proving intentional gender discrimination); United States v. Moody, 778 F.2d 1380, 1386 (9th Cir. 1985) (denying defendants’ appeals because they could not prove they were intentionally singled out because of race or another classification when the prosecutor entered a bargain with only one defendant).

77. See United States v. Redondo-Lemos, 27 F.3d 439, 442 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding that more than “minimal evidence” is needed for a finding of intentional discrimination).

78. People v. Huertas, 85 N.Y.2d 898, 899, 650 N.E.2d 408, 408, 626 N.Y.S.2d 750, 751 (1995); see N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(3), (4) (McKinney 2014); see also FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(c)(3).

79. See People v. Farrar, 52 N.Y.2d 302, 305–306, 419 N.E.2d 864, 865, 437 N.Y.S.2d 961, 962 (1981). Many judges are hesitant to accept a sentence agreement plea because it removes their power to impose a sentence. In this situation, the defendant may seek a pre-plea investigation, which will be conducted by the probation department. Following the investigation, the judge will determine what sentence would be imposed if the defendant entered a guilty plea. See People v. Louis, 161 Misc. 2d 667, 675 n.6, 614 N.Y.S.2d 888, 893 n.6 (Sup.

recommendations depends on whether that sentence is lawful and appropriate in light of the pre-sentence report and other relevant information.⁸⁰ The judge may accept or reject the agreement, but if he rejects it, you must be offered the opportunity to withdraw your guilty plea.⁸¹

1. Constitutional Requirements for Accepting a Guilty Plea

Before the court accepts a plea bargain, the judge must be sure that it meets certain requirements that are protected by the Federal constitution. Specifically, the judge must confirm that your guilty plea is entered “knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently.”⁸² In most courts, the judge will address you and ask you a number of questions to determine whether your guilty plea was entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently. The judge will confirm that you are not agreeing to the plea bargain because you were coerced or promised something other than what is stated in the plea agreement.⁸³ To be “coerced” is to be persuaded to do something with the use of force or threats. When ensuring that your plea is constitutional, the judge will also make sure that the facts of the case support your plea,⁸⁴ that you understand the nature of the charges against you,⁸⁵ that you understand the rights you are giving up by pleading guilty,⁸⁶ and that you know the possible penalties.⁸⁷

Before a trial court can accept a guilty plea, the court must confirm that the plea meets the constitutional requirements. The court will do this by reviewing the terms of the plea agreement and the reasonableness of the bargain. In addition, the court will consider your age, experience, and background.⁸⁸ If you enter a plea bargain because you were promised a particular sentence, this must appear on the court record at the time you enter the plea.⁸⁹ This is necessary to prove that the plea was entered with your knowledge and consent.⁹⁰

Ct. N.Y. County 1994).

80. People v. Farrar, 52 N.Y.2d 302, 306, 419 N.E.2d 864, 865–866, 437 N.Y.S.2d 961, 962–963 (1981).

81. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(c)(5)(B); People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 241, 318 N.E.2d 784, 793, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 635 (1974).

82. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243 n.5, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712 n.5, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 280 n.5 (1969); Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 748, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1469, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 756 (1970) (holding that “waivers of constitutional rights not only must be voluntary but must be knowing, intelligent acts done with sufficient awareness of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences”); People v. Harris, 61 N.Y.2d 9, 17–18, 459 N.E.2d 170, 174, 471 N.Y.S.2d 61, 65 (1983) (trial judge accepting guilty plea has vital responsibility to make sure that accused has full understanding of what the plea means and its consequences).

83. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(b)(2); Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 755, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1472, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 760 (1970).

84. See People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6–7, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466–467 (1988).

85. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(b)(1)(G); People v. Moore, 71 N.Y.2d 1002, 1005, 525 N.E.2d 740, 741–742, 530 N.Y.S.2d 94, 95–96 (1988) (citing Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 645 n.13, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2257 n.13, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 114 n.13 (1976)).

86. Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 645 n.13, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2257 n.13, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 114 n.13 (1976).

87. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(b)(1)(H)–(J); see People v. Camacho, 102 A.D.2d 728, 728–729, 476 N.Y.S.2d 566, 567–568 (1st Dept. 1984) (allowing defendant to withdraw guilty plea because convicting court misstated the maximum permissible sentence due to mistake about defendant’s age). But see People v. Garcia, 92 N.Y.2d 869, 870–871, 700 N.E.2d 311, 677 N.Y.S.2d 772 (1998) (holding awareness of possible penalties is only one factor to consider when determining voluntariness of the plea; it is not dispositive).

88. See People v. Hidalgo, 91 N.Y.2d 733, 736, 698 N.E.2d 46, 47, 675 N.Y.S.2d 327, 328 (1998) (citing People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 11, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1026–1027, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972–973 (1989)).

89. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.50(5) (McKinney 2014).

90. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.50(5) (McKinney 2014); see People v. Davey, 193 A.D.2d 1108, 1108–1109, 598 N.Y.S.2d 637, 638 (4th Dept. 1993) (granting defendant ability to withdraw from guilty plea because judge should not have sentenced defendant based on an unclear sentence agreement without allowing him opportunity to withdraw guilty plea).

If your guilty plea is not entered “knowing, voluntary, and intelligent”, you may challenge your conviction.⁹¹ Challenging your conviction allows the court to take another look at your case. Even if there was strong evidence of your guilt, a conviction that comes from a coerced or uninformed guilty plea is unconstitutional.⁹² The court will not believe that you have waived any of your constitutional rights unless there is evidence that you “intelligently and understandingly rejected” those rights.⁹³ To preserve a claim that the plea was not knowing, voluntary, or intelligent, you should file a motion with the judge that accepted your plea. If you have entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere and would like to withdraw the plea, the timing of the withdrawal is important. If the court has not accepted the plea yet, you may withdraw the plea at any time for any reason or no reason.⁹⁴ If the court has accepted the plea, but not imposed a sentence yet, you may withdraw the plea if the court has rejected a plea agreement or you can show a fair and just reason for requesting the withdrawal.⁹⁵ After a sentence is imposed, a plea cannot be withdrawn and can only be set aside on a direct appeal or a collateral attack where one tries to overturn a judgment in a proceeding that is not the original action or an appeal from the original action.⁹⁶ New York law demands that before you challenge your plea, you give the trial court an opportunity to correct any mistake they may have made.⁹⁷ You can do this either at the plea proceeding by asking that the plea be vacated,⁹⁸ or you can file a motion to vacate judgment.⁹⁹ To vacate a plea is to withdraw it because it was not entered voluntarily or knowingly.

2. Factors Making a Plea Not Voluntary, Knowing, or Intelligent

(a) Coercion

Your guilty plea must be entered voluntarily, which means that you were not threatened or forced by the court, the prosecutor, or your defense attorney.¹⁰⁰ The judge will ask you about the facts of the crime to determine if your plea was voluntary. If your statement of the facts raises doubt about whether you are actually guilty, the court must ask additional questions before accepting your plea.¹⁰¹ The judge’s questions confirm that you entered the plea agreement on your own free will.¹⁰² If you

91. See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 243, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 1712, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274, 279–280 (1969) (affirming that, on the face of the record, it was erroneous for a trial judge to accept a petitioner’s guilty plea without an affirmative showing that it was intelligent or voluntary); see also Tollett v. Henderson, 411 U.S. 258, 267, 93 S. Ct. 1602, 1608, 36 L. Ed. 2d 235, 243 (1973) (holding that defendant can only attack voluntary and intelligent character of guilty plea, and cannot raise an independent claim after making the plea that he was deprived of constitutional rights prior to entering the plea).

92. See Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 644–645, 96 S. Ct. 2553, 2557–2258, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 114 (1976).

93. See People v. Harris, 61 N.Y.2d 9, 17, 459 N.E.2d 170, 173, 471 N.Y.S.2d 61, 64 (1983) (holding that waiver of constitutional rights, required by a guilty plea, cannot be presumed from a silent record).

94. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(d)(1).

95. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(d)(2).

96. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(e).

97. See People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 665–666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466 (1988) (“In order for there to be a question of law reviewable by this court, the trial court generally must have been given an opportunity to correct any error in the proceedings below at a time when the issue can be dealt with most effectively.”).

98. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.60(3) (McKinney 2014).

99. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 (McKinney 2005).

100. Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 750, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1470, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 757 (1970) (state may encourage guilty plea, but the plea cannot be produced by actual or threatened physical harm or by mental coercion overbearing the defendant’s will).

101. People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6–7, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466–467 (1988) (stating that “where a defendant’s factual recitation negates an essential element of the crime pleaded to, the court may not accept the plea without making further inquiry to ensure that defendant understands the nature of the charge and that the plea is intelligently entered”).

102. People v. Murphy, 243 A.D.2d 954, 955, 663 N.Y.S.2d 378, 379 (3d Dept. 1997) (affirming County Court’s decision to deny defendant’s motion to withdraw the guilty plea because court had conducted sufficient later claim that you did not enter the plea voluntarily or you want to challenge the constitutionality of the plea, the judge will need to find enough evidence in the record that supports your claims.¹⁰³

The court cannot force you to accept a plea bargain by threatening to give you a harsher sentence if you decide to go to trial.¹⁰⁴ However, if the sentence you receive after trial is higher than the sentence offered to you during plea negotiations, that is not a sign that you were punished for choosing to have a trial.¹⁰⁵ Unless the sentence you were given after trial is much higher than the plea offer, or the sentence does not match the crime you were convicted of, your constitutional rights have not been violated.¹⁰⁶ The court may tell you, in advance, of the possible sentences you would receive if convicted on the charges at trial.¹⁰⁷ The court is acting coercively if it told you that you will receive the highest sentence if you go to trial, but a much lighter sentence if you plead guilty.¹⁰⁸ However, the Court requiring that you accept or decline a plea offer within a short period of time is not considered coercive.¹⁰⁹

Guilty pleas that are entered because of threats or deception by the prosecutor cannot be a knowing, voluntary, and intelligent agreement.¹¹⁰ However, the prosecutor does control the charges against you, and during plea negotiations, the prosecutor may increase the charges or seek additional inquiry when allocution called into question the voluntariness of the guilty plea and defendant denied being coerced or threatened).

103. See, e.g., People v. Sung Min, 249 A.D.2d 130, 131–132, 671 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481 (1st Dept. 1998) (holding that defendant's motion to withdraw plea should have been granted because his allegations of coercion were supported by the record. The record showed that the lower court wrongly burdened the defendant's right to a trial by telling defendant that he would "receive the maximum sentence, or maximum consecutive sentences, after trial, but a significantly lighter sentence after a plea," which was inaccurate); People v. Tien, 228 A.D.2d 280, 281, 643 N.Y.S.2d 345, 345 (1st Dept. 1996); People v. Jimenez, 179 A.D.2d 840, 840, 579 N.Y.S.2d 173, 174 (3d Dept. 1992) (affirming lower court's decision to deny defendant's motion to appeal because the record did not support defendant's claim "that the court 'threatened' to impose a greater sentence if defendant opted to go to trial").

104. See People v. Christian, 139 A.D.2d 896, 897, 527 N.Y.S.2d 1020, 1021 (4th Dept. 1988) ("To capitulate and enter a plea under a threat of an 'or else' can hardly be regarded as the result of the voluntary bargaining process between the defendant and the People sanctioned by propriety and practice") (quoting People v. Picciotti, 4 N.Y.2d 340, 344, 151 N.E.2d 191, 194, 175 N.Y.S.2d 32, 35 (1958)); People v. Wilson, 245 A.D.2d 161, 163, 666 N.Y.S.2d 164, 165–166 (1st Dept. 1997) (finding judge's statement that defendant would receive greater sentence if convicted at trial, rather than could receive a greater sentence, was a virtual promise of an increased sentence and coerced defendant to plead guilty).

105. People v. Patterson, 483 N.Y.S.2d 55, 57, 106 A.D.2d 520, 521 (2d Dept. 1984). See People v. Pena, 50 N.Y.2d 400, 412, 406 N.E.2d 1347, 1353, 429 N.Y.S.2d 410, 416 (1980) (holding that court was free, after finding defendant guilty at trial, to impose a greater term of imprisonment than the sentence offered in the plea bargain context).

106. See People v. Howard, 217 A.D.2d 530, 530, 629 N.Y.S.2d 765, 765 (1st Dept. 1995) (holding that defendant was punished for exercising his right to a trial because he was sentenced based on the facts of uncharged crimes rather than the crime for which he was convicted); People v. Cosme, 203 A.D.2d 375, 376, 610 N.Y.S.2d 293, 294 (2d Dept. 1994) (finding that defendant was punished for exercising his right to a trial on two remaining charges when judge imposed a harsher sentence for the first charged crime than the judge had offered for all three charges).

107. People v. Tien, 228 A.D.2d 280, 281, 643 N.Y.S.2d 345 (1st Dept. 1996) (affirming conviction because judge's informing defendant of possible sentences under the indictment was not coercion); People v. Jimenez, 179 A.D.2d 840, 840, 579 N.Y.S.2d 173, 174 (3d Dept. 1992) (finding that the reality that trial may expose defendant to a harsher sentence is not sufficient to establish coercion).

108. People v. Sung Min, 249 A.D.2d 130, 132, 671 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481 (1st Dept. 1998) (a court wrongly burdens the defendant's exercise of his right to trial when it indicates he will receive the maximum sentence, or maximum consecutive sentences, after trial, but a significantly lighter sentence after a plea.).

109. People v. Lesame, 239 A.D.2d 801, 802, 657 N.Y.S.2d 544, 545 (3d Dept. 1997); People v. Eaddy, 200 A.D.2d 896, 897, 606 N.Y.S.2d 928, 929 (3d Dept. 1994).

110. See People v. Jones, 44 N.Y.2d 76, 81, 375 N.E.2d 41, 44, 404 N.Y.S.2d 85, 88 (1978) (citing People v. O'Neill, 7 N.Y.2d 867, 164 N.E.2d 869, 196 N.Y.S.2d 998 (1959)).

charges if you do not plead guilty.¹¹¹ As long as you have the choice to accept or reject the prosecutor's offer, the offer is not coercion.¹¹²

It is not coercion if your defense attorney encourages you to accept a plea agreement that is favorable to you, as long as the plea was made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily.¹¹³ A favorable plea agreement is one that benefits you or is in your best interest to accept. However, the court may hold a hearing if there is evidence that your defense attorney forced you to plead guilty and you later made a motion to withdraw your plea.¹¹⁴

(b) Duress

Your guilty plea may not be voluntary if you entered the plea under circumstances of duress.¹¹⁵ Circumstances of duress include situations where you were threatened or otherwise forced to plead guilty. If you are claiming that you were under duress, your claim must be well supported by evidence in the record.¹¹⁶ Even if duress was only part of the reason for your plea, you must still be given the option to withdraw your plea.¹¹⁷ The situation causing duress must be serious enough to make your decision involuntary or unintelligent.¹¹⁸ Simply claiming to be frightened or upset at the time of your plea will not be enough to constitute duress. Further, fear of the death penalty is also not enough to

111. United States v. Goodwin, 457 U.S. 368, 381–382, 102 S. Ct. 2485, 2493, 73 L. Ed. 2d 74, 86 (1982) (After initially expressing an interest in pleading on misdemeanor charges, respondent decided not to plead guilty and requested a trial by jury. While the misdemeanor charges were still pending, the prosecutor brought a felony charge arising out of the same incident as the misdemeanor charges. Respondent moved to set aside the verdict on the ground of prosecutorial vindictiveness, but the Court held that the prosecutor was allowed to increase the charges).

112. Bordenkircher v. Hayes, 434 U.S. 357, 363, 98 S. Ct. 663, 668, 54 L. Ed. 2d 604, 611 (1978) (holding no constitutional violation occurred when prosecutor re-indicted defendant for a more serious offense after defendant refused to plead guilty). But see Blackledge v. Perry, 417 U.S. 21, 28–29, 94 S. Ct. 2098, 2103, 40 L. Ed. 2d 628, 635 (1974) (holding prosecutor who sought higher charges on retrial violated constitutional rights of defendant by coercing him not to exercise right to a new trial).

113. See, e.g., People v. Babcock, 304 A.D.2d 912, 913, 758 N.Y.S.2d 412, 414 (3d Dept. 2003) (holding that “counsel’s advice to accept the plea offer to avoid the possibility of a harsher sentence after trial does not, contrary to defendant’s contention, constitute undue pressure or coercion”); People v. Coco, 220 A.D.2d 312, 313, 650 N.Y.S. 2d 636 (1st Dept. 1995) (finding no coercion where defendant claimed he was “almost forced” by his attorney to accept a favorable plea offer because of evidence on record that plea was voluntary, knowing, and intelligent); People v. Franklin, 211 A.D.2d 453, 453, 621 N.Y.S.2d 857, 857 (1st Dept. 1995) (finding no coercion when defendant claimed he “felt pressured” to plead guilty, because the allocution showed the plea was voluntary, knowing, and intelligent).

114. People v. Gonzalez, 171 A.D.2d 413, 414, 566 N.Y.S.2d 639, 640 (1st Dept. 1991) (remanding for a hearing because the record was too incomplete to determine if the plea was coerced by counsel and because the evidence raised a question of attorney conflict of interest).

115. See People v. Flowers, 30 N.Y.2d 315, 319, 284 N.E.2d 557, 558–559, 333 N.Y.S.2d 393, 395–396 (1972) (finding that defendant suffered duress during guilty plea because of sexual abuse and beatings in local jail; after entering guilty plea, defendant inquired if he could finally be moved to another jail).

116. See People v. Flowers, 30 N.Y.2d 315, 317, 284 N.E.2d 557, 557, 333 N.Y.S.2d 393, 394 (1972) (“[Duress] is ... often asserted, and entitled more often than not to short shrift when supported only by the convicted defendant’s say-so.” Evidence in the record was sufficient to show duress, as it showed “that prison conditions were intolerable in that defendant was sexually abused, beaten, and in potential danger of his life, so long as he remained in the local jail.”); People v. Nash, 288 A.D.2d 937, 937, 732 N.Y.S.2d 201, 201 (4th Dept. 2001) (refusing to allow defendant to withdraw a plea based on a duress claim because defendant’s allegation of having been beaten in the holding center was not supported in the record).

117. People v. Flowers, 30 N.Y.2d 315, 319, 284 N.E.2d 557, 559, 333 N.Y.S.2d 393, 395 (1972) (finding it “immaterial that the hearing court did not believe that the alleged duress was the only motivation for the plea”) (emphasis added).

118. See People v. Wood, 207 A.D.2d 1001, 1001, 617 N.Y.S.2d 248, 249 (4th Dept. 1994) (finding that the defendant was frightened and upset when he entered the plea was not enough to qualify as an involuntary or unintelligent decision.)

render your guilty plea unconstitutional.¹¹⁹ The United States Supreme Court has found that a guilty plea encouraged by fear of the death penalty is not considered involuntary.¹²⁰

(c) Not Understanding the Charges

If you do not know or understand the charges against you, your plea cannot be voluntary and intelligent.¹²¹ To determine whether you fully understand the charges, the court will see if the acts that you say you have committed and the crime you are pleading guilty to are similar.¹²² This is done in the “plea allocution” or “plea colloquy,” where the court will ask you to admit the facts of your case that are the necessary elements of the crime you are charged with.¹²³ Elements of a crime describe what must happen for a person to be charged and convicted of the crime. If your description of what occurred raises doubt that you are guilty of the crime you are charged with, the court must go further to determine whether you understand the charges you are pleading guilty to.¹²⁴ If you do not or will not admit a fact that is an element of the crime, the judge should not accept your guilty plea without asking for further clarification.¹²⁵ The judge may not ask for further clarification if it can easily be inferred from the facts, however.

However, if you plead guilty to a lesser crime than the one you were charged with originally, the court does not have to match the facts of your case with the elements required for the lesser charge.¹²⁶ Additionally, if you plead guilty while insisting that you are innocent or do not recall the crime, the court may sentence you without requiring you to admit the facts making up the crime. To do so, however, your plea must be entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently.¹²⁷ If the court is aware of a possible defense that can be raised in your case, the judge must inform you of it and determine that you knowingly waive the defense.¹²⁸

119. People v. Van Dyne, 179 Misc. 2d 467, 469, 685 N.Y.S.2d 591, 593 (Co. Ct. Monroe County 1999) (reversed on other grounds by People v. Van Dyne, 12 A.D.3d 120, 784 N.Y.S.2d 795 (4th Dept. 2004); See also Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 758, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1474, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 762 (1970) (holding that where defendant was advised by competent counsel and tendered his plea after his codefendant, who had already given a confession, defendant's plea of guilty was not rendered involuntary because he was gripped by fear of the death penalty).)

120. Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 747, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1468, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 756 (1970).

121. People v. Moore, 71 N.Y.2d 1002, 1005, 525 N.E.2d 740, 741, 530 N.Y.S.2d 94, 95 (1988) (citing Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 644–645 n.13, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2257 n.13, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 114 n.13 (1976)). See also Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 618–619, 118 S. Ct. 1604, 1609, 140 L. Ed. 2d 828, 837 (1998) (stating that if neither defendant, nor his counsel, nor the trial court correctly understood the essential elements of the crime with which defendant was charged, defendant's guilty plea would be invalid under due process clause).

122. See People v. Serrano, 15 N.Y.2d 304, 308, 206 N.E.2d 330, 332, 258 N.Y.S.2d 386, 388–389 (1965).

123. See People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 664–665, 525 N.E.2d 5, 5–6, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 465–466 (1988); see also People v. Zeth, 148 A.D.2d 960–961, 538 N.Y.S.2d 963, 964 (4th Dept. 1989) (finding admission of the facts necessary for each offense to which defendant pleaded guilty).

124. People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6–7, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466–467 (1988).

125. See People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 666 n.2, 525 N.E.2d 5, 7 n.2, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 467 n.2 (1988) (noting that an indication that a guilty plea is “improvident or baseless” may trigger a judge to inquire further).

126. People v. Clairborne, 29 N.Y.2d 950, 951, 280 N.E.2d 366, 367, 329 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581 (1972) (holding that “a bargained guilty plea to a lesser crime makes unnecessary a factual basis for the particular crime confessed”). See also People v. Anderson, 63 A.D.3d 1617, 1617, 879 N.Y.S.2d 784, 784 (4th Dept. 2009) (applying the Clairborne rule).

127. This is called an Alford plea. See North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 37–38, 91 S. Ct. 160, 167–168, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162, 171–172 (1970) (affirming conviction of defendant who could not recall the events surrounding the crime, but confronted with overwhelming evidence against him, knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently pleaded guilty to a lesser charge); People v. Francabandera, 33 N.Y.2d 429, 434–435, 310 N.E.2d 292, 294, 354 N.Y.S.2d 609, 612–613 (1974) (applying the Alford rule where a defendant pleaded guilty to a lesser crime even though he did not remember committing the crime and finding that defendant's plea was voluntary and intelligent).

128. People v. Costanza, 244 A.D.2d 988, 989, 665 N.Y.S.2d 487, 488 (4th Dept. 1997); see also People v.

While the court will try to make sure that you understand your charges during the plea discussion, the court will consider all of the circumstances surrounding your plea. Failure to admit to an element of the crime may not raise a constitutional question if the court determines that you understood the nature of the charges against you and that you voluntarily and intelligently pleaded guilty to the charges.¹²⁹ Your defense counsel's explanation of the nature of the offense may also be enough to guarantee that you understand the nature of the charges.¹³⁰

(d) Not Understanding the Consequences of a Guilty Plea

In order to plead guilty, you must understand the rights you are giving up by doing so.¹³¹ In most states, the trial judge will inform you of your rights and ask you to acknowledge that you are waiving these rights. The judge is not required to read any specific list of rights that you are giving up before the judge accepts your guilty plea. The judge must make sure, however, that you were not pressured into a plea, that you know what you are doing, and that you generally understand the rights you give up by pleading guilty.¹³² If your defense counsel explains the consequences of a guilty plea, that explanation may be enough to ensure your plea is knowledgeable and intelligent.¹³³ In addition to the "direct consequences" of your guilty plea, if you are not a United States citizen, your defense counsel must inform you of the risk of deportation.¹³⁴

However, the judge is only required to make sure you know the direct consequences of your plea, not the collateral consequences.¹³⁵ A "direct consequence" is "one which has a definite, immediate and largely automatic effect on defendant's punishment," such as a prison term or probation.¹³⁶ A "collateral consequence" is something that affects you in particular because of your personal characteristics, such as your immigration or parole status.¹³⁷ Examples of collateral consequences are the "loss of the right to vote or travel abroad, loss of civil service employment, loss of a driver's license, loss of the right to possess firearms, or an undesirable discharge from the Armed Services."¹³⁸

Braman, 136 A.D.2d 382, 384, 527 N.Y.S.2d 104, 105 (3d Dept. 1988) (vacating a guilty plea in part because a defendant's statement to the court, that he was so "loaded" at the time the offense was committed that he had no recollection of the events, not only pertained to the impairment of his ability to honestly admit guilt, but also clearly raised the possibility of an effective defense of intoxication).

129. People v. Moore, 71 N.Y.2d 1002, 1005, 525 N.E.2d 740, 530 N.Y.S.2d 94, 95–96 (1988).

130. See Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 647, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2258–2259, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 115–116 (1976) (finding that it is appropriate in most cases to presume that defendant's attorney explained the nature of the crime in enough detail that defendant understood what he was pleading to, but not where defendant had low mental capacity and where the trial court found as a fact that defendant's attorney did not explain the element of intent).

131. Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 645 n.13, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2257 n.13, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 114 n.13 (1976).

132. See People v. Nixon, 21 N.Y.2d 338, 353, 234 N.E.2d 687, 695–696, 287 N.Y.S.2d 659, 670–671 (1967) (finding that it is up to the court's discretion to decide how far it should go in questioning a defendant before accepting a guilty plea).

133. See People v. Harris, 61 N.Y.2d 9, 16–17, 459 N.E.2d 170, 173, 471 N.Y.S.2d 61, 64 (1983) ("[T]here is no requirement that the Judge conduct a pro forma inquisition in each case on the off-chance that a defendant who is adequately represented by counsel may nevertheless not know what he is doing").

134. Padilla v. Kentucky, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1483, 176 L.Ed.2d 284, 296 (2010) (Defense attorney had a duty to "advise a noncitizen client that pending criminal charges may carry a risk of adverse immigration consequences . . . [and] when the deportation consequence is truly clear . . . the duty to give correct advice is equally clear.").

135. People v. Catu, 4 N.Y.3d 242, 244, 825 N.E.2d 1081, 1082, 792 N.Y.S.2d 887, 888 (2005). See also Zhang v. United States, 506 F.3d 162, 167 (2d Cir. 2007) (stating that a court does not need to "inform a defendant about the 'collateral' consequences of a guilty plea").

136. People v. Ford, 86 N.Y.2d 397, 403, 657 N.E.2d 265, 267, 633 N.Y.S.2d 270, 272 (1995) (overruled on other grounds by People v. Peque, 22 N.Y.3d 168, 3 N.E.3d 617, 980 N.Y.S.2d 280 (2013)).

137. See Part B of this Chapter.

138. People v. Ford, 86 N.Y.2d 397, 403, 657 N.E.2d 265, 267–268, 633 N.Y.S.2d 270, 272–273 (1995) (overruled on other grounds by People v. Peque, 22 N.Y.3d 168, 3 N.E.3d 617, 980 N.Y.S.2d 280 (2013)).

If the judge or your attorney does not tell you about the collateral consequences of a conviction, it will not usually make your plea unknowing, involuntary, or unintelligent.¹³⁹ However, one collateral consequence that your defense counsel must tell you about is the possibility of deportation.¹⁴⁰ Depending on where you live, the trial court may not have to tell you about the risk of deportation, even if your defense counsel does.¹⁴¹

(e) Misrepresentation or Incorrect Information

If you plead guilty based on the judge's or prosecutor's misrepresentation of fact or false information that they provided, your plea was not voluntary and intelligent.¹⁴² To challenge a plea based on "misrepresentation," you must show that you relied on the incorrect information when you entered your guilty plea and that you would have pleaded not guilty and gone to trial if you had received the correct information.¹⁴³ For example, if you received incorrect or misleading sentencing information and you would have pled "not guilty" if you had received the correct information, a guilty plea would not be voluntary, knowing, and intelligent.¹⁴⁴

(f) Broken Promises

If you pleaded guilty because you were persuaded by a promise that was not kept or a misrepresentation by the prosecutor or the court, your plea was not voluntary and not intelligent, and it must either be removed or the promise must be honored.¹⁴⁵ However, the court is not required to choose the sentence that you agreed upon with the prosecutor. But if the court determines the sentence in the plea bargain agreement is not acceptable and should be increased, the court must give you the option to withdraw the plea or accept the harsher sentence.¹⁴⁶ Furthermore, if the court states on the record the sentence it expects to impose when it accepts the guilty plea, the court must grant the 139. People v. Ford, 86 N.Y.2d 397, 403, 657 N.E.2d 265, 267–268, 633 N.Y.S.2d 270, 272–273 (1995).

140. Padilla v. Kentucky, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1483, 176 L.Ed.2d 284, 296 (2010).

141. People v. Carty, 96 A.D.3d 1093, 1097, 947 N.Y.S.2d 617, 621 (3d Dept. 2012) (finding that the trial court is not required to inform the defendant of the risk of deportation). However, in New York, a trial court is "compelled" to let the defendant know of the risk of deportation according to Peque, but even if he is not informed, it does not automatically mean that he is entitled to withdraw his guilty plea. See People v. Peque, 22 N.Y.3d 168, 176 (2013) (finding that a trial court is compelled to tell the defendant that he may be deported if he is not an American citizen, but that he still has to establish "the existence of a reasonable probability that, had the court warned the defendant of the possibility of deportation, he or she would have rejected the plea and opted to go to trial" in order to withdraw the guilty plea).

142. Randall v. Rothwax, 161 A.D.2d 70, 76, 560 N.Y.S.2d 409, 413 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding that "a plea induced by materially false information imparted by a trial judge, has been coerced and cannot be permitted to stand").

143. See for example, People v. Burnett, 221 A.D.2d 355, 355, 633 N.Y.S.2d 365, 366 (2d Dept. 1995) (affirming the court's decision not to permit a withdrawal of the plea based on incorrect sentencing information because the information would not have had an effect on defendant's decision to enter a guilty plea).

144. People v. Gotte, 125 A.D.2d 331, 331, 508 N.Y.S.2d 607, 608 (2d Dept. 1986); People v. Camacho, 102 A.D.2d 728, 729, 476 N.Y.S.2d 566, 567–568 (1st Dept. 1984).

145. People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 241, 318 N.E.2d 784, 793, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 636 (1974) (citing Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 92 S. Ct. 495, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1971)).

146. People v. Michael, 593 N.Y.S.2d 292, 293 (2d Dept. 1993) (finding error when court imposed a greater sentence than agreed to in the plea bargain without permitting defendant to withdraw the plea); People v. Easterling, 191 A.D.2d 579, 580, 594 N.Y.S.2d 805, 807 (2d Dept. 1993) (finding error when the court vacated the guilty plea and ordered a trial, rather than permitting defendant to decide whether or not to maintain the guilty plea). See also People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 238–239, 318 N.E.2d 784, 792, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 634 (1974) (affirming lower court decision that guilty pleas negotiated with the prosecution and entered into in reliance on promised sentences were still valid despite the fact that sentencing courts later imposed harsher sentences, as defendants failed to take advantage of the opportunity given to withdraw their guilty pleas).

sentence unless the pre-sentence report or facts that later become available show that the sentence would not be appropriate.¹⁴⁷

A prosecutor must uphold your plea agreement unless you fail to obey it or other circumstances justify breaking the promise.¹⁴⁸ If you fail to perform promises you made that are part of the plea agreement, the prosecution no longer has to uphold your plea agreement and may re-charge you. The courts often require very strict compliance and complete cooperation with the terms of your plea agreement.¹⁴⁹ A violated plea agreement may not present a double jeopardy issue and allows the government to prosecute even higher charges.¹⁵⁰ “Double jeopardy” prevents a criminal defendant from going to trial twice for the same offense.¹⁵¹

Even if the specific plea agreement is not broken, other circumstances may allow the prosecution to break the bargain, such as committing additional crimes or not appearing for sentencing after the agreement.¹⁵² Some of these circumstances may not allow the court to sentence you to greater punishment than you and the prosecutor accepted in your plea bargain, unless you are given the opportunity to withdraw the plea.¹⁵³ However, if you do not tell the prosecutor relevant information, and that information is discovered, such as a prior felony record or failure to comply with the terms of the agreement, the court may impose a more severe sentence without allowing you to withdraw the plea.¹⁵⁴

The prosecution is free to decide the terms of the plea agreement. For example, the prosecution could require all co-defendants to accept the plea. Additionally, the prosecution may break the plea agreement if the terms are not met.¹⁵⁵ If the court decides to impose a lesser sentence than the prosecutor and you agreed upon, the prosecutor also has the ability to withdraw consent to the plea.¹⁵⁶ Before the court accepts your plea, the prosecutor may withdraw the offer for a plea bargain at any time, without violating your constitutional rights.¹⁵⁷ Normally, the prosecutor will not attempt to withdraw the offer, unless you have violated the agreement, been arrested, or misrepresented your past criminal record. Also, if a prosecutor promises not to recommend a sentence, a prosecutor may

147. People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 240, 318 N.E.2d 784, 793, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 635 (1974) (stating that an opinion of the pleading court as to the prospective sentence was sufficient to constitute a promise by that court).

148. See Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 262, 92 S. Ct. 495, 499, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 433 (1971) (“[W]hen a plea rests in any significant degree on a promise or agreement of the prosecutor, so that it can be said to be part of the inducement or consideration, such promise must be fulfilled.”).

149. See, e.g., Ricketts v. Adamson, 483 U.S. 1, 8–9, 107 S. Ct. 2680, 2684–2685, 97 L. Ed. 2d 1, 10 (1987) (assuming that defendant breached an agreement to testify against co-defendants, even though he testified against them at trial, because he refused to testify when the case was reversed on appeal and remanded for a new trial).

150. See Ricketts v. Adamson, 483 U.S. 1, 8, 107 S. Ct. 2680, 2685, 97 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11 (1987) (holding that defendant’s “breach of the plea arrangement to which the parties had agreed removed the double jeopardy bar to prosecution of respondent on the first-degree murder charge”).

151. U.S. CONST. amend. V.

152. See People v. Gianfrate, 192 A.D.2d 970, 973, 596 N.Y.S.2d 933, 935 (3d Dept. 1993) (affirming court’s decision to impose longer sentence than reached in plea bargain when defendant was clearly informed that failure to appear at sentencing would result in higher sentence, and defendant failed to appear). But see People v. Moreno, 196 A.D.2d 850, 850, 602 N.Y.S.2d 28, 28–29 (2d Dept. 1993) (holding court could not impose lengthier sentence than reached in plea bargain on defendant who did not appear at sentencing but was not informed that she would receive a higher sentence for failing to appear).

153. People v. Annunziata, 105 A.D.2d 709, 709, 481 N.Y.S.2d 148, 149 (2d Dept. 1984).

154. See People v. Da Forno, 73 A.D.2d 893, 895, 424 N.Y.S.2d 195, 197 (1st Dept. 1980).

155. People v. Antonio, 176 A.D.2d 528, 529, 574 N.Y.S.2d 718, 719 (1st Dept. 1991); see also Gribetz v. Edelstein, 66 A.D.2d 788, 788, 410 N.Y.S.2d 873, 874 (2d Dept. 1978) (holding that a district attorney could dictate the terms under which he would consent to accept a plea agreement, which in this case was that both co-defendants must accept his plea bargain or his offer would be withdrawn and consent to the plea withheld).

156. People v. Farrar, 52 N.Y.2d 302, 307–308, 419 N.E.2d 864, 866, 437 N.Y.S.2d 961, 963 (1981).

157. See Mabry v. Johnson, 467 U.S. 504, 510–511, 104 S. Ct. 2543, 2548, 81 L. Ed. 2d 437, 444–445, (1984) (holding that a withdrawn offer could not induce a guilty plea, and a subsequently accepted plea was not the result of government deception).

not recommend a sentence later in court.¹⁵⁸ Even actions by the prosecutor that suggest a possible sentence may be a violation of the agreement by the prosecutor.¹⁵⁹

To avoid disagreements about what promises were made when the guilty plea was entered, the entire plea agreement should precisely and clearly appear in the court record.¹⁶⁰ Promises that do not appear in the record will rarely be enforced.¹⁶¹ Federal courts have held that unclear agreements are generally interpreted against the government and in favor of the defendant.¹⁶²

When you claim that a prosecutor violated an agreement, the major legal question that comes up is if the agreement was actually broken. The courts will not use your personal understanding of the agreement to determine whether it was broken, but will take into account the side of the prosecution as well.¹⁶³

If the prosecutor breaks the agreement, the sentencing court is allowed to determine whether the appropriate remedy is specific performance or withdrawal of the plea.¹⁶⁴ “Specific performance” of a plea agreement requires the government to carry out the original terms of the agreement. A different judge will usually perform the re-sentencing, and the prosecutor will be forced to maintain the plea agreement. If the court allows you to withdraw the plea, you would then go to trial, unless another plea agreement could be reached.

In some situations, specific performance, or an order by a court to perform a specific act, of the plea agreement may be the only means to serve justice.¹⁶⁵ For example, defendants who place themselves in a position of “no return” by carrying out the requirements of a cooperative plea agreement, such as waiving the privilege against self-incrimination or testifying at length against co-defendants, would not be returned to their pre-plea status by a withdrawn plea, and they are therefore entitled to specific performance.¹⁶⁶

158. See Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 262, 92 S. Ct. 495, 499, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 433 (1971) (remanding case and allowing defendant to withdraw plea or be resentenced because prosecutor did not uphold the promise of former prosecutor not to recommend sentence).

159. People v. Tindle, 61 N.Y.2d 752, 753–754, 460 N.E.2d 1354, 1355, 472 N.Y.S.2d 919, 919–920 (1984) (finding that the prosecutor’s description of the case as “very very serious” and reference to defendant’s flight and perjury was essentially a request for a lengthy prison term and in breach of the agreement not to take a position in sentencing). See also People v. Di Tullio, 85 A.D.2d 783, 784, 445 N.Y.S.2d 322, 323–324 (3d Dept. 1981) (finding that prosecutor inadvertently breached the essence of the agreement not to take a part in sentencing when he released information on the crime to the news media).

160. People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 244, 318 N.E.2d 784, 795, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 639 (1974), cited in People v. Davey, 193 A.D.2d 1108, 1108, 598 N.Y.S.2d 637, 638 (4th Dept. 1993).

161. See, for example, People v. Hood, 62 N.Y.2d 863, 865, 466 N.E.2d 161, 161–162, 477 N.Y.S.2d 621, 622 (1984) (holding that defendants were not entitled to specific performance of an alleged plea bargain that was never formally entered on the record, stating that the statements on the record by the prosecutor rejecting the proposed plea bargain at issue were inconsistent with defendants’ contention that there had been an prior off-the-record unconditional acceptance by the People); In re S., 55 N.Y.2d 116, 120–121, 432 N.E.2d 777, 779, 447 N.Y.S.2d 905, 907 (1982) (refusing to recognize an off-the-record promise if it is flatly contradicted by the record, if the defendant stated no other promises were made to induce the guilty plea, or if inconsistent terms appeared in the record).

162. United States v. Cimino, 381 F.3d 124, 127 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that “plea agreements are subject to ordinary contract law principles, except that any ambiguity is resolved ‘strictly against the Government.’” (quoting United States v. Ready, 82 F.3d 551, 559 (2d Cir. 1996)). See also United States v. Giorgi, 840 F.2d 1022, 1026–1027 (1st Cir. 1988) (stating “the government must shoulder a greater degree of responsibility than the defendant for imprecisions or ambiguities in plea agreements.”); United States v. Anglin, 215 F.3d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that “plea agreements are generally construed according to the principles of contract law, and the government, as drafter, must be held to an agreement’s literal terms”).

163. People v. Cataldo, 39 N.Y.2d 578, 580, 349 N.E.2d 863, 864, 384 N.Y.S.2d 763, 763 (1976).

164. Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 263, 92 S. Ct. 495, 499, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 433 (1971).

165. People v. McConnell, 49 N.Y.2d 340, 347–348, 402 N.E.2d 133, 136, 425 N.Y.S.2d 794, 797–798 (1980).

166. People v. Danny G., 61 N.Y.2d 169, 171–172, 461 N.E.2d 268, 268–269, 473 N.Y.S.2d 131, 131–132 (1984); People v. McConnell, 49 N.Y.2d 340, 347–348, 402 N.E.2d 133, 136, 425 N.Y.S.2d 794, 797–798 (1980).

(g) Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

If your defense attorney inappropriately advised you to plead guilty and you can prove ineffective assistance of counsel, your plea may not meet the constitutional standards of “knowing, voluntary, and intelligent.”¹⁶⁷ Simply being unsatisfied or unhappy with your assigned counsel will not make your guilty plea involuntary or unknowing.¹⁶⁸ To prove “ineffective assistance of counsel,” you must show:

- (1) The advice of your counsel did not meet the competency standard required of attorneys in criminal cases,¹⁶⁹ and
- (2) If your counsel had not made these errors, there would have been a reasonable possibility that you would have pleaded “not guilty” and demanded a trial.¹⁷⁰

If you did not accept the agreement because your defense attorney did not give you adequate advice, you must show that if you did not receive ineffective advice from your counsel, there is a reasonable chance that:

- (1) The plea offer would have been presented to the court (in other words, the defendant would have accepted the plea and the prosecution would not have withdrawn it in light of intervening circumstances), and
- (2) That the court would have accepted its terms, and
- (3) The conviction or sentence, or both, under the offer’s terms would have been better than under the judgment and sentence that in fact were imposed.¹⁷¹

If the court finds that your attorney’s performance did not affect the plea bargaining process, the court will assume that your plea was entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently.¹⁷² This decision means that you will have waived any non-jurisdictional claims on which you could have appealed your conviction, including ineffective assistance of counsel.

A claim of ineffective assistance of counsel may exist in plea bargaining cases where counsel was not aware of the applicable law and unable to advise the defendant if it was best to accept a plea bargain¹⁷³ or where the defense attorney did not place the terms of the plea bargain on the record.¹⁷⁴ The claim may also exist where an attorney did not communicate the existence of a plea offer to the defendant, even when the defendant maintained his innocence and wanted to go to trial.¹⁷⁵

You do not have a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel with respect to plea bargaining if:

- (1) Your defense counsel held a reasonable but incorrect interpretation of the applicable criminal law;¹⁷⁶

167. Brady v. United States, 397 U.S. 742, 748–749, 90 S. Ct. 1463, 1469, 25 L. Ed. 2d 747, 756–757 (1970). See JLM, Chapter 12, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.”

168. People v. Artis, 199 A.D.2d 839, 840, 605 N.Y.S.2d 545, 546 (3d Dept. 1993).

169. Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 56–57, 106 S. Ct. 366, 369, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 208–209 (1985).

170. Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 57, 106 S. Ct. 366, 369, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 209 (1985).

171. Lafler v. Cooper, 566 U.S. 156, 164, 132 S. Ct. 1376, 1385, 182 L. Ed. 2d 398, 407 (2012). See also Missouri v. Frye, 566 U.S. 134, 147, 132 S. Ct. 1399, 1409, 182 L. Ed. 2d 379, 391 (2012) (laying out a similar test for the situation where defense counsel fails to communicate a plea offer to his client).

172. See People v. Dunn, 261 A.D.2d 940, 940–941, 690 N.Y.S.2d 349, 349–350 (4th Dept. 1999).

173. People v. Butler, 462 N.Y.S.2d 263, 263–264 (2d Dept. 1983) (holding that defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel where defense counsel did not know the applicable criminal laws, could not effectively counsel defendant to take a plea bargain for a lesser charge, and was not prepared for trial).

174. People v. Roy, 122 A.D.2d 482, 483–484, 505 N.Y.S.2d 242, 243–244 (3d Dept. 1986) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where defendant pleaded guilty after being told incorrectly that his burglary charge would be dismissed after completing alcohol counseling but defense attorney did not put his understanding on the record where prosecution could have corrected the mistake).

175. People v. Alexander, 136 Misc. 2d 573, 585, 518 N.Y.S.2d 872, 879 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1987).

176. See People v. Angelakos, 70 N.Y.2d 670, 673–674, 512 N.E.2d 305, 307, 518 N.Y.S.2d 784, 786 (1987) (finding that the defendant received adequate representation by her attorney where, even if attorney correctly understood one element of the crime, attorney could have reasonably still advised defendant to plead guilty and where defendant “sought the result she received” when she avoided multiple criminal charges and jail time).

- (2) Your defense counsel did not advise you to accept or reject a plea bargain;¹⁷⁷
- (3) Your defense counsel did not participate in the proceedings to withdraw your guilty plea, you had the opportunity to present your case or no basis to withdraw the plea, and counsel's lack of participation worked no discernable prejudice;¹⁷⁸
- (4) Your defense counsel did not engage in certain pretrial procedures and this decision was based on a legitimate strategy;¹⁷⁹ or
- (5) You make a general claim that the plea was ill-advised, without reference to specific instances of ineffectiveness.¹⁸⁰

Ineffective assistance of counsel claims should be raised on a motion to vacate the judgment and conviction under New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 440.10.¹⁸¹

(h) Not competent to enter a guilty plea

You must be competent to realize you are entering a guilty plea. If you were determined competent to stand trial, you are also considered to be competent to plead guilty.¹⁸² Conversely, if you were not competent to assist in your own defense at trial, you would not have been competent to enter a guilty plea.¹⁸³ If the trial court was aware of the possibility of mental incompetence at the time the plea was entered, it should have ordered a mental examination to determine if you were competent to enter the plea.¹⁸⁴ However, if there was no indication of incompetence in the record, and you did not seek an examination, the court was not required to order one.¹⁸⁵ The right to a competency hearing is not waived by a guilty plea, and it may be raised for the first time on appeal.¹⁸⁶ However, based on how 177. People v. Hoffman, 256 A.D.2d 1195, 1195, 685 N.Y.S.2d 142, 143 (4th Dept. 1998) (holding that defendant received effective assistance of counsel where defendant's counsel did not advise defendant to accept a plea bargain but defendant was aware of the plea bargain and aware of the consequences of not accepting it).

178. People v. Rodriguez, 188 A.D.2d 623, 623–624, 591 N.Y.S.2d 846, 846 (2d Dept. 1992) (holding that defendant failed to show that he would have gone to trial if he had received effective assistance and that the failure of the defense counsel in withdrawing the plea was not ineffective counseling because defendant was still given an opportunity to be heard); People v. Campbell, 180 A.D.2d 808, 809, 580 N.Y.S.2d 445, 447 (2d Dept. 1992) (finding that the defense counsel's lack of participation in the defendant's application to withdraw his plea did not amount to ineffective representation because there was no basis for withdrawing the plea and the defendant's accomplice had received a substantially greater sentence after a trial).

179. People v. Rivera, 71 N.Y.2d 705, 709, 525 N.E.2d 698, 701, 530 N.Y.S.2d 52, 54 (1988), cited in People v. Mouck, 145 A.D.2d 758, 758–759, 535 N.Y.S.2d 273, 274–275 (3d Dept. 1988) (finding that defendants did not show ineffective assistance of counsel where they did not show that there was no legitimate reason for defense counsel not to seek a pretrial hearing or that the reason that defense counsel did not seek a pretrial hearing was illegitimate).

180. See People v. Florian, 145 A.D.2d 645, 645–646, 536 N.Y.S.2d 705, 705 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding allegations of counsel's bad advice to enter a guilty plea are not sufficient to make out a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; defendant must allege specific instances of ineffective representation); see also People v. Bourdonnay, 160 A.D.2d 1014, 1015, 555 N.Y.S.2d 134, 136 (2d Dept. 1990) (citing People v. Florian for the same point).

181. People v. Angelakos, 70 N.Y.2d 670, 673, 512 N.E.2d 305, 307, 518 N.Y.S.2d 784, 786 (1987) (citing People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 854, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978)). See JLM Chapter 20 for more information on § 440.10 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.

182. Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389, 400–401, 113 S. Ct. 2680, 2687, 125 L. Ed. 2d 321, 333–334 (1993) (holding that no greater standard of competency is required for entering a guilty plea than for standing trial).

183. See People v. Francabandera, 33 N.Y.2d 429, 435, 310 N.E.2d 292, 295, 354 N.Y.S.2d 609, 613 (1974) (stating that the inquiry is not whether the defendant knew what they were doing, especially if they clearly did, but that the defendant cannot be forced to plead guilty due to a mental condition which prevented him from assisting in his own defense at trial).

184. People v. Frazier, 114 A.D.2d 1038, 1038–1039, 495 N.Y.S.2d 478, 478–479 (2d Dept. 1985).

185. People v. Dover, 227 A.D.2d 804, 805, 642 N.Y.S.2d 438, 439 (3d Dept. 1996) (finding a presumption of defendant's sanity, which is not rebutted merely by showing past mental illness).

186. People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 332 N.E.2d 870, 874, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 697 (1975).

courts have ruled in the past, it may be very difficult for you to successfully bring a competency claim on appeal in New York.¹⁸⁷

E. Withdrawing from a Plea Bargain

In New York, you must move to withdraw a guilty plea in the trial court¹⁸⁸ or move to vacate the judgment of conviction and sentence¹⁸⁹ in the trial court to preserve any claims for appellate review that the plea was unconstitutional.¹⁹⁰

1. Withdrawal Prior to Sentencing

You may withdraw from a plea bargain that you have already accepted if the plea did not meet the constitutional standards of knowing, voluntary, and intelligent, or if the court in its discretion permits you to withdraw from the guilty plea.¹⁹¹

If the court does not accept a bargain you have entered with the prosecution, you may be able to withdraw your guilty plea and maintain your right to a trial. In this circumstance, your guilty plea cannot be used as evidence against you during the trial.¹⁹² However, certain types of plea arrangements do not allow withdrawal of a guilty plea after sentencing. If you have agreed to a non-binding recommendation for a particular sentence, the court may accept the bargain but decide not to follow the recommendation, and you cannot withdraw the plea at that point.¹⁹³

In New York, you may be able to file a motion to withdraw a guilty plea. To withdraw, a court will first determine why you wish to withdraw the plea.¹⁹⁴ The courts do not have a specific fact-finding procedure to decide your motion. A limited review may be enough as long as you are given a reasonable opportunity to present your claims.¹⁹⁵ Courts will allow you to withdraw a plea that was not voluntary, knowing, and intelligent.¹⁹⁶ Defendants are also allowed to withdraw a guilty plea if they do not receive 187. See, e.g., People v. Rivas, 206 A.D.2d 549, 550, 614 N.Y.S.2d 753, 754 (2d Dept. 1994) (defendant's coherent responses during plea proceedings was enough to prove his competence for purposes of the plea); People v. Hall, 168 A.D.2d 310, 311 562 N.Y.S.2d 641, 642 (1st Dept. 1990) (suicidal defendant's plea upheld since his responses during the plea allocution were more than just "monosyllabic responses" and reflected normal thinking).

188. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.60(3) (McKinney 2014).

189. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 440.10, 440.20 (McKinney 2005).

190. People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 665–666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466 (1988). See also People v. Mackey, 77 N.Y.2d 846, 849, 569 N.E.2d 442, 442, 567 N.Y.S.2d 639, 639–640 (1991) (denying appeal because defendant must raise each issue in the motion to withdraw plea or it is not preserved for appeal).

191. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.60(3) (McKinney 2014).

192. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(f); see also Kercheval v. United States, 274 U.S. 220, 223, 47 S. Ct. 582, 583, 71 L. Ed. 1009, 1012 (1927) (plea of guilty withdrawn by leave of court is inadmissible in subsequent prosecution); People v. Spitaleri, 9 N.Y.2d 168, 173, 173 N.E.2d 35, 37, 212 N.Y.S.2d 53, 56 (1961) ("We should say flatly and finally that a plea so allowed to be withdrawn is out of the case forever and for all purposes.").

193. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(e).

194. See, e.g., People v. Stone, 193 A.D.2d 838, 597 N.Y.S.2d 538 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that defendant's mere conclusory statements about innocence, coercion, and distress are not sufficient).

195. People v. Tinsley, 35 N.Y.2d 926, 927, 324 N.E.2d 544, 544, 365 N.Y.S.2d 161, 162 (1974) (stating defendants will rarely be allowed an evidentiary hearing and often a limited interrogation by the court will be sufficient). See also People v. Brown, 205 A.D.2d 436, 436, 613 N.Y.S.2d 903, 904 (1st Dept. 1994) (remanding for further proceedings because court did not inquire into defendant's allegations of coercion which were the basis for his motion to withdraw the guilty plea). But see People v. Braun, 167 A.D.2d 164, 165, 561 N.Y.S.2d 244, 245 (1st Dept. 1990) (upholding court's decision to deny motion to withdraw guilty plea without further inquiry because motion was based on coercion and ineffective assistance of counsel, and the court had observed counsel's representation and defendant's bare allegations were unsupported by the record).

196. People v. Jones, 44 N.Y.2d 76, 81, 375 N.E.2d 41, 44, 404 N.Y.S.2d 85, 88 (1978). See United States v. Baum, 380 F. Supp. 2d 187, 203 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (holding that, in determining whether there is a fair and just reason for withdrawal of a guilty plea, courts may look to "whether the defendant has raised a significant question about the voluntariness of the original plea"); People v. Britt, 200 A.D.2d 401, 402, 606 N.Y.S.2d 208, 209 (1st Dept. 1994) (ordering evidentiary hearing to determine if plea was involuntarily entered). Note that facts suggesting the lack of a knowing and voluntary decision must appear in the record. People v. Coco, 220 A.D.2d the sentence the prosecutor promised to recommend to the judge,¹⁹⁷ if the sentence cannot legally be enforced,¹⁹⁸ if the prosecutor did not have the authority to make the promise,¹⁹⁹ or if the defendant was not adequately informed about the effects of the plea. Courts are not required to allow a defendant to withdraw the plea if the defendant breaches the plea agreement,²⁰⁰ or if the plea was entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently.²⁰¹

A withdrawn guilty plea cannot be admitted as evidence against you in the trial, or in any subsequent civil trial or administrative proceeding.²⁰² Additionally, statements made in plea discussions or the factual allocation cannot be admitted in a trial.²⁰³

2. Withdrawal Following Sentencing

In New York, if you want to withdraw from a guilty plea after you have been sentenced, you must make a motion to vacate the judgment of conviction and sentence under Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.²⁰⁴ This motion preserves your claim that the guilty plea was not entered voluntarily, knowingly, or intelligently.²⁰⁵ These issues must be raised in the court of first instance (the trial court) and cannot be raised for the first time in an appeal.²⁰⁶ If, however, when you pleaded guilty you stated facts that clearly cast doubt on your guilt and the court did not ask more questions to ensure that it was a valid guilty plea, there is a narrow exception that allows you to challenge on direct appeal the court's acceptance of your plea.²⁰⁷ In your motion to vacate the judgment, you must clearly state the reasons why it should be vacated; if you fail to list an issue in your motion, you will 312, 650 N.Y.S. 2d 636 (1st Dept. 1995) (denying defendant's motion to withdraw guilty plea because record showed it was entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently).

197. Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 92 S. Ct. 495, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1971); People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 241, 318 N.E.2d 784, 793, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 636 (1974), cited in People v. Frederick, 45 N.Y.2d 520, 524, 382 N.E.2d 1332, 1334, 410 N.Y.S.2d 555, 558 (1978) (A guilty plea induced by an unfulfilled promise either must be vacated or the promise honored.).

198. People v. Cameron, 193 A.D.2d 752, 753, 597 N.Y.S.2d 724, 725 (2d Dept. 1993); People v. Tubbs, 157 A.D.2d 915, 916, 550 N.Y.S.2d 441, 442–443 (3d Dept. 1990).

199. People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 241, 318 N.E.2d 784, 793, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 636 (1974).

200. People v. Madden, 186 A.D.2d 49, 49, 587 N.Y.S.2d 637, 637 (1st Dept. 1992).

201. See, for example People v. Coco, 650 N.Y.S. 2d 636, 220 A.D.2d 312 (1st Dept. 1995) (denying defendant's motion to withdraw guilty plea because record showed it was entered knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently).

202. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(f), FED. R. EVID. 410; see also Kercheval v. United States, 274 U.S. 220, 225, 47 S. Ct. 582, 584, 71 L. Ed. 1009, 1013 (1927) (holding that a guilty plea withdrawn by leave of court is inadmissible in subsequent prosecution); People v. Spitaleri, 9 N.Y.2d 168, 173, 173 N.E.2d 35, 37, 212 N.Y.S.2d 53, 56 (1961) (holding that a withdrawn guilty plea is completely out of the case and cannot be used for any purpose).

203. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(f), FED. R. EVID. 410; see also People v. Moore, 66 N.Y.2d 1028, 1030, 489 N.E.2d 1295, 1296, 499 N.Y.S.2d 393, 394 (1985) (stating that the contents of plea allocation, in addition to withdrawn guilty plea, cannot be used against defendant for any purpose).

204. See JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence."

205. See, e.g., People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 665–666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466 (1988) (trial court made appropriate inquiry of defendant during guilty plea hearing to ensure that defendant's plea to first-degree manslaughter was knowing and voluntary, and thus defendant waived any challenge to allocation on appeal based on his failure to move in trial court for vacation of conviction or withdrawal of guilty plea).

206. See People v. Pellegrino, 60 N.Y.2d 636, 637, 454 N.E.2d 938, 467 N.Y.S.2d 355, 356 (1983) (holding that because defendant failed to raise his arguments that he should be relieved of his guilty plea in the court of first instance, his conviction must be affirmed).

207. People v. Lopez, 71 N.Y.2d 662, 666, 525 N.E.2d 5, 6–7, 529 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466–467 (1988) (noting that where the defendant's recitation of the facts casts doubt upon the defendant's guilt or otherwise calls into question the voluntariness of the plea, the trial court has a duty to inquire further to ensure that the guilty plea is both knowing and voluntary. If the trial court fails to conduct this inquiry, the defendant's right to appeal may be preserved even if the issue was not raised in the court of first instance.).

not be able to raise it on appeal.²⁰⁸ Chapter 20 of the JLM, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction of Illegal Sentence,” provides a thorough explanation of the process of vacating a sentence and conviction under Article 440.

F. Conclusion

Today, most of the criminal justice system is plea bargaining. However, it is important to remember that you still have rights when going through the plea bargaining process, and the prosecutors and court may not violate those rights. If the government offers you a plea agreement, make sure that you understand all of the consequences of the plea, including the potential collateral consequences on your immigration status, job prospects, housing, and other significant parts of your life. It is also important to get every part of the plea agreement in writing. And finally, if you are represented by a lawyer, make sure you talk to your lawyer before you sign any plea agreement. Doing these things will help make sure that you get the best plea agreement possible, so you are not faced with the very difficult task of trying to vacate your plea agreement later on.

208. See, e.g., People v. Mackey, 77 N.Y.2d 846, 847, 569 N.E.2d 442, 442, 567 N.Y.S.2d 639, 639 (1991) (holding that defendant did not preserve error for review where he did not raise his claim that he should have been permitted to withdraw his plea, because plea allocution suggested availability of agency defense, in his motion to withdraw plea or otherwise in court of first instance).

CHAPTER 41

SPECIAL ISSUES OF INCARCERATED WOMEN*

A. Introduction

Men greatly outnumber women in American prisons and jails. However, women are incarcerated at a much greater rate. As of 2019, 231,000 women were incarcerated in the United States.¹ Since 1980, the number of women incarcerated in the United States has grown at two-times the rate of increase in the number of incarcerated men.² Rates of incarceration for women vary significantly by region. Idaho has the highest female imprisonment rate at 138 per 100,000 women. Massachusetts has the lowest at 10 per 100,000 women.³

There are some important differences between incarcerated men and women. Women are more likely than men to be in prison for drug and property offenses. Men are more likely to be in prison for violent crime. As of 2018, 26% of women in state prisons had been sentenced to drug related offenses, compared to just 13% of the state male prison population.⁴ Furthermore, incarcerated women are three to four times more likely than incarcerated men to have experienced abuse, either as a child or as an adult.⁵ And incarcerated women are more likely to suffer from mental illness than incarcerated men.⁶

For these and many other reasons, prison can be a very different experience for women than for men. This Chapter explains the unique concerns and legal rights of incarcerated women. It is important that women who are incarcerated are able to learn about issues that specifically affect them. If you are a woman who is incarcerated, you should not rely only on this Chapter for information about your legal rights in prison. Instead, you should read any other parts of the JLM that may apply to your situation, since many issues people face in prison are shared across gender-lines.

This Chapter is divided into five parts, B to F. Part B describes the issue of equal protection in programs and services provided to both incarcerated men and women. Part C supplements Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.” It focuses on medical care for incarcerated women. It also includes the right to basic gynecological care, abortions, treatment for HIV, and resources and treatment for pregnant women. Please see Chapter 33 of the JLM, “Rights of

* This Chapter was updated by Hannah Canham, based on previous versions by Rena Stern, Michelle Maloney, Rachel Wilgoren, Melissa Rothstein, and Shelley Inglis. Special thanks to Y. Rupa Rao and Lisa Freeman.

1. Aleks Kajstura, Women’s Mass Incarceration: The Whole Pie 2019, Prison Policy Initiative (29 Oct. 2019), available at <https://www.prisonpolicy.org/reports/pie2019women.html> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

2. The Sentencing Project, Fact Sheet: Incarcerated Women and Girls (Nov. 2020), available at <https://www.sentencingproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/Incarcerated-Women-and-Girls.pdf> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020) (“Though many more men are in prison than women, the rate of growth for female imprisonment has been twice as high as that of men since 1980.”); Aleks Kajstura, Women’s Mass Incarceration: The Whole Pie 2019, Prison Policy Initiative (29 Oct. 2019), available at <https://www.prisonpolicy.org/reports/pie2019women.html> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020) (“Women’s incarceration has grown at twice the pace of men’s incarceration in recent decades[.]”).

3. The Sentencing Project, Fact Sheet: Incarcerated Women and Girls (Nov. 2020), available at <https://www.sentencingproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/Incarcerated-Women-and-Girls.pdf> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

4. The Sentencing Project, Fact Sheet: Incarcerated Women and Girls (Nov. 2020), available at <https://www.sentencingproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/Incarcerated-Women-and-Girls.pdf> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

5. See American Civil Liberties Union, Words From Prison – Did You Know...?, available at <https://www.aclu.org/other/words-prison-did-you-know#I> (last visited Dec. 19, 2019) (citing American Civil Liberties Union, Brennan Center, & Break the Chains, Caught in the Net: The Impact of Drug Policies on Women and Families (Apr. 2005), available at <https://www.aclu.org/caught-net-impact-drug-policies-women-and-families> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020)).

6. Aleks Kajstura, Women’s Mass Incarceration: The Whole Pie 2019, Prison Policy Initiative (29 Oct. 2019), available at <https://www.prisonpolicy.org/reports/pie2019women.html> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

Incarcerated Parents” for general information about the rights of imprisoned parents. Part D focuses on privacy concerns, searches, sexual harassment, and sexual assault and rape. Your right to be free from assaults and illegal body searches is also described in JLM, Chapter 24, “Your Right to be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated People,” and Chapter 25, “Your Right to Be Free from Illegal Body Searches.” Part E discusses the growing popularity of alternative sentencing options, such as drug treatment programs. It explains why programs designed for men may not be as effective for women. Finally, Part F defines a form of sentencing adjustment called “clemency.” It includes a description of clemency proceedings. It also explains how you can petition for clemency as a battered (abused) woman. While Part F focuses on clemency for battered women, any person petitioning for clemency can use these procedures. Other possibilities for release are discussed in JLM, Chapter 39, “Temporary Release Programs,” Chapter 35, “Getting out Early: Conditional & Early Release,” and Chapter 32, “Parole.”

B. Equal Protection and Programming

Many prison programs fail to address issues that are specific to incarcerated women because the majority of the prison population is usually male. Nonetheless, being smaller in number is not a reason to be discriminated against. You should know that in many situations, incarcerated women have the right to seek programs and services substantially equivalent to the ones offered to males.

If you feel that you have been unfairly discriminated against, there are two different legal steps you can take. Which step you take depends on the type of discrimination you think you are experiencing. If the discrimination concerns vocational and educational programs in prison, you can bring a claim under a federal law called Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972.⁷ Otherwise, you can bring a challenge under the Equal Protection Clause of federal and state constitutions.⁸ Each type of action will be explained below.

The Equal Protection Clause: The Equal Protection Clause guarantees that people must be treated equally if they are similarly situated. To win an equal protection challenge, you must demonstrate that:

- (1) groups of incarcerated men and women are “similarly situated,”⁹
- (2) the groups are treated differently on the basis of gender, and
- (3) the difference in treatment is not “substantially related” to a legitimate government objective.¹⁰

“Similarly situated” means that two groups share common features, or are the same in all major ways, except for their gender.¹¹ Courts have held that groups of incarcerated men and women are

7. 20 U.S.C. § 1681.

8. See, e.g., Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1043–1044 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that providing a sensorially disabled unit for men but not women violated equal protection); West v. Virginia Dept. of Corr., 847 F. Supp. 402, 407–409 (W.D. Va. 1994) (holding failure to provide boot camp programs for women as well as men violated equal protection); Casey v. Lewis, 834 F. Supp. 1477, 1550–1552 (D. Ariz. 1993) (holding inequalities in mental health treatment available to men and women violated equal protection); McCoy v. Nevada Dept. of Prisons, 776 F. Supp. 521, 523–524 (D. Nev. 1991) (plaintiffs showed enough evidence that their equal protection rights were violated where incarcerated men had access to a wider variety of recreational and educational programs than women, including training for larger a range of careers); Canterino v. Wilson, 546 F. Supp. 174, 210–212 (W.D. Ky. 1982), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 869 F.2d 948 (6th Cir. 1989) (failure to provide incarcerated women with parity in the offering of institutional jobs and vocational training programs violated equal protection).

9. City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Ctr., Inc., 473 U.S. 432, 439, 105 S. Ct. 3249, 3254, 87 L. Ed. 2d 313, 320 (1985) (“The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment commands that no State shall ‘deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,’ which is essentially a direction that all persons similarly situated should be treated alike.”). This United States Supreme Court case involved zoning ordinances for a house for the mentally ill. The zoning ordinances were found to violate equal protection. The test from this case is used in cases involving equal protection challenges on the basis of gender in prisons. See, e.g., Betts v. McCaughy, 827 F. Supp. 1400, 1405 (W.D. Wis. 1993); McCoy v. Nev. Dept. of Prisons, 776 F. Supp. 521, 523 (D. Nev. 1991).

10. Roubideaux v. N.D. Dept. of Corr. & Rehab., 570 F.3d 966, 974–975 (8th Cir. 2009).

11. Betts v. McCaughy, 827 F. Supp. 1400, 1405 (W.D. Wis. 1993) aff’d, 19 F.3d 21 (7th Cir. 1994).

similarly situated in some circumstances.¹² In other cases, however, courts have decided that incarcerated men and women are not similarly situated. Some of the reasons why include the number of incarcerated people in their prison, the lengths of their sentences and differences in security classifications.¹³ If you are able to show that your group is similarly situated to a group of incarcerated men, the next step is to look at the type of different treatment you receive. Incarcerated men and women do not need to be treated identically. The Constitution only requires that your treatment be “substantially equivalent” or that incarcerated men and women receive “parity” of treatment.¹⁴ In other words, you need to show that the difference in treatment that you are challenging is meaningful. For example, one court held that small differences in the grooming accessories made available to incarcerated men and women were not significant enough to amount to a constitutional violation.¹⁵

The last step is to look at the reason for the different treatment. Prisons are actually allowed to discriminate between similarly situated incarcerated men and women. They can do this if the different treatment is “substantially related” to important prison goals. These goals may include safety and security.¹⁶ For example, the Third Circuit found that a County jail’s policy of serving hot meals to incarcerated women in a restricted housing unit (RHU), while serving cold, bagged meals to incarcerated men in the RHU, was “rationally connected” to a legitimate and neutral government objective.¹⁷ Before the policy, the jail gave hot meals to men in the RHU, but the men began to use the trays and utensils as weapons. The jail did not have the same problem with women in the RHU.¹⁸ Based on those facts, the court held the jail’s decision to only serve hot meals to women was “rationally connected” to the legitimate government interest in safety and security. For more information on how to make a claim under the Equal Protection Clause, read JLM, Chapter 16(B)(2)(c), “Fourteenth Amendment Claims: The Equal Protection Clause.”

12. See Sassman v. Brown, 99 F. Supp. 3d 1223, 1241 (E.D. Cal. 2015) (incarcerated men who otherwise met the criteria for California’s Alternative Custody Program were similarly situated to the incarcerated women who met the criteria); Woods v. Horton, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 332, 344 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008) (incarcerated men who had experienced significant levels of domestic violence as victims were similarly situated to women for the purpose of the need for domestic violence programs).

13. See Klinger v. Dept. of Corr., 31 F.3d 727, 731–732 (8th Cir. 1994) (women incarcerated at an all-female prison were not similarly situated to men incarcerated at an all-male facility because of the differences in the sizes of the institutions, differences in the length of incarceration and differences in security classification); Pargo v. Elliott, 894 F. Supp. 1243, 1261 (S.D. Iowa 1995) (incarcerated men and women were not similarly situated for the purposes of security and programming where the men were housed in different facilities by security classification and the women were housed together, served shorter sentences, and had special characteristics).

14. Betts v. McCaughtry, 827 F. Supp. 1400, 1406 (W.D. Wis. 1993) aff’d, 19 F.3d 21 (7th Cir. 1994); McCoy v. Nev. Dept. of Prisons, 776 F. Supp. 521, 523 (D. Nev. 1991): “courts have required that female prisoners be treated ‘in parity’ with male prisoners.”

15. Betts v. McCaughtry, 827 F. Supp. 1400, 1406 (W.D. Wis. 1993) aff’d, 19 F.3d 21 (7th Cir. 1994).

16. Roubideaux v. N.D. Dept. of Corr. & Rehab., 570 F.3d 966, 974–975 (8th Cir. 2009).

17. Mathis v. Monza, 530 F. App’x 124, 127–128 (3d Cir. 2013).

18. Mathis v. Monza, 530 F. App’x 124, 127–128 (3d Cir. 2013); see also Roubideaux v. N.D. Dept. of Corr. & Rehab., 570 F.3d 966, 974–975 (8th Cir. 2009) (incarcerated women challenged a statute under which, when there was insufficient space in state prisons, women were placed in county jails with limited prison programming, but men were not placed in those jails. The Court held that the statute was substantially related to the important governmental interest in providing adequate segregated housing for incarcerated women); Davie v. Wingard, 958 F. Supp. 1244, 1253 (S.D. Ohio 1997) (Differences in regulations governing hair length and styles for incarcerated men and women in the state prison system were justified by the much lower incidence of contraband concealment, escape, gang participation, and violence by incarcerated women compared to male prison population. Therefore, the different treatment was substantially related to the goal of promoting prison safety, security and discipline.). But see Sassman v. Brown, 99 F. Supp. 3d 1223, 1243–1244 (E.D. Cal. 2015) (Excluding men from an early release program was not substantially related to the government interest of reducing recidivism for women because the state did not show why excluding men from the program was necessary to achieve this goal).

Title IX: If you feel that your institution does not provide the same vocational and educational programs as the men's prisons, you can also bring a discrimination claim under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972.¹⁹ Title IX is a federal law that prohibits sex discrimination in federally funded educational programs and activities. The law states that "[n]o person . . . shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."²⁰ For example, if you know that the men's prison has a college program, and the women's prison does not, you might have a Title IX claim. Similarly, if you are aware that the men's prison has an athletics or sports program, and the women's prison does not, you might have a Title IX claim.

It may also be easier to win a Title IX claim than an Equal Protection claim. One reason for this is that in Title IX claims, you do not have to show that the two groups are "similarly situated." Courts have found that federal law already assumes that male and female participants in federally funded educational programs are similarly situated.²¹ Thus, they are entitled to the same opportunities and programs. Also, courts have held that Title IX holds prisons to a higher standard than the one required by the Equal Protection Clause. Under the Equal Protection Clause, prisons must treat similarly-situated incarcerated people with "parity" (discussed above), while Title IX requires "equality."²² For Title IX claims, courts consider multiple factors when deciding whether the discrimination is legal. Whether the discrimination is "reasonably related" to a legitimate prison interest is only one of the factors courts consider when deciding whether it is legal.²³ Other factors include: whether the prison has a legitimate security interest in providing very different educational opportunities to men than to women, and cost and management concerns.²⁴

For example, in one case incarcerated women sued their prison because incarcerated women could only choose from two vocational classes while incarcerated men could choose from twelve. The prison officials said the difference in class numbers was due to a "legitimate penological interest" (a justifiable interest of the prison) because the male prison population was bigger. The court said that this by itself did not prevent the women's claim.²⁵ The court decided that the incarcerated women were entitled to equal opportunities to the incarcerated men. Equal opportunity was not defined as being entitled to the same number of classes. But, it was decided that women are entitled to the same diversity of classes as well as access to some of the male classes.²⁶

C. Adequate Medical Care

Both incarcerated men and women have the right to adequate medical care, as explained in Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care." This Part addresses medical needs specific to incarcerated women. Therefore, you should be sure to read Chapter 23 for any concerns you have regarding your right to medical care that may be relevant to both men and women. Research has shown that incarcerated women have different, and often more severe, health problems than incarcerated men.²⁷ Many incarcerated women suffer from chronic and complex health conditions

19. 20 U.S.C. § 1681.

20. 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a).

21. See Klinger v. Dept. of Corr., 107 F.3d 609, 614 (8th Cir. 1997).

22. Jeldness v. Pearce, 30 F.3d 1220, 1228 (9th Cir. 1984).

23. Jeldness v. Pearce, 30 F.3d 1220, 1230 (9th Cir. 1984).

24. Jeldness v. Pearce, 30 F.3d 1220, 1230 (9th Cir. 1984).

25. Jeldness v. Pearce, 30 F.3d 1220, 1224, 1230–1231 (9th Cir. 1984).

26. Jeldness v. Pearce, 30 F.3d 1220, 1229 (9th Cir. 1984).

27. According to the World Health Organization, "Women in prison often have more health problems than male prisoners. . . . Women's prisons require a gender specific framework for health care which pays special attention for reproductive health, mental illness, substance use problems and physical and sexual abuse. Timely access to all services available for women outside prison, should be available for women inside prison. As with all prisoners, confidentiality of medical records should always be guaranteed." United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime & World Health Organization Europe, Women's Health in Prison: Correcting Gender Inequities in Prison Health (2009), available at <https://www.unodc.org/documents/hiv-> resulting from lives of poverty, drug use, family violence, sexual assault, adolescent pregnancy, malnutrition, and poor health care.²⁸ Incarcerated women also suffer from mental illness at higher rates than incarcerated men. As of January 2007, more than 42% of women in New York's prisons had been diagnosed with a serious mental illness, compared to nearly 12% of incarcerated men.²⁹ The prison environment does not always take into account women's specific health needs. For example, prisons often do not provide accessible hygiene products during menstruation, adequate nutrition for pregnant women, or specialized care for women who are infected with diseases like HIV/AIDS.³⁰

If you are concerned about the level of medical care that is provided in your prison, there are five possible steps you can take:

- 1) The first thing you should do is consult your institution's administrative grievance procedure. You should attempt to resolve your concerns following your institution's procedure before taking your concerns to court (see Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures").
- 2) Only if you have "exhausted" (used up) all of your administrative remedies without success should you consider filing a claim in court.
- 3) If you think that prison officials have been "deliberately indifferent" towards your medical needs, you may want to pursue a claim that your Eighth Amendment rights were violated (see JLM, Chapter 16, Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law).
- 4) If you think that officials were just negligent (careless) towards your medical treatment, you may want to file a tort action in a state court (or in the Court of Claims, if you are in New York).
- 5) If you are trying to get the prison to provide you with specific medical care, rather than monetary damages, you may want to file an Article 78 petition in state court (if you are in New York). An Article 78 petition asks for a special proceeding against body or officer.³¹

See Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care," and Chapter 5, "Choosing a Court & a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options," for more information on choosing your claim and your court.

1. Eighth Amendment Claim for Adequate Medical Care

You have a federal right under the Eighth Amendment to receive adequate medical care for your serious medical needs.³² For information on bringing a claim that your Eighth Amendment rights were violated, see JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law." Generally, to make an Eighth Amendment claim, you must show that:

aids/WHO_EURO_UNODC_2009_Womens_health_in_prison_correcting_gender_inequity-EN.pdf (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

28. United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime & World Health Organization Europe, Women's Health in Prison: Correcting Gender Inequities in Prison Health (2009), available at https://www.unodc.org/documents/hiv-aids/WHO_EURO_UNODC_2009_Womens_health_in_prison_correcting_gender_inequity-EN.pdf (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

29. Women in Prison Project, Correctional Association of New York, Women in Prison Fact Sheet (Apr. 2009), available at http://www.ncdsv.org/images/WIPP_Wome_in_Prison_Fact_Sheet_4-2009.pdf (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

30. United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime & World Health Organization Europe, Women's Health in Prison: Correcting Gender Inequities in Prison Health (2009), available at https://www.unodc.org/documents/hiv-aids/WHO_EURO_UNODC_2009_Womens_health_in_prison_correcting_gender_inequity-EN.pdf (last visited Nov. 10, 2019).

31. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804 (McKinney 2008).

32. The main case in this area is Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976), in which the Supreme Court first held that deliberate indifference to the serious medical needs of an incarcerated person violates the Eighth Amendment. The Court in that case said that deliberate indifference to the serious medical needs of incarcerated people constitutes "the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain," or cruel and unusual punishment, which is prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

- (1) You were denied adequate medical care, and the denial was “sufficiently grave”;³³ and
- (2) The prison official knew about the seriousness of your condition and exhibited “deliberate indifference” to your medical needs.³⁴

“Deliberate indifference” means that the prison official had some idea of the seriousness of your medical condition and still did not provide you with necessary care.³⁵ A court may find “deliberate indifference” where a prison has a “pattern or practice” of providing less than adequate medical services and facilities to people incarcerated at the prison over a long period of time.³⁶

As an incarcerated woman, you have a right to adequate gynecological care and general physical examinations.³⁷ In 1977, incarcerated women at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility, New York’s maximum-security prison for women, brought a lawsuit against the facility. They claimed that there was an unconstitutionally defective medical care system.³⁸ They argued that the prison failed to provide gynecological and general physical examinations when the incarcerated people were first admitted, and did not provide proper follow-up care and recordkeeping.³⁹ The Second Circuit Court of Appeals found that extremely long delays and outright denial of medical care violated the incarcerated women’s constitutional rights.⁴⁰

Incarcerated women who are HIV positive are entitled to additional gynecological care. In the lawsuit described in the previous paragraph, Bedford Hills was required to provide its incarcerated women with improved services. These services included access to physicians who were knowledgeable about the treatment of HIV/AIDS, and more frequent gynecological examinations for incarcerated people with HIV/AIDS.⁴¹ In New York, the DOCCS has a written policy on Pap smears for women with HIV. It requires that HIV-positive women have Pap tests every six months, no matter what the results are.⁴² In a recent report on reproductive justice in prisons, the Correctional Association of New

33. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993). “Sufficiently serious” means that your future health has been unreasonably endangered, and that it is contrary to current standards of decency for you to be kept under such conditions.

34. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823–824 (1994). This case involved a failure to protect an incarcerated person from harm, not a failure to provide adequate medical care. However, the case is relevant to claims involving medical care because it explains the meaning of “deliberate indifference.” The Court said that the official must act or fail to act while actually aware of a substantial risk that serious harm will be suffered by the incarcerated person. Prison officials only need to be aware of the risk of harm. They do not need to intend or want to cause harm. Deliberate indifference can sometimes be proven from the fact that the risk would be obvious. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976).

35. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (claim brought by an incarcerated person failed because he did not establish that prison officials had been deliberately indifferent to his medical needs. After he injured his back while working at the prison, medical personnel treated him on 17 occasions over three months. The Court held that the failure to properly diagnose and treat him might have amounted to medical malpractice, but that is not enough to constitute a constitutional violation); see also Spavone v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Services, 719 F.3d 127, 138–139 (2d Cir. 2013).

36. See, e.g., Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 52–53 (2d Cir. 1977) (finding that a prison’s medical care violated the Eighth Amendment because of inadequate access to medical staff, the use of a “lobby clinic” for screening complaints, and record-keeping procedures that caused substantial delays).

37. Todaro v. Ward, 431 F. Supp. 1129, 1131–1133 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), aff’d, 565 F.2d 48 (2d Cir. 1977).

38. Todaro v. Ward, 431 F. Supp. 1129, 1131 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), aff’d, 565 F.2d 48 (2d Cir. 1977).

39. Todaro v. Ward, 431 F. Supp. 1129, 1137, 1145–1147 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

40. Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 53 (2d Cir. 1977). The court appointed a monitor to make sure that the prison complied with the improvements ordered by the court. In August 2002, the court’s monitor found that after 20 years, Bedford Hills had finally complied with the court’s judgment, which included providing gynecological care and infectious disease care for women with HIV/AIDS. By agreement with the State of New York, the Prisoners’ Rights Project of the Legal Aid Society continued monitoring the Facility until August 2004 to ensure that reforms were institutionalized.

41. Kate Walsh, Inadequate Access: Reforming Reproductive Health Care Policies for Women Incarcerated in New York State Correctional Facilities, 50 COLUMBIA J. OF L. & SOC. PROBLEMS 45, 68 (2016).

42. Women in Prison Project, Correctional Association of New York, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons 165, 219 (Feb. 2015), available at

York noted that the DOCCS policy on this issue differ from community standards.⁴³ According to the report, community standards require that HIV-positive women should have two Pap tests six months apart for the first year after their diagnosis. These tests should be followed by annual tests if the results are normal. They should be followed by tests at least every six months if they are not. DOCCS' written policy also does not specify that HIV-positive women with abnormal Pap smear results should be referred for a colposcopy (a cervical exam) to rule out more serious cervical disease.⁴⁴ For more information regarding your legal rights about HIV/AIDs in prison, see Chapter 26 of the JLM, "Infectious Diseases (AIDS, Hepatitis and Tuberculosis) in Prison."

Although the Eighth Amendment requires you to show "deliberate indifference," state tort law often only requires you to show that the doctor or prison official was negligent.⁴⁵ Negligent medical care means that the care is below the standard that a reasonable medical provider would give. To find out the specific requirement in your state, consult Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research."

2. Abortion

(a) Your Right to Choose: Access to Elective Abortions

An "elective abortion" is the voluntary termination of a pregnancy, where a woman personally chooses to have her pregnancy ended for non-emergency reasons. You do not lose your legal right to decide whether to continue a pregnancy or to have an elective abortion just because you are in prison.⁴⁶ However, states are allowed to place restrictions or limitations on a woman's right to an abortion, like requiring parental consent for pregnant minors. States can have these restrictions or limitations as long as they do not place an "undue burden" on a woman's right to choose.⁴⁷ An undue burden exists if its purpose or effect is to place substantial obstacles in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus is "viable" (able to live outside the womb).⁴⁸ A provision of a law is invalid if an undue burden exists. Courts decide what kind of obstacles might count as an "undue burden." Prisons and jails sometimes have regulations that make it difficult to obtain an abortion. So, if you think you could be pregnant and might want an abortion, you should get a pregnancy test as soon as possible. You can do this by contacting your prison's medical center.

<https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf>
(last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

43. Women in Prison Project, Correctional Association of New York, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons 165 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

44. Women in Prison Project, Correctional Association of New York, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons 165 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

45. Knight v. State, 127 A.D.3d 1435, 1435, 6 N.Y.S.3d 807, 808 (3d Dept. 2015) ("Where an inmate alleges that defendant has abdicated its duty to provide adequate medical care, he or she must present competent evidence demonstrating defendant's common-law negligence or that it departed from accepted standards of care and that such deviation was the proximate cause of the sustained injuries").

46. American Civil Liberties Union, State Standards for Pregnancy-Related Health Care and Abortion for Women in Prison, available at <https://www.aclu.org/state-standards-pregnancy-related-health-care-and-abortion-women-prison-0> (last visited Nov. 7, 2019); see Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789 (8th Cir. 2008); Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475 (5th Cir. 2004); Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987); Doe v. Barron, 92 F. Supp. 2d 694 (S.D. Ohio 1999); Doe v. Arpaio, 150 P.3d 1258 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2007).

47. See Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 876–877, 112 S. Ct. 2791, 2820–2821, 120 L. Ed. 2d 674, 714–715 (1992).

48. See Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 877, 112 S. Ct. 2791, 2820–2821, 120 L. Ed. 2d 674, 714–715 (1992).

There are two main types of prison abortion policies that have been challenged in the courts:⁴⁹

- (1) Policies that say no incarcerated person can be transported off prison grounds to get an abortion (assuming the abortion is not medically necessary),⁵⁰ and
- (2) Court order provisions that require incarcerated women to get a court order before they can get an abortion.⁵¹

In both of these kinds of cases, courts have relied on the Supreme Court's "reasonableness" standard as set forth in Turner v. Safley, to decide whether the challenged policies violated a woman's right to an abortion under the Fourteenth Amendment.⁵² Turner also stated that prison regulations that restrict the rights of incarcerated people must be substantially related to some legitimate (justified) concern of the prison. In Turner, the Supreme Court held that restrictions on the right of incarcerated people to marry non-incarcerated people were not reasonably related to any prison objective.⁵³

When considering whether prison policies involving blanket prohibitions and court order provisions are unreasonable, courts consider a range of concerns. These concerns include the safety risk of transporting incarcerated people off prison grounds, and the need to allocate scarce resources and time.⁵⁴ To show that it is unreasonable to refuse to transport women to clinics or hospitals for an abortion, courts have cited the prison's ability to provide transportation for other kinds of medical examinations during pregnancy, including delivery.⁵⁵ Likewise, as the Third Circuit explained in Monmouth, prisons already have to provide all pregnant incarcerated people with proper pre-natal and post-natal care, so taking an incarcerated person to get an abortion does not require prisons to use more resources than they are already required to use.⁵⁶ The Monmouth court further found that prison officials must provide abortion services even if the incarcerated person cannot pay for them.⁵⁷

49. For summary and analysis of these cases, see Diana Kasdan, Abortion Access for Incarcerated Women: Are Correctional Health Practices in Conflict with Constitutional Standards? 41 PERSPECTIVES ON SEXUAL AND REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH 59, 59 (Mar. 2009), available at <http://www.guttmacher.org/pubs/psrh/full/4105909.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020). See also 2007 (11) AELE Monthly Law Journal 301, 304–308 (Nov. 2007), available at <http://www.aele.org/law/2007JBNOV/2007-11MLJ301.pdf> (last visited Nov. 7, 2019).

50. See Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 800–801 (8th Cir. 2008).

51. See Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1987), Doe v. Arpaio, 150 P.3d 1258 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2007).

52. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107, S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987). The reasonableness test requires that courts consider “(1) the rational relationship between the regulation and the governmental interest put forward to justify it; (2) the existence of alternative means to exercise the asserted right; (3) the impact on prison resources of accommodating the asserted right; and (4) the existence of “ready alternatives” to accommodate the asserted right at “de minimus” cost to valid penological interests.” when deciding whether or not to strike down a prison regulation. Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 332 (3d Cir. 1987) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 91, 107, S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987)).

53. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 91, 107, S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987).

54. Diana Kasdan, Abortion Access for Incarcerated Women: Are Correctional Health Practices in Conflict with Constitutional Standards?, 41 PERSPECTIVES ON SEXUAL AND REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH 59, 60 (Mar. 2009), available at <http://www.guttmacher.org/pubs/psrh/full/4105909.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

55. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 795 (8th Cir. 2008); Doe v. Arpaio, 214 Ariz. 237, 242, 150 P.3d 1258, 1263 (Ct. App. 2007) (finding prison's court order policy unreasonable and noting that the prison already transports incarcerated people without a court order for other medical care and court dates).

56. Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 341 (3d Cir. 1987) (citing Turner v. Safley, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262 (1987)).

57. Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 351 (3d Cir. 1987); see also Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 178, 203, 111 S. Ct. 1759, 1764, 1778, 114 L. Ed. 2d 233, 245–246, 262 (1991) (upholding federal regulation prohibiting federally funded medical clinics from counseling or referring women for abortion); Webster v. Reproductive Health Serv., 492 U.S. 490, 511, 109 S. Ct. 3040, 3053, 106 L. Ed. 2d 410, 431 (1989) (upholding Missouri statute prohibiting the use of public facilities or personnel from performing non-therapeutic abortions); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 302, 100 S. Ct. 2671, 2680, 65 L. Ed. 2d 784, 795 (1980) (upholding congressional restriction of Medicaid funds for any abortion unnecessary to protect the life of the mother, or in

Your right to access an abortion varies depending on the kind of prison you are in and where it is located. In federal prison, federal regulations require incarcerated women to be offered medical, religious, and social counseling before having an abortion.⁵⁸ The incarcerated person must be allowed to make the final decision herself.⁵⁹ Federal prisons do not have to pay for non-medically necessary abortions.⁶⁰ However, if an incarcerated person requests an abortion, and is entitled to one under state law, then a prison official is required to transport her to a clinic.⁶¹ In state prisons, the rights of incarcerated women to get abortions will depend on the state-specific abortion laws, which vary greatly.⁶²

In New York, under a law passed in 2019, abortions are legal if they are performed in the first twenty-four weeks of the pregnancy.⁶³ They can also be legal after twenty-four weeks if the mother's life or health is at risk or if the fetus is nonviable.⁶⁴ This new law should still apply to incarcerated people, though DOCCS does not currently have any written guidelines regarding abortion access for incarcerated people. Delays can also be a problem. In the Second Circuit case of Bryant v. Maffucci, the prison took so long to schedule the incarcerated woman's abortion that the twenty-four-week deadline had passed. She was unable to get an abortion.⁶⁵ The court found that the prison officials had not violated the Eighth Amendment because they were "merely negligent," rather than "deliberately indifferent" to the incarcerated woman's need for an abortion (see above for definitions of these terms).⁶⁶

Some states, like California, have codes that say incarcerated women have the same right to an abortion as any other woman in the state.⁶⁷ The Third Circuit, which covers Delaware, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, has recognized that the denial of elective abortions is a serious medical need. It has also recognized that this denial will have "irreparable" physical and emotional consequences for incarcerated people who do not want to carry their pregnancy to term.⁶⁸ However, other courts have not ruled similarly to the Third Circuit. Many courts do not consider non-elective abortion to be a serious medical need.⁶⁹

The Eighth Circuit rejected the Missouri Department of Corrections' claim that its ban on transporting incarcerated women for abortions was reasonable. The Department argued that the ban applied equally to all elective procedures. In doing so, they made it just a "specific application of a general policy." The court disagreed, finding that "abortion [was] treated differently" from other medical care at the prison, and that this different treatment was not reasonable.⁷⁰

The Fifth Circuit upheld a restriction that required a court order before abortions. The court accepted the jail's insistence that the court-order requirement did not target abortion because it cases involving rape or incest). But see Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 800-801 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding that the Monmouth decision was "exceptionally broad" in requiring prisons to pay for elective abortions, and that "the Supreme Court has made it clear the state has no affirmative duty to provide, fund, or help procure an abortion for any member of the general population.").

58. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23(a)-(c) (2016).

59. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23(a) (2016).

60. Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 326-327, 100 S. Ct. 2671, 2693, 65 L.Ed.2d 784, 811 (1980).

61. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 326, 100 S. Ct. 2671, 2693, 65 L.Ed.2d 784, 811 (1980); Monmouth County Corr. Inst'l Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 351-352 (3d Cir. 1987).

62. For more information on your state's laws governing access to abortions as well as pregnancy-related healthcare, see The American Civil Liberties Union, State Standards for Pregnancy-Related Health Care and Abortion for Women in Prison, available at <https://www.aclu.org/state-standards-pregnancy-related-health-care-and-abortion-women-prison-0> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

63. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2599-bb (Consol. 2019).

64. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2599-bb (Consol. 2019).

65. Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 979 (2d Cir. 1991).

66. Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 985 (2d Cir. 1991).

67. CAL. PENAL CODE § 4028 (West 2010).

68. Monmouth County Corr. Institutional Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 349 (3d Cir. 1987).

69. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 800-801 (8th Cir. 2008).

70. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 797 n.6 (8th Cir. 2008).

applied equally to transportation for other non-emergency medical care.⁷¹ This case applies throughout Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas; if you live in any of these states, you might have to get a court order before an abortion. It may be difficult to challenge the prison's policy in court.

(b) Medically Necessary Abortions: Your Right under the Eighth Amendment

At a minimum, courts agree that abortion is a serious medical need if it is necessary to preserve the incarcerated woman's health. For example, the Eighth Circuit said that a "medically necessary abortion certainly could qualify as a serious medical need."⁷² The decision does not define "medically necessary" in the prison abortion context. But under long-standing Supreme Court precedent, medically necessary abortions include those that, in a physician's professional medical judgment, are necessary to prevent harm to the woman's physical or mental health.⁷³ Because prisons have to provide for incarcerated people's serious medical needs, the prison authorities must pay for your medically necessary abortion if you cannot afford to pay for it yourself.⁷⁴ If you believe that you will suffer serious physical or mental health problems if you do not have an abortion and your doctor has confirmed this with you, you could have an Eighth Amendment claim if your prison denies you the right to an abortion.

3. Pregnancy

Many women report being pregnant at the time of their incarceration, including 4% of women in state prisons, 3% of women in federal prisons, and about 5% of women in jails nationwide.⁷⁵ In New York State, DOCCS requires incarcerated women to take pregnancy tests when you first enter prison and when you are removed from a work release program. You can also ask for a pregnancy test at any other time during your incarceration.⁷⁶

In New York state, a pregnant incarcerated person has the right to complete and thorough prenatal care, which includes medical examinations, HIV education, and advice about exercise, safety, and nutrition.⁷⁷ Pregnant incarcerated people in New York are housed at Taconic Correctional Facility and Bedford Hills Correctional Facility. A recent report found that both facilities generally provide pregnant incarcerated people with access to adequate pre-natal care, including pre-natal education and vitamins. However, the report also noted problems including long waiting times for appointments, insufficient food, and inadequate dental care for pregnant women.⁷⁸ In New York state prisons, 71. Victoria W. v. Larpernter, 369 F.3d 475, 485 (5th Cir. 2004).

72. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 799 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding that an elective abortion sought for non-medical reasons does not rise to the level of a "serious medical need" under the Eighth Amendment).

73. Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192, 93 S. Ct. 739, 747, 35 L. Ed. 2d 201, 212–213 (1973).

74. See, e.g., Monmouth Cty. Corr. Institutional Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 351–352 (3d Cir. 1987) (holding that prisons must pay for medically necessary abortions that incarcerated women cannot afford themselves); Right to Choose v. Byrne, 450 A.2d 925, 937, 91 N.J. 287, 310 (1982) (holding that the State may not jeopardize the health of poor women by excluding medically necessary abortions from a system providing them all other medically necessary care); see also Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 322–323 100 S. Ct. 2671, 2691 65 L. Ed.2d 784, 808–809 (1980).

75. Women in Prison Fact Sheet, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT (Apr. 2009), available at http://www.ncdsv.org/images/WIPP_Wome_in_Prison_Fact_Sheet_4-2009.pdf (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

76. Tamar Kraft-Stolar, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons, WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, 88 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

77. N.Y. COMP. CODE R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7651.17(a).

78. Tamar Kraft-Stolar, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons, WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, 97 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

pregnant incarcerated people are not to be placed in Special Housing Units other than in exceptional circumstances.⁷⁹

Shortly before she is about to give birth, an incarcerated woman should be moved from the prison to a hospital, institution, or clinic and provided with comfortable accommodations, maintenance, and medical care.⁸⁰ However, 11 out of 18 respondents to the Correctional Association of New York's recent survey reported that nurses initially dismissed their symptoms of labor. These dismissals resulted in delays in obtaining medical care during labor.⁸¹ A pregnant incarcerated person will be returned to the prison or jail as soon after the birth of her child as the state of her health permits.⁸² Bedford Hills is currently the only New York state prison with a nursery program. The program allows women who met certain criteria to live in a special unit with their babies for up to one year, or up to 18 months if the mother will be paroled within that period.⁸³

Federal prisons and some state prisons ban the use of shackles or leg irons on pregnant women while being transported to the hospital or during labor. In fact, some courts have recognized this practice as a violation of the Eighth Amendment.⁸⁴ As of 2014, twenty-one states including New York, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Washington, and the District of Columbia have laws or policies that explicitly prevent this practice.⁸⁵ New York passed an anti-shackling law in 2009. This law covers all state prisons and local jails. It banned the use of any restraints on women during transportation to hospital, throughout labor, delivery and recovery after giving birth, other than in exceptional circumstances.⁸⁶ Despite these protections, however, news reports and other surveys have indicated that the rules are not being properly enforced. A recent report by the Correctional Association of New York found that 23 of the 27 women interviewed who had given birth between 2009 and 2013 had been shackled, in violation of the law.⁸⁷ A new law passed in December 2015 extends the protection to all transportation throughout a woman's pregnancy and for eight weeks after the woman gives birth,

79. NYCLU Lawsuit Secures Historic Reforms to Solitary Confinement, NEW YORK CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION (Feb. 19, 2014), available at <http://www.nyclu.org/news/nyclu-lawsuit-secures-historic-reforms-solitary-confinement> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

80. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1) (McKinney 2010).

81. Tamar Kraft-Stolar, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons, WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, 110 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

82. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1) (McKinney 2014).

83. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1)–(2) (McKinney 2014).

84. Nelson v. Corr. Med. Services, 583 F.3d 522, 534 (8th Cir. 2009) (en banc) (holding it is clearly established that a woman “in the final stages of labor cannot be shackled absent clear evidence that she is a security or flight risk”); Women Prisoners v. Dist. of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 668–669 (D.D.C. 1994), vacated and modified in part on other grounds.

85. For the full list of states, see Tamar Kraft-Stolar, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons, WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, 136 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020). See also Shadow Report to the U.N. Committee Against Torture, THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO HUMAN RIGHTS CLINIC (Sept. 2014), available at https://tbinternet.ohchr.org/Treaties/CAT/Shared%20Documents/USA/INT_CAT_CSS_USA_18526_E.pdf (last visited June 19, 2020); Adam Liptak, Prisons Often Shackle Inmates in Labor, N.Y. TIMES (2 Mar. 2006), available at <http://www.nytimes.com/2006/03/02/national/02shackles.html?pagewanted=2&r=1> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020); Sadhbh Walshe, Women are Born Free in the US but Everywhere Give Birth in Chains, THE GUARDIAN (6 June 2012), available at <http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/2012/jun/06/women-born-free-give-birth-in-chains> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

86. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1) (McKinney 2014).

87. Tamar Kraft-Stolar, Reproductive Injustice: The State of Reproductive Health Care for Women in New York State Prisons, WOMEN IN PRISON PROJECT, CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, 6 (Feb. 2015), available at <https://static.prisonpolicy.org/scans/Reproductive-Injustice-FULL-REPORT-FINAL-2-11-15.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

other than in exceptional circumstances.⁸⁸ The new law also prohibits a correctional officer from being present during the birth unless requested by medical staff or the mother.⁸⁹ If you are incarcerated in a state where it is against the law to use shackles on women while they are in labor, and if this happens to you, you can sue the prison in state or federal court.⁹⁰

In other states, it is still common to shackle women while on the way to the hospital, or even while they are in labor.⁹¹ If you live in a state that does not currently have anti-shackling laws, you may still try to challenge this practice in federal court as a violation of the Eighth Amendment.

You may also have an Eighth Amendment claim if the prison is deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs during your pregnancy. In other words, if they show a real lack of care towards you. In a case in Wisconsin, an incarcerated woman charged prison nurses with violating her Eighth Amendment rights by failing to bring her to the hospital when she was in labor.⁹² The woman gave birth in her prison cell.⁹³ The court held that a reasonable jury could conclude that the nurses showed deliberate indifference toward the woman because the nurses ignored her request to go to the hospital and they “only examined [her] through the small tray slot in the cell door, rather than conducting a more comprehensive exam.”⁹⁴

Pregnant incarcerated people have also had some success using state tort law to claim that prisons were negligent (or careless) in treating their medical needs during pregnancy and delivery. (As discussed above, negligence is easier to prove than deliberate indifference, so tort law can be a better option than the Eighth Amendment in the context of medical treatment.) For example, in a Louisiana case, the court found a prison responsible for the wrongful death of a premature baby born to an incarcerated person because the prison was careless in their treatment of the incarcerated woman.⁹⁵ Prison officials did not follow the prison’s procedures. They failed to identify the problem despite complaints of bleeding and abdominal pain. They also did not bring the incarcerated person to a hospital until it was too late to prevent the premature birth.⁹⁶

Prisons have a duty to care for you during your pregnancy. They also have a duty to provide you with safe conditions for labor and delivery. If these rights are violated, you may have a claim against the prison under the Eighth Amendment (requiring deliberate indifference) or state tort law (requiring negligence). For information on possible federal claims, see JLM, Chapter 14, “Prison Litigation Reform Act,” and Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Laws.” For information on state tort claims, see JLM, Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.”

88. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1) (McKinney 2014); Governor Cuomo Signs Legislation to Prohibit Shackling of Pregnant Inmates During Transportation, OFFICE OF GOVERNOR ANDREW A. CUOMO (22 Dec. 2015), <https://www.governor.ny.gov/news/governor-cuomo-signs-legislation-prohibit-shackling-pregnant-inmates-during-transportation> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

89. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1)(c) (McKinney 2014); Office of Governor Andrew A. Cuomo, Governor Cuomo Signs Legislation to Prohibit Shackling of Pregnant Inmates During Transportation (December 22, 2015), available at <https://www.governor.ny.gov/news/governor-cuomo-signs-legislation-prohibit-shackling-pregnant-inmates-during-transportation> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

90. In 2012, a lawsuit against Cook County Jail in Illinois settled for $4.1 million dollars after a group of pregnant women who were incarcerated at the jail sued. The women alleged that they were shackled during labor despite state laws that prevented shackling. Amy Fetting, $4.1 Million Settlement Puts Jails on Notice: Shackling Pregnant Women is Unlawful, ACLU (May 24, 2012), available at <https://www.aclu.org/blog/41-million-settlement-puts-jails-notice-shackling-pregnant-women-unlawful> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

91. Lori Teresa Yearwood, Pregnant and Shackled: Why Inmates are Still Giving Birth Cuffed and Bound, THE GUARDIAN (24 Jan. 2020), available at <https://www.theguardian.com/us-news/2020/jan/24/shackled-pregnant-women-prisoners-birth> (last visited June 19, 2020).

92. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1007 (E.D. Wisc. 2003).

93. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1007 (E.D. Wisc. 2003).

94. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1009 (E.D. Wisc. 2003).

95. Calloway v. City of New Orleans, 524 So. 2d 182, 187 (La. Ct. App. 1988).

96. Calloway v. City of New Orleans, 524 So. 2d 182, 187 (La. Ct. App. 1988).

D. Sexual Assault, Harassment, and Privacy Concerns

Chapter 24, “Your Right to be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated People,” and Chapter 25, “Your Right to Be Free From Illegal Body Searches,” address assault and illegal searches in general. This Part focuses on three issues—privacy, sexual harassment, and sexual assault and rape—as they affect incarcerated women specifically.

1. Privacy

This Section explains your right to be free from inappropriate pat-downs, involuntary exposure, and illegal body searches.

(a) Cross-gender Pat-downs

Under the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution, you are guaranteed the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures.⁹⁷ A seizure is a capture of your person or property by force or an interference with your person or property by force. However, the Supreme Court has found that this right is severely limited in prison. It is limited because of the security concerns of prison and incarceration.⁹⁸ Nonetheless, a few courts have recognized that random searches of incarcerated women by male guards may violate the Eighth Amendment. For example, incarcerated women sued the Washington Corrections Center for Women over the prison policy of random full-body pat-down searches by male guards.⁹⁹ Many of these women had been severely sexually and physically abused by men in the past, and experienced severe trauma during these searches. As a result, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit found that these searches were “cruel and unusual” punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment.¹⁰⁰ However, following the lead of the Supreme Court, all courts recognize limitations on incarcerated women’s right to privacy when it involves an emergency or another important prison security issue.¹⁰¹ In New York, the DOCCS policy prohibits male guards from pat frisking incarcerated women unless there are “exigent circumstances.”¹⁰² “Exigent circumstances” are any set of temporary and unforeseen circumstances that require immediate action to combat a threat to the security or institutional order of a facility.¹⁰³

In June 2012, as part of the Prison Rape Elimination Act (PREA), the Department of Justice issued National Standards to help prevent, reduce and punish prison rape, and sexual abuse between incarcerated people or between guards and incarcerated people. The National Standards include a ban on cross-gender pat-down searches of incarcerated women.¹⁰⁴ As of August 20, 2015 (or August 21, 2017 for a facility with fewer than 50 incarcerated people), the National Standards prohibit adult

97. U.S. CONST. amend IV.

98. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 524, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3198, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 400 (1984).

99. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1525–1526 (9th Cir. 1993).

100. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1525–1526 (9th Cir. 1993).

101. See, e.g., Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1215–1218 (2d Cir. 1980) (holding that the privacy interests of incarcerated women did not extend to a protection against being viewed while sleeping by male guards so long as suitable sleepwear was provided); Carlin v. Manu, 72 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1179–1180 (D. Or. 1999) (finding it was acceptable during an emergency removal of incarcerated women to a men’s prison that male guards watched as female guards strip searched the women, since the male guards were not touching the women, and it was a one-time event, as opposed to an indefinite infliction of pain).

102. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control and Search of Contraband § III(B)(3)(b) (2019), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4910.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020). Pat frisks are required when incarcerated people are entering the visiting room, when an entire area of the institution is being searched, when an officer has an articulable basis to suspect an incarcerated person possesses contraband, or as directed by supervisory staff. Pat frisks are also allowed when an incarcerated person is going or returning to housing, program, and recreation areas and outside work details.

103. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control and Search of Contraband § III(B)(3)(b) (2019), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4910.pdf> (last visited Feb. 16, 2020).

104. 28 C.F.R. § 115.15 (2020).

prisons, jails, and community confinement facilities from permitting cross-gender pat-down searches of incarcerated women, absent exigent (urgent) circumstances.¹⁰⁵ Facilities are also banned from restricting incarcerated women's access to regularly available programming or other out-of-cell opportunities in order to follow this provision.¹⁰⁶ For more information, please read JLM, Chapter 25, "Your Right to Be Free from Illegal Body Searches."

(b) Involuntary Exposure

"Involuntary exposure" is when your naked or partly naked body is seen by guards of the opposite sex, such as when you are using showers or toilets. The Supreme Court in Turner v. Safley stated that prison regulations that restrict the rights of incarcerated people must be substantially related to some legitimate (justified) concern of the prison.¹⁰⁷ Thus, your privacy rights can be limited if the prison gives a reason that is substantially related to a legitimate prison policy.

One important prison policy is to treat male and female prison officials the same, as required by federal employment discrimination laws.¹⁰⁸ This can make it difficult to challenge involuntary exposure situations. Prisons cannot treat male and female employees differently. Prisons cannot be required to assign only female workers to a position unless there is a legally recognized need for the position to be filled by a woman.¹⁰⁹ Courts have occasionally upheld the designation of certain jobs as female-only jobs, usually where there is a strong privacy concern.¹¹⁰ Courts have also upheld this designation where there has been a long, well-recorded history of abuse by male officers and other efforts to address the problem have failed.¹¹¹ Some courts have recognized that all incarcerated people

105. 28 C.F.R. § 115.15(b) (2020).

106. 28 C.F.R. § 115.15(b) (2020).

107. See, e.g., Florence v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders of Cnty. of Burlington, 566 U.S. 318, 322, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1511, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 569 (2012) (detailing what constitutes a legitimate interest for search and seizures of a pre-trial detainee); Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 87, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 78 (1987).

108. Title VII of the U.S. Code prohibits denying employment, promotions, or raises based on sex, and the hiring of only female employees for female correctional facilities has been seen as a violation of this law. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)-(d) (2012). See, e.g., Breiner v. Nevada Dept. of Corr., 610 F.3d 1202, 1216 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding that policy of hiring only female correctional lieutenants at women's prison violated Title VII); Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1216 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding that that male prison guards could not be excluded from night shifts in a women's prison because other measures to ensure women's privacy were available).

109. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)-(d) (2012); see, e.g., Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1216 (2d Cir. 1980) (holding that male prison guards could not be excluded from night shifts in a women's prison because other measures to ensure women's privacy were available).

110. See Teamsters Local Union No. 117 v. Washington Dept. of Corr., 789 F.3d 979, 990 (9th Cir. 2015) (concluding that policy rationales of protecting incarcerated women from sexual misconduct by male deputies, maintaining jail security, and protecting the privacy of incarcerated women were all reasonably necessary to the essence of prison administration justifying the designation of certain positions as female-only); Mills v. City of Barbourville, 389 F.3d 568, 579 (6th Cir. 2004) ("As to jail employees of the opposite gender viewing prison inmates or detainees, ... a prison policy forcing prisoners to be searched by members of the opposite sex or to be exposed to regular surveillance by officers of the opposite sex while naked...would provide the basis of a claim on which relief could be granted."); Fortner v. Thomas, 983 F.2d 1024, 1030 (11th Cir. 1993) (recognizing the right of incarcerated people to bodily privacy "because most people have 'a special sense of privacy in their genitals, and involuntary exposure of them in the presence of people of the other sex may be especially demeaning and humiliating.'" (quoting Lee v. Downs, 641 F.2d 1117, 1119 (4th Cir. 1981))).

111. Teamsters Local Union No. 117 v. Washington Dept. of Corr., 789 F.3d 979, 991 (9th Cir. 2015) (policy saying that certain jobs were female-only was adopted in the face of documented allegations of abuse); Everson v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 391 F.3d 737, 762 (6th Cir. 2004) (finding that officers in female prison housing units must be women because the prison adequately demonstrated that this policy would enhance security, decrease the likelihood of sexual abuse, protect the privacy rights of the women incarcerated at the prison, and that there were no reasonable alternatives to this plan); Robino v. Iranon, 145 F.3d 1109, 1111 (9th Cir. 1998) (finding that it was proper for male prison guards to be excluded in order to accommodate the privacy of incarcerated women and reduce risk of sexual conduct between guards and women incarcerated at the prison); Jennings v. New York State Office of Mental Health, 786 F. Supp. 376, 387 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (holding that gender was a genuine requirement to be a "treatment assistant" in a female ward, and therefore, the requirement that at least one woman be assigned to a female prison ward was permissible under the Civil Rights Act).

have a right to be free from unnecessary viewing in the nude or while performing private bodily functions by guards of the opposite sex. A few courts have been particularly sensitive to the privacy interests of incarcerated women. These courts have required that they be able to cover their windows when undressing or using the toilet.¹¹² But if these factors are not present, courts may decide that the incarcerated person's interest in protecting bodily privacy is not as strong as the state's interest in offering equal employment opportunities for correctional officers.¹¹³ For more information on your right to be free from involuntary exposure, see JLM, Chapter 25, "Your Right to Be Free From Illegal Body Searches."

(c) Body Searches

In deciding whether a prison search violates your right to be free from unreasonable searches, courts weigh the need for prison security against the privacy interests of the incarcerated people.¹¹⁴ Then they decide which of these interests is more important in the particular case.¹¹⁵ For example, one court held that when an incarcerated person is being moved from one area of a prison to another, the prison's need for a visual body cavity search to make sure the incarcerated person is not carrying drugs or weapons is more important than the need for privacy.¹¹⁶ A "visual body cavity search" is when a prison officer inspects an incarcerated person's ears, nose, mouth, anus, or vagina to see if there are drugs, weapons, or other contraband.

Courts usually find that the prison's security concerns outweigh the incarcerated person's privacy interests.¹¹⁷ In some cases, courts have found that non-medical personnel (prison officers) are allowed to conduct clothed body frisks (searches of the outer clothing of an incarcerated person),¹¹⁸ cell

112. See, e.g., Sepulveda v. Ramirez, 967 F.2d 1413, 1415 (9th Cir. 1992) (denying qualified immunity to a male parole officer who walked in on a female parolee urinating as part of a required drug test); Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1214–1216 (2d Cir. 1980) (allowing incarcerated women to cover the window of their cells for privacy for 15-minute intervals).

113. See, e.g., Johnson v. Phelan, 69 F.3d 144, 147–148 (7th Cir. 1995) (recognizing that "[a] warden must accommodate conflicting interests—the embarrassment of reticent prisoners and the entitlement of women to equal treatment in the workplace."), overruled on other grounds by Henry v. Hulett, 969 F.3d 769, 783 (7th Cir. 2020); Grummett v. Rushen, 779 F.2d 491, 495 (9th Cir. 1985) (finding that to restrict or disallow female guards from holding positions which involve occasional viewing of incarcerated men would require tremendous rearrangement of work schedules and possibly produce a risk to both internal security needs and equal employment opportunities for female guards).

114. Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1099 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that when a court reviews whether a prison violated an incarcerated person's constitutional rights, the court must consider whether the prison has legitimate institutional concerns that justify the restrictions or actions the plaintiff challenges).

115. Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403 (1984) ("[It would be] impossible to accomplish the prison objectives [of ensuring the safety of prisoners, staff, and visitors] if inmates retained a right of privacy in their cells."); Padgett v. Donald, 401 F.3d 1273, 1280 (11th Cir. 2005) (employing a balancing test, weighing the degree to which the search intrudes on an individual's privacy against the degree to which it promotes a legitimate governmental interest).

116. See Story v. Foote, 782 F.3d 968, 971 (8th Cir. 2015) (holding that Story's allegation of a body-cavity search by itself does not state a claim for the violation of a clearly established right given what the Supreme Court and the circuit court have said about the strong institutional interests in maintaining security, and about the reasonableness of visual body-cavity inspections when detainees enter a facility); Goff v. Nix, 803 F.2d 358, 366–371 (8th Cir. 1986).

117. See, e.g., Calhoun v. Detella, 319 F.3d 936, 939 (7th Cir. 2003) (stating that, while such strip searches may be unpleasant and humiliating, strip searches of incarcerated men by female officers would not violate the Eighth Amendment if done for a legitimate, penological purpose); Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1101 (8th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1209, 111 S. Ct. 2807, 115 L. Ed. 2d 979 (holding that prisons are not required to provide same-gender pat-downs, and that prison administrators are entitled to find "the best balance among...competing concerns..."); Sroka v. Welcher, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7835, *15 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2016) ("Although the privacy interests of an arrestee are generally greater than those of prison inmates, the practice of allowing a male officer to conduct a pat-down search of a female arrestee to insure that she is not armed is not, in and of itself, constitutionally unreasonable.").

118. See Smith v. Fairman, 678 F.2d 52, 54 (7th Cir. 1982) (holding female guards may conduct "pat down" searches,¹¹⁹ and visual body cavity or strip searches (searches where incarcerated people must take off their clothes and be visually inspected by a guard).¹²⁰ Particularly appalling circumstances may convince a court that the search was unconstitutional. For example, in one federal case, the court found that it was a violation of due process to force a female pretrial detainee who was seven months pregnant to squat uncomfortably for two visual body cavity searches by untrained officers.¹²¹

However, the test for a “digital body cavity search”—when a guard places his or her fingers into an incarcerated person’s nose, mouth, anus, or vagina—is stricter because it is more intrusive of your body than other types of searches.¹²² To perform a digital body cavity search, prison officials must have a reasonable suspicion that is specific to the individual incarcerated person. A reasonable suspicion could be that an incarcerated person has a weapon.¹²³ Courts have found that digital body cavity searches are unreasonable unless medical personnel perform them both in a private area and in a hygienic (clean) manner.¹²⁴ The presence of male officers might make a digital body search unreasonable for women who are incarcerated.¹²⁵ Similarly, medical personnel (physicians, nurses, or their assistants), not correctional personnel, must conduct body cavity searches. These searches involve putting an instrument into a part of an incarcerated person’s body or taking something out of a body cavity.¹²⁶ searches without violating the privacy of incarcerated men); Sroka v. Welcher, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7835, *15, (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2016) (“Although the privacy interests of an arrestee are generally greater than those of prison inmates, the practice of allowing a male officer to conduct a pat-down search of a female arrestee to insure that she is not armed is not, in and of itself, constitutionally unreasonable”); Talman Caldwell v. Rubbo, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 20412, *3 (4th Cir. 1993) (“Caldwell had no constitutional right to have the pat-down search performed by someone of her gender.”).

119. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 525–526, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3199, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–403 (holding that an incarcerated woman has no reasonable expectation of privacy in her cell); Martin v. Lane, 766 F. Supp. 641, 646 (applying Hudson v. Palmer to deny Fourth Amendment relief to an incarcerated person whose cell was searched during a lockdown); Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 589–591, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3235, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438 (1984) (holding that security concerns justify regular “shakedown” searches of cells).

120. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 558, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 481 (holding that visual body cavity searches of people in a pre-trial detention facility did not violate the Fourth Amendment, as it did not punish them prior to trial, and served the legitimate purpose of insuring prison security) (the gender of the guards assigned to conduct the searches is not mentioned in the case); Wood v. Hancock Cnty. Sheriff's Dept, 354 F.3d 57, 68–69 (1st Cir. 2003) (holding that, due to the security threats posed by contact visits, a blanket policy of strip searching incarcerated people after contact visits is constitutional); Michenfelder v. Sumner, 860 F.2d 328, 332–333 (9th Cir. 1988) (citing many cases for the rule that incarcerated people may be subject to cavity searches when entering and leaving cells, even when such searches are very frequent).

121. United States ex rel. Guy v. McCauley, 385 F. Supp. 193, 198 (E.D. Wis. 1974) (finding that an incarcerated woman who was seven months pregnant was twice forced to bend over painfully by officers who were not medically trained, and that they did not conduct the search in a medical environment or use appropriate medical equipment).

122. 28 C.F.R. § 552.11(d) defines a “digital or simple instrument search” as “inspection for contraband or any other foreign item in a body cavity of an inmate by use of fingers or simple instruments, such as an otoscope, tongue blade, short nasal speculum, and simple forceps.” These searches may only be conducted by designated qualified health personnel, upon approval by Warden or Acting Warden, if there is reasonable belief by the Warden or Acting Warden that a person is concealing contraband.

123. See Chapman v. Nichols, 989 F.2d 393, 395–396 (10th Cir. 1993) (holding that blanket policy for strip searches of detainees was unconstitutional because strip searches should only be conducted on an individual basis, when necessary).

124. See Foster v. City of Oakland, 621 F. Supp. 2d 779, 789 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (quoting Vaughan v. Ricketts, 859 F.2d 736, 741 (9th Cir. 1988) which states that “body cavity searches of inmates to be unreasonable where they were performed by inadequately trained medical assistants”); see also Sanchez v. Pereira-Castillo, 590 F.3d 31, 43 (1st Cir. 2009) (noting that physical rectal examinations of incarcerated people can be reasonable only when they are carried out by trained medical staff under sanitary conditions).

125. See Bonitz v. Fair, 804 F.2d 164, 172–173 (1st Cir. 1986), overruled in part by Unwin v. Campbell, 863 F.2d 124 (1st Cir. 1988) (pointing to the presence of male officers as one reason why the search of incarcerated women was unreasonable).

126. See DaVee v. Mathis, 812 S.W.2d 816, 825–826 (Mo. Ct. App. 1991) (concluding that searches involving

In conclusion, incarcerated women may be searched because of security concerns in prison. But, these searches must be conducted for a good reason and in a safe and respectful manner. For more information on illegal searches and potential legal remedies, see JLM, Chapter 25, “Your Right to Be Free from Illegal Body Searches.”

2. Sexual Harassment

Just because you are in prison does not mean you give up your right to be free from unwanted sexual activity. Any unwanted sexual attention that you experience, like leering, pinching, patting, verbal comments, or pressure to engage in sexual activity can be considered sexual assault or harassment.

Incarcerated women should never feel forced to engage in sexual activity with abusive staff who promise better treatment or threaten disciplinary action.¹²⁷ You have the right to be free from any unwanted sexual attention. If an officer acts inappropriately towards you in a sexual manner, it may be considered cruel and unusual punishment in violation of your Eighth Amendment rights.

To qualify as a violation of the Eighth Amendment, the behavior must be serious enough, and the officer must have been deliberately indifferent (ignored a risk to your health or safety that the officer either knows about or that is so obvious he should have known about it).¹²⁸ However, because sexually abusive officers are the ones creating the risk to your health or safety, they naturally know about it.”¹²⁹ It is somewhat harder to prove that the behavior is serious enough. For some courts, the fewer times abuse has occurred, the more severe it must have been. Likewise, the less severe it was, the more times it must have occurred.¹³⁰

If you cannot bring an Eighth Amendment claim against the prison official who harassed you, you may be able to bring an Eighth Amendment claim against supervisory officials for failing to protect you from unwanted sexual conduct. To do this, you have to show that supervisors were “deliberately indifferent” towards your abuse (meaning that they knew about the harassment, or it was so obvious they should have known about it, and did nothing).¹³¹ You also have to show that the act violated “evolving standards of decency” (in other words, the act violated the level of physical contact that is acceptable in this day and age).¹³² Some courts have found that certain extreme cases of sexual groping physical intrusion and removal of foreign objects must be conducted by medical personnel, but purely visual searches that do not involve physical contact do not require medical personnel).

127. HUMAN RIGHTS WATCH, All Too Familiar: Sexual Abuse of Women in U.S. State Prisons (1996), available at http://www.hrw.org/legacy/reports/1996/Us1.htm#N_880 (last visited Nov. 7, 2019).

128. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994); Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 298–299, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2324, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 278 (1991).

129. Boddie v. Schneider, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997) (“Because sexual abuse by a corrections officer may constitute serious harm inflicted by an officer with a sufficiently culpable state of mind, allegations of such abuse are cognizable as Eighth Amendment Claims.”); Giron v. Corrections Corporation of America, 191 F.3d 1281, 1290 (10th Cir. 1999).

130. Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 257 (2d Cir. 2015) (finding that “severe or repetitive sexual abuse” of an incarcerated person by a prison officer can be “objectively sufficiently serious’ enough to constitute an Eighth Amendment violation.”) (quoting Boddie v. Schneider, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997)); Boddie v. Schneider, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997) (requiring severe or repeated sexual abuse for Eighth Amendment violation). But see Morrison v. Cortright, 397 F. Supp. 2d 424, 425 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) (male correctional officer running finger between buttocks and pressing against male plaintiff during strip frisk was not sufficiently serious to be a violation of the Eighth Amendment); Davis v. Castleberry, 364 F. Supp. 2d 319, 321 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) (male correctional officer grabbing an incarcerated man’s penis during a pat frisk failed to state a claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1983); Montero v. Crusie, 153 F. Supp. 2d 368, 373, 375 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (allegations that a male officer squeezed the male plaintiff’s genitalia and made sexual propositions during pat frisks and offered privileges in exchange for sexual favors was not sufficiently serious to be a violation of the Eighth Amendment).

131. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824 (1994).

132. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 112 S. Ct. 995 (1992) (“The objective component of an Eighth Amendment claim is therefore contextual and responsive to ‘contemporary standards of decency.’”) (quoting Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S.C. 97, 101, 97 S. Ct. 285, 289, 50 L. Ed. 2d (1976)).

and touching do violate “evolving standards of decency.”¹³³ If your case is similar, you might be able to make an Eighth Amendment claim against the supervisors.

Generally, to bring an Eighth Amendment claim in federal court, you must have exhausted (used) your administrative remedies. However, under the Prison Rape Elimination Act’s National Standards, DOCCS has recently changed its requirements for exhaustion in relation to sexual abuse and made it easier to bring sexual abuse cases. If you want to bring a legal claim against the person who sexually abused or harassed you, you no longer need to file a grievance and appeal it to Central Office.¹³⁴ You can now satisfy the exhaustion requirement in a number of ways. You can report the incident to (1) facility staff; (2) Central Office staff in writing; (3) to an outside agency that has agreed to receive and forward reports of abuse; or (4) to the Office of Special Investigations.¹³⁵ You can also satisfy the exhaustion requirement if another person reports, if you confirm the report.¹³⁶ After taking any of these steps, you are able to submit your claim to court. You have to complete those steps and submit your claim within the statute of limitations. The statute of limitations for an Eighth Amendment claim is usually three years. For more information on how to make an Eighth Amendment claim, consult JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

3. Sexual Assault and Rape

(a) Your Right to be Free from Sexual Assault and Rape

The rate of female sexual assault varies dramatically between prisons. The highest reported rate currently shows that one in four women are assaulted during their time in prison.¹³⁷ While a prison official is permitted to touch you for security reasons, for example in a legal search, he or she is never allowed to touch you in a sexual way. Under federal law, it is illegal for a prison official with “custodial, supervisory, or disciplinary authority” to engage in any type of sexual conduct with incarcerated people.¹³⁸ In federal prisons, it is also a felony for prison officers to obtain sex from an incarcerated person by using violence or the threat of violence, or to have sex with an incarcerated person after making her unconscious with drugs or alcohol.¹³⁹ Almost all states also have laws that make sex between incarcerated people and prison officers illegal.¹⁴⁰ Check your state’s laws to see what kind of protections you are offered.

133. See Rodriguez v. McClenning, 399 F. Supp. 2d 228, 237–238 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (concluding that an incarcerated man properly stated a claim for a violation of his Eighth Amendment rights where he alleged that a correctional officer groped him, relying on trend toward statutory prohibition of sexual contact between prison employees and incarcerated people); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1197 (9th Cir. 2000) (“Rape, coerced sodomy, unsolicited touching of women prisoners’ vaginas, breasts and buttocks by prison employees are ‘simply not part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society.’”) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824 (1994)).

134. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Directive 4040, Inmate Grievance Policy, at § 701.3 (2016).

135. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Directive 4040, Inmate Grievance Policy, at § 701.3 (2016).

136. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Directive 4040, Inmate Grievance Policy, at § 701.3 (2016).

137. JUST DETENTION INTERNATIONAL, The Basics about Sexual Abuse in U.S. Detention, 1 (Jan. 2009), available at <https://www.prearesourcecenter.org/sites/default/files/library/22-jdi-usdetentionbasics.pdf> (last visited Nov. 28, 2020) (quoting Cindy Struckman-Johnson & David Struckman-Johnson, Sexual Coercion Reported by Women in Three Midwestern Prison, 39 J. SEX RES. 217, 220 (2002)).

138. 18 U.S.C. § 2243(b)(2).

139. 18 U.S.C. § 2241.

140. See, e.g., N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.05(3)(e); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13–1419 (2011); CAL. PENAL CODE § 289.6 (Deering 2019); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a–73a (West 2019); MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 268, § 21A (West 1999). For a full list of all states criminalizing corrections officers’ sexual contact with incarcerated people as of August 2015, see Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 259 n.6 (2d Cir. 2015) (only two states have not criminalized officers’ sexual contact with incarcerated people).

Even consensual sex between an incarcerated person and a prison official can be a violation of the Eighth Amendment or a crime under state law.¹⁴¹ In New York, sexual intercourse between an employee of the New York State Department of Correctional Services and an incarcerated person—even with the incarcerated person’s consent—is considered rape.¹⁴² The reason for this policy is that prison officials may attempt to abuse their position of authority to get sexual favors from incarcerated people.

Prison officials may also be liable for the acts of another incarcerated person under the Eighth Amendment. The officer will only be liable for sexual assault committed by another person incarcerated at your facility when the officer knew that you faced a substantial risk of serious harm, but did nothing to protect you.¹⁴³ For example, if prison officials knew that you were going to be sexually assaulted by another incarcerated person and did not try to prevent the assault, that could be a violation of your Eighth Amendment rights.

(b) What should you do if you have been raped or sexually assaulted?

If you have been raped or sexually assaulted, you should tell someone immediately and request to go to the hospital. Getting a medical exam (including a vaginal inspection and blood tests) at a hospital emergency room or other medical facility after you have been raped is important for several reasons:

- (1) Internal injuries can be assessed.
- (2) Some injuries that you can’t see or feel can only be detected by examination.
- (3) Pregnancy can be prevented. If you are not using birth control, “morning-after” emergency contraceptives greatly decrease the chance of pregnancy.
- (4) Evidence can be collected. Physical evidence that can identify and convict your rapist can be captured and stored in what is called a “rape kit.”

A rape kit is evidence that can be used in court if you choose to bring charges. Many hospitals have “Sexual Assault Rape Trauma” nurses (called “SART nurses”) who specialize in collecting evidence from rape victims. You should ask at your hospital if there is a SART nurse available to collect your rape kit. Many hospitals also provide rape trauma counselors to help assist you during the examination process. To complete the rape kit, medical professionals will:

- (1) Collect any semen, other body fluids, and hair;
- (2) Look for clothing fibers and evidence from the scene, such as grass or soil; and
- (3) Take clippings of your fingernails to examine any residue from your attacker.¹⁴⁴

141. See, e.g., Carrigan v. Davis, 70 F. Supp. 2d 448, 452–453 (D. Del. 1999) (“[A]s a matter of law, an act of vaginal intercourse and/or fellatio between a prison inmate and a prison guard, whether consensual or not, is a per se violation of the Eighth Amendment.”). Note that this holding was restricted to vaginal intercourse and/or fellatio. See also Cash v. County of Erie, Slip Op., 2009 WL 3199558, *2 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2009) (“even if [the corrections officer]’s defense was that the sexual intercourse with [the incarcerated person] was physically consensual, this may also constitute a constitutional violation”); Perez v. State of N.Y., 33 Misc. 3d 667, 929 N.Y.S.2d 678 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2011) (Even where an incarcerated person and a corrections officer were involved in a romantic relationship, the court stated that their sexual encounters cannot be consensual); Hammond v. Gordon County, 316 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1285 n.6 (N.D. Ga. 2002) (rejects the argument that the Court should rely on other cases where consent was considered a defense to sexual conduct in a correctional setting); Paz v. Weir, 137 F. Supp. 2d 782, 807 (S.D. Tex. 2001) (noting that Texas law deems sex non-consensual if engaged in by a public servant who exerts coercion on the other person or if the perpetrator takes advantage of their position as a member of the clergy).

142. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.05(3)(e)–(f) (Consol. 2018); N.Y. Penal Law § 130.25 (Consol. 2001).

143. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 847, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1084, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 832 (1994) (holding that a prison official was liable under the Eighth Amendment because he had knowledge that a transgender person incarcerated at the prison faced a substantial risk of serious harm and subsequently disregarded the risk); see also Winton v. Bd. of Comm’rs, 88 F. Supp. 2d 1247, 1252–1253 (N.D. Okla. 2000) (denying a defendant institution’s motion for summary judgment because there was evidence that prison officials both knew there was substantial risk of serious harm from other people incarcerated at the prison, and did nothing to protect the plaintiff from it).

144. RAINN, What is a Sexual Assault Forensic Exam?, available at <https://www.rainn.org/articles/rape->

You should also ask the nurse or health professional to take pictures of any injuries that occurred during the attack (bruises, hand marks, cuts, burns, etc.). You have the right to skip any particular part of the exam because it makes you feel too uncomfortable. However, bear in mind that a rape kit increases the likelihood of prosecution.¹⁴⁵

It is important to make a rape kit so that you can prosecute your rapist later if you choose to do so. You do not have to decide immediately whether to report the rape to the prison authorities. You can collect the evidence now and then decide later. But if you choose to report the person who raped you to prison authorities, your chances of convicting them depend heavily on the evidence in your rape kit. You only have one chance to get that evidence—immediately after the rape. Because of this, it is important that you do not bathe or shower, brush your hair, change your clothes or shoes, or douche until after you have gone to the hospital and had samples collected.

It is important to see a doctor again within a week or two to receive your blood test results and to treat any injuries. Emotional care is also very important. Many rape survivors will experience Rape Trauma Syndrome (RTS). RTS is a collection of emotional responses to the extreme stress of the sexual assault. Some survivors openly display their emotions. Others may appear calm and detached. Sleeping and eating patterns may change and nightmares are common.¹⁴⁶ It is important for you to seek and continue counseling and support groups for as long as you need them. Your prison should provide mental health services (like counseling) for rape and sexual assault.¹⁴⁷ You should also know that many mental health providers employed by corrections departments have an obligation to report any abuse revealed to them. So, if you want to discuss your abuse without reporting it, you should ask your counselor about his reporting obligations before sharing information.

If your facility does not provide counseling, the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network (RAINN) offers counseling and other forms of assistance to rape and sexual assault victims. You can reach their hotline at 1-800-656-HOPE (1-800-656-4673), online at <https://ohl.rainn.org/online/>, or write to them at:

Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network
1220 L Street NW, Suite 505
Washington, DC 20005

(c) What Are Your Legal Remedies if You Have Been Raped or Sexually Assaulted?

First, you should file a report through your prison's internal grievance procedures. If the prison administration does not remedy the situation, you may want to consider bringing civil charges.

If you decide to bring a lawsuit in a civil court, the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) will apply to you. This Act generally provides that incarcerated people cannot bring a civil lawsuit for any mental or emotional injury suffered in prison unless you can show some kind of physical injury as well.¹⁴⁸ This made the collection of physical evidence through a rape kit important. However, the Violence Against Women Act has changed this requirement. It does not require you to show evidence of physical injury.¹⁴⁹ Furthermore, the Second Circuit has held that sexual assaults alleged to arise from "intrusive body searches" meet the physical injury requirement of the PLRA.¹⁵⁰ kit (last visited June 20, 2020).

145. RAINN, What is a Sexual Assault Forensic Exam?, available at <https://www.rainn.org/articles/rape-kit> (last visited June 20, 2020).

146. KING COUNTY SEXUAL ASSAULT RESOURCE CENTER, Rape Trauma Syndrome 1, available at <https://www.kcsarc.org/sites/default/files/Resources%20-%20Rape%20Trauma%20Syndrome.pdf> (last visited June 21, 2020).

147. National Standards To Prevent, Detect, and Respond to Prison Rape, 77 Fed. Reg. 37,106, 37,221 (June 20, 2012) (to be codified at 28 C.F.R. pt. 115).

148. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, 110 Stat. 1321, § 802(e) (1996). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for more information on the PLRA.

149. The Violence Against Women Act, 42 U.S.C. § 13981.

150. Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 135 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that allegations of sexual assault, if true,

Courts have found that a prison official's sexual assault of an incarcerated person violates the Eighth Amendment. It is "cruel and unusual punishment[]" ¹⁵¹ and violates the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society." ¹⁵² Here, "evolving standards of decency" refers to conduct that violates standards of conduct considered acceptable today. ¹⁵³ The Supreme Court stated that, "being violently assaulted in prison is not 'part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society.'" ¹⁵⁴ In a recent decision, the Second Circuit held that intentional contact by a correctional officer with an incarcerated person's genitalia or other intimate area violates the Eighth Amendment if it serves no penological purpose and is undertaken with the intention to gratify the officer's sexual desire or humiliate the victim. ¹⁵⁵ The Court referred to the national standards and the criminalization of sexual conduct by correctional officers. The Court said that, "sexual abuse of prisoners, once passively accepted by society, deeply offends today's standards of decency." ¹⁵⁶

As described in the "Sexual Harassment" Section above, there are two components to bringing an Eighth Amendment claim against prison supervisors. First, you have to show that there was a substantial risk of serious harm to your safety. ¹⁵⁷ Second, you must show that the prison knew about the situation and yet did nothing about it. For more information on how to bring an Eighth Amendment claim, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 28 U.S.C. 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

E. Drug Treatment Programs

The crackdown on drugs has been a major cause of the female prison population growth. As of March 2020, nearly 20% of incarcerated people in the United States were incarcerated for a drug offense. ¹⁵⁸ Furthermore, drug offenses accounted for 91% of the increase in the number of women sentenced to prison from 1986 to 1995. This trend is partially due to New York's harsh Rockefeller Drug Laws. These laws gave judges little discretion in sentencing for drug offenses. However, in 2004, New York reformed the state's old Rockefeller drug laws by adopting the Drug Law Reform Act (DLRA). ¹⁵⁹ If you were sentenced under the old laws, you may be allowed to apply for re-sentencing. ¹⁶⁰ For more information, read JLM, Chapter 10, "Applying for Re-Sentencing for Drug Offenses."

If you are in prison for a drug-related offense, you might have access to various alternative sentencing programs. You may have access even if you are already in prison. One of these options is the "drug court." ¹⁶¹ In this type of program, judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys take part in the treatment and rehabilitation of the offenders. ¹⁶² Judges keep track of the treatment and progress

"qualify as physical injuries"); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1197 (9th Cir. 2000) ("A sexual assault on an inmate by a guard—regardless of the gender of the guard or of the prisoner—is deeply 'offensive to human dignity.'... 'Being violently assaulted in prison is simply not 'part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society'"" (internal citations omitted)).

151. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

152. See, e.g., Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992); Ullery v. Bradley, 949 F.3d 1282, 1290–1291 (10th Cir. 2020) (holding that a prison guard's sexual assault of an incarcerated person clearly offended society's standards of decency).

153. See Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 256 (2d Cir. 2015).

154. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994) (quoting Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1981)).

155. Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 254 (2d Cir. 2015).

156. Crawford v. Cuomo, 796 F.3d 252, 254 (2d Cir. 2015).

157. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994).

158. Wendy Sawyer & Peter Wagner, Mass Incarceration: The Whole Pie 2020, PRISON POLICY INITIATIVE, March 24, 2020, available at <https://www.prisonpolicy.org/reports/pie2020.html> (last visited June 21, 2020).

159. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1474 (A. 11895, S. 7802).

160. Rivera v. New York, No. 11-CV-6185 MAT, 2012 WL 1342988, at *2 (W.D.N.Y. Apr. 18, 2012).

161. See Kara Stinson, Letting Time Serve You: Boot Camps and Alternative Sentencing for Female Offenders, 39 BRANDEIS L. J. 847, 857 (2001).

162. See Kara Stinson, Letting Time Serve You: Boot Camps and Alternative Sentencing for Female of offenders and the offenders follow a plan that includes detoxification (coming off drugs), counseling, education, vocational courses, group meetings, and urine testing.¹⁶³ According to the U.S. General Accounting Office, as of June 2010, there were over 2,500 drug courts operating nationwide.¹⁶⁴

Another alternative sentence that might be right for you is a “boot camp.” A boot camp is a military-style program that attempts to “instill discipline and self-respect in participants.”¹⁶⁵ However, due to budgetary constraints and doubts as to their ability to rehabilitate people who have been convicted of a crime, these programs are increasingly rare. Their availability to women is also rare.¹⁶⁶ Even if you are in a regular correctional facility, your institution should have drug treatment programs available for you. For example, the Federal Bureau of Prisons (BOP) offers drug treatment plans to all incarcerated people who qualify, prior to their release from custody.¹⁶⁷

F. Clemency

“Clemency” is a term used to describe the power of a public official to lessen the sentence of a criminal defendant. Clemency exists to protect incarcerated people from unjustifiably harsh sentences.

It is very hard to get clemency. But you should file a petition if you think have a good reason to receive it. In thirty-five states, including New York, the governor grants clemency.¹⁶⁸ In other states, either an advisory board or the governor and advisory board together makes the decision.¹⁶⁹ Non-violent offenders have the best chance of getting clemency. But women who are in jail for killing their abusive spouses or taking other actions to defend themselves may also have a chance. Note that if you are currently seeking clemency for a death sentence, you have a right to a lawyer.¹⁷⁰

There are four types of clemency: amnesty, reprieve, pardon, and commutation:

- (1) Amnesty applies to a group of people who have committed political offenses.
- (2) Reprieve postpones a scheduled execution.
- (3) Pardon attempts to clear a person’s name of a crime entirely and restore their reputation.
- (4) Commutation does not attempt to clear the person’s name of the crime, but merely substitutes a milder sentence for the current sentence being served.

This Part focuses on clemency for battered (or abused) women. But, the procedures discussed below apply to any clemency petition. For more information on clemency in the state of New York, see “Guidelines for Review of Executive Clemency Applications,” which is on file in the law library of each Offenders, 39 BRANDEIS L. J. 847, 857 (2001).

163. See Kara Stinson, Letting Time Serve You: Boot Camps and Alternative Sentencing for Female Offenders, 39 BRANDEIS L. J. 847, 857 (2001).

164. U.S. General Accounting Office, GAO-12-53, “Adult Drug Courts: Studies Show Courts Reduce Recidivism, but DOJ Could Enhance Future Performance Measure Revision Efforts” (Dec. 2011).

165. See Kara Stinson, Letting Time Serve You: Boot Camps and Alternative Sentencing for Female Offenders, 39 BRANDEIS L.J. 847, 853 (2001); Practice Profile: Adult Bootcamps, NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.crimesolutions.gov/PracticeDetails.aspx?ID=5> (last visited Nov. 10, 2019).

166. See Richard Willing, U.S. Prisons to End Boot Camp Programs, USA TODAY (Feb. 2005), available at http://usatoday30.usatoday.com/news/nation/2005-02-03-boot-camps_x.htm (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

167. Substance Abuse Treatment, FEDERAL BUREAU OF PRISONS, available at https://www.bop.gov/inmates/custody_and_care/substance_abuse_treatment.jsp (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

168. See, e.g., Apply for Clemency, N.Y. STATE, available at <https://www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency> (last visited Jun 22, 2020); Clemency – Commutations & Pardons, STATE OF CALIFORNIA, available at <https://www.gov.ca.gov/clemency/> (last visited June 22, 2020).

169. See, e.g., Clemency Applications, COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, available at <https://www.bop.pa.gov/application-process/Pages/clemency.aspx> (last visited Jun 22, 2020); Executive Clemency Overview, COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, available at <https://www.mass.gov/service-details/executive-clemency-overview> (last visited June 22, 2020). For a complete list of all states’ different types of clemency authority, see 50-State Comparison: Pardon Policy & Practice, RESTORATION OF RIGHTS PROJECT, available at <https://ccresourcecenter.org/state-restoration-profiles/50-state-comparisoncharacteristics-of-pardon-authorities-2/> (last visited Jun 22, 2020).

170. Harbison v. Bell, 556 U.S. 180, 188, 129 S. Ct. 1481, 173 L. Ed. 2d 347 (2009).

correctional facility in New York.¹⁷¹ For more information on pardons, commutations, and other forms of early release, please see JLM, Chapter 35, “Getting Out Early: Conditional and Early Release.” If you are not in New York, you must look up your state’s rules on clemency.¹⁷² For further information on clemency for battered women nationwide, contact the National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women, which accepts collect calls from incarcerated battered women (see Appendix A).

1. How to Request Clemency

To be considered for clemency in New York, send a written petition requesting clemency to either of the following addresses:

The Governor of the State of New York
Executive Chamber
State Capitol
Albany, New York 12224

New York State
Department of Corrections and Community Supervision
Executive Clemency Bureau
The Harriman State Campus – Building 2
1220 Washington Ave
Albany, NY 12226-2050

Alternatively, you can scan and email your application to: PardonsAndCommutations@doccs.ny.gov.

You should send all supporting materials within thirty days of sending the application. Applications are usually considered in the order that they are received. If your petition has not been granted, you can re-apply a year after you found out about the decision. You may re-apply a year later, unless you have been authorized to do so sooner in the letter informing you of the unfavorable decision.¹⁷³ In either case, you will be informed of the decision by letter from the Clemency Bureau of your state.

2. Writing Your Petition

(a) Tips for Organizing Your Petition

Try to make the petition as brief as you can. But, be sure not to leave out any information you think is important. Use headings to separate the points that you make. If you have evidence of past incidents of abuse, it may be helpful to make a table that includes the date of each incident, the details of the abuse, and the evidence of the incident.

For example:¹⁷⁴

DATE	NATURE OF THE ABUSE	DOCUMENT
7/1/15	Dan found on top of Paula with his hands around her neck.	Smith Affidavit, Exhibit 1

171. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Community Supervision Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Community Supervision (July 2017), available at https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/05/Community_Supervision_Handbook.pdf (last visited Feb. 18, 2020). For instructions on how to apply for clemency in New York, you can also visit <https://www.ny.gov/services/apply-clemency> (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

172. To find your state’s requirements for commutation, go to the Criminal Justice Policy Foundation website (<http://www.cjpf.org/state-clemency/>) and click “Select your State.”

173. Criminal Justice Policy Foundation, New York Applicable Form of Executive Clemency (June 2014), available at <http://www.cjpf.org/clemency-ny> (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

174. Michigan Women’s Justice and Clemency Project, Clemency Manual, Chapter VII, UMich (2008), available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/ch7.html (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

11/23/15	Dan beats Paula so badly that she has contusions all over her body.	Cook County Hospital Records, Exhibit 2
10/3/16	Crisis Center overhears abuse and calls police.	Support Service Records, Exhibit 4
4/4/17	Dan violates restraining order. He is arrested for punching hand through window.	Police Report, Exhibit 6

An affidavit is a statement taken under oath or affirmed by a notary public or commissioner of oaths. An exhibit is a document or another object presented as evidence in court. You should describe the strongest part of your petition at the beginning of the document in the first paragraph. You may wish to include any special circumstances that affect your case, or significant achievements you have accomplished in prison. For example, one woman who recently submitted a petition for clemency graduated summa cum laude from Western Michigan University while in prison.¹⁷⁵ Another woman's sentencing judge specifically stated that he hoped the Parole Board would commute her sentence.¹⁷⁶ Put such facts at the beginning. Do not hide facts like these in the middle of the petition.

(b) What to Include in Your Petition

Your clemency petition should include a thorough description of your life before you were convicted. This description should:

- (1) Let the Board know what kind of person you were;
- (2) Discuss your childhood, your family, your hobbies, and your ambitions;
- (3) Record your educational background, the names of any organizations to which you belonged, and every job you have held, including responsibilities and length of employment; and
- (4) Briefly discuss your criminal history and any type of domestic violence (sexual, physical, and/or emotional) you may have experienced throughout your life.

You should also describe the event causing your conviction. You should note any differences between the evidence that was entered at your trial and what is known now. If you want to give a different version of what happened from what you said before trial or from the facts as found to be true at trial, you should explain these differences.

Next, you should describe why you think you should get clemency (your "theory of the case"). Your theory should set out the facts, law, and any policy reasons supporting your petition for clemency. If your criminal case went to trial, you may want to base your theory for clemency on the defense presented at trial.

Finally, describe why the Governor should grant you a special exception (the "plea for justice or mercy"). Clemency is extraordinary relief and you should remind the Governor that only he or she has the power to grant it.

You want to show the Governor that you are a model incarcerated person making the most of the rehabilitative services available to you in prison. If you have taken or completed any courses in prison, include copies of your transcripts, grades, diplomas, and degrees. You should include any skills programs or counseling programs you have completed. You should also include any certificates from the programs. If you are in a privileged housing area or have been moved to a lower security level, explain this and list the privileges that you have received. If you have a clean disciplinary record, list any housing honors and explain how you were able to avoid disciplinary problems. Also include any jobs that you have held at the facility, your length of employment at each job, and your duties and responsibilities. If you know a prison official, including a counselor, who will support your clemency petition, ask them to write a letter on your behalf. Finally, list the people that you have stayed in contact with through visits, phone calls, and letters.

175. Michigan Women's Justice and Clemency Project, Clemency Manual, Chapter VII, UMICH (2008), available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/ch7.html (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

176. Michigan Women's Justice and Clemency Project, Clemency Manual, Chapter VII, UMICH (2008), available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/ch7.html (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

It is very important to show the Governor that you will be a productive and law-abiding member of society after your release. Write down your plans for the future. For example, include where you will live, support groups and/or therapy in which you will participate, and family and friends who will help support you financially and emotionally. Also include plans to seek help for a drug or alcohol addiction, employment plans (including marketable skills that will help you find a job), and family plans.

You should also provide evidence to help give the Governor a sense of who you are as a person. Try to get letters from family members discussing their relationship with you, particularly if you have any children or grandchildren who are dependent on you. Include if a family member is able to offer you a place to live or a job upon release. Consider getting letters from religious or community leaders describing your involvement in their organization. Also consider including letters from people who knew you as a child, especially if you suffered abuse, neglect, or other hardships growing up. Finally, you may be able to get members of the victim's family to write a letter stating that they are not opposed to your clemency petition. Keep in mind that this is a very sensitive issue, so do not press for such a letter if you have reason to think that the victim's family may oppose your request.

(c) Using Evidence to Support Your Petition

You should include evidence to support all of the aspects of your claim. This evidence includes letters of support, police records, and affidavits from family and friends.¹⁷⁷ You should label them as "exhibits" at the back of your petition. When using affidavits or letters, state whether the authors of those affidavits or letters testified at your criminal trial. Because you may have difficulty getting all of these documents while in prison, try to have a close friend or family member assist you in gathering this information and developing your petition. Here are some basic types of evidence to consider:

- (1) Affidavits. Affidavits are where a person writes out facts that they know to be true in the form of a statement. The person signs the affidavit in front of a notary to make it authoritative. For example, if someone was with you during the events that led to your incarceration, you might want them to write an affidavit stating what happened.
- (2) Records, including hospital records, police records, and sentencing materials.
- (3) Letters, e-mail printouts, photographs, and anything that shows your story to be true.
- (4) Letters of support written by people who believe you should receive a commutation. You can ask for letters of support from family, clergy, prison staff, and possibly the victim's family. More information on letters of support is below.

To show that you were abused or battered, think about the following types of evidence:

- (1) Medical records of injuries from abuse;
- (2) Mental health records showing your diminished capacity at the time of the crime and/or the stress, fear and anxiety caused by living in a violent relationship;
- (3) Orders of protection;
- (4) Police reports related to the abuse;
- (5) Photographs showing physical injury;
- (6) Records from battered women's shelters;
- (7) Any testimony referring to battered women's syndrome at your trial. Include the abuser's criminal history if he had a violent criminal past.

To get police records, you should call or write to the county where the incident happened. Different police departments have different policies and you may have to fill out a Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL") request, a formal request to a government agency to release documents. To learn more about how to make a FOIL request, see JLM, Chapter 7, "Freedom of Information." To get hospital records, call or write to the patient records office at the hospital where you went for treatment. A written request should include your name, date of birth, social security number, and the specific information you are requesting.

177. Michigan Women's Justice and Clemency Project, Clemency Manual, Chapter VII, UMICH (2008), available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_mnl/ch7.html (last visited Feb. 18, 2020).

You should also try to get letters of support from the following people:

- (1) Anyone who can say that they knew or suspected that you were battered;
- (2) Co-workers who witnessed bruises, health problems, or work absences resulting from battering, or heard stories about battering episodes;
- (3) Neighbors who heard or saw violent episodes or called the police in response to them;
- (4) Medical professionals who witnessed the results of battering, such as bruises or fear and anxiety;
- (5) Social workers who witnessed the effects of your battering;
- (6) Lawyers (in your criminal case or elsewhere) if they were aware of the battering and attempted to document its effects;
- (7) Experts consulted for trial regarding battered women's syndrome and battering and its effects;
- (8) Witnesses who testified to the battering at trial;
- (9) Private investigators if one was hired for your case;
- (10) Women's groups and community organizations. You can seek letters from groups that would support your clemency petition, such as battered women's groups, women's rights groups, groups that support incarcerated people, or any community group of which you are a member.

In addition to the documents described previously, you will want to obtain your DOCCS records (records concerning the time you have spent in prison), your parole file, and your case file. Your DOCCS records include:

- (1) All misbehavior reports and supplemental (additional) sheets;
- (2) Physical force and unusual incident sheets;
- (3) Adjustment committee reports and dispositions;
- (4) Copy of legal dates;
- (5) Crimes of commitment;
- (6) Personal history record;
- (7) Disciplinary record;
- (8) Correctional supervision history;
- (9) Certificates of program completion; and
- (10) Recognition letters.

(d) Obtaining your DOCCS file, case record, parole file, case file and rap sheet

In order to obtain your DOCCS file, write to the inmate records coordinator of your facility. Include your name, DOCCS number, where you would like the records sent, and a list of the documents you want to receive. If the documents are being sent to someone other than you, you must authorize their release.

The case record is the most complete set of records maintained by the Board of Parole. It can be obtained by writing to the senior parole officer of your facility. In your request, include your name, ID number, and release interview date (or revocation hearing date or appeal pending date, whichever applies). State that you want to review all the information in the file that will be considered by the Board of Parole to prepare for the upcoming date.

The parole file is a less complete record in the central office. It can be obtained by writing to the Chairman of the Board of Parole, 97 Central Avenue, Albany, NY 12206. State that you are requesting these records under FOIL and the New York Personal Privacy Protection Law (PPPL).

You should also obtain a copy of your case file. Your case file includes police reports, hearing transcripts, and other useful information from your trial. Ask your attorney for copies of these documents and transcripts. You may need to call the criminal courthouse to get copies if your attorney does not have complete transcripts.

For your rap sheet, send a written request to:

Record Review Unit
New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services
Alfred E. Smith Building
80 South Swan Street
Albany, NY 12210.

You should include your name, date of birth, social security number, and department identification number, and send the request in a facility envelope, if possible. You can also ask them to RUSH processing of your file if you need the information quickly. Otherwise, it can take eight weeks or longer to receive your rap sheet. You also have a right to obtain pre-sentencing reports.¹⁷⁸ To get them, send a written request to the above address, addressed “To Whom It May Concern”, with your name, birth date, indictment/information/complaint number, sentencing court, the address to which you would like the information sent, and a signed release authorizing another person to receive the information, if necessary.

G. Conclusion

This Chapter outlines some of the unique problems that women frequently face in prison. It identifies different ways that incarcerated women can advocate for themselves in prison. In particular, this Chapter explains incarcerated women’s right to receive the same programming as incarcerated men, right to adequate medical care, and right to be free from sexual harassment or assault. It also discusses rights regarding searches and privacy, as well as how to file for clemency. This Chapter is meant to supplement the rest of the JLM, which discusses the rights of all incarcerated people, and describes how to file grievances and bring lawsuits. If you need additional support, the organizations listed in Appendix A of this Chapter may be helpful to you.

178. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.50(2)(a) (McKinney’s 2018).

Appendix A

Contacts for Further Assistance

Resources in New York

Battered Women:

STEPS to End Family Violence (Rising Ground)
<https://www.risingground.org/program/steps/>
STEPShelpline@RisingGround.org
(877) 783-7794

The Domestic Violence Prosecution Hybrid Clinic at Albany Law School
80 New Scotland Avenue
Albany, NY 12208-3494
(518) 445-2328

Discharge Planning & Work Release:

Women's Prison Association
110 Second Avenue
New York, NY 10003
(646) 292-7740

Health Care:

The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project
199 Water Street, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300

Sexual Harassment:

Prisoner's Legal Services
ITHACA
114 Prospect St.
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-2283

Prisoner's Legal Services
ALBANY
41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY 12207

Women's Program Services:

Women's Advocate Ministry, Inc.
211 West 129th Street
New York NY 10027
(212) 280-7320

General Questions:

Women in Prison Project
The Correctional Association of New York
2090 Adam Clayton Powell Blvd
Suite 200
New York, NY 10027
(212) 254-5700

National Resources Outside of New York:Battered Women:

National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women
125 S. 9th Street, Suite 302
Philadelphia, PA 19107
(215) 351-0010 or 1-800-903-0111 ext. 3
(Accepts collect calls from incarcerated battered women)

National Coalition Against Domestic Violence
One Broadway, Suite B210
Denver, CO 80203
(303) 839-1852 or 1-800-799-SAFE (1-800-799-7233)

Health:

Cancer Hotline:
1-800-4CANCER (1-800-422-6237)

Sexual Assault and Rape:

Rape, Abuse, and Incest National Network
National Sexual Assault Hotline
1-800-656-HOPE (1-800-656-4673)
(Free and confidential, 24 hours a day)

General Information:

National Women's Law Center
Women in Prison Project
11 Dupont Circle, NW
Suite 800
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 588-5180

APPENDIX I
ADDRESSES OF FEDERAL COURTS
&
NEW YORK STATE PRISONS AND THEIR RESPECTIVE FEDERAL JUDICIAL DISTRICTS

A. Addresses of Federal Courts

1. Federal Courts in the First Circuit

Court of Appeals

John Joseph Moakley U.S. Courthouse
1 Courthouse Way
Boston, MA 02210
Phone: (617) 748-9057
Website: <http://www.ca1.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Maine District Court

Website: <http://www.med.uscourts.gov/>

Edward T. Gignoux U.S. Courthouse
156 Federal Street
Portland, ME 04101
Phone: (207) 780-3356

Margaret Chase Smith Federal Building &
Courthouse
202 Harlow Street
Bangor, ME 04401
Phone: (207) 945-0575

Massachusetts District Court

Website: <http://www.mad.uscourts.gov/>

John Joseph Moakley U.S. Courthouse
1 Courthouse Way, Suite 2300
Boston, MA 02210
Phone: (617) 748-9152

United States Courthouse
300 State Street, Suite 120
Springfield, MA 01105
Phone: (413) 785-6800

Donahue Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
595 Main Street
Worcester, MA 01608

Phone: (508) 929-9900

New Hampshire District Court

Website: <http://www.nhd.uscourts.gov/>

Warren B. Rudman U.S. Courthouse
55 Pleasant Street, Room 110
Concord, NH 03301
Phone: (603) 225-1423

Puerto Rico District Court

Website: <http://www.prd.uscourts.gov/>

Clemente Ruiz Nazario U.S. Courthouse &
Federico Degetau Federal Building
150 Ave. Carlos Chardón, Suite 150
San Juan, Puerto Rico 00918
Phone: (787) 772-3000

Rhode Island District Court

Website: <http://www.rid.uscourts.gov/>

Federal Building and Courthouse
One Exchange Terrace
Providence, RI 02903
Phone: (401) 752-7200

2. Federal Courts in the Second Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit
Thurgood Marshall U.S. Courthouse
40 Foley Square
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 857-8500
Website: <http://www.ca2.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Connecticut District Court

Website: <http://www.ctd.uscourts.gov/>

Abraham Ribicoff Federal Building
450 Main Street, Suite A012
Hartford, CT 06103
Phone: (860) 240-3200

Richard C. Lee U.S. Courthouse
141 Church Street
New Haven, CT 06510
Phone: (203) 773-2140

Brien McMahon Federal Building
915 Lafayette Boulevard
Bridgeport, CT 06604
Phone: (203) 579-5861

New York Eastern District Court

Website: <https://www.nyed.uscourts.gov/>

United States District Court
Eastern District of New York
225 Cadman Plaza East
Brooklyn, New York 11201
Phone: (718) 613-2600

United States District Court
Eastern District of New York
Long Island Courthouse
100 Federal Plaza
Central Islip, NY 11722
Phone: (631) 712-6000

New York Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.nynd.uscourts.gov/>

James T. Foley Courthouse
445 Broadway, Suite 509
Albany, NY 12207
Phone: (518) 257-1800

U.S. District Court
Northern District of New York
Binghamton Courthouse
15 Henry Street
Binghamton, NY 13901
Phone: (607) 773-2893

U.S. District Court
Northern District of New York
The Gateway Building
14 Durkee Street.
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
Phone: (518) 247-4501

U.S. District Court
James M. Hanley Federal Building, 7th Floor
100 South Clinton Street
Syracuse, NY 13261
Phone: (315) 234-8500
Mailing address:
P.O. Box 7367
Syracuse, NY 13261-7367

Alexander Pirnie Federal Building
10 Broad Street
Utica, NY 13501-1233
Phone: (315) 793-8151

New York Southern District CourtWebsite: <http://www.nysd.uscourts.gov/>

Daniel Patrick Moynihan U.S. Courthouse
500 Pearl Street
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 805-0136

Thurgood Marshall
United States Courthouse
40 Foley Square
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 857-8500

The Hon. Charles L. Brieant Jr.
Federal Building and Courthouse
Southern District of New York
300 Quarropas Street
White Plains, NY 10601
Phone: (914) 390-4100

United States Courthouse
355 Main Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
Phone: (845) 452-4200

New York Western District CourtWebsite: <http://www.nywd.uscourts.gov/>

United States Courthouse
2 Niagara Square Buffalo, NY 14202
Phone: (716) 551-1700

Kenneth B. Keating Federal Building
100 State Street
Rochester, NY 14614
Phone: (585) 613-4000

Vermont District CourtWebsite: <http://www.vtd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Room 200
11 Elmwood Avenue
Burlington, VT 05401
Phone: (802) 951-6301
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
P.O. Box 945
Burlington, VT 05402

US District Court
151 West Street, Room 204
Rutland, VT 05701
Phone: (802) 773-0245
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
P.O. Box 607
Rutland, VT 05702

3. Federal Courts in the Third Circuit

Court of Appeals

James A. Byrne Courthouse
601 Market Street
Philadelphia PA 19106
Phone: (215) 597-2995
Website: <http://www.ca3.uscourts.gov/>

Mailing Address:
United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit
21400 U.S. Courthouse
601 Market Street
Philadelphia, PA 19106

District Courts

Delaware District Court
Website: <http://www.ded.uscourts.gov/>

J. Caleb Boggs Federal Building
844 North King Street, Unit 18
Wilmington, DE 19801
Phone: (302) 573-6170

New Jersey District Court
Website: <http://www.njd.uscourts.gov/>

Mitchell H. Cohen Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
4th & Cooper Streets Room 1050
Camden, NJ 08101
Phone: (856) 757-5021

Martin Luther King Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
50 Walnut Street Room 4015
Newark, NJ 07101
Phone: (973) 645-3730

Clarkson S. Fisher Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
402 East State Street Room 2020
Trenton, NJ 08608
Phone: (609) 989-2065

Pennsylvania Eastern District Court
Website: <http://www.paed.uscourts.gov/>

James A. Byrne U.S. Courthouse
601 Market Street, Room 2609
Philadelphia, PA 19107
Phone: (215) 597-7704

Edward N. Cahn Courthouse & Federal Building
504 West Hamilton Street
Allentown, PA 18101
Phone: (610) 434-3896

The Gateway Building
201 Penn Street
Reading, PA 19601

Holmes Building, 4th Floor
101 Larry Holmes Drive
Easton, PA 18042

Pennsylvania Middle District CourtWebsite: <http://www.pamd.uscourts.gov/>

William J. Nealon Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
235 North Washington Avenue
P.O. Box 1148
Scranton, PA 18503
Phone: (570) 207-5600

Ronald Reagan Federal Building &
U.S. Courthouse
228 Walnut Street
P.O. Box 983
Harrisburg, PA 17101
Phone: (717) 221-3920

Herman T. Schneebeli Federal Building &
U.S. Courthouse
240 West Third Street, Suite 218
Williamsport, PA 17701
Phone: (570) 323-6380

Max Rosenn U.S. Courthouse
197 South Main Street, Suite 161
Wilkes-Barre, PA 18701

Pennsylvania Western District CourtWebsite: <http://www.pawd.uscourts.gov/>

Joseph F. Weis, Jr. U.S. Courthouse
700 Grant Street
Pittsburgh, PA 15219
Phone: (412) 208-7500

U.S. Courthouse
17 South Park Row
Erie, PA 16501
Phone: (814) 464-9600

U.S. Courthouse
208 Penn Traffic Building
319 Washington Street
Johnstown, PA 15901
Phone: (814) 533-4504

Virgin Islands District CourtWebsite: <http://www.vid.uscourts.gov/>

Ron deLugo Federal Building
5500 Veterans Drive, Rm 310
St. Thomas, VI 00802
Phone: (340) 774-0640

District Court of the Virgin Islands
3013 Estate Golden Rock, Suite 219
St. Croix, VI 00820
Phone: (340) 718-1130

4. Federal Courts in the Fourth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Lewis F. Powell, Jr. United States Courthouse
1000 East Main Street, Suite 501
Richmond, VA 23219
Phone: (804) 916-2700
Website: <http://www.ca4.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Maryland District Court

Website: <http://www.mdd.uscourts.gov/>

Edward A. Garmatz Federal Building and
U.S. Courthouse
101 W. Lombard Street
Baltimore, MD 21201
Phone: (410) 962-2600

United States Courthouse
6500 Cherrywood Lane
Greenbelt, MD 20770
Phone: (301) 344-0660

129 East Main Street, Rom 104
Salisbury, MD 21803
Phone: (410) 962-2600

North Carolina Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.nced.uscourts.gov/>

Terry Sanford Federal Building and
Courthouse
310 New Bern Avenue
Raleigh, NC 27611
Phone: (919) 645-1700
Mailing Address:
Clerk of Court
P.O. Box 25670
Raleigh, NC 27611

U.S. Courthouse
201 South Evans Street, Rm 209
Greenville, NC 27858
Phone: (252) 830-6009

U.S. Courthouse
1003 South 17th Street
Wilmington, NC 28401
Phone: (910) 815-4663

U.S. Courthouse
413 Middle Street
New Bern, NC 28560
Phone: (252) 638-8534

North Carolina Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.ncmd.uscourts.gov/>

L. Richardson Preyer Federal Building
324 West Market Street
Greensboro, NC 27401
Phone: (336) 332-6000

Hiram H. Ward Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
251 North Main Street
Winston-Salem, NC 27101
Phone: (336) 332-6000

U.S. District Court
323 East Chapel Hill Street
Durham, NC 27702
Phone: (919) 541-5413
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1091
Durham, NC 27702

North Carolina Western District Court

Website: <http://www.ncwd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Courthouse
100 Otis Street, Room 309
Asheville, NC 28801
Phone: (828) 771-7200

Charles R. Jonas Federal Building
401 West Trade Street, Room 210
Charlotte, NC 28202
Phone: (704) 350-7400

United States Courthouse
200 West Broad Street, Room 304
Statesville, NC 28677
Phone: (704) 883-1000

South Carolina District Court

Website: <http://www.scd.uscourts.gov/>

Charles E. Simons Jr. Federal Courthouse
223 Park Avenue, S.W.
Aiken, SC 29801
Phone: (803) 648-6896

G. Ross Anderson, Jr. Federal Building and
U.S. Courthouse
315 South McDuffie Street, 2nd Floor
Anderson, SC 29624
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Charleston Federal Courthouse
85 Broad Street
Charleston, SC 29401
Phone: (843) 579-1401

J. Waties Judicial Center
83 Meeting Street
Charleston, SC 29401
Phone: (843) 579-1401

Matthew J. Perry, Jr. Courthouse
901 Richland Street
Columbia, SC 29201
Phone: (803) 765-5816

McMillan Federal Building
401 West Evans Street
Florence, SC 29501
Phone: (843) 676-3820

Clement F. Haynsworth Federal Building &
U.S. Courthouse
300 East Washington Street
Greenville, SC 29601
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Donald S. Russell Courthouse & U.S.
Courthouse
201 Magnolia Street
Spartanburg, SC 29306
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Virginia Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.vaed.uscourts.gov/>

Albert V. Bryan U.S. Courthouse
401 Courthouse Square
Alexandria, VA 22314
Phone: (703) 299-2100

Walter E. Hoffman U.S. Courthouse
600 Granby Street
Norfolk, VA 23510
Phone: (757) 222-7202

U.S. Courthouse
2400 West Avenue
Newport News, VA 23607
Phone: (757) 247-0784

Spottswood W. Robinson III and Robert R.
Merhige, Jr., Federal Courthouse
701 East Broad Street
Richmond, VA 23219
Phone: (804) 916-2200

Virginia Western District Court

Website: <http://www.vawd.uscourts.gov/>

Richard H. Poff Federal Building
210 Franklin Road S.W., Suite 540
Roanoke, VA 24011
Phone: (540) 857-5100

Virginia Western District Court
180 West Main Street, Room 104
Abingdon, VA 24210
Phone: (276) 628-5116

C. Bascom Slemp Federal Building
322 East Wood Avenue, Room 204
Big Stone Gap, VA 24219
Phone: (276) 523-3557
Mailing Address:
180 West Main Street, Room 104
Abingdon, VA 24210

Virginia Western District Court
255 West Main Street, Room 304
Charlottesville, VA 22902
Phone: (434) 296-9284

Dan Daniel United States Post Office
700 Main Street, Suite 202
Danville, VA 24541
Phone: (434) 793-7147
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1400
Danville, VA 24543

United States Courthouse
116 North Main Street, Room 314
Harrisonburg, VA 22802
Phone: (540) 434-3181

United States Courthouse
1101 Court Street, Suite A66
Lynchburg, VA 24504
Phone: (434) 847-5722

West Virginia Northern District Court
Website: <http://www.wvnd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
500 West Pike Street, Room 301
Clarksburg, WV 26302
Phone: (304) 622-8513
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 2857
Clarksburg, WV 26302

The Jennings Randolph Federal Center
300 Third Street
Elkins, WV 26241
Phone: (304) 636-1445
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1518
Elkins, WV 26241

W. Craig Broadwater Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
217 West King Street, Room 102
Martinsburg, WV 25401
Phone: (304) 267-8225

U.S. District Court
1125 Chapline Street
Wheeling, WV 26003
Phone: (304) 232-0011
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 471
Wheeling, WV 26003

West Virginia Southern District Court
Website: <http://www.wvwd.uscourts.gov/>

Robert C. Byrd U.S. Courthouse
300 Virginia Street, East, Suite 2400
Charleston, WV 25301
Phone: (304) 347-3000
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 2546
Charleston, WV 25329

U.S. District Court
601 Federal Street, Room 1000
Bluefield, WV 24701
Phone: (304) 327-9798

Sidney L. Christie Federal Building
845 Fifth Avenue, Room 101
Huntington, WV 25701
Phone: (304) 529-5588

Robert C. Byrd United States Courthouse
110 North Heber Street, Room 119
Beckley, WV 25801
Phone: (304) 253-7481

5. Federal Courts in the Fifth Circuit

Court of Appeals

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit
600 South Maestri Place, Suite 115
New Orleans, LA 70130-3408
Phone: (504) 310-7700

Website: <http://www.ca5.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Louisiana Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.laed.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Eastern District of Louisiana
Room C-151
500 Poydras Street
New Orleans, LA 70130
Phone: (504) 589-7600

Louisiana Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.lamd.uscourts.gov/>

Russell B. Long Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
777 Florida Street, Suite 139
Baton Rouge, LA 70801
Phone: (225) 389-3500

Louisiana Western District Court

Website: <http://www.lawd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Post Office and Courthouse
515 Murray Street, Suite 105
Alexandria, LA 71301
Phone: (318) 473-7415

U.S. Courthouse
800 Lafayette Street, Suite 2100
Lafayette, LA 70501
Phone: (337) 593-5000

Edwin F. Hunter, Jr.
U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
611 Broad Street, Suite 188
Lake Charles, LA 70601
Phone: (337) 437-3870

U.S. Courthouse
300 Fannin Street, Suite 1167
Shreveport, LA 71101
Phone: (318) 676-4273

Federal Building
201 Jackson Street, Suite 215
Monroe, LA 71210
Phone: (318) 322-6740

Mississippi Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.msnd.uscourts.gov/>

Thomas G. Abernathy Federal Building
301 West Commerce Street
Aberdeen, MS 39730
Phone: (662) 369-4952
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 704
Aberdeen, MS 39730

Post Office and Federal Building
305 Main Street, Room 329
Greenville, MS 38701
Phone: (662) 234-1971
Mailing address:
Federal Building Room 369
911 Jackson Avenue East
Oxford, MS 38655

Federal Building Room 369
911 Jackson Avenue East
Oxford, MS 38655
Phone: (662) 234-1971

Mississippi Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.mssd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court

Thad Cochran United States Courthouse
501 East Court Street, Suite 2.500
Jackson, MS 39201
Phone: (601) 608-4000

U.S. District Court

William M. Colmer Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
701 North Main Street, Suite 200
Hattiesburg, MS 39401
Phone: (601) 255-6400

U.S. District Court

Dan M. Russell, Jr., U.S. Courthouse
2012 15th Street, Suite 403
Gulfport, MS 39501
Phone: (228) 563-1700

U.S. District Court

U.S. Courthouse
109 South Pearl Street, 2nd Floor
Natchez, MS 39120
Phone: (601) 897-6945

Mailing address:U.S. District Court

Thad Cochran United States Courthouse
501 East Court Street, Suite 2.500
Jackson, MS 39201

Texas Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.txed.uscourts.gov/>

Jack Brooks Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse

300 Willow Street, Suite 104
Beaumont, TX 77701
Phone: (409) 654-7000

Ward R. Burke U.S. Courthouse

104 North Third Street
Lufkin, TX 75901
Phone: (936) 632-2739

Sam B. Hall Jr. Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse

100 East Houston, Room 125
Marshall, TX 75670
Phone: (903) 935-2912

Paul Brown U.S. Courthouse

101 East Pecan Street, Room 216
Sherman, TX 75090
Phone: (903) 892-2921

U.S. Courthouse

7940 Preston Road Room 101
Plano, TX 75024
(214) 872-4800

U.S. Courthouse and Post Office

500 North State Line Avenue
Texarkana, TX 75501
Phone: (903) 794-8561

William M. Steger Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse

211 West Ferguson Street, Room 106
Tyler, TX 75702
Phone: (903) 590-1000

Texas Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.txnd.uscourts.gov>

Earle Cabell Federal Building

1100 Commerce Street, Room 1452
Dallas, TX 75242
Phone: (214) 753-2200

U.S. District Court - Abilene Division

341 Pine Street, Room 2008
Abilene, TX 79601
Phone: (325) 677-6311

U.S. District Court - Amarillo Division

205 S.E. 5th Avenue, Room 133
Amarillo, TX 79101
Phone: (806) 468-3800

U.S. District Court - Fort Worth Division

501 West 10th Street, Room 310
Fort Worth, TX 76102
Phone: (817) 850-6600

U.S. District Court - Lubbock Division

1205 Texas Avenue, Room 209
Lubbock, TX 79401
Phone: (806) 472-1900

U.S. District Court - San Angelo Division

33 East Twohig Avenue, Room 202
San Angelo, TX 76903
Phone: (325) 655-4506

U.S. District Court - Wichita Falls Division
1000 Lamar Street, Room 203
Wichita Falls, TX 76301
Phone: (940) 767-1902

Texas Southern District

Website: <http://www.txs.uscourts.gov/>

Reynaldo G. Garza-Filemon B. Vela
U.S. Courthouse
600 East Harrison Street, #101
Brownsville, TX 78520
Phone: (956) 548-2500
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of Court
600 East Harrison Street, #101
Brownsville, TX 78520

U.S. Courthouse
1133 North Shoreline Boulevard
Corpus Christi, TX 78401
Phone: (361) 888-3142
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of Court
1133 North Shoreline Boulevard
Corpus Christi, TX 78401

U.S. Post Office and Courthouse
601 Rosenberg, Room 411
Galveston, TX 77550
Phone: (409) 766-3530
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of Court
601 Rosenberg, Room 411
Galveston, TX 77550

Bob Casey U.S. Courthouse
515 Rusk Avenue
Houston, TX 77002
Phone: (713) 250-5500
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of Court
P.O. Box 61010
Houston, TX 77208

George P. Kazen Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
1300 Victoria Street
Laredo, TX 78040
Phone: (956) 790-1377
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of Court
1300 Victoria Street, Suite 1131
Laredo, TX 78040

U.S. Courthouse
1701 West Business Highway 83
McAllen, TX 78501
Phone: (956) 618-8065
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of the Court
P.O. Box 5059
McAllen, TX 78501

Martin Luther King, Jr. Federal Building
312 South Main Street, Room 406
Victoria, TX 77901
Phone: (361) 788-5000
Mailing Address:
David J. Bradley
Clerk of the Court
312 South Main Street, Room 406
Victoria, TX 77902

Texas Western District Court

Website: <http://www.txwd.uscourts.gov>

U.S. District Clerk's Office
501 West 5th Street, Suite 1100
Austin, TX 78701
Phone: (512) 916-5896

U.S. District Clerk's Office
111 East Broadway, Room L100
Del Rio, TX 78840
Phone: (830) 703-2054

U.S. District Clerk's Office
525 Magoffin Avenue, Suite 105
El Paso, TX 79901
Phone: (915) 534-6725

U.S. District Clerk's Office
200 East Wall, Room 222
Midland, TX 79701
Phone: (432) 686-4001

U.S. District Clerk's Office
410 South Cedar
Pecos, TX 79772
Phone: (432) 445-4228

U.S. District Clerk's Office
2450 State Highway 118
Alpine, TX 79830
Phone: (432) 837-7323

U.S. District Clerk's Office
655 E. Cesar E. Chavez Boulevard., Room G65
San Antonio, TX 78206
Phone: (210) 472-6550

U.S. District Clerk's Office
800 Franklin Avenue, Room 380
Waco, TX 76701
Phone: (254) 750-1501

U.S. District Clerk's Office
MG Williams Judicial Center
Bldg. 5794, Tank Destroyer Boulevard
Fort Hood, Texas 76544
Phone: (254) 287-5158
Mailing Address:
P. O. Box 5507
Fort Hood, TX 76544

6. Federal Courts in the Sixth CircuitCourt of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit
540 Potter Stewart U.S. Courthouse
100 East Fifth Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
Phone: (513) 564-7000
Website: <http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/>

District CourtsKentucky Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.kyed.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Eastern District of Kentucky
101 Barr Street, Suite 206
Lexington, KY 40507
Phone: (859) 233-2503

336 Carl Perkins Federal Building
1405 Greenup Avenue
Ashland, KY 41101
Phone: (606) 329-2465

35 West 5th Street
Covington, KY 41011
Phone: (859) 392-7925

313 John C. Watts Federal Building
330 West Broadway
Frankfort, KY 40601
Phone: (502) 223-5225

310 South Main Street
London, KY 40741
Phone: (606) 877-7910

110 Main Street, Suite 203
Pikeville, KY 41501
Phone: (606) 437-6160

Kentucky Western District Court

Website: <http://www.kywd.uscourts.gov/>

Clerk's Office
241 East Main Street, Suite 120
Bowling Green, KY 42101
Phone: (270) 393-2500

Clerk's Office
Gene Snyder U.S. Courthouse
601 West Broadway, Rm 106
Louisville, KY 40202
Phone: (502) 625-3500

Clerk's Office
423 Frederica Street, Suite 126
Owensboro, KY 42301
Phone: (270) 689-4400

Clerk's Office
501 Broadway, Suite 127
Paducah, KY 42001
Phone: (270) 415-6400

Michigan Eastern District

Website: <http://www.mied.uscourts.gov/>

Theodore Levin U.S. Courthouse
231 West Lafayette Boulevard, Room 599
Detroit, MI 48226
Phone: (313) 234-5005

U.S. District Courthouse
Federal Building
200 East Liberty Street, Room 120
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48104
Phone: (313) 234-5005

U.S. District Court
U.S. Post Office Building
1000 Washington Avenue, 2nd Floor
Bay City, MI 48708
Phone: (313) 234-5005
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 913
Bay City, MI 48707

Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
600 Church Street, Room 140
Flint, MI 48502
Phone: (313) 234-5005

Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse
526 Water Street
Port Huron, MI 48060

Michigan Western District Court

Website: <http://www.miwd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
399 Federal Building
110 Michigan Street NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
Phone: (616) 456-2381

U.S. District Court
107 Federal Building
410 West Michigan Avenue
Kalamazoo, MI 49007
Phone: (269) 337-5706

U.S. District Court
113 Federal Building
315 West Allegan Street
Lansing, MI 48933
Phone: (517) 377-1559

U.S. District Court
229 Federal Building
202 West Washington Street
PO Box 698
Marquette, MI 49855
Phone: (906) 226-2021

Ohio Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.ohnd.uscourts.gov/>

John F. Seiberling Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
2 South Main Street
Akron, Ohio 44308
Phone: (330) 252-6000

Carl B. Stokes U.S. Court House
801 West Superior Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44113
Phone: (216) 357-7000

James M. Ashley and Thomas W.L. Ashley
U.S. Courthouse
1716 Spielbusch Avenue
Toledo, Ohio 43604
Phone: (419) 213-5500

Thomas D. Lambros Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
125 Market Street
Youngstown, Ohio 44503
Phone: (330) 884-7400

Ohio Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.ohsd.uscourts.gov/>

Office of the Clerk
Potter Stewart U.S. Courthouse
100 East Fifth Street, Room 103
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
Phone: (513) 564-7500

Office of the Clerk
Joseph Kinneary U.S. Courthouse
85 Marconi Boulevard, Room 121
Columbus, Ohio 43215
Phone: (614) 719-3000

Office of the Clerk
Federal Building
200 West Second Street, Room 712
Dayton, Ohio 45402
Telephone: (937) 512-1400

Tennessee Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.tned.uscourts.gov/>

James H. Quillen U.S. Courthouse
220 West Depot Street, Suite 200
Greeneville, TN 37743
Phone: (423) 639-3105

Howard H. Baker, Jr. U.S. Courthouse
800 Market Street, Suite 130
Knoxville, TN 37902
Phone: (865) 545-4228

Joel W. Solomon Federal Building, U.S.
Courthouse
900 Georgia Avenue
Chattanooga, TN 37402
Phone: (423) 752-5200

Federal Building – Post Office – Courthouse
200 South Jefferson Street
Winchester, TN 37398
Phone: (423) 752-5200
Mailing Address:
900 Georgia Avenue
Chattanooga, TN 37402

Tennessee Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.tnmd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Courthouse
Estes Kefauver Federal Building &
Courthouse
801 Broadway, Room 800
Nashville, TN 37203
Phone: (615) 736-5498
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
801 Broadway, Room 800
Nashville, TN 37203

U.S. Courthouse & Post Office Building
815 South Garden Street
Columbia, TN 38401
Phone: (615) 736-5498
Mailing Address:

U.S. District Court
801 Broadway, Room 800
Nashville, TN 37203

L. Clure Morton U.S. Post Office and
Courthouse
9 East Broad Street
Cookeville, TN 38501
Phone: (615) 736-5498
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
801 Broadway, Room 800
Nashville, TN 37203

Tennessee Western District Court

Website: <http://www.tnwd.uscourts.gov/>

Western Divisional Office
167 North Main Street, Room 242
Memphis, TN 38103
Phone: (901) 495-1200

Eastern Divisional Office
111 South Highland Avenue, Room 262
Jackson, TN 38301
Phone: (731) 421-9200

7. Federal Courts in the Seventh Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit
Everett McKinley Dirksen
U.S. Courthouse
219 South Dearborn Street
Room 2722
Chicago, IL 60604
Phone: (312) 435-5850

Website: <http://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Illinois Central District Court

Website: <http://www.ilcd.uscourts.gov/>

Peoria Division
309 U.S. Courthouse
100 North East Monroe Street
Peoria, IL 61602
Phone: (309) 671-7117

Rock Island Division
U.S. District Court
Rock Island Division
131 E. 4th Street, Room 250
Davenport, IA 52801
Phone: (309) 793-5778

Springfield Division
151 U.S. Courthouse
600 East Monroe Street
Springfield, IL 62701
Phone: (217) 492-4020

Urbana Division
218 U.S. Courthouse
201 South Vine Street
Urbana, IL 61802
Phone: (217) 373-5830

Illinois Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.ilnd.uscourts.gov/>

Main Office
Everett McKinley Dirksen Building
U.S. Courthouse

219 South Dearborn Street
Chicago, IL 60604
Phone: (312) 435-5670

Rockford Division
Stanley J. Roszkowski
United States Courthouse
327 South Church Street
Rockford, IL 61101
Phone: (815) 987-4354

Illinois Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.ilsd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
301 West Main Street
Benton, IL 62812
(618) 439-7760

U.S. District Court
750 Missouri Avenue
East St. Louis, IL 62201
(618) 482-9371

Indiana Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.innd.uscourts.gov/>

Fort Wayne Division
U.S. District Court
Northern District of Indiana
1300 South Harrison Street
Fort Wayne, IN 46802
Phone: (260) 423-3000

Hammond Division
U.S. District Court

Northern District of Indiana
5400 Federal Plaza
Suite 2300
Hammond, IN 46320
Phone: (219) 852-6500

Lafayette Division
U.S. District Court
Northern District of Indiana
214 Charles A. Halleck Federal Building
230 North Fourth Street, Room 105
Lafayette, IN 47901
Phone: (765) 420-6250

South Bend Division
U.S. District Court
102 Federal Building
204 South Main Street
South Bend, IN 46601
Phone: (574) 246-8000

Indiana Southern District Court
Website: <http://www.insd.uscourts.gov/>

Evansville Division
304 Federal Building
101 Northwest MLK Boulevard, Room 304
Evansville, IN 47708
Phone: (812) 434-6410

Indianapolis Division
105 Birch Bayh Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
46 East Ohio Street, Room 105
Indianapolis, IN 46204
Phone: (317) 229-3700

New Albany Division
210 Lee H. Hamilton Federal Building and
U.S. Courthouse
121 West Spring Street, Room 210

New Albany, IN 47150
Phone: (812) 542-4510

Terre Haute Division
U.S. District Court
921 Ohio Street, Room 104
Terre Haute, IN 47807
Phone: (812) 231-1840

Wisconsin Eastern District Court
Website: <http://www.wied.uscourts.gov/>

Milwaukee Division
United States Federal Building and
Courthouse
517 E. Wisconsin Ave - Room 362
Milwaukee, WI 53202
Phone: (414) 297-3372

Green Bay Division
Jefferson Court Building
125 South Jefferson Street, Room 102
Green Bay, WI 54305-4541
Phone: (920) 884-3720

Wisconsin Western District Court
Website: <http://www.wiwd.uscourts.gov/>

Clerk of Court
U.S. District Court
Western District of Wisconsin
120 North Henry Street, Room 320
Madison, WI 53703
Phone: (608) 264-5156

8. Federal Courts in the Eighth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit
Thomas F. Eagleton Courthouse
111 South 10th Street, Room 24.329
St. Louis, MO 63102
Phone: (314) 244-2400

Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit
St. Paul Office
Federal Court Building
316 North Robert Street
Room 500
St. Paul, MN 55101
Phone: (651) 848-1300

Website: <http://www.ca8.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Arkansas Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.are.uscourts.gov>

Richard Sheppard Arnold U.S. Courthouse
500 West Capitol Avenue
Little Rock, AR 72201
Phone: (501) 604-5351
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
Eastern District of Arkansas
600 W Capitol Ave, Rm A149
Little Rock, AR 72201

E.C. Gathings Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
615 South Main Street, Room 312
Jonesboro, AR 72401
Phone: (870) 972-4610

Jacob Trieber Federal Building, U.S. Post
Office, and U.S. Courthouse
617 Walnut
Helena, AR 72342
Phone: (501) 604-5351
Mailing Address:
US District Court
Eastern District of Arkansas
600 W Capitol Ave, Rm A149
Little Rock, AR 72201

Arkansas Western District Court

Website: <http://www.arwd.uscourts.gov/>

El Dorado Division
U.S. Courthouse
101 South Jackson Avenue, Room 205
El Dorado, AR 71730
Phone: (870) 862-1202

Fayetteville Division
John Paul Hammerschmidt Federal Building
35 East Mountain St, Suite 510
Fayetteville, AR 72701
Phone: (479) 521-6980

Main Office
Judge Isaac C. Parker Federal Building
30 South 6th Street, Room 1038
Fort Smith, AR 72901
Phone: (479) 783-6833

Hot Springs Division
U.S. Courthouse
100 Reserve Street, Room 347
Hot Springs, AR 71901
Phone: (501) 623-6411 / (479) 783-6833
Mailing Address:
Judge Isaac C. Parker Federal Building
30 South 6th Street, Room 1038
Fort Smith, AR 72901

Texarkana Division
U.S. Courthouse and Post Office Building
500 North State Line Avenue, Room 302
Texarkana, AR 71854
Phone: (870) 773-3381
Mailing Address:
Judge Isaac C. Parker Federal Building
30 South 6th Street, Room 1038
Fort Smith, AR 72901

Iowa Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.iand.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Northern District of Iowa
111 Seventh Avenue SE
Box 12
Cedar Rapids, IA 52401
Phone: (319) 286-2300

U.S. District Court
Northern District of Iowa
320 6th Street
Room 301
Sioux City, IA 51101
Phone: (712) 233-3900

Iowa Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.iasd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Southern District of Iowa
123 East Walnut Street, Suite 300
Des Moines, IA 50309
Phone: (515) 284-6248

U.S. District Court
Southern District of Iowa
131 East 4th Street, Suite 150
Davenport, IL 52801
Phone: (563) 884-7607

U.S. District Court
Southern District of Iowa
8 South 6th Street, Room 313
Council Bluffs, IA 51501
Phone: (712) 328-0283

Minnesota District Court

Website: <http://www.mnd.uscourts.gov/>

Diana E. Murphy U.S. Courthouse
300 South Fourth Street - Suite 202
Minneapolis, MN 55415
Phone: (612) 664-5000

Warren E. Burger Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
316 North Robert Street
Suite 100
St. Paul, MN 55101
Phone: (612) 664-5000

Gerald W. Heaney Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse and Customhouse
515 West First Street
Suite 417
Duluth, MN 55802-1397
Phone: (612) 664-5000

Edward J. Devitt U.S. Courthouse and
Federal Building
118 South Mill Street
212 USPO Building
Fergus Falls, MN 56537
Phone: (612) 664-5000

Missouri Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.moed.uscourts.gov/>

Thomas F. Eagleton U.S. Courthouse
111 South 10th Street, Suite 3.300
St. Louis, MO 63102
Phone: (314) 244-7900

Rush Hudson Limbaugh, Sr. U.S. Courthouse
555 Independence Street
Cape Girardeau, MO 63703
Phone: (573) 331-8800

801 Broadway
Hannibal, MO 63401
Phone: (573) 221-0757

Missouri Western District

Website: <http://www.mow.uscourts.gov/>

Jefferson City – Central Division
Christopher S. Bond Court House
80 Lafayette Street
Jefferson City, MO 65101
Phone: (573) 636-4015

Springfield – Southern Division
1400 U.S. Courthouse
222 North John Q. Hammons Parkway
Springfield, MO 65806
Phone: (417) 865-3869

Kansas City – Western Division
Charles Evans Whittaker U.S. Courthouse
400 East 9th Street
Kansas City, MO 64106
Phone: (816) 512-5000

Nebraska District Court

Website: <http://www.ned.uscourts.gov/>

Roman L. Hruska U.S. Courthouse
111 South 18th Plaza, Suite 1152
Omaha, NE 68102
Phone: (402) 661-7350

Robert V. Denney Federal Building
100 Centennial Mall North
Room 593
Lincoln, NE 68508
Phone: (402) 437-1900
Mailing Address:
Roman L. Hruska U.S. Courthouse
111 South 18th Plaza, Suite 1152
Omaha, NE 68102

North Dakota District Court

Website: <http://www.ndd.uscourts.gov/>

Bismarck Division
William L. Guy Federal Building
U.S. Courthouse
220 East Rosser Avenue #476
Bismarck, ND 58501
Phone: (701) 530-2300
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
P.O. Box 1193
Bismarck, ND 58502-1193

Minot Division
Bruce M. Van Sickle
U.S. Courthouse
100 1st Street SW
Minot, ND 58701
Phone: (701) 530-2300
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
P.O. Box 1193
Bismarck, ND 58502-1193

Fargo Division
Quentin N. Burdick
U.S. Courthouse
655 1st Avenue North, #130
Fargo, ND 58102
Phone: (701) 297-7000

Grand Forks Division
Ronald N. Davies Federal Building and
U.S. Courthouse
102 North 4th Street, Suite 308
Grand Forks, ND 58203
Phone: (701) 297-7000
Mailing Address:
U.S. Courthouse
655 1st Avenue North, #130
Fargo, ND 58102

South Dakota District Court

Website: <https://www.sdd.uscourts.gov/>

Main Office

U.S. District Court

400 South Phillips Avenue

Sioux Falls, SD 57104

Phone: (605) 330-6600

U.S. Post Office and Courthouse

225 South Pierre Street

Pierre, SD 57501

Phone: (605) 945-4600

Mailing Address:

PO Box 7147

U.S. Post Office and Courthouse

225 South Pierre Street

Pierre, SD 57501

Andrew W. Bogue Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse

515 Ninth Street

Rapid City, SD 57701

Phone: (605) 399-6000

U.S. District Court

102 Fourth Avenue S.E., Room 408

Aberdeen, SD 57401

Phone: (605) 377-2600

9. Federal Courts in the Ninth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Website: <http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov/>

Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
James R. Browning Courthouse
95 Seventh Street
San Francisco, CA 94103
Phone: (415) 355-8000
Mailing Address:
Molly Dwyer, Clerk of the Court
Office of the Clerk
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
P.O. Box 193939
San Francisco, CA 94119

The Richard H. Chambers Courthouse
125 South Grand Avenue
Pasadena, CA 91105
Phone: (626) 229-7250
Mailing Address:
Molly Dwyer, Clerk of the Court
Office of the Clerk
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
P.O. Box 193939
San Francisco, CA 94119

The Pioneer Courthouse
700 S.W. 6th Avenue, Suite 110
Portland, Oregon 97204
Phone: (503) 833-5311
Mailing Address:
Molly Dwyer, Clerk of the Court
Office of the Clerk
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
P.O. Box 193939
San Francisco, CA 94119

William K. Nakamura Courthouse
1010 Fifth Avenue
Seattle, WA 98104
Phone: (206) 224-2200
Mailing Address:
Molly Dwyer, Clerk of the Court
Office of the Clerk
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
P.O. Box 193939
San Francisco, CA 94119

District Courts

Alaska District Court

Website: <http://www.akd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
222 West 7th Avenue, Room 229, Box/Suite #4
Anchorage, AK 99513
Phone: (907) 677-6100; (866) 243-3814 toll free

U.S. District Court
101 12th Avenue, Room 332
Fairbanks, AK 99701
Phone: (907) 451-5791; (866) 243-3813 toll free

Hurff Ackerman Saunders Federal Buildings and Robert Boochever U.S. Courthouse
U.S. District Court
709 W. 9th Street, Rm 979
Juneau, AK 99801
Phone: (907) 586-7458; (866) 243-3812 toll free
Mailing Address:

PO Box 020349
Juneau, AK 99802

U.S. District Court
U.S. District Court
3609 Tongass Avenue #5822
Ketchikan, AK 99901
Phone: (907) 586-7458; (866) 243-3812 toll free
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
PO Box 5822
Ketchikan, AK 99901

Norton Sound Regional Building
306 W. 5th Avenue
Nome, AK 99762
Phone: (907) 443-2259
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
PO Box 130
Nome, AK 99762

Arizona District CourtWebsite: <http://www.azd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Courthouse
123 North San Francisco Street, Suite 200
Flagstaff, AZ 86001
Phone: (928) 774-2566

Sandra Day O'Connor U.S. Courthouse
401 W. Washington Street, Suite 130, SPC 1
Phoenix, AZ 85003
Phone: (602) 322-7200

Evo A. DeConcini U.S. Courthouse
405 West Congress Street, Suite 1500
Tucson, AZ 85701
Phone: (520) 205-4200

John M. Roll United States Courthouse

98 West 1st Street
Yuma, AZ 85364
Phone: (928) 329-4766

California Central District CourtWebsite: <http://www.cacd.uscourts.gov/>

George E. Brown, Jr. Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
3470 Twelfth Street
Riverside, CA 92501
Phone: (951) 328-4450

Ronald Reagan Federal Building &
Courthouse
411 West Fourth Street, Room 1053
Santa Ana, CA 92701
Phone: (714) 338-4750

Edward R. Roybal Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
255 East Temple Street
Los Angeles, CA 90012
Phone: (213) 894-1565

U.S. Courthouse
350 W 1st Street, Suite 4311
Los Angeles, CA 90012-4565
Phone: (213) 894-1565

California Eastern District CourtWebsite: <http://www.caed.uscourts.gov>

Robert T. Matsui Federal Courthouse
501 I Street, Room 4-200
Sacramento, CA 95814
Phone: (916) 930-4000

Robert E. Coyle Federal Courthouse
2500 Tulare Street, Room 1500
Fresno, CA 93721
Phone: (559) 499-5600

Yosemite Federal Courthouse
9004 Castle Cliff Court
Yosemite, CA 95389
Phone: (209) 372-0320

Mailing Address:

Robert E. Coyle Federal Courthouse
2500 Tulare Street, Room 1500
Fresno, CA 93721

Redding Federal Courthouse
2986 Bechelli Lane
Redding, CA 96002
Phone: (530) 246-5416

Mailing Address:

Robert T. Matsui Federal Courthouse
501 I Street, Room 4-200
Sacramento, CA 95814

Bakersfield Federal Courthouse
510 19th Street, Suite 200
Bakersfield, CA 93301
Phone: (661) 326-6620

Mailing Address:

Robert E. Coyle Federal Courthouse
2500 Tulare Street, Room 1500
Fresno, CA 93721

California Northern District CourtWebsite: <http://www.cand.uscourts.gov/home>

U.S. Courthouse
3140 Boeing Avenue
McKinleyville, CA 95519
Phone: (707) 445-3612

Ronald V. Dellums Federal Building
1301 Clay Street, Suite 400 S
Oakland, CA 94612
Phone: (510) 637-3530

Phillip Burton Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
450 Golden Gate Avenue, 16th Floor
San Francisco, CA 94102
Phone: (415) 522-2000

Robert F. Peckham Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
280 South 1st Street, 2nd Floor
San Jose, CA 95113
Phone: (408) 535-5363

California Southern District Court
Website: <http://www.casd.uscourts.gov/>

James M. Carter & Judith N. Keep
U.S. Courthouse
333 West Broadway, Suite 420
San Diego, CA 92101
Phone: (619) 557-5600

Edward J. Schwartz U.S. Courthouse
221 West Broadway
San Diego, CA 92101
Phone: (619) 557-5600
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
Southern District of California
Office of the Clerk
333 West Broadway, Suite 420
San Diego, CA 92101

U.S. District Court
2003 West Adams Ave, Suite 220
El Centro, CA 92243
Phone: (760) 339-4242
Mailing Address:
U.S. District Court
Southern District of California
Office of the Clerk
333 West Broadway, Suite 420
San Diego, CA 92101

Guam District Court
Website: <http://www.gud.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Courthouse
520 West Soledad Avenue FL 4
Hagatna, Guam 96910
Phone: (671) 969-4500

Hawaii District Court
Website: <http://www.hid.uscourts.gov/>

300 Ala Moana Boulevard, Room C338
Honolulu, HI 96850
Phone: (808) 541-1300

Idaho District Court
Website: <http://www.id.uscourts.gov/>

James A. McClure Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
550 West Fort Street, Suite 400
Boise, ID 83724
Phone: (208) 334-1361; 866-496-1250 toll free

U.S. Courthouse
6450 North Mineral Drive
Coeur d'Alene, ID 83815
Phone: (208) 665-6850; (866) 299-5515 toll free

U.S. Courthouse
801 East Sherman Street, Room 119
Pocatello, ID 83201
Phone: (208) 478-4123; (866) 444-6086 toll free

Montana District Court
Website: <http://www.mtd.uscourts.gov/>

James F. Battin Courthouse
2601 2nd Avenue North
Billings, MT 59101
Phone: (406) 247-7000

Mike Mansfield Federal Courthouse
U.S. District Court
400 North Main Street
Butte, MT 59701
Phone: (406) 497-1279

Missouri River Federal Courthouse
U. S. District Court
125 Central Avenue West
Great Falls, MT 59404
Phone: (406) 727-1922

Paul G. Hatfield Federal Courthouse
901 Front Street
Helena, MT 59626
Phone: (406) 441-1355

Russell Smith Federal Courthouse
201 East Broadway
Missoula, MT 59802
Phone: (406) 542-7260

Nevada District Court

Website: <http://www.nvd.uscourts.gov/>

333 Las Vegas Boulevard South
Las Vegas, NV 89101
Phone: (702) 464-5400

400 South Virginia Street
Reno, NV 89501
Phone: (775) 686-5800

Northern Mariana Islands District Court

Website: <http://www.nmid.uscourts.gov/>

United States District Court
for the Northern Mariana Islands
1671 Gualo Rai Road
Saipan, MP 96950
Phone: (670) 237-1200
Mailing Address:
United States District Court
for the Northern Mariana Islands
P.O. Box 500687
Saipan, MP 96950

Oregon District Court

Website: <http://www.ord.uscourts.gov/>

Mark O. Hatfield U.S. Courthouse
Office of the Clerk, Suite 740
1000 S.W. Third Avenue
Portland, OR 97204
Phone: (503) 326-8000

Wayne L. Morse U.S. Courthouse
405 East Eighth Avenue, Room 2100
Eugene, OR 97401
Phone: (541) 431-4100

James A. Redden U.S. Courthouse
310 West Sixth Street, Room 201
Medford, OR 97501
Phone: 541-608-8777

John F. Kilkenny U.S. Post Office and
Courthouse
104 S.W. Dorion
Pendleton, OR 97801
Phone: (503) 326-8000

Washington Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.waed.uscourts.gov/>

Thomas S. Foley U.S. Courthouse
920 West Riverside Avenue, Room 840
Spokane, WA 99201
Phone: (509) 458-3400
Mailing Address:
US District Court
PO Box 1493
Spokane, WA 99210

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
825 Jadwin Avenue, Room 174
Richland, WA 99352
Phone: (509) 943-8170

William O. Douglas Courthouse
25 South Third Street, Room 201
Yakima, WA 98901
Phone: (509) 573-6600
Mailing Address:
US District Court
P.O. Box 2706
Yakima, WA 98907

Washington Western District Court

Website: <http://www.wawd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. District Court
Clerk's Office
700 Stewart Street, Suite 2310
Seattle, WA 98101
Phone: (206) 370-8400

Union Station Courthouse
Clerk's Office
1717 Pacific Avenue, Room 3100
Tacoma, WA 98402
Phone: (253) 882-38

10. Federal Courts in the Tenth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit
The Byron White U.S. Courthouse
1823 Stout Street
Denver, CO 80257
Phone: (303) 844-3157

Website: <http://www.ca10.uscourts.gov/>

District Courts

Colorado District Court

Website: <http://www.cod.uscourts.gov/>

Alfred A. Arraj U.S. Courthouse
901 19th Street, Room A105
Denver, Colorado 80294
Phone: (303) 844-3433

Kansas District Court

Website: <http://www.ksd.uscourts.gov/>

Robert J. Dole Courthouse
500 State Avenue, Room 259
Kansas City, Kansas 66101
Phone: (913) 735-2200

Frank Carlson Federal Building
444 S.E. Quincy Street, Room 490
Topeka, Kansas 66683
Phone: (785) 338-5400

Wichita U.S. Courthouse
401 North Market Street, Room 204
Wichita, Kansas 67202
Phone: (316) 315-4200

New Mexico District Court

Website: <http://www.nmcourt.fed.us/>

Pete V. Domenici U.S. Courthouse
333 Lomas N.W. Suite 270
Albuquerque, NM 87102
Phone: (505) 348-2000

Clerk's Office
U.S. District Court
100 North Church Street Suite 280
Las Cruces, NM 88001
Phone: (575) 528-1400

Santiago E. Campos U.S. Courthouse
106 South Federal Place
Santa Fe, NM 87501
Phone: (505) 988-6481

U.S. Circuit Court
500 North Richardson
Roswell, NM 88201
Phone: (575) 637-7960

Oklahoma Eastern District Court

Website: <http://www.oked.uscourts.gov/>

101 North 5th Street, Room 208
Muskogee, OK 74401
Phone: (918) 684-7920
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 607
Muskogee, OK 74402

Oklahoma Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.oknd.uscourts.gov/>

Page Belcher Federal Building
333 West 4th Street, Room 411
Tulsa, OK 74103
Phone: (918) 699-4700
Boulder Building
224 South Boulder Avenue
Tulsa, OK 74103
Phone: (918) 699-4700

Oklahoma Western District Court

Website: <http://www.okwd.uscourts.gov/>

200 N.W. 4th Street, Room 1210
Oklahoma City, OK 73102
Phone: (405) 609-5000

Utah District CourtWebsite: <http://www.utd.uscourts.gov/>

351 South West Temple, Room 1.100
Salt Lake City, UT, 84101
Phone: (801) 524-6100

Wyoming District CourtWebsite: <http://www.wyd.uscourts.gov/>

Joseph C. O'Mahoney Federal Center
2120 Capitol Avenue, Room 2131
Cheyenne, WY 82001
Phone: (307) 433-2120

Ewing T. Kerr Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
111 South Wolcott Street, Room 121
Casper, WY 82601
Phone: (307) 232-2620

Yellowstone Justice Center
105 Albright Avenue, 2nd Floor
Mammoth, WY 82190
Phone: (307) 344-2569
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 387
Yellowstone National Park, WY 821

Federal Courts in the Eleventh CircuitCourt of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit
56 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, GA 30303
Phone: (404) 335-6100

Website: <http://www.ca11.uscourts.gov/>

District CourtsAlabama Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.almd.uscourts.gov/>

Frank M. Johnson Federal Courthouse
One Church Street
Room B-110
Montgomery, AL 36104
Phone: (334) 954-3600

207 Northwest Second Street, Rm. 337
Ocala, FL 34475
Phone: (352) 369-4860

U.S. Courthouse
401 West Central Boulevard, Suite 1200
Orlando, FL 32801
Phone: (407) 835-4200

Alabama Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.alnd.uscourts.gov/>

Hugo L. Black U. S. Courthouse
1729 Fifth Avenue North
Birmingham, AL 35203
Phone: (205) 278-1700

Sam M. Gibbons U.S. Courthouse
801 North Florida Avenue
Tampa, FL 33602
Phone: (813) 301-5400

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
2110 First Street, Rm. 2-194
Fort Myers, FL 33901
Phone: (239) 461-2000

United States District Court
101 Holmes Avenue
Huntsville, AL 35801
Phone: (256) 534-6495

Florida Northern District Court
Website: <http://www.flnd.uscourts.gov/>

Alabama Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.alsd.uscourts.gov/>

United States District Courthouse
155 St. Joseph Street
Mobile, AL 36602
Phone: (251) 690-2371

United States Courthouse
401 SE First Avenue, Room 243
Gainesville, FL 32601
Phone: (352) 380-2400

United States Courthouse
30 West Government Street
Panama City, FL 32401
Phone: (850) 691-0770

Florida Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.flmd.uscourts.gov/>

Bryan Simpson United States Courthouse
300 North Hogan Street, Rm. 9-150
Jacksonville, FL 32202
Phone: (904) 549-1900

United States Courthouse
1 North Palafox Street
Pensacola, FL 32502
Phone: (850) 435-8440

Golden-Collum Memorial Federal Building &
U.S. Courthouse

United States Courthouse
111 North Adams Street, Suite 322
Tallahassee, FL 32301-7730
Phone: (850) 521-3501

Florida Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.flsd.uscourts.gov/>

United States Federal Building & Courthouse
299 East Broward Boulevard #108
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33301
Phone: (954) 769-5400

Alto Lee Adams, Sr. U.S. Courthouse
101 South U.S. Highway 1, Room #1016
Fort Pierce, FL 34950
Phone: (772) 467-2300

Wilkie D. Ferguson, Jr. U.S. Courthouse
400 North Miami Avenue, Room 8N09
Miami, FL 33128
Phone: (305) 523-5100

Sidney M. Aronovitz U.S. Courthouse
301 Simonton Street
Key West, FL 33040
Phone: (305) 295-8100

Paul G. Rogers Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
701 Clematis Street, Room 202
West Palm Beach, FL 33401
Phone: (561) 803-3400

Georgia Middle District Court

Website: <http://www.gamd.uscourts.gov/>

C. B. King U.S. Courthouse
201 West Broad Avenue
Albany, Georgia 31701
Phone: (229) 430-8432

U.S. Post Office & Courthouse
115 East Hancock Avenue
Athens, GA 30601
Phone: (706) 227-1094
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1106
Athens, GA 30601

U.S. Post Office & Court House
120 12th Street, Suite 216
Columbus, GA 31902
Phone: (706) 649-7816
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 124
Columbus, GA 31902

William A. Bootle Federal Building and U.S.
Courthouse
475 Mulberry Street
Macon, GA 31201
Phone: (478) 752-3497
Mailing Address
P.O. Box 128
Macon, GA 31202

U.S. Courthouse & Post Office
401 N. Patterson Street
Valdosta, GA 31601
Phone: (229) 242-3616

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 68
Valdosta, GA 31601

Georgia Northern District Court

Website: <http://www.gand.uscourts.gov/>

Richard B. Russell Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
2211 United States Courthouse
75 Ted Turner Drive, SW
Atlanta, GA 30303
Phone: (404) 215-1600

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
121 Spring Street SE, Room 201
Gainesville, Georgia 30501
Phone: (678) 450-2760

Lewis R. Morgan Federal Building & U.S.
Courthouse
18 Greenville Street
Newnan, Georgia 30263
Phone: (678) 423-3060

United States Courthouse
600 East First Street
Rome, Georgia 30161
Phone: (706) 378-4060

Georgia Southern District Court

Website: <http://www.gasd.uscourts.gov/>

U.S. Courthouse
125 Bull Street
Savannah, GA 31401
Phone: (912) 650-4020
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 8286
Savannah, GA 31412

Federal Justice Center
600 James Brown Boulevard
Augusta, GA 30901
Phone: (706) 849-4400
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1130
Augusta, GA 30903

Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building
801 Gloucester Street
Brunswick, GA 31520
Phone: (912) 280-1330
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1636
Brunswick, GA 31521

Dublin Courthouse
100 North Franklin Street
Dublin, GA 31021
Phone: (478) 272-2121 / (706) 849-4400
Mailing Address:
PO Box 1130
Augusta, GA 30903

Waycross Courthouse
601 Tebeau Street.
Waycross, GA 31501
Phone: (912) 283-2870 / (912) 280-1330
Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1636
Brunswick, GA 31521

Statesboro Courthouse
52 North Main Street
Statesboro, GA 30458
Phone: (912) 764-3276 / (912) 650-4020
Mailing Address:
PO Box 8286
Savannah, GA 31412

11. Federal Courts in the D.C. Circuit and Federal CircuitDC Circuit Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit
 E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex
 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, DC 20001
 Phone: (202) 216-7300

Website: <http://www.cadc.uscourts.gov>

DC District Court

United States District Court for the District of Columbia
 5423 E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse
 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
 Room 1225
 Washington, DC 20001
 Phone: (202) 354-3000

Website: <http://www.dcd.uscourts.gov/>

Federal Circuit

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit
 717 Madison Place, N.W.
 Washington, DC 20005
 Phone: (202) 275-8000

Website: <http://www.cafc.uscourts.gov/>

B. New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts

Prison	Federal District	Prison	Federal District
Adirondack	Northern	Fishkill	Southern
Albion	Western	Five Points	Western
Altona	Northern	Franklin	Northern
Attica	Western	Gouverneur	Northern
Auburn	Northern	Gowanda	Western
Bare Hill	Northern	Great Meadow	Northern
Bedford Hills	Southern	Green Haven	Southern
Cape Vincent	Northern	Greene	Northern
Cayuga	Northern	Groveland	Western
Clinton	Northern	Hale Creek	Northern
Clinton Annex	Northern	Hudson	Northern
Collins	Western	Lakeview	Western
Coxsackie	Northern	Marcy	Northern
Downstate	Southern	Mid-State	Northern
Eastern	Northern	Mohawk	Northern
Edgecombe	Southern	Moriah	Northern
Elmira	Western	Ogdensburg	Northern

Orleans	Western
Otisville	Southern
Queensboro	Eastern
Riverview	Northern
Rochester.....	Western
Shawangunk	Northern
Sing Sing	Southern
Southport	Western
Sullivan	Southern
Taconic	Southern
Ulster.....	Northern
Upstate.....	Northern
Wallkill.....	Northern
Washington	Northern
Watertown.....	Northern
Wende.....	Western
Willard	Western
Woodbourne	Southern
Wyoming	Western

APPENDIX II

NEW YORK STATE: FILING INSTRUCTIONS & ADDRESSES OF NEW YORK STATE COURTS

This Appendix contains information on how to file legal papers in New York State as well as contact information for New York State Courts, including clerks' offices.

A. General Filing Instructions

Each Chapter explaining the legal action you are filing should tell you with whom you need to file your papers. This Appendix provides the addresses for the Supreme Courts and County Clerks of New York. Part B of this Appendix explains how to file your poor person's papers with a County Attorney. Part C lists the addresses of the New York Supreme Courts. Part D lists the addresses of the New York County Clerks. Part E lists the addresses of the New York Court of Appeals and Appellate Division Courts.

The County Clerk generally forwards all mail to the judge in his or her county. But the addresses of Supreme Court Clerks are also included for your convenience. If you are unsure of the Supreme Court address, always send your mail to the County Clerk, who will forward it to the appropriate party.

If you already have an index number, you should send your documentation to the Supreme Court Clerk and should include the index number with all correspondence. If you do not have an index number and you are filing a new petition (like an Article 78 petition), you need to file a Request for Judicial Intervention ("RJI") with the County Clerk to obtain an index number. When you mail documentation, you should specifically refer to the person you are trying to contact by addressing the envelope: "[name or title of the person you are trying to contact] c/o County Clerk [or Supreme Court Clerk], _____ County," followed by the correct town, state, and ZIP code.

For Article 440 and other proceedings related to your criminal sentence, you should mail documents and letters to the "Clerk of the Criminal Court, Supreme Court, _____ County." For Article 78 and all civil proceedings, you should mail documents and letters to the "Clerk of the Civil Court, Supreme Court, _____ County."

If the Chapter about the type of lawsuit you are filing instructs you to file any of your papers (for example, poor person's papers, notice of your suit, or any other motion or filing) with the District Attorney, see Appendix III for a list of their addresses.

B. How to File Poor Person's Papers with the County Attorney

If you are applying for poor person's status to not have to pay full court costs, send a copy of your poor person's papers either to the County Clerk or to the County Attorney for the county where the court is located. The County Attorney is not the same as the District Attorney. The County Attorney can be reached at the county office building, listed in this Appendix's Part C. Send your papers to the "County Attorney" at that address. If you address the envelope "County Attorney, _____ County Office Building, [name of county], New York," your papers should arrive at the right place.

If you are filing suit in New York City, you should send a copy of your poor person's papers to the Corporation Counsel instead of the County Attorney. The address is Corporation Counsel, 100 Church Street, 4th Floor, New York, New York 10007. The phone number is (212) 788-0303.

C. New York Supreme Court Addresses

Supreme Court Clerk Addresses Within New York City

BRONX COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
Bronx County Courthouse
851 Grand Concourse
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 618-1400

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
265 East 161st Street
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 618-3000

KINGS COUNTY (BROOKLYN)

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
Kings County Courthouse
360 Adams Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 675-7699

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
320 Jay Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(646) 386-4500

NEW YORK COUNTY (MANHATTAN)

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
60 Centre Street, Room 161
New York, NY 10007
(646) 386-5955

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
New York County Courthouse
100 Centre Street, Room 1000
New York, NY 10013
(646) 386-4000

QUEENS COUNTY

Queens County has three different Supreme Courts. If you don't know which of these three parts you are in, call (718) 520-3933 to find out.

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
88-11 Sutphin Boulevard
Jamaica, NY 11435
(718) 298-1140

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
25-10 Court Square
Long Island City, NY 11101
(718) 298-1616

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
125-01 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415
(718) 298-1408

RICHMOND COUNTY (STATEN ISLAND)

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
130 Stuyvesant Place, Room 302
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 675-8700

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
18 Richmond Terrace, Room 110
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 675-8760

Supreme Court Clerk Addresses Outside of New York City

ALBANY COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Albany County Courthouse
16 Eagle Street, Room 102
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 285-8989

ALLEGANY COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Allegany County Courthouse
7 Court Street
Belmont, NY 14813-1084
(585) 268-5941

BROOME COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Broome County Courthouse
P.O. Box 1766
Binghamton, NY 13902
(607) 240-5800

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Cattaraugus County Courthouse
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-6636

CAYUGA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Cayuga County Courthouse
152 Genesee Street
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 237-6450

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Chautauqua County Courthouse
P.O. Box 292
3 North Erie Street
Mayville, NY 14757-0292
(716) 753-4000
(716) 753-4993

CHEMUNG COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Hazlett Building
P.O. Box 588
224 Lake St.
Elmira, NY 14902
(607) 737-2084
(607) 873-9450

CHENANGO COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Chenango County Office Building
5 Court Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1457

CLINTON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Clinton County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, 3rd Floor
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4715

COLUMBIA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Columbia County Courthouse
401 Union Street
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 851-2874
(518) 267-3150

CORTLAND COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Cortland County Courthouse
46 Greenbush Street, Suite 301
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5013
(607) 218-3320

DELAWARE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Delaware County Courthouse
3 Court Street
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 746-2131
(607) 376-5400

DUTCHESS COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Dutchess County Courthouse
10 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 431-1710

ERIE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Erie County Court Building
25 Delaware Avenue, Ground Floor
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 845-9301

ESSEX COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Essex County Courthouse
7559 Court Street
P.O. Box 217
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3370

FRANKLIN COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Franklin County Courthouse
355 West Main Street
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 353-7340

FULTON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Fulton County Office Building
223 West Main Street
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 706-3275

GENESEE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Genesee County Courts Facility
1 West Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 201-5730

GREENE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Greene County Courthouse
320 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 625-3160

HAMILTON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
139 White Birch Lane
P.O. Box 780
Indian Lake, NY 12842
(518) 648-5411

HERKIMER COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Herkimer County Office & Court Facility
301 N. Washington Street
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 619-3400

JEFFERSON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
State Office Building
317 Washington Street
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 211-5818

LEWIS COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Lewis County Courthouse
7660 State Street
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5366

LIVINGSTON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
County Court Building
2 Court Street
Geneseo, NY 14454
(585) 371-3920

MADISON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Madison County Courthouse
North Court Street
P.O. Box 545
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 231-5301

MONROE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Monroe County Court of Justice
99 Exchange Boulevard, Room 545
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 371-3758

MONTGOMERY COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
58 Broadway
P.O. Box 1500
Fonda, NY 12068
(518) 853-4516

NASSAU COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Supreme Court Building
100 Supreme Court Drive
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 493-3400

NIAGARA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Angelo A. Delsignore Civic Building
775 Third Street
Niagara Falls, NY 14031
(716) 371-4000

ONEIDA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Oneida County Courthouse
200 Elizabeth Street
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 266-4200

ONONDAGA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Onondaga County Courthouse
401 Montgomery Street
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 671-1030

ONTARIO COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
County Court Building
27 North Main Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(585) 412-5300

ORANGE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
285 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 476-3500

ORLEANS COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Orleans County Courthouse
1 South Main Street, Suite 3
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 283-6622

OSWEGO COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Oswego County Courthouse
25 East Oneida Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 207-7500

OTSEGO COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
County Court Courthouse
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326
(607) 322-3140

PUTNAM COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
20 County Center
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 208-7800

RENSSELAER COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Rensselaer County Courthouse
80 Second Street
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 285-5025

ROCKLAND COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Rockland County Courthouse
1 South Main Street
New City, NY 10956
(845) 483-8310

SARATOGA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Municipal Center
30 McMaster Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 451-8840

SCHENECTADY COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Schenectady County Judicial Building
612 State Street, 4th Floor
Schenectady, NY 12305
(518) 285-8401

SCHOHARIE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Schoharie County Courthouse
P.O. Box 669
Schoharie, NY 12157
(518) 453-6998

SCHUYLER COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
105 9th Street, Unit 35
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 228-3350

SENECA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
48 West Williams Street
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 835-6229

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
St. Lawrence County Courthouse
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2219

STEUBEN COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 622-8219

SUFFOLK COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
One Court Street
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-2334

SULLIVAN COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Sullivan County Courthouse
414 Broadway
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 791-3540

TIOGA COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Tioga County Supreme Court
20 Court Street
P.O. Box 307
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 689-6102

TOMPKINS COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Tompkins County Courthouse
320 North Tioga Street
P.O. Box 70
Ithaca, NY 14851
(607) 216-6610

ULSTER COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Ulster County Courthouse
285 Wall Street
Kingston, NY 12401
(845) 481-9375

WARREN COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Warren County Municipal Center
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 480-6335

WASHINGTON COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Washington County Courthouse
383 Broadway
Fort Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2521

WAYNE COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
54 Broad Street
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 665-8117

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
111 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 824-5300 (civil department)
(914) 824-5400 (criminal department)

WYOMING COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
Wyoming County Courthouse
147 North Main Street
Warsaw, NY 14569
(585) 228-3200

YATES COUNTY

Supreme Court Clerk
415 Liberty Street
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 835-6308

D. County Clerk Addresses for Counties Outside New York CityALBANY COUNTY

County Clerk
County Courthouse
16 Eagle Street, Room 128
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 487-5100

ALLEGANY COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 242
7 Court Street, Room 18
Belmont, NY 14813
(585) 268-9270

BROOME COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
60 Hawley Street, Third Floor
P.O. Box 2062
Binghamton, NY 13902
(607) 778-2255

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY

Cattaraugus County Center
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-2297

CAYUGA COUNTY

County Clerk
Cayuga County Office Building
160 Genesee Street, 1st Floor
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 253-1271

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY

County Clerk
1 North Erie Street
P.O. Box 170
Mayville, NY 14757
(716) 753-4331

CHEMUNG COUNTY

County Clerk
210 Lake Street
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
(607) 737-2920

CHENANGO COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
5 Court Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1450

CLINTON COUNTY

County Clerk
County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, Suite 301
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4700

COLUMBIA COUNTY

Courthouse
560 Warren Street
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 828-3339

CORTLAND COUNTY

County Clerk
46 Greenbush Street, Suite 105
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5021

DELAWARE COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 426
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 832-5000

DUTCHESS COUNTY

County Clerk
22 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 486-2120

ERIE COUNTY

County Clerk
92 Franklin Street
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 858-8785

ESSEX COUNTY

County Clerk
7559 Court Street
P.O. Box 247
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3600

FRANKLIN COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 70
355 West Main Street, Suite 248
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 481-1681

FULTON COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
223 West Main Street
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 736-5555

GENESEE COUNTY

County Clerk
County Building I
P.O. Box 379
Batavia, NY 14021
(585) 815-7802

GREENE COUNTY

County Clerk
411 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 719-3255

HAMILTON COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 204
102 County View Drive
Lake Pleasant, NY 12108
(518) 548-7111

HERKIMER COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
109 Mary Street, Suite 1111
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 867-1129

JEFFERSON COUNTY

County Clerk
175 Arsenal Street, 1st Floor
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 785-3312

LEWIS COUNTY

County Clerk
7660 State Street
P.O. Box 232
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5333

LIVINGSTON COUNTY

County Clerk
Livingston County Government Center
6 Court Street, Room 201
Geneseo, NY 14454
(585) 243-7010

MADISON COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
138 N. Court Street, Building 4
P.O. Box 668
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 366-2261

MONROE COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
39 West Main Street, Room 101
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 753-1600

MONTGOMERY COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 1500
64 Broadway
Fonda, NY 12068
(518) 853-8111

NASSAU COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
240 Old Country Road
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 571-2660

NIAGARA COUNTY

County Clerk
Niagara County Courthouse
PO Box 461
175 Hawley Street, 1st Floor
Lockport, NY 14095
(716) 439-7022

ONEIDA COUNTY

County Clerk
Oneida County Office Building
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 798-5776

ONONDAGA COUNTY

County Clerk
401 Montgomery Street, Room 200
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 435-2226

ONTARIO COUNTY

County Clerk
20 Ontario Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(585) 396-4200

ORANGE COUNTY

County Clerk
Orange County Government Center
255 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 291-2690

ORLEANS COUNTY

County Clerk
Courthouse Square
3 South Main Street, Suite 1
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 589-5334

OSWEGO COUNTY

County Clerk
46 East Bridge Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 349-8621

OTSEGO COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 710
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326
(607) 547-4276

PUTNAM COUNTY

County Clerk
Putnam County Office Building
40 Gleneida Avenue
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 808-1142

RENSSELAER COUNTY

County Clerk
105 Third Street
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 270-4080

ROCKLAND COUNTY

County Clerk
Rockland County Courthouse
1 South Main Street, Suite 100
New City, NY 10956
(845) 638-5221

SARATOGA COUNTY

County Clerk
40 McMaster Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 885-2213

SCHENECTADY COUNTY

County Clerk
620 State Street
Schenectady, NY 12305
(518) 388-4220

SCHOHARIE COUNTY

County Clerk
P.O. Box 549
Schoharie, NY 12157
(518) 295-8316

SCHUYLER COUNTY

County Clerk
105 Ninth Street, Unit 8
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 535-8133

SENECA COUNTY

County Clerk
Seneca County Office Building
1 DiPronio Drive
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 539-1771

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY

County Clerk
County Courthouse
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2237

STEUBEN COUNTY

County Clerk
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 664-2563

SUFFOLK COUNTY

County Clerk
310 Center Drive
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-2000

SULLIVAN COUNTY

County Clerk
Sullivan County Government Center
100 North Street
P.O. Box 5012
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 807-0411

TIOGA COUNTY

County Clerk
Courthouse
16 Court Street
P.O. Box 307
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-8660

TOMPKINS COUNTY

County Clerk
Courthouse
320 North Tioga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 274-5431

ULSTER COUNTY

County Clerk
County Office Building
244 Fair Street
Kingston, NY 12401
(845) 340-3288

WARREN COUNTY

County Clerk
Warren County Municipal Center
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 761-6429

WASHINGTON COUNTY

County Clerk
Municipal Center
383 Broadway, Building A
Ft. Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2170

WAYNE COUNTY

County Clerk
9 Pearl Street
P.O. Box 608
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-7470

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

County Clerk
110 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 995-3070

WYOMING COUNTY

County Clerk
143 North Main Street, Suite 104
Warsaw, NY 14569
(585) 786-8810

YATES COUNTY

County Clerk
County Building
417 Liberty Street, Suite 1107
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 536-5120

E. New York Court of Appeals and Appellate Division AddressesCOURT OF APPEALS

20 Eagle Street
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 455-7700

FIRST DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
First Department
27 Madison Avenue
New York, NY 10010
(212) 340-0422

District includes: Bronx and New York
(Manhattan) counties

SECOND DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Second Department
Supreme Court Building
45 Monroe Place
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 722-6324

District includes: Dutchess, Kings (Brooklyn),
Nassau, Orange, Putnam, Queens, Richmond
(Staten Island), Rockland, Suffolk, and Westchester counties

THIRD DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Third Department
Justice Building
P.O. Box 7288

Capitol Station
Albany, NY 12224
(518) 471-4777

District includes: Albany, Broome, Chemung,
Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland,
Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene,
Hamilton, Madison, Montgomery, Otsego,
Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Sullivan, Tioga, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, and Washington counties

FOURTH DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Fourth Department
M. Dolores Denman Courthouse
50 East Avenue, Suite 200
Rochester, New York 14604
(585) 530-3100

District includes: Allegany, Cattaraugus,
Cayuga, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee,
Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Livingston,
Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario,
Orleans, Oswego, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne,
Wyoming, and Yates counties

APPENDIX III

ADDRESSES OF NEW YORK DISTRICT ATTORNEYS

You should send copies of your papers to the District Attorney when you are filing a criminal appeal or Article 440 post-judgment motion.

ALBANY COUNTY

District Attorney
Albany Judicial Center
6 Lodge Street, 4th Floor
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 487-5460

ALLEGANY COUNTY

District Attorney
7 Court Street, Room 333
Belmont, NY 14813
(585) 268-9225

BRONX

District Attorney
198 East 161st Street
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 590-2000

BROOKLYN

See KINGS COUNTY

BROOME COUNTY

District Attorney
George Harvey Justice Building
45 Hawley Street, 4th Floor
P.O. Box 1766
Binghamton, NY 13902
(607) 778-2423

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY

District Attorney
Cattaraugus County Center
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-2220

CAYUGA COUNTY

District Attorney
95 Genesee Street
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 253-1391

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY

District Attorney
County Courthouse
1 North Erie Street
Mayville, NY 14757
(716) 753-4241

CHEMUNG COUNTY

District Attorney
226 Lake Street
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902-0588
(607) 737-2944

CHENANGO COUNTY

District Attorney
26 Conkey Ave
Box 126, 2nd Floor
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1745

CLINTON COUNTY

District Attorney
County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, Suite 201
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4770

COLUMBIA COUNTY

District Attorney
325 Columbia Street, Suite 260
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 828-3414

CORTLAND COUNTY

District Attorney
Cortland County Courthouse
46 Greenbush Street, Room 101
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5008

DELAWARE COUNTY

District Attorney
1 Courthouse Square, Suite 5
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 832-5299

DUTCHESS COUNTY

District Attorney
Dutchess County Courthouse
236 Main Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 486-2300

ERIE COUNTY

District Attorney
25 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 858-2424

ESSEX COUNTY

District Attorney
7559 Court Street
P.O. Box 217
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3335

FRANKLIN COUNTY

District Attorney
Franklin County Courthouse
355 West Main Street, Suite 466
Malone, NY 12953-1826
(518) 481-1544

FULTON COUNTY

District Attorney
Fulton County Office Building
223 West Main Street
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 736-5511

GENESEE COUNTY

District Attorney
Genesee County Courts Facility
1 West Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 344-2550

GREENE COUNTY

District Attorney
Greene County Courthouse
411 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 719-3590

HAMILTON COUNTY

District Attorney
P.O. Box 277
139 White Birch Lane
Indian Lake, NY 12842
(518) 648-5113

HERKIMER COUNTY

District Attorney
Herkimer County Courthouse
301 N. Washington Street, Suite 2401
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 867-1155

JEFFERSON COUNTY

District Attorney
175 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 785-3053

KINGS COUNTY

District Attorney
350 Jay Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 250-2340

LEWIS COUNTY

District Attorney
7660 North State Street
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5390

LIVINGSTON COUNTY

District Attorney
2 Court Street
Geneseo, NY 14454-1403
(585) 243-7020

MADISON COUNTY

District Attorney
Veterans Memorial Building
138 North Court Street
P.O. Box 578
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 366-2236

MANHATTAN

See NEW YORK COUNTY

MONROE COUNTY

District Attorney
47 South Fitzhugh Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 753-4500

MONTGOMERY COUNTY

District Attorney
New County Courthouse
58 Broadway
P.O. Box 1500
Fonda, NY 12068-1500
(518) 853-8250

NASSAU COUNTY

District Attorney
262 Old Country Road
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 571-3800

NEW YORK COUNTY

District Attorney
1 Hogan Place
New York, NY 10013
(212) 335-9000

NIAGARA COUNTY

District Attorney
Niagara County Courthouse, 3rd Floor
175 Hawley Street
Lockport, NY 14094-2740
(716) 439-7085

ONEIDA COUNTY

District Attorney
235 Elizabeth Street
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 798-5766

ONONDAGA COUNTY

District Attorney
505 South State Street, 4th Floor
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 435-2470

ONTARIO COUNTY

District Attorney
Ontario County Courthouse, 3rd Floor
27 North Main Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(585) 396-4010

ORANGE COUNTY

District Attorney
255 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 291-2050

ORLEANS COUNTY

District Attorney
13925 State Route 31, Suite 300
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 590-4130

OSWEGO COUNTY

District Attorney
Public Safety Building
39 Churchill Road
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 349-3200

OTSEGO COUNTY

District Attorney
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326-1129
(607) 547-4249

PUTNAM COUNTY

District Attorney
40 Gleneida Avenue
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 808-1050

QUEENS COUNTY

District Attorney
125-01 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415
(718) 286-6000

RENSSELAER COUNTY

District Attorney
Rensselaer County Courthouse
Congress Street
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 270-4040

RICHMOND COUNTY

District Attorney
130 Stuyvesant Place
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 876-6300

ROCKLAND COUNTY

District Attorney
County Office Building
1 South Main Street, Suite 500
New City, NY 10956-3594
(845) 638-5001

SARATOGA COUNTY

District Attorney
Saratoga County Municipal Center
25 West High Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 885-2263

SCHENECTADY COUNTY

District Attorney
3rd Floor – Judicial Building
612 State Street
Schenectady, NY 12305-2113
(518) 388-4364

SCHOHARIE COUNTY

District Attorney
PO Box 129
Howes Cave, NY 12092
(518) 295-2272

SCHUYLER COUNTY

District Attorney
105 9th Street, Unit 26
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 535-8383

SENECA COUNTY

District Attorney
44 West Williams Street
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 539-1300

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY

District Attorney
St. Lawrence County
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2225

STATEN ISLAND

See RICHMOND COUNTY

STEUBEN COUNTY

District Attorney
Steuben County Office Building
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 664-2270

SUFFOLK COUNTY

District Attorney
William J. Lindsay County Complex,
Building 77
Veterans Memorial Highway
Hauppauge, NY 11788
(631) 853-4161

SULLIVAN COUNTY

District Attorney
Sullivan County Courthouse
414 Broadway
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 794-3344

TIOGA COUNTY

District Attorney
20 Court Street
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-8650

TOMPKINS COUNTY

District Attorney
320 North Tioga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 274-5461

ULSTER COUNTY

District Attorney
Ulster County Courthouse
275 Wall Street
Kingston, NY 12401
(845) 340-3280

WARREN COUNTY

District Attorney
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 761-6405

WASHINGTON COUNTY

District Attorney
Washington County Courthouse
383 Broadway, Building C
Fort Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2525

WAYNE COUNTY

District Attorney
Wayne County Courthouse
Hall of Justice, Suite 202
54 Broad Street
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-5905

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

District Attorney
County Courthouse
111 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 995-3414

WYOMING COUNTY

District Attorney
Wyoming County Courthouse
147 North Main Street
Warsaw, NY 14569
(585) 786-8822

YATES COUNTY

District Attorney
Yates County
415 Liberty Street
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 536-5550

APPENDIX IV

DIRECTORY OF LEGAL AND SOCIAL SERVICES FOR INCARCERATED PEOPLE

This Appendix contains a directory of legal and social services that will be useful for incarcerated people, returning citizens and community members, and their families. Please be aware that this type of information changes rapidly.

A. Legal Services

- (1) Organizations that Specifically Serve Incarcerated People
- (2) Organizations that Serve Specific Regional and Cultural Interest Groups
- (3) Organizations that Do Not Specifically Serve Incarcerated People
- (4) Other Legal Services Organizations
 - a. New York City
 - b. Other Counties
- (5) Organizations that Specialize in Death Penalty Cases

B. Social Services

- (1) New York City
- (2) Other Counties

C. Official Corrections Agencies

- (1) Watchdog Agencies
- (2) Administrative Agencies

A. Legal Services

1. Organizations That Specifically Serve Incarcerated People

(a) Prisoners' Legal Services of New York ("PLS")

If you are incarcerated at a New York State correctional facility and in need of legal assistance, you should first contact PLS. PLS provides legal services, free of charge, to people incarcerated in New York State prisons who cannot afford legal representation. PLS will only handle cases that other attorneys and legal services are unlikely to handle. For example, PLS does not handle criminal trials or direct criminal appeals because these are normally handled by private attorneys or legal service organizations. However, PLS will provide assistance to incarcerated people in other matters.

If you qualify for PLS legal assistance, you should contact the PLS office serving your institution (see below). Check with the PLS serving your institution for more information. Application forms for PLS assistance should be available in the prison law library. The offices are listed below:

41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY, 12207
(518) 438-8046
FAX: (518) 438-6643

Prisons served: Arthurkill, Bayview, Beacon, Bedford Hills, Mt. McGregor, Summit Shock, CNYPC, Coxsackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Lincoln, Marcy, Midstate, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne.

24 Margaret St., Suite 9
Suite 202
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 561-3088
FAX: (518) 561-3262

Prisons served: Adirondack, Altona, Bare Hill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensburg, Riverview, Upstate.

14 Lafayette Square, Suite 510
Buffalo, NY 14203
(716) 854-1007
FAX: (716) 854-1008

Prisons served: Albion, Attica, Buffalo, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming.

114 Prospect Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-2283
FAX: (607) 272-9122

Prisons served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Monterey Shock, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard.

(b) Other Organizations Serving Incarcerated People in New York

Prisoners' Rights Project

The Legal Aid Society
Criminal Appeals Bureau
199 Water Street, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300
www.legalaidnyc.org/programs-projects-units/the-prisoners-rights-project/

This organization specializes in cases involving jail and confinement conditions. It represents New York City residents incarcerated in city jails or New York State prisons. It handles only those cases that might expand prisoners' rights or improve prison conditions for large numbers of people in jail or prison; thus, it rarely accepts cases involving only one incarcerated person.

Parole Revocation Defense Unit

The Legal Aid Society
Criminal Defense Division
199 Water Street, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300

This organization represents incarcerated people who either violate or are accused of violating parole. It represents only New York City residents in city jails or New York State prisons.

National Lawyers Guild, Buffalo Chapter

Prison Task Force

John Lord O'Brian Hall
State University of New York Law School
Buffalo, NY 14260
E-mail: buffaloptf@yahoo.com

The Prison Task Force goes to prisons to provide eight-week courses for incarcerated people in legal research and writing.

American Civil Liberties Union

National Prison Project

915 15th Street NW, 7th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 393-4930; Fax: (202) 393-4931
www.aclu.org/prisoners-rights

The National Prison Project is the only organization to litigate on behalf of incarcerated people at a national level. Since its founding in 1972, the National Prison Project has worked in more than twenty-five states to improve conditions of confinement.

2. Organizations That Serve Specific Regional and Cultural Interest Groups

These groups are in no way affiliated with consulates and receive no rights or privileges under the Vienna Convention. They also tend not to represent individual criminal defendants. They may be interested in your case if you have a claim that you are being discriminated against because of your ethnic or cultural background. In addition, most of these organizations will probably provide you with a referral to another organization that can help you.

If you are experiencing difficulties of a religious nature (for example, if you cannot find a clergyperson of your faith or are not being allowed to practice your religion), you should also consult the resources listed in Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

AFRICAN

African Services Committee, Inc.
429 West 127th Street
New York, NY 10027
(212) 222-3882
www.africanservices.org
African Services Committee, Inc. provides social services and conducts outreach programs for immigrants from Africa, the Caribbean, and the Middle East, without regard to ethnicity. They also provide referrals.

NAACP National Headquarters
4805 Mt. Hope Drive
Baltimore, MD 21215
(877) 622-2798; Local: (410) 580-5777
www.naACP.org/
The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People ("NAACP") helps all minority people in the United States. It can only take a few legal cases every year, but it may be able to provide referrals. It also has a wide variety of non-legal programs.

ARAB

American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee
1705 DeSales St., NW, Suite 500
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 244-2990
E-mail: legal@adc.org
www.adc.org
The American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee is a national grassroots non-profit civil rights organization that defends the civil rights of Arab-Americans.

ASIAN

Asian-American Legal Defense and Education Fund
99 Hudson Street, 12th Floor
New York, NY 10013
(212) 966-5932
www.aaldef.org
Asian-American Legal Defense and Education Fund may be particularly interested in your case if it involves police brutality. They do not represent criminal defendants; instead, they usually conduct large-scale impact litigation (lawsuits that are designed to get a result for a broad class of people) on civil issues, much like the American Civil Liberties Union.

Asian Counseling & Referral Service
3639 Martin Luther King Jr. Way South
Seattle, WA 98144
(206) 695-7600
www.acrs.org
Asian Counseling and Referral Service is a community-based, multi-cultural, multilingual, private nonprofit organization that provides and advocates for social services to empower Asian and Pacific Islanders.

Asian Law Caucus, Inc.
55 Columbus Avenue
San Francisco, CA 94111
(415) 896-1701
www.asianlawcaucus.org
Asian Law Caucus, Inc. serves the needs of predominantly monolingual, low-income Asian Pacific Americans living in the San Francisco Bay Area. It provides legal services and educational programs, in English and seven Asian languages, in the areas of civil rights, housing, employment, immigration, and the rights of the elderly.

Organization of Chinese Americans (OCA)

1322 18th Street NW

Washington, D.C. 20036-1803

(202) 223-5500

www.ocanational.org

OCA is a civil rights organization that lobbies on behalf of Chinese-Americans and other Asian-Americans.

World Relief

7 East Baltimore Street

Baltimore MD, 21202

(443) 451-1900 and (800) 535-5433

www.worldrelief.org

World Relief is a Christian organization that provides free legal representation for refugees and assists with employment and citizenship.

CARIBBEAN

Caribbean Bar Association

Tricia-Gaye Cotterell, President

PO Box 14513

Fort Lauderdale, FL 33302

(305) 416-3180

E-mail: caribbeanbarassociation@gmail.com

www.caribbeanbar.org

The Caribbean Bar Association ("CBA") is a voluntary bar organization that has over 150 attorneys from the Caribbean-American community in Florida. CBA attorneys work in the public and private sector and practice in several areas of the law, including criminal and commercial litigation.

National Association of Jamaican and Supportive Organizations ("NAJASO")

5234 Illinois Avenue, NW

Washington, D.C. 20011

(410) 908-0123

www.najaso.org

E-mail: president@najaso.org

NAJASO addresses general problems affecting Caribbean communities in the United States.

See also AFRICAN.

HMONG

Hmong National Development, Inc. ("HND")

1075 Arcade Street

Saint Paul, MN 55106

(651) 495-1557 Fax: 651-495-1699

www.hndinc.org/

E-mail: info@hndinc.org

HND advocates on behalf of Hmong-American communities through legal advocacy, civic engagement, and policy advocacy.

JEWISH (ALL NATIONALITIES)

Jewish Family and Children's Services

2150 Post Street, PO Box 159004

San Francisco, CA 94115

(415) 449-1200

E-mail: admin@jfcs.org.

www.jfcs.org

Jewish Family and Children's Services helps refugees, immigrants, and other newcomers to the San Francisco Bay area and provides services in Russian.

Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia

2100 Arch Street

Philadelphia, PA 19103

(215) 832-0500

www.jewishphilly.org/index.html

Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia tends to assist Israeli and Ethiopian Jews who have recently immigrated to the United States.

Jewish Prisoner Services International

P.O. Box 85840

Seattle, WA 98145-1840

(206) 617-2367; (206) 528-0363

E-mail: jewishprisonerservices@msn.com

www.jpsi.org

Provides pen pals, advocacy, and outreach programs for incarcerated people who are Jewish. See also the Appendix to JLM Chapter 27, "Religious Freedom in Prison" for religious outreach programs.

KURDISHAmerican Kurdish Information Network
("AKIN")

4412 Sedgwick Street NW

Washington, D.C. 20016

(202) 483-6444

E-mail: akin@kurdish.org

www.kurdistan.org

LATIN AMERICAN

Alianza Dominicana (now a division of Catholic Charities Community Services)

1011 First Avenue, 6th Floor

New York, NY 10022

888-744-7900

www.cccsny.org/alianza

Alianza Dominicana maintains several offices in northern Manhattan in New York City.

They do not provide legal assistance but can help you with a wide variety of related matters, including drug addiction, health problems, and youth programs. They also have a cultural center that offers various classes that may be of interest to you.

Hispanic National Bar Association

1020 19th Street NW, Suite 505

Washington, D.C. 20036

(202) 223-4777

www.hnba.com

Hispanic National Bar Association maintains a directory of over 4,000 Hispanic attorneys nationwide and may be able to assist consulates.

Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund ("MALDEF")

634 South Spring Street #1100

Los Angeles, CA 90014

(213) 629-2512

www.maldef.org

Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund promotes equality and protects the civil rights of Hispanics nationwide through litigation, leadership training, and law school scholarships.

LatinoJustice PRLDEF (Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund)

475 Riverside Dr. Suite 1901

New York, NY 10115

(212) 219-3360; Toll Free: (800) 328-2322

www.latinojjustice.org

LatinoJustice PRLDEF conducts primarily large-scale, civil impact litigation. They do not represent criminal defendants, but you can contact them if your rights are being violated, and they will at least provide you with a referral. They help all Hispanic people, not just Puerto Ricans.

NATIVE AMERICAN

International Indian Treaty Council ("IITC")

The Redstone Building

2940 16th Street, Suite 305

San Francisco, CA 94103-3664

(415) 641-4482

E-mail: alberto@treatycouncil.org

www.treatycouncil.org

*International Indian Treaty Council is an organization of indigenous peoples from North,
Central, and South America, the Caribbean and the Pacific, which seeks to protect indigenous human rights, culture, and sacred lands. Services are also available in Spanish.*

Native American Rights Fund ("NARF")

1506 Broadway

Boulder, CO 80302-6296

(303) 447-8760

www.narf.org

NARF provides legal representation and assistance to Indian tribes. They probably will not take your case if it will affect only you as an individual, but they can provide referrals.

United American Indians of New England info@uaine.org

www.uaine.org

3. Organizations That Do Not Specifically Serve Incarcerated People

The following is a list of legal organizations that have previously represented incarcerated people in cases involving prison conditions, parole, sentencing, etc. Note that the primary function of these organizations is not to provide legal services to incarcerated people.

American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU")
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004
(212) 549-2500
www.aclu.org
The ACLU's mission is to preserve all of the protections and guarantees of the United States Constitution.

Center for Constitutional Rights ("CCR")
666 Broadway, 7th Floor
New York, NY 10012
(212) 614-6464
www.ccrjustice.org
CCR is a non-profit legal and educational organization committed to the creative use of law as a positive force for social change.

Children's Defense Fund
Juvenile Justice Division
840 First Street NW Suite 300
Washington, D.C. 20002
(202) 628-8787
Email: cdinfo@childrensdefense.org
www.childrensdefense.org
The Children's Defense Fund provides assistance to incarcerated women facing legal problems involving custody of their children.

Community Law Offices ("CLO") of
The Legal Aid Society
Volunteer Division
230 E. 106th Street
New York, NY 10029
(212) 426-3000
www.legal-aid.org
Provides free legal services to residents of Central and East Harlem who meet its low-income requirements. CLO handles civil matters; however, it has not had extensive dealings with the Parole Board, Corrections Department, disciplinary hearings, or prisoners' rights litigation.

Jewish Board of Family and Children's Services ("JBFCs")
135 W. 50th Street
New York, NY 10020
(212) 582-9100; Toll Free: (888) 523-2769
E-mail: admin@jbfcs.org
www.jbfcs.org
This organization is a nonprofit mental health and social services agency providing a range of community-based programs, residential facilities, and day-treatment centers. JBFCs makes referrals to legal services through its family violence prevention program, and provides therapy to adolescents who have been involved with the criminal justice system through its juvenile justice program.

Legal Action Center ("LAC")
225 Varick Street, 4th Floor
New York, NY 10014
(212) 243-1313; Toll Free: (800) 223-4044
www.lac.org
The Legal Action Center is a public interest law firm that generally handles law reform litigation. LAC has a program that focuses on challenging discrimination against returning citizens, especially in employment. It has also handled challenged guard brutality at a New York City correctional institution.

National Employment Law Project
90 Broad Street, Suite 1100
New York, NY 10004
(212) 285-3025
www.nelp.org
Handles employment discrimination cases. Returning citizens with employment-related problems and currently incarcerated people with work-related problems should contact this organization.

National Lawyers Guild ("NLG") National Office
132 Nassau Street, Suite 922
New York, NY 10038
(212) 679-5100
www.nlg.org

The NLG seeks to unite the lawyers, law students, legal workers and jailhouse lawyers of America in an organization that acts as an effective political and social force in the service of the people to promote human rights.

4. Other Legal Services Organizations

Below is a list of free legal service organizations in New York City and State. These groups do not necessarily provide legal services to incarcerated people. But, if you are incarcerated at a city or county jail in either New York City or New York State, and you do not have access to any of the organizations listed above, you should contact a general legal service organization in the city or county where you are incarcerated. However, be aware that law or the people funding them might prevent them from helping people in prison or jail.

If you are incarcerated at a state institution and seek legal assistance in a criminal trial or direct criminal appeal, you should contact a legal service organization in the city or county where you are incarcerated. Many counties in New York State have a public defender's office and a county bar association program designed to assist you by providing free legal counsel. These organizations are not listed below. To find the address for your county's public defender's office and bar association program, ask your librarian or consult a telephone book for your county.

(a) Legal Services Organizations in New York City

(i) The Legal Aid Society (Civil and Criminal Divisions)

MANHATTAN

Civil Practice
199 Water Street, 3rd Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300

Criminal Defense Office
100 Centre Street
New York, NY 10013
(212) 732-5000

Juvenile Rights Office
New York County Family Court Building
60 Lafayette Street, Room 9A
New York, NY 10013
(212) 312-2260

Harlem Community Law Office (Civil)
Theresa Towers
20290 Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd.
New York, NY 10027
New York, NY 10029
(212) 426-3000

BRONX

Civil Practice
260 E. 161st Street
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 991-4600

Criminal Defense Office
260 E. 161st Street
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 579-3000

Juvenile Rights Office
Bronx County Family Court Building
900 Sheridan Avenue, Room 6-C12
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 579-7900

BROOKLYN

Civil and Criminal Practices
111 Livingston Street, 7th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 722-3100 (Civil Practice)
(718) 237-2000 (Criminal Defense Office)

Juvenile Rights Office
111 Livingston Street, 8th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 237-3100

QUEENS

Civil and Criminal Division
120-46 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415
(718) 286-2450 (Civil Division)
(718) 286-2000 (Criminal Division)

STATEN ISLAND

Civil Division
60 Bay Street
Staten Island, NY 10301
(347) 422-5333

Juvenile Rights Division
60 Bay Street, 3rd Floor
Staten Island, NY 10301
(347) 422-5333

(ii) Community Action for Legal Services (civil cases only)MANHATTAN

Legal Services for New York - Manhattan
40 Worth Street, Suite 606
New York, NY 10013
(646) 442-3100

Harlem Legal Services, Inc.
1 West 125th Street, 2nd Floor
New York, NY 10027
(646) 442-3100

BROOKLYN

South Brooklyn Legal Services
105 Court Street, 3rd Floor
Brooklyn, New York, NY 11201
(718) 237-5500

Legal Services of Brooklyn
3049 Brighton Sixth Street
Brooklyn, NY 11235
(718) 592-2100

Bedford-Stuyvesant Community Legal Services
1360 Fulton Street, Suite 301
Brooklyn, NY 11216
(718) 636-1155

Brooklyn Legal Services Corp. A
(718) 487-2300
260 Broadway, Suite 2
Brooklyn, New York 11211
and 1471 Fulton Street
Brooklyn, NY 11216

BRONX

Bronx Legal Services Corporation
349 East 149th St., 10th Floor
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 928-3700

QUEENS

Queens Legal Services Corporation
89-00 Sutphin Boulevard, 5th Floor
Jamaica, NY 11435
(347) 592-2200

(b) Legal Services Organizations in Other Counties

ALBANY COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
95 Central Ave
Albany, NY 12206
(518) 462-6765; Toll Free: (800) 462-2922
www.lasnny.org

ALLEGANY COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
16 West William Street
P.O. Box 272
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-4126; Toll Free: (877) 776-4126

AUBURN COUNTY

Legal Services of Mid-New York
221 South Warren Street, Suite 310
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 703-6600
www.lasmny.org

BROOME COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
168 Water Street
Binghamton, NY 13901
(607) 231-5900
www.lasmny.org

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY

Southern Tier Legal Services
103 South Barry Street
Olean, NY 14760
(716) 373-4701; Toll Free: (888) 767-1950

CAYUGA COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
472 South Salina Street, Suite 300
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 703-6600
www.lasmny.org

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
115 East Third Street
Jamestown, NY 14701
(716) 664-4535
www.lawny.org

CHEMUNG COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
215 East Church Street, Suite 301
Elmira, NY 14901
(607) 734-1647
www.lawny.org

COLUMBIA COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
95 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
833-628-0087
www.lasnny.org

CORTLAND COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Central New York
1 North Main Street, Suite 308
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 428-8400
www.lscny.org

ERIE COUNTY

New York Civil Liberties Union,
Western Region
661 Main Street
Buffalo, NY 14203
(716) 852-4033
www.nyclu.org

Legal Aid Bureau of Buffalo, Inc.
Civil, Public Defender, and Appellate Divisions
290 Main Street, Suite 400
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 853-9555
www.legalaidbuffalo.org

GENESEE COUNTY

Neighborhood Legal Services
45 Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

GREENE COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
95 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
833-628-0087
www.lasnny.org

JEFFERSON COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
215 Washington Street, Suite 202
Watertown, New York 13601
(315) 955-6700
www.lasmny.org

Legal Aid Society of Nassau County
Criminal Bureau
40 Main St
Hempstead, NY 11550
(516) 560-6400
<https://nclas.org/index.html>

Legal Aid Society of Rochester
1 West Main Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 232-4090
www.lasroc.org

Legal Services of the Hudson Valley
90 Maple Avenue
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 949-1305; (877) 574-8529
www.lshv.org

LEWIS COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
215 Washington Street, Suite 202
Watertown, New York 13601
(315) 955-6700
www.lasmny.org

LIVINGSTON COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
361 South Main Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; toll free: (866) 781-5235
www.lawny.org

MONROE COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Rochester
1 West Main Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 232-4090
www.lasroc.org

Empire Justice Center
1 West Main Street, Suite 200
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 454-4060
www.empirejustice.org

NASSAU COUNTY

Nassau/Suffolk Law Services
1 Helen Keller Way, 5th Floor
Hempstead, NY 11550
(516) 292-8100
www.nslawservices.org

Legal Aid Society of Nassau County
Criminal Bureau
40 Main St
Hempstead, NY 11550
(516) 560-6400
<https://nclas.org/index.html>

NIAGARA COUNTY

Neighborhood Legal Services
225 Old Falls Street, 3rd Floor
Niagara Falls, NY 14302
(716) 284-8831

ONEIDA COUNTY

120 Bleecker Street
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 793-7000
www.lasmny.org

ONONDOGA COUNTY

Frank H. Hiscock Legal Aid Society
351 South Warren Street
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 422-8191
www.hiscocklegalaid.org

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
221 South Warren Street, Suite 310
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 703-6600
www.lasmny.org

ONTARIO COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
361 South Main Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; toll free: (866) 781-5235
www.lawny.org

ORANGE COUNTY

Legal Services of the Hudson Valley
90 Maple Avenue
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 949-1305; (877) 574-8529
www.lshv.org

ORLEANS COUNTY

Neighborhood Legal Services
45 Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

OSWEGO COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
108 West Bridge Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 532-6900
www.lasmny.org

OTSEGO COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
189 Main Street, Suite 301
P.O. Box 887
Oneonta, NY 13820
(607) 433-2220; toll free: (800) 821-9895
www.lasmny.org

PUTNAM COUNTY

Putnam County Legal Aid Society
12 Fair Street
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 225-8466

RENSSELAER COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
95 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
(833) 628-0087
www.lasnny.org

ROCKLAND COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Rockland County
2 Congers Road
New City, NY 10956
(845) 634-3627; toll free: 800-454-3627
<https://legalaidrockland.org/>

SARATOGA COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
40 New Street
Saratoga Springs, NY 12866
(833) 628-0087
www.lasnny.org

SCHENECTADY COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
95 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
(833) 628-0087
www.lasnny.org

SENECA COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
361 South Main Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; toll free: (866) 781-5235
www.lawny.org

STEUBEN COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
16 West William Street
P.O. Box 272
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-4126; Toll Free: (877) 776-4126

SUFFOLK COUNTY

Legal Aid Society of Suffolk County
Children's Law Bureau
Courthouse Corporate Center
320 Carleton Avenue, Suite 3800
Central Islip, NY 11722
(631) 439-2450

Legal Aid Society of Suffolk County
Criminal Division
Arthur M. Cromarty Court Complex
300 Center Drive, First Floor
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-1650

SULLIVAN COUNTY

Legal Services of the Hudson Valley
309 E. Broadway
Monticello, NY 12748
(845) 569-9110, Ext. 200
www.lshv.org

TIOGA COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
902 Taber Street, Suite 1
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-3667; Toll Free: (800) 724-4170
www.lawny.org

TOMPKINS COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
902 Taber Street, Suite 1
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-3667; Toll Free: (800) 724-4170
www.lawny.org

WAYNE COUNTY

Legal Assistance of Western New York
361 South Main Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; toll free: (866) 781-5235
www.lawny.org

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

Legal Services of the Hudson Valley
90 Maple Avenue
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 949-1305; (877) 574-8529
www.lshv.org

WYOMING COUNTY

Neighborhood Legal Services
45 Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

YATES COUNTY

Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
1 Franklin Square, P.O. Box 487
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465
www.mclac.org

5. Organizations that Specialize in Death Penalty CasesNATIONAL

American Bar Association
Death Penalty Representation Project
1050 Connecticut Avenue NW
Suite 400
Washington D.C., 20036
(202) 662-1738
FAX: (202) 662-8649
www.americanbar.org/groups/committees/death_penalty_representation/

ALABAMA

Equal Justice Initiative
Bryan Stevenson, Executive Director
122 Commerce Street
Montgomery, AL 36104
(334) 269-1803
FAX: (334) 269-1806
www.eji.org

ARIZONA

Arizona Justice Project
111 E. Taylor St.,
Phoenix, AZ 85004
(Contact for more info)
(602) 496-0286
www.azjusticeproject.org

CALIFORNIA

California Appellate Project
345 California Street, Suite 1400
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 495-0500
FAX: (415) 495-5616
www.capsf.org

Habeas Corpus Resource Center
303 2nd St. #N400
San Francisco, CA 94107
(415) 348-3800
www.hcrc.ca.gov

COLORADO

Federal Public Defender
633 17th Street, Suite 1000
Denver, CO 80202
(303) 294-7002
FAX: (303) 294-1192

CONNECTICUT

Jerome N. Frank Legal Services Organization
Yale Law School
P.O. Box 209090
New Haven, CT 06520-9090
(203) 432-4800
FAX: (203) 432-1426

FLORIDA

Commission on Capital Cases
402 S. Monroe Street
Tallahassee, FL 32399-1300
(850) 921-4704
FAX: (850) 921-4737

GEORGIA

Southern Center for Human Rights
60 Walton Street, NW
Atlanta, GA 30303
(404) 688-1202
FAX: (404) 688-9440
www.schr.org

Georgia Appellate Practice and Educational Resource Center
303 Elizabeth Street, NE
Atlanta, GA 30307
(404) 222-9202
FAX: (404) 222-9212

IDAHO

Capital Habeas Unit
702 W. Idaho, Suite 900
Boise, ID 83702
(208) 331-5530
FAX: (208) 331-5559
www.fdsidaho.org

ILLINOIS

Office of the State Appellate Defender
Post-Conviction Unit, Attn: Tiffany Green
203 N. LaSalle, 24th Floor
Chicago, IL 60601
(312) 814-5472
FAX: (312) 814-1447

INDIANA

Public Defender of Indiana
1 North Capitol, Suite 800
Indianapolis, IN 46204
(317) 232-2475
(Only state court post-conviction relief)

KANSAS

Paul E. Wilson Kansas Defender Project
University of Kansas School of Law
1535 W 15th Street
Green Hall #409
Lawrence, KS 66045
(785) 864-5571

Death Penalty Defense Unit
700 SW Jackson St, Suite 500
200 Topeka, KS 66603
785-291-3976
FAX: 785-291-3979

KENTUCKY

Department of Public Advocacy
Capital Post-Conviction Branch
5 Mill Creek Park
Frankfort, KY 40601
(502) 564-8006
FAX: (502) 695-6767

LOUISIANA

Center for Equal Justice
7100 St. Charles Avenue
New Orleans, LA 70118
(504) 864-0700
FAX: (504) 864-0780

Louisiana Capital Assistance Center
636 Baronne Street
New Orleans, LA 70113
(504) 558-9867
FAX: (504) 558-0378

MARYLAND

Federal Public Defender
Northern Division
Tower II, 9th Floor
100 South Charles Street
Baltimore, MD 21201-2705
(410) 962-3962
FAX: (410) 962-0872

Federal Public Defender
Southern Division
6411 Ivy Lane, Suite 710
Greenbelt, MD 20770-4510
(301) 344-0600
FAX: (301) 344-0019

MISSOURI

Missouri State Public Defender, Capital
Litigation Central District
Woodrail Centre
1000 West Nifong, Building 7, Suite 100
Columbia, MO 65203
(573) 777-9977, ext. 412
FAX: (573) 777-9963

Missouri State Public Defender, Capital
Litigation Eastern District
1010 Market Street, Ste 1100
St. Louis, MO 63101
(314) 340-7662
FAX: (314) 340-7666

Missouri State Public Defender, Capital
Litigation Western District
920 Main Street, Suite 500
Kansas City, Missouri 64105
(816) 889-7699
FAX: (816) 889-2088

Eastern Federal Public Defender
1010 Market Street, Second Floor
St. Louis, MO 63101
(314) 241-1255
FAX: (314) 421-3177

NEVADA
Nevada Federal Public Defender
411 E. Bonneville Ave.
Las Vegas, NV 89101
(702) 388-6577 ext. 279
FAX: (702) 388-6261

NEW JERSEY
Office of the Public Defender – Capital
Litigation
Hughes Justice Complex
25 Market Street
P.O. Box 850
Trenton, NJ 08625
(609) 292-7087

NEW YORK
Capital Defender Office c/o Peter M. Zimroth
399 Park Avenue, 36th Floor
New York, NY 10022-4690
(212) 417-3187

NORTH CAROLINA
Center for Death Penalty Litigation
123 West Main St., Suite 700
Durham, North Carolina 27701
(919) 956-9545
FAX: (919) 956-9547

OHIO
Ohio Public Defender
Death Penalty Division
250 East Broad Street, Suite 1400

Columbus, Ohio 43215
(614) 466-5394; Toll Free: (800) 686-1573
FAX: (614) 728-3670
www.opd.ohio.gov

OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma Indigent
Defense System
P.O. Box 926
Norman, OK 73070
(405) 801-2700 (Capital Trials)
(405) 801-2665 (Capital Direct Appeals)
(405) 801-2770 (Capital Post-Conviction) www.ok.gov/OIDS/

OREGON
Office of Public Defense Services
1175 Court Street NE
Salem, OR 97301
(503) 378-3349
FAX: (503) 375-9701
www.oregon.gov/opds/Pages/default.aspx

PENNSYLVANIA
Defender Association of Philadelphia
1441 Sansom St
Philadelphia, PA 19102
(215) 568-3190
www.phillydefenders.org

Capital Habeas Unit
Federal Community Defender Office
601 Walnut Street, Suite 545 West
Philadelphia, PA 19106
(215) 928-0520
www.pae.fd.org

SOUTH CAROLINA
Justice 360 (formerly Center for Capital Litigation)
900 Elmwood Avenue, Suite 200
Columbia, South Carolina 29201
(803) 765-1044
www.justice360sc.org

TENNESSEE
Tennessee Federal Public Defender
810 Broadway, Suite 200
Nashville, TN 37203
(615) 736-5047
FAX: (615) 736-5265
www.tnm.fd.org

TEXAS

Texas Defender Service – Austin Office
1023 Springdale Road, Suite 14E
Austin, Texas 78721
(512) 320-8300
FAX: (512) 477-2153
www.texasdefender.org

Texas Defender Service – Houston Office
Texas Defender Service
1927 Blodgett Street
Houston, Texas 77004
(713) 222-7788
FAX: (713) 222-0260
www.texasdefender.org

VIRGINIA

Virginia Capital Representation Resource Center
2421 Ivy Road, Suite 301
Charlottesville, VA 22903
(434) 817-2970
www.vcrrc.org

WYOMING

Office of the State Public Defender
316 West 22nd Street
Cheyenne, Wyoming 82002
(307) 777-7519

B. Social Services

The following is a list of social service agencies and prisoners' rights projects in New York City and New York State. Most do not provide legal services, although many refer clients to legal services. Some of these organizations provide counseling, referral, and support services specifically for currently and formerly incarcerated people. Others provide services to members of the general public.

A short description of the services provided follows most addresses. In some of the counties in New York State, no agencies are listed. This does not necessarily mean that no social service agencies exist in these counties. If there are no agencies listed for your county, you should consult your telephone book or the internet for a Department of Social Services office under either the name of the county or New York State; you should also consult the listings for neighboring counties.

1. Social Services in New York City

In the New York City listings, the code following each address describes the services provided by the particular agency.

C = Counseling

R = Referral

JD = Job Development

EV = Educational and Vocational Training

FA = Financial Assistance

SS = Support Services

P = Directed Especially Towards Currently or Formerly Incarcerated People

H = Housing

Argus Community, Inc.
760 East 160th Street
Bronx, NY 10456
(718) 401-5700
www.arguscommunity.org
C, EV, JD

and provides career counseling, including help preparing for job interviews.

Pathways to Graduation (formerly GED Plus)
Over 90 different locations in NYC—visit website to find locations.
(212) 244-1274 (Midtown Manhattan office)
(718) 518-4530 (Bronx office)
(718) 804-6750 (Central Brooklyn office)
(718) 935-9457 (Downtown Brooklyn office)
(718) 739-2100 (Queens office)
(718) 273-3225 (Staten Island office)
www.p2g.nyc
EV, JD, R
Pathways to Graduation (P2G) is a full-time, free program for youth ages 17-21. As of January 2014, New York State replaced the GED with the TASC high-school equivalency exam. P2G helps you prepare for the TASC,

Center for Alternative Sentencing and Employment Services, Inc. (CASES, Inc.)
www.cases.org
C, EV, SS, P, R, JD

Provides alternatives to incarceration and detention. Provides counseling, and vocational and educational assistance to selected participants, aiming for non-jail sentences.

CASES—Downtown Brooklyn office:
151 Lawrence Street, 3rd Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(212) 553-6300

CASES—Central Harlem office:
2090 Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. Boulevard, 8th Floor
New York, NY 10027
(212) 553-6606

Civil Rights Clinic
New York University School of Law
245 Sullivan Street, 5th Floor
New York, NY 10012
(212) 998-6448
C, R
Helps incarcerated people understand their legal problems. Represents incarcerated people in litigation concerning prison conditions and civil rights, or refers them to legal services.

Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)
P.O. Box 264
New York, NY 10276
(212) 598-4000
www.core-online.org
EV, R, C, SS
Administers welfare-to-work programs available to returning citizens. Prefers that those interested in their services contact them by writing a letter.

Fortune Society
29-76 Northern Boulevard
Long Island City, NY 11101
(212) 691-7554
www.fortunesociety.org
C, R, SS, P, EV, JD, H
Works with returning citizens on a one-to-one basis to help them readjust to society. Counsels individuals in alternative-to-incarceration programs, returning citizens and the families of incarcerated people. Provides information and referral services for returning citizens who are HIV positive or have AIDS-related diseases.

Greenhope Services for Women
435 East 119th Street
New York, NY 10035
(212) 360-4002
www.greenhope.org
H, JD, C, R, P, EV, SS
Counsels both incarcerated women and those participating in programs affording an alternative to incarceration. Provides counseling for substance abuse, HIV/AIDS, parenting and nutrition, as well as preparation for the high-school equivalency exam, employment, medical and residence referral services, and legal advocacy.

Institute for Community Living
125 Broad Street
New York, NY 10004
(844) 425-4673
www.iclinc.org/
EV, H, C, R, JD, SS
Serves patients with mental illness or substance abuse issues.

NAACP
44 Wall Street
New York, NY 10005
(212) 344-7474
www.nysnaacp.org

Salvation Army
Main Office:
120 West 14th Street
New York, NY 10011
(800) 725-2769

Salvation Army
Drug Rehabilitation Office:
535 West 48th Street
New York, NY 10036
(212) 757-2311
C, R, JD, SS

State University Educational Opportunity
Center in Brooklyn
111 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 802-3300
www.sunybeoc.org/
EV, JD
Provides academic and career counseling and job placement assistance through a tuition-free program.

The Correctional Association of New York
P.O. Box 793
Brooklyn, NY 11207
(212) 254-5700
www.correctionalassociation.org
SS, P
Monitors New York state prisons, ensures proper conditions, and investigates complaint letters.

The Osborne Association, Inc.
NYC Reentry Hotline: 1-833-672-3733
www.osborneny.org
EV, JD, FA, P, R, SS

Provides services to incarcerated people in prisons and to returning citizens and their families outside of prisons. Offices throughout New York State, including the following locations:

175 Remsen Street, 8th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 637-6560

388 Ann St.
Newburgh, NY 12550
(845) 345-9845

809 Westchester Avenue
Bronx, NY 10455
(718) 707-2600

Women's Prison Association & Home, Inc.
110 Second Avenue
New York, NY 10003
(646) 292-7740

www.wpaonline.org

P, EV, JD, FA, H, C, R

Rehabilitates women who were previously incarcerated. Operates as a halfway house available to those with alternative-to-incarceration acceptance; clients may stay for six months without paying a fee. Also offers counseling and training in life-skills. Provides additional services for women involved in the prison system.

2. Social Services in Other Counties

ALBANY COUNTY

New York State Catholic Conferences
465 State Street
Albany, NY 12203
(518) 434-6195
www.nyscatholic.org
C

Acts as a liaison for Catholic chaplains in New York state correctional institutions.

BROOME COUNTY

The Reverend Cris Mogenson
The Jail Ministry
Broome County Council of Churches
3 Otsenigo Street
Binghamton, NY 13903
(607) 724-9130
www.broomecouncil.net/jail-ministry/
C, SS, FA

Counsels incarcerated people and provides family support, clothing and services to releasees.

CHENANGO COUNTY

Opportunities for Chenango
44 West Main Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 334-7114
www.ofcinc.org
SS, FA

Assists families in moving out of poverty and into situations where they are self-sufficient.

GREENE COUNTY

Department of Social Services
411 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 719-3700
FA, H, SS

Helps find housing and provides support services for returning citizens.

HAMILTON COUNTY

Department of Social Services
139 White Birch Lane
P.O. Box 725
Indian Lake, NY 12842
(518) 648-6131
FA, SS

Provides support services, such as public assistance, food stamps, and Medicaid, for low-income residents of Hamilton County.

See WARREN COUNTY

LEWIS COUNTY

Lewis County Opportunities
8265 State Route 812

Lowville, NY 13367

(315) 376-8202

www.lewiscountyopportunities.com/

SS

Provides support services for low-income residents of Lewis County.

MONROE COUNTY

Judicial Process Commission

1921 Norton Street

Rochester, NY 14609

(585) 325-7727

C, EV, SS, R

Develops public awareness of the criminal justice system. Answers letters from incarcerated people and provides referrals to legal services. Runs a community jobs program and a mentorship program for returning citizens, and advocates on behalf of incarcerated people.

NASSAU COUNTY

Port Washington Community Action Council

382 Main Street

Port Washington, NY 11050

(516) 883-3201

SS

Food pantry and family support center.

Nepperhan Community Center

342 Warburton Avenue

Yonkers, NY 10701

(914) 965-0203

www.nepperhan.org

C, JD, EV, SS, P

Provides support services for youth (ages 21 and under) both inside and outside of prison, including education, job training, and support services.

New Rochelle Outreach Center

33 Lincoln Avenue

Suite # 2

New Rochelle, NY 10801

(914) 636-2721

C, R

Provides both voluntary and mandated treatment for drug addiction.

NIAGARA COUNTY

Niagara Community Action Program, Inc.

1521 Main Street

Niagara Falls, NY 14305

(716) 285-9681

www.niagaracommunityactionprogram.org

SS, H

Provides support for low-income Niagara County residents, particularly housing, food, and emergency shelter.

Open Door Family Medical Group

165 Main Street

Ossining, NY 10562

(914) 632-2737

C

Provides medical and dental care, HIV testing, and counseling.

Pretrial Services Institute of Westchester County

10 Woods Road, Box 10

Valhalla, NY 10595

(914) 428-6663

Interviews and screens criminal defendants in the Westchester County Jail for release without bail, through its "ROR" Program. Runs a bail expediting program for defendants whose bail is less than $5,000, assisting with calls to collect the necessary funds for bail.

SCHOHARIE COUNTY

Schoharie County Community Action Program, Inc.

795 East Main Street, Suite 5

Cobleskill, NY 12043

(518) 234-2568

www.sccapinc.org

FA, SS

Provides family development and emergency support services for low-income residents but only after other social services have been exhausted.

SENECA COUNTY

Salvation Army
P.O. Box 532
41 North Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 789-1055
C, SS, R

Provides support services for returning citizens, including counseling, referral to drug rehabilitation programs, help with food and medication, and jail visitation (if requested).

Society of St. Vincent de Paul
Central Council, Diocese of Rockville Centre
249 Broadway
Bethpage, NY 11714
(516) 822-3132
C, R, JD, H, SS, EV

Provides transitional programming for returning citizens with substance abuse problems. Provides job assistance and subsidized housing. Runs a program for justice-involved youth.

SULLIVAN COUNTY

Tioga Opportunities Program
9 Sheldon Guile Boulevard
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-4222
SS, P, H

Provides support services for returning citizens, including housing, and head-start programs for family health and planning.

TOMPKINS COUNTY

Opportunities, Alternatives, and Resources ("OAR")
518 West Seneca Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 272-7885
SS, P

Provides support services and advocacy for returning citizens to aid in community readjustment.

WARREN COUNTY

Warren-Hamilton Counties
Community Action Agency
P.O. Box 968
190 Maple Street
Glens Falls, NY 12801
(518) 793-0636
R, FA, SS, P

Provides support services for returning citizens, including referrals and emergency food, clothing, and rental assistance.

WAYNE COUNTY

Wayne County Action Program
30 Church Street
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 333-4155
www.waynecap.org
C, SS

Provides support services for qualifying returning citizens through a structured program that includes counseling and referral (even people who were incarcerated for periods as short as one day may be admitted). Works with probation and parole officers.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

Mount Vernon Community Action Group of WestCOP
28 East 1st Street
Mount Vernon, NY 10550
(914) 664-8680
C, P

Provides counseling for drug addiction, alcoholism, and AIDS.

C. Official Corrections Agencies

1. Watchdog Agencies

The New York State Commission of Correction and the New York City Board of Correction provide information and investigate complaints from incarcerated people in State prisons and New York City jails.

NEW YORK STATE COMMISSION OF CORRECTION

Alfred E. Smith State Office Building
80 South Swan Street, 12th Floor
Albany, NY 12210
(518) 485-2346
www.scoc.ny.gov

NEW YORK CITY BOARD OF CORRECTION

1 Centre St.
Room 2213
New York, NY 10007
(212) 669-7900
www1.nyc.gov/site/boc/index.page

2. Administrative Agencies

These agencies oversee the prisons and jails in New York State and New York City.

STATE OF NEW YORK DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Building 2, 1220 Washington Avenue
Albany, NY 12226
(518) 457-8126
www.doocs.ny.gov

NEW YORK CITY DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS

75-20 Astoria Blvd.
East Elmhurst, NY 11370
(718) 546-1500
www.nyc.gov/doc

APPENDIX V

DEFINITIONS OF WORDS USED IN THE *JLM

A.L.R.: stands for American Law Reporter; a reference book that aids your legal research by referring you to cases and legal writings on particular topics. The different editions of A.L.R. are indicated by numbers. For example, A.L.R. refers to the first edition, and A.L.R.2d refers to the second edition.

Acquit (acquittal): When a jury or court finds a defendant not guilty of a crime, the jury or court acquits the defendant. The jury or court's decision is called an acquittal.

Adjournment: Delaying or temporarily stopping a court session that is already in progress. For example, a judge may call an adjournment due to a holiday, after which the court session will continue.

Administrative agency: A political body created by the state or federal government to carry out the laws. For example, the New York's Department of Corrections is an administrative agency that carries out the laws passed by the New York state legislature relating to prisons.

Administrative law judge: An administrative law judge (ALJ) is a representative of an administrative agency. The ALJ hears cases related to the administrative agency (for example, the Social Security Administration) when disputes arise between the agency and a person whom the agency's decision affects. The ALJ has the power to take testimony and decide issues of evidence, like a judge who hears civil and criminal cases in a court of law.

Admissible evidence: Evidence that can legally be introduced at a trial; the evidence must be relevant and not, for example, unfairly prejudicial, based on hearsay, or privileged.

Affidavit: A written or printed statement of facts that is made voluntarily by a person who swears to the truth of the statement before a public officer, such as a notary public.

Affidavit of service: A sworn statement saying that legal papers have been delivered to, or served upon, the other party in a lawsuit.

Affirm: When the appellate court agrees with the decision of the trial court, the appellate court affirms the decision of the trial court. When this happens, the party who lost in the trial court and appealed to the appellate court is still the loser in the case.

Affirmative defense: A defense the defendant offers to justify his criminal act. When a defendant asserts an affirmative defense, he means that even if the allegations against him are true, he should still be found not guilty. Affirmative defenses include self-defense, coercion, insanity, and duress.

Aggravated felony: A type of felony offense that involves serious bodily injury or the use of a dangerous weapon. It also means that a harsher sentence may be imposed. In the context of immigration, aggravated felony has a different meaning. Please refer to the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM for more information about immigration.

* Words that are defined elsewhere in this Appendix are printed in italics.

Aggravating factors: In deciding whether to impose a sentence, a judge and jury consider certain “aggravating factors,” which are defined by statutes. Aggravating factors require a harsher punishment. Some examples of aggravating factors are murder committed for money, robbery committed by someone out on bail, or assault perpetrated for racist reasons.

Allege: To claim or to charge that someone acted, or that something happened, but that act or occurrence has yet to be proven. When you allege something, you make an allegation.

Amendment (for example, 14th Amendment): Any change that is made to a law after it is written originally. In the United States Constitution, an amendment is a law added to the original document that further defines the rights and duties of individuals and the government.

Annotation: A remark, note, or comment on a section of legal writing, which is intended to explain and clarify the passage.

Appeal: To complain to a higher court that the judgment of a lower court was wrong or that the lower court made an error. For example, if you lose in the trial court, you may appeal to the appellate court.

Appellate Court: A court that reviews the decision of the lower court on appeal. It has the authority to affirm, reverse, or remand the decision of the lower court.

Appellate Term: One of the two types of intermediate appellate courts in New York State. The appellate term is housed within the New York Supreme Court and initially handles all of the appeal cases coming from lower courts such as county courts, town courts, district courts, civil courts, etc.

Appellate Division: One of the two types of intermediate appellate courts in New York State. New York State is divided up into territorial departments, and each department has an Appellate Division that serves as its intermediate appellate court. The Appellate Division handles appeals from the Appellate Term and the New York Supreme Court.

Arbitrator: An impartial person who, in a special proceeding called arbitration, decides a dispute between parties, who have chosen arbitration instead of trial. Arbitration is sometimes required by law.

Authorities: Legal sources affecting how your case is decided. Authorities include cases and statutes. If neither cases nor statutes exist, secondary sources such as law reviews may be considered authorities.

Beyond a reasonable doubt: The standard by which the government must prove every element (part) of its case in a criminal trial. It is the most demanding burden of proof.

Burden of proof: A party’s duty in a trial to prove a fact or facts at issue to convince the jury of the truth of the party’s claim. If a party does not fulfill this duty, all or part of the case must be dismissed. In civil cases, juries must decide whether the plaintiff proved the case by a preponderance of the evidence; in other words, the plaintiff’s burden of proof in civil suits is a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, juries must decide whether the government proved its case beyond a reasonable doubt; in other words, the government’s burden of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. Beyond a reasonable doubt is a higher burden of proof than a preponderance of the evidence, meaning it is more difficult to satisfy.

Certiorari, Writ of (cert.) An order by an appellate (higher) court declaring that it will review the decision of a lower court. “Certiorari granted” means that the appellate court decided to approve a petition for certiorari and review the trial court’s decision. “Certiorari denied” means that the appellate court decided not to approve a petition for certiorari and, thus, not to review the lower court’s decision. Some courts, such as in New York, simply call certiorari “leave to appeal.”

Cf. A signal used in legal writing that means “compare” but that still supports the statement to which it cites. Cf. directs the reader to another case or article to compare, contrast, or explain differing views.

Circuit Court of Appeals The United States has thirteen federal judicial circuits. Eleven of these circuits are referred to by number (the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits). The other two circuits are the D.C. Circuit and the Federal Circuit. Each of the thirteen circuits has a court of appeals known as the U.S. Court of Appeals for that particular circuit. These courts are one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. Twelve of these circuits are split up by geographical region, meaning they decide cases brought in federal courts in particular states.

- For example, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (2d Cir.) decides cases brought in federal court in New York, Connecticut, and Vermont, while the Fifth Circuit (5th Cir.) decides cases brought in federal court in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi.

The Circuit Court of Appeals reviews appeals of decisions made by federal district courts.

- For example, let’s say you bring a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York (S.D.N.Y.) and lose. If you want to appeal that decision, you would file your appeal in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (2d Cir.).

The Circuit Courts of Appeals can also review some decisions made by administrative agencies, such as by immigration agencies. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit is unique because the cases that it hears are not limited to a particular geographical region. The Federal Circuit hears appeals in special kinds of cases that are generally not relevant to the issues discussed in the JLM. See the front inside cover of the JLM for a diagram of the structure of the U.S. judiciary. For more information, review Chapters 2 (“Introduction to Legal Research”), and 5 (“Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options”) of the JLM.

Civil (“civil trial,” “civil case,” or “civil action”) In general, all types of actions that are not criminal. Civil actions are brought by a private party to protect a private right. The burden of proof and the procedural rules in a civil trial may be different from those in a criminal trial.

Class action A lawsuit in which the plaintiffs represent and sue on behalf of all the people in the same situation as the plaintiffs and with similar legal claims. See Chapter 16 for an explanation of class actions.

Clear and convincing evidence A burden of proof that requires more convincing evidence than a preponderance of the evidence, but not as much as beyond a reasonable doubt. This burden of proof is used in certain types of immigration proceedings. Please refer to the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM for more information.

Clemency (mercy, leniency) Kindness that is shown toward a criminal act. It is often used to describe the act of a state governor in which he or she commutes or reduces a sentence.

Coerce/coercion To force someone to do something. A confession of a defendant that is coerced may be held inadmissible by a court. Coercion is defined as force—physical or mental—that overcomes a person’s free choice in doing something. Coercion can be an affirmative defense.

Collateral (attack or appeal): To make a collateral appeal means to bring a civil proceeding to challenge an error in an earlier proceeding with the purpose of obtaining a ruling on the alleged error. This takes place in a different proceeding than a direct appeal from the earlier case.

Commuted sentence: A sentence that is reduced.

Concurrent sentences: When a person is convicted of several criminal charges, the judge can order that the person's sentences run at the same time (concurrently) rather than one after another (consecutively). For example, if you are sentenced to six months for assault and nine months for robbery, you would have to serve fifteen months total under consecutive sentencing; however, if the judge orders your sentences to run concurrently, you only have to serve nine months total.

Contingent fee: A method of fee payment describing how a lawyer may agree to represent a client. The plaintiff who retains (hires) the lawyer only pays the lawyer if the plaintiff wins the case. The lawyer accepts an agreed-upon percentage of the money judgment the plaintiff wins. For example, most lawyers who are paid like this charge a 33% contingency fee, which means that if you win $1000, the lawyer will keep $330 plus his or her expenses for things like phone calls and photocopies. Some lawyers may charge you for their expenses even if you lose your case. Lawyers generally may not charge contingent fees in criminal cases.

Convict: To find a defendant guilty of the crime he or she has been accused of committing.

Counsel: A lawyer (attorney).

Court of Appeals: In New York, the Court of Appeals is the highest level appellate court that can review your case. It reviews the decision of the appellate division, which reviewed the trial court decision.

Counterclaim: In a civil proceeding, a defendant who is sued may then bring suit against the person suing him or her. This suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiff is called a counterclaim.

Criminal ("criminal case," "criminal proceeding," or "criminal trial"): A case in which the government brings a charge against a person for a crime the person is accused of committing. The burden of proof and the procedural rules in a criminal trial may be different from those in a civil trial. See the definition of beyond a reasonable doubt.

Cross-examination: At a trial or hearing, when the lawyer for the opposing party questions a witness. Cross-examination takes place after the direct examination. The lawyer usually asks questions that require a yes or no answer. Each party has a right to cross-examine the other party's witnesses.

Custody (Custodian): Being "in custody" means that police officers or law enforcement authorities have control over you. It may refer to arrest, actual imprisonment, or a temporary restraint of liberty at the station house. A custodian is the person or law enforcement agency with the control over a person.

Damages: The money awarded by a court to a person who has suffered loss, injury, or harm, either to the person's body or to property.

De minimis: A term used to describe something that is insignificant or small, and thus ignored by the law and the courts. For example, you experienced a de minimis injury if your car was bumped by another car, and you will not be successful if you try to sue the person who bumped you for assault.

Declaratory judgment (Declaratory relief): A court's decision in a civil case declaring the rights of the parties or expressing the court's opinion on a certain part of the law, without ordering relief for either side.

Defendant: The party against whom a lawsuit is brought.

Denial: A rejection, as in rejecting an application, motion, or petition. Also, denial can be an assertion that the statement offered is untrue, as someone who denies a statement made about him that he has committed a crime.

Determinate sentence: A prison sentence that sets a fixed period of incarceration, as opposed to an indeterminate sentence, which sets a range of possible periods of incarceration.

Dictum (plural: Dicta): A Latin¹ word for an observation, remark, or statement made by a judge in his or her opinion, about a question of law related to the case, but that is not critical to the case's outcome. Dictum generally extends beyond the issue before the court to decide. As dictum may be unrelated to the issue being decided, it is not law and is not binding on later courts. Dictum is not the legal basis for the judge's decision on a litigated issue. Later judges can choose to follow the legal analysis found in dictum, but they do not have to. In other words, dictum is not binding precedent. The plural form of dictum is "dicta."

- To figure out if something the court says is dictum, ask yourself: "if this statement was not in the opinion, could the court have decided the case in the same way?" If the answer is yes (the court's opinion would still make sense without the statement), then the statement is probably dictum. If the answer is no (without the statement, the court's opinion does not make sense), then the statement is probably not dictum. Keep in mind that people often disagree on whether a particular statement in an opinion is dictum. In fact, because dictum is not binding on later courts, lawyers often argue in court that a particular statement is or is not dictum, depending on whether or not they want the court to follow the statement.

Direct examination: At a trial or hearing, when the lawyer questions a witness for the party that the lawyer is representing in attempting to prove his or her side of the case.

Discipline (Disciplinary proceeding): Punishment for violation of rules. At the proceeding, a person or committee decides what punishment is appropriate.

Discovery: In preparation for a trial, the process of obtaining information about your case. See Chapter 8 for more information.

Discretion: The power of a legal body, such as a court or agency, to act or decide in a situation in which the law provides no precise answers. For example, the judge may have discretion to create remedies for you if the law does not say precisely how to do so.

Disposition: The disposition of a case refers to how the case was decided or settled. It can also be used to refer to a particular issue in a case (for example, the result of one of the motions in a case).

Dissent (Dissenting opinion): A judge who disagrees with the decision of the majority of the other judges on the same appellate court. He or she writes the reasons for disagreeing in what is known as a dissenting opinion. The dissenting opinion is not the main opinion of the case nor is it considered the law.

¹ Latin phrases are italicized in legal writing. Therefore, if you submit any motions, briefs, complaints, etc. to the court, you should italicize any Latin phrases you use.

District Court(s): The United States has 94 federal district courts. These courts are trial courts. If you lose in district court, you may be able to appeal the decision to the Circuit Court of Appeals for your circuit (which is the intermediate appellate court in the federal system). Some states have state courts called “district courts.” (For example, some of Louisiana’s state courts are called “district courts.”). So, when you see the name “district court,” make sure to check whether it is a federal or state court. This can be very confusing because the name of a particular federal district court will include the state it is located in (for example, the “Eastern District of Louisiana” is one of the federal district courts in that state). One big clue to look for is if you see “United States” or “U.S.” in the name of the court (such as, “U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.”). If you see that, then the court is federal. See Chapter 2 of the JLM (“An Introduction to Legal Research”) for more information.

Due process (Constitutional right to due process): You have two types of due process rights. Your right to procedural due process means government proceedings must treat you fairly. It limits the ways the government can take away your property, liberty, and life. Your right to substantive due process prevents government interference with other rights individuals have that the government cannot take away—rights such as privacy, speech, and religion. Many Chapters in the JLM deal with these two types of due process.

Duress: A threat of harm that causes a person to do some act that the person otherwise would not have done. Duress can be an affirmative defense. Threats of imprisonment and injury are examples of duress.

Entitled: Having a legal right.

Evidence: Anything presented to a court that proves, or helps to prove, the claim of a party. Evidence can be presented orally by witnesses or through documents, physical objects, or any means to help prove a point.

Ex rel. (Ex relatione): A Latin phrase meaning “by or on the relation of.” A lawsuit “ex rel.” is brought by the government if a private party (someone not acting as a government official) interested in the matter asks the government to bring suit. For example, if Smith asks the government to bring a lawsuit against Jones, the case would be written as “State ex rel. Smith v. Jones.”

Exclude from evidence: The use of legal means to keep certain evidence from being considered in deciding the case.

Exculpate: To free from blame. For example, “exculpatory evidence” is evidence that shows the innocence of the defendant. A prosecutor is required to disclose such evidence to the defendant. For more information about the prosecutor’s disclosure duty, see Part C of Chapter 8 of the JLM.

Facially: Appearing on the surface. Something may seem to be true on the surface, but turn out to be false upon further investigation. This word comes up often when a court is trying to decide if a statute violates the U.S. Constitution. There are two ways to argue a statute violates the U.S. Constitution. First, you can argue the text of the statute violates the Constitution. This is called a “facial challenge” to the statute (you argue the statute is unconstitutional “on its face.”). Second, you can argue a statute is unconstitutional because it affects a particular person or group of people in an unconstitutional way. This is called an “as applied” challenge. In a facial challenge, you argue the statute is always unconstitutional, because of the language it uses. In an “as applied” challenge, the statute may be constitutional when it is applied to someone else, but you argue the statute violates the Constitution when it is applied to you. So, when you challenge a statute through an “as applied” challenge, you argue the statute at least sometimes violates the Constitution (when it is applied to a particular person or group of people).

Federal: In the JLM, “federal” is used to describe a system of government, including courts and laws, organized under the United States Constitution. In contrast, “state” describes fifty separate and differing systems of government, including courts and laws, organized under the constitutions and statutes of each of the fifty states that make up the United States of America.

Felony: In many states, this is any crime that is punishable by imprisonment of more than one year in prison or is punishable by death. Felonies are crimes that are supposed to be more serious than misdemeanors.

Felony murder: In many states, this is an unintended death that occurs during the commission of a felony (such as armed robbery). In those states, anyone accused of the felony can automatically be charged with murder, too. This is called the “felony murder doctrine”).

File: To submit for recognition, as in “filing papers with the court.”

Footnote (Footnote Number): A number appearing in the body of a piece of legal writing that indicates that at the bottom of the page there is more information about the particular section or sentence next to which the number appears. The information at the bottom of the page is the footnote itself.² In legal citations, footnotes are usually abbreviated as ‘n.’—for example to refer to footnote number 7, you should use “n.7.” In the JLM, this information is especially useful for clarifying sentences in the text and providing cases to support the text.

Grant (as in “grant a motion”): To allow or permit. For example, when the court grants a motion, it allows what the motion was requesting.

Habeas corpus (writ of habeas corpus): This is a Latin term that refers to the form of relief that the court may grant, after an incarcerated person files a petition, to release the person from unlawful confinement or incarceration. The incarcerated person must prove that he or she was held in violation of his rights. The habeas writ can be sought in both state and federal courts. For more information, see Chapters 13 and 21 of the JLM. A habeas petition is a form of collateral attack on a conviction or sentence.

Hear (for example, “hear a motion”): To listen to both sides on a particular legal issue. For example, when a judge hears a case, he or she considers the validity of the case by listening to the arguments of the lawyers from both sides in the litigation.

Hearing officer: A person appointed to preside over a hearing. This person does not have to be a judge.

Hearing: A legal proceeding before a judge or hearing officer that is similar to a trial. In a hearing, the judge or hearing officer decides an issue of the case, but does not decide the defendant’s guilt or innocence.

Hearsay: Used to describe testimony in which a witness talks about something he or she does not know through personal experience, but that he or she has been told by others. (Hearsay is defined by Fed. R. Evid. 801(c) as a “statement other than one made by the declarant [the person testifying] while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.”) Hearsay testimony generally is not admissible in court and may be excluded. But, many exceptions to the hearsay rule exist.

² This is an example of a footnote. If you were citing it, you would call it n.1.

Holding: The decision of a court on a question of law in a particular case. The court's holding is not the same thing as its "ruling." The court's "ruling" is typically procedural, such as denying a motion, dismissing a case, reversing the decision of the lower court, or ordering the defendant to pay money damages. The court's holding is generally more substantive, such as concluding that a statute allows a certain group of plaintiffs to sue for monetary damages, or deciding that a word in the U.S. Constitution has a particular meaning that resolves a plaintiff's lawsuit.

- It can be difficult to identify the holding in a court opinion. Some clues that you can look for are phrases like "We hold..."; "In conclusion,..."; "Therefore,..."; "For the reasons stated,..."; and similar language. Once you identify the holding, try and work backwards to figure out what reasons the court says justify its decision. Courts that decide similar cases in the future might be required to follow that reasoning, or at the very least, might think that reasoning is persuasive. See definition of Precedent below, and Chapters 2 ("Introduction to Legal Research"), and 5 ("Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options") of the JLM for more information.

Immunity (as in "immunity from lawsuit"): When a person or governmental body cannot be sued (is immune from suit). For example, sovereign immunity means that you cannot sue certain parts of the government without the government's consent.

Impartial: Not favoring either side; fair and unbiased.

Inadmissible evidence: Evidence that cannot legally be introduced at trial.

Indeterminate Sentence: A prison sentence that does not set a fixed period of time for incarceration, but sets a minimum and a maximum period, so that the incarceration cannot last less than a certain period or more than a certain period. The length of incarceration is determined later, according to factors such as behavior in prison.

Indictment (pronounced "in-DITE-ment"): A written accusation presented by the grand jury charging a person with a particular crime or crimes. After the issuing of an indictment, the charges must be proven at trial in order for the defendant to be convicted.

Indigent person: A person who does not have enough money to hire a lawyer to defend him or herself. In most criminal cases, an indigent defendant is entitled to counsel provided by the state. Court costs may also be waived for an indigent defendant. To request the services of an attorney or a reduction or waiver of court filing fees, you must file poor person's papers, which is also called filing "in forma pauperis."

Injunction (Injunctive relief): An order of the court that a person should immediately stop doing something, or should begin to do something it has stopped doing.

Intentional: On purpose. In general, to act with intention is to act with the conscious objective of bringing about a particular result. For certain crimes, intentional acts may have to be proven by the state.

Intermediate appellate court: The court above the trial court that reviews some decisions of the trial court, but that is lower than the final appellate court (such as the New York Court of Appeals). There are two intermediate appellate courts in New York State, the Appellate Division and the Appellate Term. These courts review decisions of the lower trial court (in New York it is confusingly called the New York Supreme Court), and their decisions are reviewed by the New York Court of Appeals. Generally, in the federal justice system, the circuit court is the intermediate appellate court; it reviews the decisions of the district courts, and its own decisions are reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington, D.C.

Interrogatories: A set of questions. See Chapter 8 for an explanation of interrogatories and how they fit into the discovery process.

Involuntary: Describes an act that you did not intend to do.

Judgment: The final decision of a court that resolves a case and determines the parties' rights and duties.

Jurisdiction: The authority under which a court decides a case. A court must have subject matter jurisdiction over the kind of dispute (for example, only criminal courts can hear criminal cases) and personal jurisdiction over both sides. Put very simply, personal jurisdiction means that either you have agreed to come to that particular court or you have certain relationships with the state that allow them to bring you to court—for example, if you live in that state.

Jury: A jury is a group of people who will vote to decide the outcome of a case. The Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution provides for a jury trial for criminal offenses. State constitutions also often contain the right to a jury trial. For some “petty offenses” (low-level offenses that do not carry sentences of more than six months), a defendant may not be entitled to a jury trial.

Lesser included offense: A crime that has some, but not all, of the elements of another, more serious, crime. It must also not have any elements that are different from the greater crime. A lesser included offense occurs when it is impossible to commit a crime without also committing a crime of a lesser degree. For example, manslaughter is a lesser included offense of murder. See Chapter 9 for more information.

Liable: To be obligated by the court to make compensation. For example, if the court decides that A must pay B $100 for the injury A caused B, A is liable to B for $100.

Litigate (Litigation): To participate in a trial. All the events in a trial, including the trial itself and proceedings prior to trial (sometimes called pre-trial proceedings), constitute litigation.

Majority (Majority opinion): An opinion signed by more than half of the judges of a court or panel; it constitutes the court's decision.

Mandamus (writ of mandamus): This is a Latin term that refers to a special kind of remedy that a court may grant. A mandamus is a court order commanding that a government official, institution (such as a prison or jail), or lower court do something that is one of the duties or responsibilities of the official, institution, or court.

- For example, if you apply for benefits from a government agency, and the agency does not make a decision on your application within the period of time it is supposed to, you might be able to ask a court to issue a mandamus requiring the agency review and decide your application. This is not the same as requiring the agency to make a particular kind of decision about your application, such as to approve or deny it. Instead, the mandamus order just requires the agency to complete a task that is one of its regular or routine duties (in this example, reviewing and deciding applications for benefits).

Material evidence: Evidence that is relevant and important to the legal issues being decided in a lawsuit.

Minor: Someone under the legal age of adulthood. In most states, the age of adulthood is eighteen years old. Being charged as a minor in a criminal case means there will be much lower penalties; however, this decision is up to the court's discretion.

Minutes: Transcript. The final copy of the record taken from the shorthand originally written by the court reporter.

Miranda (Miranda v. Arizona): A U.S. Supreme Court case setting forth the rights you should be informed about just after you are arrested. This case requires police officers to inform suspects in police custody of certain rights before their interrogation.

Misdemeanor: In general, misdemeanors are punishable by fine, penalty, or imprisonment of less than one year. In most states and under federal law, any offense that is not a felony is classified as a misdemeanor. Both felonies and misdemeanors are grouped into classes (for example, Class A, B, C, etc.) and the sentencing varies by the class. There may be procedural differences in how felonies and misdemeanors are handled by a court.

Misrepresentation: A written or oral statement that is an untrue statement of the facts.

Mistrial: If a fundamental error occurs during trial (for example, a court does not have jurisdiction, or a jury selection error or hung jury occurs) that cannot be corrected, a judge may decide the trial should not continue and declare a “mistrial.” A judge may also declare a mistrial if an extraordinary event takes place (like a juror’s or attorney’s death). Often, when a mistrial occurs, the accused may be tried again.

Mitigating factors: Factors that reduce your blameworthiness and that the jury or judge may rely upon to decide on a lower level of punishment. Examples of mitigating factors are you have no significant history of prior criminal activity, you committed the crime while you were under the influence of extreme mental disturbance, or you were very young when you committed the crime. Mitigating factors are sometimes defined by statute.

Moot: An issue or case is considered moot when it is no longer necessary for a court to render a decision about that issue or case because of a change in circumstances or passage of time. For example, if the law changes, then the case concerning that old law can (but not always does) become moot. Another example is a case about custody of a minor; if the minor becomes an adult, then that case becomes moot.

Motion: In litigation, a request that the judge take some sort of action, or make some sort of ruling.

Motion papers: Papers presented to court requesting that the judge make a decision. Typically, if a factual question is raised in motion papers, the court will hold a hearing.

Negligence: To be negligent is to not behave as a reasonable person would under the same circumstances. This includes to do something that a reasonable person would not do, or to not do something thing a reasonable person would do. Negligence is often a standard in a case, meaning that a party needs to prove that the opposing party in the suit was negligent in order to win the case. For example, if you do not shovel your sidewalks all winter (and you live in a place where it snows), you may be negligent.

Notary (Notary public): A person who is authorized to fix his or her seal on certain legal papers in order to verify that a particular person signed the papers. This is known as notarizing the papers.

Notice (Notification): “Notice” has several meanings in the law. First, the law often requires that “notice” be given to an individual about a certain fact. For example, the government is required to provide “notice” to a defendant of the charges against the defendant in criminal proceedings or in civil proceedings in which an individual’s interests are involved. This means the government must give you a piece of paper explaining the charges. It also means that if you sue someone, you must give them “notice” through service of process. Second, “notice” is used in cases to refer to whether an individual was aware of something. For example, a statute may require that before an individual be held liable for damages, the individual have “notice” about a certain fact.

Objection: During a trial, the prosecutor or the defense attorney may disagree, based on the rules of the courtroom, with something opposing counsel says (for example, the way questioning is being conducted during testimony) or does (for example, the way evidence is presented). An attorney tells the court of his or her disagreement by saying “I object” or “objection.” The judge decides immediately after each objection whether to “sustain” (uphold) or “overrule” the objection. If the judge sustains an objection, it means the judge (based on his or her interpretation of the law) agrees with the attorney raising the objection and whatever is objected to must stop because it is against the rules. If an objection is overruled, it means the judge disagrees with the attorney raising the objection and whatever is objected to may continue.

Off the record: This is what the judge says when he or she wants to say something or wants to hold a discussion that he or she does not want to appear in the court record. For example, plea bargaining discussions between lawyers and the judge usually are held off the record.

Opinion: When a court decides a case, the court writes an explanation of how it reached its decision. This is an “opinion.”

Oral arguments: Spoken arguments made by the parties of a case that a judge may hear before reaching a decision and issuing an opinion. Oral arguments are often presented to appellate judges; see Chapter 9 for more information on the criminal appeals process.

Overrule: To reverse, reject or rule against. When a court’s later decision on a point of law conflicts with a prior decision by the same court, it “overrules” the prior decision. The earlier decision is no longer precedent because it has been reversed. A judge also “overrules” an attorney’s objection when he or she disagrees with that attorney and believes that the conduct objected to should be allowed.

Party: The people who are involved in the lawsuit on either side. For example, the defendant is a party. Multiple defendants can also collectively be considered one party.

Peace officer: Officers in various state agencies appointed to maintain order or “keep the peace,” including sheriffs, police officers, and state highway patrol.

Per se: A Latin phrase meaning “by itself” or “in itself.” For example, in considering a habeas petition, a court may consider a violation “per se prejudicial” and not require you to present further evidence to prove you were prejudiced (harmed) because the court has already assumed that you were prejudiced by the violation.

Peremptory strike or peremptory challenges: In selecting a jury for a jury trial, both the prosecution and defense can remove a potential juror from serving on the jury without providing a reason; each such removal is called a peremptory strike or challenge. The number of peremptory challenges for the prosecution and defense are fixed, and after the given number is used up, each side must then provide reasons for refusing a potential juror. Peremptory challenges are defined by state statutes.

Personal property: Everything that a person owns that does not fall under the definition of real property.

Petition: A formal, written request to the court to take action on a particular matter. The petition should contain all necessary information and be presented in the proper format.

Petitioner: The person who brings a lawsuit or an appeal by “petitioning” the court for relief.

Plaintiff: The person who brings a lawsuit.

Pleas: After being indicted for a particular crime, a defendant enters a plea of guilty, not guilty, or no contest. A plea of no contest, usually in a situation of a misdemeanor as part of a plea arrangement, means you are not denying or admitting the allegations against you on the record but that you accept the sentence. A plea of not guilty may lead to a trial. A guilty plea may be a requirement of “plea bargaining,” which takes place when the prosecutor and the accused negotiate a resolution to the case subject to court approval. Usually, a “plea bargain” includes a defendant pleading guilty in return for a lower sentence. A plea of guilty leads to a sentencing hearing at which the defendant’s sentence is decided by a judge.

Post-conviction relief: A remedy granted by a court after conviction that changes the terms of conviction, either by awarding a new sentence or trial, or by reversing the conviction. Examples of post-conviction relief include habeas corpus and, in New York, Article 440 motions.

Precedent: A case decided by a court that serves as the rule to be followed in similar later cases. For example, a case decided in the United States Supreme Court is precedent for all other courts—any rules established in that case become laws that must be followed by all other courts unless or until overruled by a later decision of the Supreme Court.

Prejudice, Prejudicial: When something happens that biases the jury against one of the parties in a case, there has been prejudice to that party’s case. For example, if there has been a long delay between your arrest and your final parole revocation hearing, habeas corpus may be granted because of the delay, which may have been prejudicial to your case.

Preponderance of the evidence: This is the burden of proof in a civil suit. To meet this burden of proof, there must be more evidence that the thing being proved happened than that it did not happen.

Presumption: Something that a court takes to be true according to the rules of the court or the laws of the jurisdiction. For example, in all criminal trials, a defendant is presumed innocent. Therefore a jury must believe the defendant is innocent unless there is sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the defendant is guilty. A rebuttable presumption is one that can be overcome by proof that it is not true in the case being considered by the court. For a presumption to be rebutted, the rebutter must meet the burden of proof (either by preponderance of the evidence, clear and convincing evidence, or beyond a reasonable doubt, depending upon the type of presumption). An irrebuttable presumption is one that the court always considers to be true, and cannot be rebutted by any amount of proof.

Privilege: A special legal right or exemption that allows certain people to not testify about information they learned from a specific source—for example, the attorney-client privilege and the spousal privilege. The attorney-client privilege means that the information exchanged between an attorney and his or her client is confidential, so an attorney may not reveal information regarding the representation of a client without the client’s consent. The spousal privilege means that information exchanged between spouses is also protected, and a spouse may not be required to testify against his or her spouse. There are narrow exceptions to these privileges.

Pro se: A Latin phrase meaning “for oneself”; someone who appears in court pro se is representing him or herself without the services of a lawyer.

Probable Cause: A reasonable ground for believing, based on existing facts, that a crime has been committed, or that an arrest or search is necessary. Generally, the police must show probable cause to have a judge issue an arrest, search, or eavesdropping warrant. Same as reasonable cause.

Proceeding: Courtroom or related matter that occurs during the course of a dispute or lawsuit, or any individual courtroom or related event that takes place during the course of the dispute or lawsuit.

Questions of fact: The issues of a case that deal with the facts, or, in other words, what actually happened. This is in contrast to the issues of a case that deal with the law. In a jury trial, the jury decides questions of facts. In the absence of a jury, the judge decides the questions of fact (as well as questions of law).

Questions of law: The issues of a case that deal with what the law means, or how the law is applied or should be applied to the facts of the case. A jury cannot decide questions of law; only the judge can.

Real property: Land, and whatever is built or grows upon land.

Reasonable cause: Same as probable cause.

Reckless: To act despite the fact that you are aware that your action creates a substantial and unjustifiable (large and unnecessary) risk of harm to others. For certain crimes, recklessness is the mental state that must be proved by the prosecution.

Record (as in the record of a trial): A written account of all of the proceedings of a trial, as transcribed by the court reporter. Errors made by the court that appear in the record can be appealed, while those that do not appear in the record must be collaterally attacked.

Regulation: A rule or order that manages or governs a situation, as in “prison regulation.” A regulation has the same effect as a law if the regulation is legally issued by an executive authority of government.

Relator: The person on whose behalf the state brings a claim, or who is permitted to bring a claim in the name of the state. See ex rel.

Relevant: A fact or circumstance that is important or helpful in the process of determining the truth of a matter is relevant. Something that is not important to determining the truth is “irrelevant.”

Relief: Remedy or benefit that a plaintiff or petitioner seeks from a court or that is awarded by a court to a plaintiff or petitioner. See remedy, as these terms are often used interchangeably.

Remand: When a case is sent back from the appellate court to the trial court for further action or proceedings.

Remedy: When a court decides a criminal or civil issue, it often issues an order so that a right recognized by the court may be enforced. For example, a court may find that a confession taken by the police was coerced in violation of a defendant's right. Under these circumstances, the remedy the court may order is to not allow the defendant's confession to be used by the prosecution in its case to the jury. Remedies can consist of damages, injunctive relief, other orders, or solutions that a judge may use his or her discretion to create. See relief.

Reply: The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's case, either in a written brief or, at trial, orally.

Reprieve Temporary delay in carrying out a criminal punishment.

Respondent The person against whom a lawsuit or appeal is brought. This person “responds” to the claims of petitioner. See Defendant.

Retain (as in “to retain counsel”) To hire, usually used with respect to hiring a lawyer.

Reversed When an appellate court changes the decision of a lower court, it reverses the lower court’s decision. The party who lost in the trial court and then appealed to the appellate court is now the winner of the case.

Revoke (Revocation) To take back or cancel; the act of taking back or cancelling. For example, when the parole board revokes your parole, it cancels your parole and places you back in prison.

Right A legal power that someone possesses. For example, if you are arrested, at the time of the arrest, you have the right to remain silent.

Right to an attorney You have a right to the assistance of counsel (attorney) at any critical stage of your prosecution—meaning you have the right to counsel when adversarial proceedings have begun (in other words, after a formal charge has been filed, a preliminary hearing held, or during an indictment or an arraignment). This right to counsel is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution, even if you cannot afford an attorney. In such cases, counsel is provided by the state. You also have the right to counsel during an interrogation, as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, which protects you from self-incrimination. You may also be entitled to an attorney in proceedings other than criminal prosecutions. See Chapter 9 on criminal appeals and Chapter 4 on finding a lawyer for more information.

Right to be free from arbitrary search and seizure The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution provides this right. The police in many cases must have a search warrant (especially if police are going to search a person’s home). However, there are many exceptions to the requirement of a search warrant. If police locate evidence as a result of an illegal search, a judge may exclude the evidence from being heard or presented at trial.

Right to be free from torture The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution states that you have a right to be free from “cruel and unusual punishment.” State constitutions have similar provisions. See Chapter 16 for more information on enforcing your civil rights in prison.

Right to freely practice your religion You have the right to practice your religion even though you are in prison. Prison officials may restrict your right to practice your religion only if the restriction imposed reasonably relates to the requirements of running the prison system. See Chapter 27 for more information on your religious freedom.

Right to remain silent After a defendant is arrested, he or she has the right to not say anything. Police officers are required to inform a defendant of this right as part of the Miranda warnings given to an accused.

Sentence The punishment imposed by the court or a judge against a defendant after he or she has been convicted of a crime.

Sentencing hearing: After a trial is concluded and the jury has reached a verdict (the jury's decision), the sentence of the defendant is still to be decided. Prior to sentencing, a hearing is held and a judge may review any relevant material before deciding on a sentence. These materials usually include a pre-sentencing report that often contains information such as the circumstances of the crime, and the educational and employment background of a defendant, among other factors.

Service (“to serve”): As used in legal language, the physical act of handing something over, or delivering something to a person, as in serving legal papers on a person.

Session (“in session”): That period of time during any given year in which a legal body (for example, a court, or the state legislature) carries on its usual business.

Settlement: A settlement is when the plaintiff in a lawsuit or administrative proceeding agrees to withdraw his claims in exchange for the defendant paying him some amount of money and/or taking certain actions. Settlement is a way for the parties to agree to end the lawsuit before the judge or the jury reach a verdict.

Standard (of proof): How the court will judge your evidence and decide your case. Certain situations require meeting a higher standard. In a criminal case, for example, the prosecution must show the court that you are guilty “beyond a reasonable doubt” for you to be convicted. Some other common standards of proof besides “beyond a reasonable doubt” include by “clear and convincing evidence” and by “a preponderance of the evidence.”

Statute: Laws passed by the U.S. Congress or state legislatures. Criminal offenses are defined by statutes.

Statute of limitations: A law that sets out time limitations within which different types of lawsuits or criminal charges must be brought. After the statute of limitations has “run” on a particular type of lawsuit, a plaintiff can no longer bring that lawsuit. For example, if the statute of limitations on a tort action is five years, the plaintiff cannot wait for five years and one day after the cause of action arises to bring the lawsuit. If the plaintiff waits that extra day, he or she can no longer sue.

Stenographer: The person who makes the court record by writing it in shorthand; same as the court reporter.

Subpoena: An official court document that requires a person to appear in court at a specific time and place. A particular type of subpoena requires an individual to produce books, papers, and other things.

Suppress (motion to suppress): To prevent evidence from being introduced at trial.

Tort: A legal term that means a “wrong” or “injury” inflicted on someone for which a remedy may be obtained in a civil case. Someone who destroys your property or injures you may have committed a tort. See Chapter 17 for more information on tort actions.

Trial: A proceeding that takes place before a judge or a judge and a jury. In a trial, both sides present arguments and evidence, which the court examines.

United States Law Week (U.S.L.W.): A reference book that contains newly-reported cases not yet printed in bound volumes.

v. (vs., versus): Means “against;” used to indicate opponents in a case, as in Doe v. Smith.

Vacate: To set aside, ignore, not give any merit. This term is used when an appellate court will vacate the judgment of a trial court if it concludes that the decision was wrong. It will ignore that decision so that the appellate court can decide the case as if they are seeing it for the first time, or so that it can send the case back to be looked at as if it is being viewed for the first time by the trial court.

Vague: Indefinite; not easy to understand; can be reasonably interpreted more than one way.

Verdict: At the end of a trial, a jury reaches a verdict (a decision) of not guilty or guilty based on the evidence presented at trial and in accordance with the legal questions presented to the jury by the court.

Verify: To confirm the authenticity of a legal paper by affidavit or oath.

Verified Complaint: A complaint where the allegations are sworn to by the plaintiff. A verified complaint tells the court that the plaintiff believes that the charges against the defendant have been investigated and found to be of substance. In federal court, a complaint generally does not have to be verified unless a rule or statute specifically states that a complaint must be verified. Typically, there is a verification page where a notary public or other officer certified to certifies that he/she administered an oath to the plaintiff and the plaintiff signed the affidavit in the notary's presence.

Voir dire: Before selecting a jury for a trial, the court and attorneys for each side ask the jury questions to determine which people are suitable jurors in that case. This questioning of jurors is called voir dire.

Voluntary: An act that a person freely carries out and is not forced to do.

Waive (Waiver): To give up a certain right. For example, a waiver of the right to a jury trial or the right to be present at a hearing means to give up those rights.

Witness: A person a party in a legal proceeding calls upon to testify for or against a party. They can give factual evidence (like what they saw, felt, heard, etc.) or can be experts about the subject matter at issue.

Writ: An order written by a judge that requires a specific act to be performed, or gives someone the power to have the act performed. For example, when a court issues a writ of habeas corpus, it demands that the person who is detaining you release you. A mandamus is another type of writ that a court can issue.

APPENDIX VI

DEFINITIONS OF LATIN¹ WORDS USED IN THE *JLM

Actus reus: Latin for “guilty act,” actus reus refers to a wrongful act or omission. This wrongful act or omission is the physical element of a crime. Actus reus is one of the necessary elements that must be proven before a court may find a defendant guilty of a criminal offense. Actus reus is the direct physical action taken to commit a crime. A physical action is usually defined as a “bodily movement whether voluntary or involuntary.” Criminal statutes generally require proof of both actus reus (the physical act) and mens rea (the mental state of the accused and his criminal intent).

Amicus curiae: Latin for “friend of the court,” an amicus curiae is someone who is not a party to the litigation, but who believes that the court’s decision may affect his interests. An amicus curiae may therefore offer information to assist a court in deciding a matter. This information is often provided in a legal opinion in the form of an amicus brief. The court has the discretion to decide whether or not to admit this information in the case before it.

Certiorari, Writ of (cert.): An order by an appellate (higher) court declaring that it will review the decision of a lower court on appeal. “Certiorari granted” means that the appellate court decided to approve a petition for certiorari and review the trial court’s decision. “Certiorari denied” means that the appellate court decided not to approve a petition for certiorari and will not review the lower court’s decision. Some courts, such as those in New York, simply call certiorari “leave to appeal.”

Coram nobis (writ of coram nobis): A writ of coram nobis is an order for a court to review its earlier decision in light of possible errors that were not obvious at the time the decision was made. These writs are usually used when no other remedy, such as direct appeal or habeas corpus, is available. An example of when a writ of coram nobis might be ordered is when an incarcerated person has already been convicted of a crime and completely served his prison sentence.

Coram non judice: Latin for “before one who is not a judge,” coram non judice is a legal term used to indicate a legal proceeding held without a judge, with improper venue, or without jurisdiction

Corpus delicti: Latin for the “body of evidence,” corpus delicti refers to the principle that there must be proof that a crime has taken place before a person can be convicted of that crime. For example, in a murder case, there must be an actual body of a victim or enough circumstantial evidence to prove the death of a victim beyond a reasonable doubt before a defendant may be convicted of murder.

¹ Latin phrases are italicized in legal writing. Therefore, if you submit any motions, briefs, complaints, etc. to the court, you should italicize any Latin phrases that you use.

* Words that are defined elsewhere in this Appendix are printed in italics.

De facto: Meaning “concerning fact,” de facto describes an action occurring in practice but that is not necessarily created by law. De facto is commonly used in contrast to de jure. When discussing a legal situation, de jure refers to what the law itself states, while de facto refers to what actually happens in practice when a law is followed.

De jure: This Latin expression is used to reference an action or regulation that is formally established by law. It is commonly used in contrast to de facto. When discussing a legal situation, de jure refers to what the law says, while de facto refers to what actually happens in practice when the law is followed.

De minimis: Meaning “of minimum importance,” de minimis describes things that are insignificant or small. If something is de minimis, the law and the courts ignore it for lack of importance.

De novo: A standard of review that a court uses for certain issues in a case on appeal. When a court reviews an issue with a de novo standard of review, it may decide the issue as if it were the court that heard the case for the first time. Therefore, a court reviewing a case with a de novo standard will not necessarily consider the findings of the lower court on a particular issue.

Dictum* (plural: Dicta): This is a statement of a judge’s opinion discussing the meaning of a law related to the case, but not critical to the case’s outcome. Dictum generally extends beyond the issue before the court to decide. As dictum may be unrelated to the issue being decided, it is not law and is not binding on later courts. Dictum is not the legal basis for the judge’s decision on a litigated issue. Later judges can choose to follow the legal analysis found in dictum, but they do not have to. The plural form of dictum is “dicta.”

Ex post facto: This Latin phrase means “from a thing done afterward,” or after the fact. Ex post facto describes the situation in which a new law applies to acts committed in the past. The U.S. Constitution prohibits ex post facto criminal laws. This means that someone can only be punished under a law that was in effect at the time he committed an offense. His punishment cannot be increased if stricter laws are passed after he broke the law. While ex post facto, or retroactive, criminal laws are not allowed, ex post facto civil laws are sometimes allowed.

Ex parte: This Latin phrase means “from (by or for) one party.” An ex parte motion or petition is brought by one person or party in the absence of, and without representation or notification of, other parties. An ex parte judicial proceeding is where the opposing party has not received notice for the proceeding and is not present for the decision. The Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution limit the availability of ex parte orders. The Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments provide that a person shall not be deprived of his liberty or property without sufficient notice. Because of the absence of parties from ex parte proceedings, ex parte orders are usually temporary, like restraining orders. Any parties affected by the temporary ex parte order are given an opportunity to contest it before it is made into a permanent order.

Ex rel. (ex relatione): This Latin phrase means “by/on the relation of.” The government brings a lawsuit ex rel. if a private party (someone not acting as a government official) interested in the matter asks the government to bring suit and the government agrees. For example, if Smith asks the government to bring a lawsuit against Jones, the case would be written as “State ex rel. Smith v. Jones.”

Guardian ad litem: Meaning “guardian for the suit,” a guardian ad litem is a party appointed by a court to assist a minor or other incapable defendant or plaintiff in a particular legal matter. The guardian ad litem directs litigation in the best interests of the person that he assists in the suit, often in juvenile or domestic relations matters.

Habeas corpus (writ of habeas corpus): This Latin term refers to the form of relief that a court may grant in order to release an incarcerated person from unlawful imprisonment. The incarcerated person must prove that he is being held in violation of his rights, for instance because his trial was unfair due to ineffective assistance of counsel. The habeas writ can be sought in both state and federal courts. For more information on habeas corpus, see Chapters 13 and 21 of the JLM.

In forma pauperis: This Latin term means “like a poor person.” A court sometimes will allow someone without enough money in a lawsuit to proceed in forma pauperis and avoid paying all filing fees and other court costs. A criminal defendant who proceeds in forma pauperis will also usually have a defense lawyer appointed free of charge.

In absentia: Meaning “in the absence,” in absentia notes that the defendant is not physically present for trial. This term usually pertains to a defendant's right to be present in court proceedings in a criminal trial. U.S. courts have held that the Constitution protects a criminal defendant's right to appear in person as a matter of due process; however, there are certain exceptions to the rule, including the defendant's waiver of his right to be present by voluntarily leaving the trial after it has started.

Malum in se: An offense that is malum in se is one that is seen as wrong in and of itself, such as murder or theft. Although there are laws written prohibiting malum in se crimes, these laws simply codify the inherent moral wrongness of these acts. Malum in se offenses are different from malum prohibitum crimes, which are wrong only because they are prohibited by law and are not considered morally wrong in and of themselves.

Malum prohibitum: Malum prohibitum crimes are crimes that are wrong because they have been prohibited by law. These crimes can therefore vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction depending on what the legislatures decide the law should be. An example of a malum prohibitum crime is speeding. Driving at 70 miles per hour is not a bad act by itself. It is only bad when the law has set a speed limit below 70 miles per hour, so that anyone exceeding the speed limit is breaking a law. As distinguished from malum in se crimes that are morally wrong, malum prohibitum crimes are wrong only because the law declares these acts to be illegal.

Modus operandi (M.O.) Meaning “method of operating,” this term is used to describe someone’s habits or the way a person works or functions. In a criminal context, modus operandi can be used to identify a culprit based on a characteristic pattern of methods used to commit repeated criminal acts.

Mens rea Meaning “guilty mind,” mens rea is the mental state, or state of mind, when a criminal act is committed. Mens rea is one of the necessary elements of a crime in criminal law. Mens rea relates to the mental state of the accused, as compared with actus reus, which relates to the direct physical action used to commit a crime.

Nolle prosequi A declaration made before or during trial declaring that the case against a defendant is being dropped. This can be made in a criminal case by the prosecutor, or in a civil lawsuit by the plaintiff. A nolle prosequi declaration may be made for many reasons, including because the charges against the defendant cannot be proven, because the prosecutor no longer thinks that the defendant is guilty, or because the defendant has died.

Nolo contendere When a defendant pleads nolo contendere, he is stating “no contest,” meaning that he does not deny responsibility for the charges; however, he is not explicitly admitting guilt either. A criminal defendant’s nolo contendere plea differs from a guilty plea because it cannot be used against him in another cause of action. Because of this, some defendants plead nolo contendere to avoid civil suits that may arise from a criminal conviction.

Per curiam A court decision made per curiam is one that refers to a decision handed down by the court as a whole acting collectively and anonymously, without identifying any individual judge as the author.

Per se This Latin phrase means “by/in itself.” For example, in considering a habeas petition, a court may consider that a violation was “per se prejudicial” and not require a party to show further evidence to prove the violation was prejudicial (harmful). If a violation is “per se prejudicial,” it is by its nature harmful to the party. The court will automatically assume that he was prejudiced.

Prima facie case The facts sufficient to allow the judge or jury to find in a party’s favor if everything he said was undisputed by the other side.

Pro se This Latin phrase means “for oneself.” Someone who appears in court pro se is representing himself without the services of a lawyer.

Res ipsa loquitur This Latin phrase means “the thing speaks for itself.” In tort claims of negligence, res ipsa loquitur describes certain situations in which it can be assumed (without having to be proven) that an individual’s injury was caused by the negligent action of another party because the accident was the sort that would not have occurred unless someone were negligent.

Res judicata Meaning “a matter already judged,” res judicata is a legal concept that requires that issues cannot be re-litigated after a final judgment is made by a court. This notion may also be called “collateral estoppel” or “issue preclusion.”

Respondeat superior: Most commonly used in tort claims, respondeat superior is a legal doctrine which states that an employer or other principal can be held to be legally responsible for the wrongful acts of his employee or agent if those acts occur within the scope of the employment or agency. This rule may also be called the “master-servant rule” or the “rule of supervisor liability.”

Stare decisis: Meaning “to stand by things decided,” stare decisis is the basic legal principle that a court should follow the rules, or ‘precedent,’ established by higher courts or by earlier courts. Stare decisis ensures that the law remains predictable and constant in its application by different judges or courts. Courts cite to stare decisis when a particular issue has been previously brought to the court and a ruling has already been made on that issue. While courts will generally adhere to the previous ruling, this is not universally true.

Sua sponte: Meaning “of one’s own will,” this usually refers to an order made by the judge’s own will without a request by any party to the case. An action is subject to dismissal on a court’s own motion where grounds for dismissal exist. A trial court has the power to dismiss such an action sua sponte. An example of a situation where a trial court could dismiss an action sua sponte would be where there was a failure to comply with the rules of civil procedure or where the judge has determined that his court does not have jurisdiction over the case at issue.

Sub judice: Meaning “under judgment,” sub judice is a term used to indicate that a particular case or matter is before the court and is under judicial consideration.

Subpoena: A command that a person must appear before the court, subject to a penalty if he does not appear.

Subpoena duces tecum: Meaning “bring with you under penalty of punishment,” a subpoena duces tecum is an order to compel the production of certain documents or evidence for a case. A subpoena duces tecum is not limited to the parties to a lawsuit. It may also be used to demand documents or evidence from other persons or entities. It may be used to force a witness to appear before the court and to bring specified items to the court as evidence.